To the sixth they answer, The same to be true in every part thereof, except that over and besides the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospel, which they believe to be good, they believe the Pater noster and Creed used in the Mass, be also good.

Auricular Confession not necessary. Ceremonies idle in the Church.

To the seventh they answer and confess, That Auricular Confession is not necessary to be made to the Priest; nevertheless they think that it is necessary to go to such a Priest as is able to give good counsel: And that for counsel only, and not otherwise. And as concerning the Ceremonies of the Church, they answer the same to be vain and unprofitable. No Service in the Church ought to be said, but only in the English Tongue.

To the eighth, they answer and believe the same to be true in every part thereof, except they do not believe that they be Hereticks, or suspected of Heresie.

To the ninth Osmund and Bamford answered, That they referred themselves to the said Laws mentioned in that Article; but Chamberlain made no answer at all to this Article.

To the tenth, the said Osmund and Bamford answered and said, That by reason of their Belief before by them confessed, they are not to be reputed, taken or adjudged for wilful and obstinate Hereticks; nor to be punished therefore, as is declared in that Article. The other answered nothing.

Scholies upon the foresaid Articles.

Notes of Scholies upon the Articles used to be ministred to the poor Christians by the Popes Church.

These Articles in the same form and manner of words are commonly objected to all other that follow after, with the same Answers also thereunto annexed. In which Articles thou maist note (Reader) the crafty and subtle handling of these Lawyers and Registers, who so deceitfully frame their Articles and Positions, that unless a man do advisedly consider them, it is hard for a simple man to answer to them, but he shall be snared and entangled. So they paint their Church with such a visage of Universal, whole, holy, Catholick, as who should say; He that denieth Rome, denieth the holy Church of Christ here in Earth. Likewise in examining them, and specially the simple sort in the matter of the Sacrament, to the material Bread in the Sacrament they put their word (only) very captiously and fraudulently, to take them at the worst advantage, making the People believe that they take the holy Sacrament to be no better than only common Bread: when they do not so, but make a difference between the same, both in the use, honour and name thereof.

Crafty captious dealing of the Papists in propounding their Articles.

Again, when the Examinates hold but only against the erroneous points of Romish Religion, these Bishops in their Interrogatories give out the matter so generally, as though the said Examinates in general spake against all the Articles of Faith taught in Rome, Spain, England, France, Scotland, &c.

Moreover, concerning Latin Service, in such crafty form of words they propound their Article, that it might appear to the People, these Men do deny any Service to be lawful in any Place, Country or Language, but only in English.

And as these Articles are craftily, captiously and deceitfully in form of words devised by the Bishops and their Notaries: so the Answers again to the same, be no less subtilly framed, and after the most odious manner put down in the name of the Examinates, which being read unto them, thus without further advice they were constrained upon a sudden, to subscribe the same with their hands. Whereby, if any word escaped their hand, peradventure not considerately subscribed; there the Papists take their advantage against them, to defame them, and to bring them into hatred with the People.

These Articles thus propounded and answered, they were until the Afternoon dismissed. At what time they did again appear, and there were examined and travelled with by fair and flattering Speeches, as well of the Bishops as of others his Assistants, to recant and revoke their Opinions, who notwithstanding remained constant and firm, and therefore, after the common usage of their Ecclesiastical Laws, were sent away again until the next day, being Saturday, and the 18. day of May. Then in the Fore-noon the Bishop using his accustomed manner of proceeding, which he had used before as well with them as with others, did likewise dismiss them, and at last in the Afternoon condemned them as Hereticks, and so delivered them to the Sheriffs, in whose custody they remained until they were delivered to the Sheriff of Essex, and by him were executed, Chamberlain at Colchester, the 14. of June; Thomas Osmund at Maningtree, the 15. of June; and William Bamford, alias Butler, at Harwich, the same 15. day in the Month of June.

Sentence Against Osmund, Chamberlain, Bamford. June 14. June 15 The martyrdom of T. Osmond, Chamberlain and W. Bamford.

The History of the worthy Martyr and Servant of God, Mr. John Bradford, with his Life, Acts, and sundry Conflicts with his Adversaries, and Martyrdom at length most constantly suffered for the Testimony of Christ and his Truth.

July 1. The history of Mr. John Bradford Martyr.

AS touching the first Country and Education of John Bradford, he was born at Manchester in Lancashire. His Parents did bring him up in Learning from his Infancy, until he attained such knowledge in the Latin Tongue, and skill in Writing, that he was able to gain his own living in some honest condition. Then he became Servant to Sir John Harrington, Knight, who in the great Affairs of King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth, which he had in hand when he was Treasurer of the Kings Camps and Buildings, at divers times in Bullonois, had such experience of Bradfords activity in Writing, his expertness in the Art of Auditors, as also of his faithful Trustiness, that not only in those Affairs, but in many other of his private business he trusted Bradford in such sort, that above all other he used his faithful Service.

Sir John Harrington Knight.

The trusty service of John Bradford under M. Harrington.

Thus continued Bradford certain years in a right honest and good trade of life, after the course of this World, like to come forward (as they say) if his mind could have so liked, or had been given to the World as many other be. But the Lord which had elected him unto a better function, and pre-ordained him to preach the Gospel of Christ in that hour of grace, which in his secret councel he had appointed, called this his chosen Child to the understanding and partaking of the same Gospel of Life. In which Call he was so truly taught, that forthwith his effectual Call was perceived by the fruits. For then Bradford did forsake his worldly Affairs and forwardness in worldly Wealth, and, after the just Account given to his Master of all his doings, he departed from him, and with marvellous favour to further the Kingdom of God by the Ministry of his holy Word, he gave himself wholly to the study of the holy Scriptures. The which his purpose to accomplish the better, he departed from the Temple at London, where the Temporal Law is studied, and went to the University of Cambridge, to learn by Gods Law how to further the building of the Lords Temple. In Cambridge his diligence in study, his profiting in knowledge and godly Conversation so pleased all men, that within one whole year after that he had been there, the University did give him a degree of a Master of Art.

Bradford called to the Gospel.

Bradford giveth himself to the study of Scripture.

Anno 1555

Bradford Mr. of Art, and fellow of Pembroke Hall.

M. Bucers saying.

Immediately after the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall did give him a Fellowship in their Colledge with them: yea that man of God Martin Bucer, so liked him, that he had him not onely most dear unto him, but also oftentimes exhorted him to bestow his talent in Preaching. Unto which Br. answered always, that he was unable to serve in that office, through want of Learning, To the which Bucer was wont to reply, saying; If thou have not fine Manchet Bread, yet give the poor People Barly Bread, or whatsoever else the Lord hath committed unto thee. And whiles Bradford was thus perswaded to enter into the Ministery, Doctor Ridley that worthy Bishop of London, and glorious Martyr of Christ, according to the order that then was in the Church of England, called him to take the degree of a Deacon. Which Order, because it was not without some such abuse, as to the which Bradford would not consent, the Bishop yet perceiving that Bradford was willing to enter into the Ministery, was content to order him Deacon without any abuse, even as he desired, This being done, he obtained for him a Licence to preach, and did give him a Prebend in his Cathedral Church of Saint Pauls.

John Bradford made Deacon by Bish. Ridley without any superstitious abuse therin.

John Bradford made Prebendary in Pauls and licensed to preach.

In this preaching office by the space of three years, how faithfully Bradford walked, how diligently he laboured, many parts of England can testifie. Sharply he opened & reproved sin, sweetly he preached Christ crucified, pithily he impugned Heresies and Errours, earnestly he perswaded to godly life. After the Death of blessed young King Ed. the sixth, when Queen Mary had gotten the Crown, still continued Bradford diligent in preaching, untill he was unjustly deprived both of his office and liberty by the Queen and her Councel. To the doing wherof, because they had no just cause, they took occasion to do this injury for such an act, as among Turks and Infidels would have been with thankfulness rewarded, and with great favour accepted, as indeed it did no less deserve.

Bradford unjustly deprived of his living and preaching.

Bourns Sermon at Pauls Cross.

The fact was this. The 13. of August, in the first year of the reign of Q. Mary, Master Bourn, then Bishop of Bathe, made a Seditious Sermon at Pauls Cross in London, as partly is declared before, to set Popery abroad, in such sort that it moved the People to no small indignation, being almost ready to pull him out of the pulpit. Neither could the reverence of the place, nor the presence of Bish. Boner, who then was his Master, nor yet the commandment of the Major of London, whom the people ought to have obeyed, stay their rage: but the more they spake, the more the People were incensed. At length Bourn seeing the People in such a mood, and himself in such peril (whereof he was sufficiently warned by the hurling of a drawn Dagger at him as he stood in the Pulpit) and that he was put from ending his Sermon, fearing lest (against his will) he should there end his wretched life, desired Bradford, who stood in the Pulpit behind him, to come forth, and to stand in his place and speak to the People. Good Bradford at his request was content, and there spake to the People of godly and quiet obedience. Whom as soon as the People saw to begin to speak unto them, so glad they were to hear him, that they cryed with a great shout; Bradford, Bradford, God save thy life Bradford; well declaring not onely what affection they bare unto him, but also what regard they gave unto his words. For after that he had entred a little to preach unto them, & to exhort them to quiet and patience, eftsoons all the raging ceased, and in the end quietly departed each man to his house. Yet in the mean season (for it was a long time before that so great a multitude could all depart) Bourn thought (and truly) himself not yet full sure of his life till he were safely housed, notwithstanding that the Major and Sheriffs of London were there at hand to help them. Wherefore he desired Bradford not to depart from him till he were in safety: which Bradford according to his promise, performed. For while the Major and Sheriffs did lead Bourn to the School-Masters House, which is next to the Pulpit, Bradford went at his back, shadowing him from the People with his gown, and so to set him safe.

Bradford appeaseth the rage of the People, and guardeth the Papistical preacher.

The reverent regard and affection of the People to M. Bradford.

M. Bradford procureth M. Bourns safety.

Let the Reader now consider the perill of Bourn, the charity of Bradford, and the headyness of the multitude, and also the grudging minds of certain, which yet still there remained behind; grieved not a little in their minds, to see that so good a man should save the life of such a Popish Priest, so impudently and openly rayling against K. Edward. Among whom one Gentleman said these words: Ah Bradford, Bradford, thou savest him that will to burn thee. I give thee his life: if it were not for thee, I would (I assure thee) run him through with my sword. Thus Bourn for that time, through Bradfords means, escaped bodily Death: but God hath his Judgment to be shewed in the time appointed.

Bradford reproveth the People for the tumult at Pauls Cross.

The same Sunday in the afternoon Bradford preached at the Bow Church in Cheapside, and reproved the People sharply for their Seditious Misdemeanour. After this he did abide still in London with an innocent Conscience, to try what should become of his just doing.

Bradford charged with Sedition, for saving the Preacher.

Within three days after, he was sent for to the Tower of London, where the Queen then was, to appear there before the Councel. There was he charged with this act of saving of Bourn, which act they there called Seditious, & also objected against him for preaching, & so by them he was committed first to the Tower, then unto other prisons, out of which neither his innocencie, godliness, nor charitable dealing could purchase to him liberty of Body, but by Death (which he suffered for Christs cause) he obtained the Heavenly liberty, of which neither Pope nor Papist shall ever deprive him. From the Tower he came to the Kings Bench in Southwark: and after his condemnation, he was sent to the Counter in the Poultry in London: in which two places, for the time he did remain prisoner, he preached twice a day continually, unless sickness hindered him: where also the Sacrament was often ministred and through his means (the Keepers so well did bear with him) such resort of good folks was daily to his Lecture, and to the ministration of the Sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled therewith. Preaching, reading and praying was all his whole life. He did not eat above one meal a day; which was but very little when he took it: and his continual study was upon his knees. In the midst of dinner he used often to muse with himself, having his hat over his eyes, from whence came commonly plenty of tears dropping on his trencher. Very gentle he was to man and child, and in so good credit with his Keeper, that at his desire in an evening (being prisoner in the Kings Bench in Southwark) he had licence upon his promise to return again that night, to go into London without any Keeper to visit one that was sick, lying by the Still-yard. Neither did he fail his promise, but returned to his prison again, rather preventing his hour, than breaking his fidelity: so constant was he in word and in deed.

Bradford in the Kings Bench. Bradford in the Counter.

Bradford preacheth and ministreth the Sacrament in prison.

Bradford came into London without his Keeper, and returned that night to prison again.

Of personage he was somewhat tall and slender, spare of Body, of a faint Sanguine colour, with an Awburn beard. He slept not commonly above four hours in the night: and in his bed, till sleep came, his book went not out of his hand. His chief recreation was in no gaming or other pastime, but onely in honest company, and comely talk, wherein he would spend a little time after Dinner at the board, and so to prayer and his Book again. He counted that hour not well spent, wherein he did not some good, either with his pen, study, or in exhorting of others, &c. He was no niggard of his purse, but would liberally participate that he had to his fellow prisoners. And commonly once a week he visited the theeves, pick-purses, and such others that were with him in prison where he lay on the other side, unto whom he would give godly exhortation, to learn the amendment of their lives by their trouble, and after that so done, distribute among them some portion of money to their comfort.

Bradford visited the Theeves, pick purses, &c.

By the way, this I thought not to conceal. While he was in the Kings Bench, and Mr. Saunders in the Marshalsey both prisoners, on the Backside of those two prisons they met many times, and conferred together when they would: so mercifully did the Lord work for them, even in the midst of their troubles: and the said Bradford was so trusted with his Keeper, & had such liberty in the Backside, that there was no day, but that he might have easily escaped away, if he would, but that the Lord had another work to do for him. In the Summer time, while he was in the said Kings Bench, he had liberty of his Keeper to ride into Oxfordshire, to a Merchants House of his acquaintance, and horse and all things prepared for him for that Journey, and the party in readiness that should ride with him: but God prevented him by sickness that he went not at all.

The meeting and conference between Laurence Saunders and John Bradford.

Bradford refuseth to escape out of prison though he might.

One of his old Friends and Acquaintance came unto him whilest he was prisoner, and asked him, if he sued to get him out, what then he would do, or whither he would go? Unto whom he made answer, as not caring whether he went out or no: but if he did, he ſaid he would Marry, and abide ſtill in England ſecretly, teaching the People as the time would ſuffer him, and occupy himſelf that way. He was had in ſo great reverence and admiration with all good men, that a Multitude, which never knew him but by fame, greatly lamented his Death: yea, and a number alſo of the Papiſts themſelves wiſhed heartily his life. There were few days in which he was thought not to ſpend ſome tears before he went to bed, neither was there every any priſoner with him, but by his company he greatly profited, as all they will yet witneſs, and have confeſſed of him no leſs, to the glory of God, whoſe ſociety be frequented, as among many, one ſpeciall thing I thought to note, which is this.

Bradford belov'd.

Bradfords tears.

Biſhop Farrar confirmed in the truth, by I. Bradford.

Biſhop Farrar being in the Kings Bench priſoner, as before you have heard, was travelled withal of the Papiſts in the end of Lent, to receive the Sacrament at Eaſter in one kind, who after much perſwading yielded to them, and promiſed ſo to do. Then (ſo it hapned by Gods providence) the Eaſter Even, the day before he ſhould have done it, was Bradford brought to the Kings Bench priſoner, where the Lord making him his Inſtrument, Bradford onely was the mean that the ſaid Biſhop Farrar revoked his promiſe and word, and would never after yield to be ſpotted with that Papiſticall pitch; ſo effectually the Lord wrought by this worthy Servant of his. Such an inſtrument was he in Gods Church, that few or none there were that knew him, but eſteemed him as a precious Iewel and Gods true meſſenger.

Bradford dreameth of his burning according as it came to paſs.

The night before he was had to Newgate, which was the Saturday night, he was ſore troubled divers times in his ſleep by dreams, how the chain for his burning was brought to the Counter-gate, and how the next day being Sunday, he ſhould be had to Newgate, and on the Monday after burned in Smithfield, as in deed it came to paſs accordingly, which hereafter ſhall be ſhewed. Now he being vexed ſo oftentimes in this ſort with theſe dreams, about three of the clock in the morning he waked him that lay with him, and told him his unquiet ſleep, and what he was troubled withall. Then after a little talk, Maſter Bradford roſe out of the bed, and gave himſelf to his old exerciſe of reading and prayer, as always he had uſed before: and at dinner according to his accuſtomed manner he did eat his meat, and was very merry, no Body being with him from morning to night, but he that lay with him, with whom he had many times on that day communication of Death, of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of the ripeneſs of ſin in that time.

Bradford hath word of his burning.

In the afternoon they two walking together in the Keepers chamber, ſuddenly the Keepers wife came up, as one half amazed, and ſeeming much troubled, being almoſt windleſs, ſaid: Oh Maſter Bradford, I come to bring you heavy news. What is that ſaid he? Marry, quoth ſhe, to morrow you muſt be burned; and your chain is now a buying, and ſoon you muſt go to Newgate. With that Mr. Bradford put off his cap, and lifting up his eyes to Heaven, ſaid; I thank God for it; I have looked for the ſame a long time, and therefore it cometh not now to me ſuddenly, but as a thing waited for every day and hour, the Lord make me worthy thereof: and ſo thanking her for her gentleneſs, departed up into his chamber, and called his Friend with him, who when he came thither, he went ſecretly himſelf alone a long time, and prayed; Which done, he came again to him that was in his chamber, and took him divers Writings and Papers, and ſhewed him his mind in thoſe things what he would have done, and after they had ſpent the afternoon till night in many and ſundry ſuch things, at laſt came to him half a dozen of his Friends more, with whom all the evening he ſpent the time in prayer and other good excerciſe, ſo wonderfully, that it was marvellous to hear and ſee his doings.

Bradford maketh his praier; taking his farewell of the Counter.

A little before he went out of the Counter, he made a notable prayer of his farewell, with ſuch plenty of tears, and abundant Spirit of prayer, that it raviſhed the minds of the hearers. Alſo when he ſhifted himſelf with a cleant ſhirt that was made for his burning (by one Mr. Walter Marlars Wife, who was a good nurſe unto him, and his very good Friend) he made ſuch a prayer of the wedding garment, that ſome of thoſe that were preſent were in ſuch great admiration, that their eyes were as throughly occupied in looking on him, as their ears gave place to hear his prayer. At his departing out of the chamber, he made likewiſe a prayer, and gave money to every Servant and Officer of the Houſe, with exhortation to them to fear and ſerve God, continually labouring to eſchew all manner of Evil. That done, he turned him to the wall and prayed vehemently, that his words might not be ſpoken in vain, but that the Lord would work the ſame in them effectually, for his Chriſts ſake. Then being beneath in the Court, all the priſoners cryed out to him and bid him farewell, as the reſt of the Houſe had done before with weeping tears.

Bradford going from the Counter.

The priſoners take their leave of Bradford with tears.

Bradford carried to Newgate at midnight.

The time they carried him to Newgate, was about xi. or xii. a clock in the night, when it was thought none would be ſtirring abroad: and yet, contrary to their expectation in that behalf, was there in Cheapſide and other places (between the Counter and Newgate) a great multitude of People that came to ſee him, which moſt gently bade him farewell, praying for him with moſt lamentable and pitifull tears, and he again as gently bade them farewel, praying moſt heartily for them and their welfare. Now whether it were a commandment from the Queen and her Councell, or from Boner and his adherents, or whether it were merrily deviſed of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, or no, I cannot tell; but a great noiſe there was over night about the City by divers, that Bradford ſhould be burnt the next day in Smithfield, by four of the clock in the morning, before it ſhould be greatly known to any. In which rumor, many heads had divers minds; ſome thinking the fear of the People to be the cauſe thereof: other thought nay, that it was rather becauſe the Papiſts judged his Death would convert many to the truth, and give a great overthrow to their Kingdom. So ſome thought one thing, and ſome another, that no juſt conjecture of the cauſe could be known that ever I heard yet. But this was certain, the People prevented the device ſuſpected; for the next day, at the ſaid hour of four a clok in the morning, there was in Smithfield ſuch a multitude of men and women, that many being in admiration thereof, thought it was not poſſible that they could have warning of his Death, being ſo great a number in ſuch ſhort time, unleſs it were by the ſingular providence of Almighty God.

The People in Cheapſide bade Bradford farewel.

A noiſe of Bradfords early burning.

A multitude in Smithfield by 4. a clock.

Well, this took not effect as the People thought; for that morning it was nine a clock of the day, before Maſter Bradford was brought into Smithfield: which, in going through Newgate thitherward, eſpyed a Friend of his whom he loved, ſtanding on the one ſide the way to the Keepers houſewards, unto whom he reached his hand over the People, and pluckt him to him, and delivered to him from his head his velvet night-cap, and alſo his handkerchief, with other things beſides. And after a little ſecret talk with him, and each of them parting from other, immedately came to him a Brother in law of his, called Roger Beſwick, which as ſoon as he had taken the ſaid Bradford by the hand, one of the Sheriffs of London called Woodroſe, came with his ſtaff, and brake the ſaid Rogers Head, that the Blood ran about his ſhoulders. Which ſight Bradford beholding with grief, bade his Brother farewell, willing him to commend him to his Mother, and the reſt of his Friends and to get him to ſome Surgeon betimes; ſo they departing, had little or no talk at all together. Then was he led forth to Smithfield with a great company of weaponed men, to conduct him thither, as the like was not ſeen at any mans burning: for in every corner of Smithfield there were ſome, beſides thoſe that ſtood about the Stak. Bradford then being come to the place fell flat to the ground, ſecretly making his prayers to Almighty God. Then riſing again, and puting off his cloths unto his ſhirt, he went to the ſtake, and there ſuffered with a young of twenty years of age, joyfully and conſtantly, whoſe name was John Leaf. Touching the order and manner of whoſe burning, more ſhall be ſaid (God willing) hereafter. In the mean time, we will now ſhew forth the ſundry examinations, conflicts, and conferences between him and other his Adverſaries during the time of his impriſonment, which was in all two years lacking one month and a half. Which Examinations here follow to be declared.

M. Bradford two years lacking a month and a half in priſon.

It was before a little above declared, that John Bradford, within three days after the Sermon of Maſter Bourn, was by the Councell commited to the Tower, where he remained from the month of Auguſt, Anno 1553. to the 22. day of January, Anno 1555. upon which day he was called called out to examination before Steven Winchester and other of the Commissioners. The effect of which examination and communication which passed between him and them, proceeded in manner as followeth.

The effect of the communication between John Bradford and the Lord Chancellor and others in Commission with him, the two and twenty day of January, Anno 1555.

Talk between M. Bradford and Steven Winchester.

AFter the Lord Chancellor, and the residue of the Queens Councell in Commission with him, had ended their talk with Master Farrar late Bishop of Saint Davids, the Under-marshall of the Kings Bench was commanded to bring in John Bradford: who, being come into the presence of the Councell sitting at a Table, kneeled down on his knee, but immediatly by the Lord Chancellor was bidden to stand up, and so he did.

Winchester overfaced.

When he was risen, the Lord Chancellor earnestly looked upon him, to have (belike) overfaced him: but he gave no place; that is, he ceased not in like manner to look on the Lord Chancellor still continually, save that once he cast up his eyes to Heaven-ward, sighed for Gods grace, and so over faced him.

The words of the Bishop of Winchester to John Bradford

L. Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor as it were amazed, and something troubled, spake thus to him in effect; That of long time he had been imprisoned justly for his seditious behaviour at Pauls Cross, the thirteenth of August, in the year One thousand five hundred fifty three, for his false preaching and arrogancie, taking upon him to preach without Authority. But now (quoth he) the time of mercy is come, and therefore the Queens Highness, minding to offer unto you mercy, hath by us sent for you, to declare and give the same, if so be ye will with us return: and if you will do as we have done, you shall find as we have found, I warrant you. This was the sum of his words, and in manner the same words which he spake.

Bradford answers again to Winchester.

Brad. To these words John Bradford spake (after reverent obeysance made) in this manner: My Lord and Lords all, I confess that I have been long imprisoned, and (with humble reverence be it spoken) unjustly, for that I did nothing Seditiously, Falsely, or Arrogantly, in word or fact, by preaching or otherwise, but rather sought truth, peace, and all godly quietness, as an obedient and faithfull Subject both in going about to save the Bishop of Bathe now, then Mr. Bourn, the Preacher at the Cross, and in preaching for quietness accordingly.

Bradfords fact in saying of Bourn counted for Seditious.

L. Chan. At these words, or rather before he had fully finished, the said Lord Chancellor something snuffed, and spake with an Admiration, that there was a loud lye: for (quoth he) the fact was Seditious, as you my Lord of London can bear witness.

Boner witnesseth with Winchester against Bradford.

Boner. You say true my Lord; I saw him with mine own eyes, when he took upon him to rule and lead the People malepertly, thereby declaring that he was the Author of the Sedition.

Brad. My Lords, notwithstading my Lord Bishops seeing and saying, yet the truth I have told, as one day my Lord God Almighty shall reveal to all the World, when we shall all come and appear before him: In the mean season, because I cannot be believed of you, I must and am ready to suffer, as now your sayings be, whatsoever God shall license you to do unto me.

This talk of Bradford first in the Tower, came not to our hands.

L. Chan. I know thou hast a glorious tongue, and goodly shews thou makest: but all is lyes thou speakest. And again, I have not forgot how stubborn thou wast when thou wast before us in the Tower, whereupon thou wast committed to prison concerning Religion: I have not forgotten thy behaviour and talk, wherethrough worthily thou hast been kept in prison, as one that would have done more hurt than I will speak of.

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour. Commandment the ninth.

Brad. My Lord, as I said I say again, that I stand as before you, so before God, and one day we shall all stand before him: the truth then will be the truth, though now ye will not so take it. Yea my Lord, I dare say, that my Lord of Bath, Mr. Bourn will witness with me, that I sought his safeguard with the perill of mine own life, I thank God therefore.

Bradford desired of Master Bourn to help him, and yet is now shent for his labour.

Boner. That is not true: for I my self did see thee take upon thee too much.

Brad. No, I took nothing upon me undesired, and that of Master Bourn himself, as if he were here present, I dare say he would affirm. For he desired me both to help him to pacifie the People, and also not to leave him till he was in safety. And as for my behaviour in the Tower, and talk before your Honours, if I did or said any thing that did not beseem me, if your Lordships would tell me wherein it was, I should and would shortly make you answer.

Chan. Well, to leave this matter: how sayest thou now? Wilt thou return again, and do as we have done, and thou shalt receive the Queens mercy and pardon?

Mans mercy with Gods wrath refused.

Brad. My Lord, I desire mercy with Gods mercy, but mercy with Gods wrath, God keep me from: Although (I thank God therefore) my conscience doth not accuse me, that I did speak any thing wherefore I should need to receive the Queens mercy or pardon. For all that ever I did or spake, was both agreeable to Gods Laws, and the Laws of the Realm at that present, and did make much to quietness.

Chan. Well, if thou make this babbling rolling in thy eloquent tongue, and yet being altogether ignorant and vain-glorious, and wilt not receive mercy offered to thee, know for truth, that the Queen is minded to make a "purgation of all such as thou art.

That is the worst you and your Pope can do, and the best argument you have.

Brad. The Lord before whom I stand, as well as before you, knoweth what vain-glory I have sought, and seek in this behalf: his mercy I desire, and also would be glad of the Queens favour, to live as a subject without a clog of conscience. But otherwise the Lords mercy is better to me than life. And I know to whom I have committed my life, even into his hands which will keep it, so that no man my take it away before it be his pleasure. There are twelve hours in the day, and as long as they last, so long shall no man have power thereon. Therefore his good will be done; life in his displeasure is worse than Death, and Death with his true favour, is true life.

The Lords mercy is better than life to Bradford.

Chan. I know well enough, that we shall have glorious talk enough of thee: be sure therefore that as thou hast deceived the People with false and devillish Doctrin, so shalt thou receive.

Bradford ready to confirm his Doctrine with his life

Brad. I have not deceived the People, nor taught any other Doctrin, than by Gods grace I am, and hope shall be ready to confirm with my life. And as for the devillishness and falseness in the Doctrin, I would be sorry you could so prove it.

Dures. Why, tell me, what say you by the Ministration of the Communion, as now you know it is?

Bradford asketh a question before he answereth any interrogatory.

Brad. My Lord, here I must desire of your Lordship and of all your Honours a question, before I dare make you an answer to any Interrogatory or Question, wherewith you now begin. I have been six times sworn that I shall in no case consent to the practising of any Jurisdiction, or any Authority on the Bishop of Romes behalf within this Realm of England. Now, before God, I humbly pray your Honors to tell me whether you ask me this question by his Authority, or no? If you do, I dare not, nor may answer you any thing in his Authority, which you shall demand of me, except I would be forsworn, which God forbid.

Secretary Bourn speaks. Bradford six times sworn against the Pope.

Sec. Bourn: Hast thou been sworn six times? what office hast thou born?

Brad. Forsooth I was thrice sworn in Cambridge, when I was admitted Master of Art, when I was admitted Fellow of Pembroke Hall, and when I was there, the Visitors came thither, and sware the University. Again, I was sworn when I entred into the Ministery, when I had a Prebend given me, and when I was sworn to serve the King a little before his Death.

Herods Oaths, quoth Winchester.

Chan. Tush, Herods Oaths a man should make no conscience at.

Winchest. de vera obedientia.

Brad. But my Lord, these were no Herods Oaths, no unlawfull Oaths, but Oaths according to Gods Word, as you your self have well affirmed in your book De vera obedientia.

M. Rochester speaketh.

M. Roch. My Lords (quoth another of the Councel that stood by the table, Master Rochester I ween) I never knew wherefore this man was in prison before now: but I see well that it had not been good that this man had been abroad: what the cause was that he was put in prison, I know not; but I now well know that not without a cause he was and is to be kept in prison.

The Earl of Derbies complaint against Bradford.

Bourn. Yea, it was reported this Parliament time by the Earl of Derby, that he hath done more hurt by Letters, and exhorting those that have come to him, in Religion,

This Letter was written to his Mother, Brethren and Sisters, and followeth hereafter.

in Religion, than ever he did when he was abroad by preaching. In his letters he curseth all that teach any false Doctrine (for so he calleth that which is not according to that he taught) and most heartily exhorteth them to whom he writeth to continue still in that they have received by him, and such like as he is. All which words divers of the Councel affirmed. Whereunto the said M. Bourn added, saying; How say you Sir, have you not thus Seditiously written and exhorted the People?

M. Bradford falsly charged with Sedition.

Brad. I have not written, nor spoken any thing Seditiously, neither (I thank God therefore) have I admitted any Seditious Cogitation, nor I trust ever shall do.

Bourn. Yea, thou hast written Letters.

Chan. Why speakest thou not? Hast thou not written as he saith?

Brad. That I have written, I have written.

Rich. Southwell speaketh.

South. Lord God, what an Arrogant and Stubborn Boy is this, that thus stoutly and dallyingly behaveth himself before the Queens Councel? Whereat one looked upon another with disdainful Countenances.

Brad. My Lords and Masters, the Lord God which is, and will be Judge to us all, knoweth, that as I am certain I stand now before his Majesty; so with reverence in his sight I stand before you, and unto you accordingly in words and gesture I desire to behave my self. If you otherwise take it, I doubt not but God in his time will reveal it: In the mean season, I shall suffer with all due obedience your sayings and doings too, I hope.

All is lyes that pleaseth not Winchester.

Chan. These be gay and glorious words of reverence but as in all others things, so herein also thou doest nothing but lye.

Brad. Well, I would God the Author of truth, and abhorrer of lyes, would pull my tongue out of my head before you all, and shew a terrible Judgment on me here present, if I have purposed or do purpose to lye before you, whatsoever you shall ask me.

Winchester holden at a bay.

Chan. Why then doest thou not answer? Hast thou written such Letters as here is objected against thee?

Brad. As I said, my Lord, that I have written, I have written, I stand now before you, which either can lay my Letters to my charge, or no: if you lay any thing to my charge that I have written, if I deny it, I am than a lyar.

Chan. We shall never have done with thee, I perceive now: be short, be short, Wilt thou have mercy?

Brad. I pray God give me his mercy, and if therewith you will extend yours, I will not refuse it, but otherwise I will none.

Here now was much ado, one speaking this, and another that of his Arrogancie, in refusing the Queens pardon, which she so lovingly did offer unto him; whereto Bradford answered thus:

M. Bradford desireth to live that he may have life without clog of conscience.

Brad. My Lords, if I may live as a quiet subject without clog of conscience, I shall heartily thank you for your pardon; if otherwise I behave my self, than I am in danger of the Law: in the mean season I ask no more, but the benefit of a Subject, till I be convinced of transgression, If I cannot have this, as hitherto I have not had, Gods good will be done.

Winchester speakesh against the Doctrine taught in King Edwards time.

Chan. Upon these words my Lord Chancellor began a long process of the false Doctrine wherewith the People were deceived in the days of King Edward, and so turned the end of his talk to Bradford, saying: How sayest thou?

M. Bradford standeth in defence of the Doctrine taught in King Edwards time.

Brad. My Lord, the Doctrine taught in K. Edwards days was Gods pure Religion: the which as I then believed, so do I now more believe it than ever I did, and therin I am more confirmed, and ready to declare it by Gods grace even as he will, to the World, than I was when I first came into prison.

Dures. What Religion mean you in K. Edwards days? What year of his reign?

Brad. Forsooth even the same year my Lord, that the King died, and I was a Preacher. Here wrote Secretary Bourn I wote not what.

The reason of winchester wherewith he disproveth the Doctrine of K. Edwards days.

Chan. Now after a little pausing, my Lord Chancellor beginneth again to declare, that the Doctrine taught in King Edwards days was Heresie, using for probation and demonstration thereof, no Scripture nor Reason, but this: that it ended with Treason and Rebellion, so that (quoth he) the very end were enough to prove that Doctrine to be naught, Brad. Ah my Lord, that you could enter in Gods Sanctuary, and mark the end of this present Doctrine that you now so magnifie.

Anno 1555.

Chan. What meanest thou by that? I ween we shall have a snatch of Rebellion even now.

Brad. My Lord, I mean no such end as you would gather: I mean an end which no man seeth, but such as enter into Gods Sanctuary. If a man look on present things, he will soon deceive himself.

The Queens mercy again offered to M. Bradford.

Here now did my L. Chancellor offer again mercy, and Bradford answered, as before: Mercy with Gods mercy should be welcom, but otherwise he would none. Whereupon the L. Chancellor did ring a little Bell, belike to call in some Body: for there was present none in manner, but onely those before named, and the Bishop of Worcester. Now when one was come in; it is best, quoth Mr. Secretary Bourn, that you give the Keeper a charge of this fellow. So was the Undermarshal called in.

M. Bradford returned again into prison.

Chan. Ye shall take this man to you, and keep him close without conference with any man, but by your knowledge, and suffer him not to write any Letters, &c. for he is of another manner of charge unto you now, than he was before. And so they departed, Bradford looking as cheerfully as any man could do, declaring thereby even a desire to give his life for confirmation of that he had taught and written.

The effect of the second examination of John Bradford in S. Mary Overies Church, before the L. Chancellor, and divers other Bishops, the 29. of January. Anno 1555.

The second examination of M. Bradford before the Bishop of Winchester and others.

AFter the Excommunication of John Rogers, John Bradford was called in, and standing before the L. Chancellor and other Bishops set with him, the said L. Chancellor speake thus in effect.

L. Chan. Where before the 22. of January, the said Bradford was called before them (said he) and they offered unto him the Queens pardon, although he had contemned the same, and further said, that he would stiffly and stoutly maintain, and defend the Erroneous Doctrine taught in the days of K. Edward the 6, yet in consideration that the Queens Highness was wonderful merciful, they thought good eftsoons to offer the same mercy again, before it were too late: therefore advise you well, said he, there is yet space and grace before we so proceed, that you be committed to the Secular Power, as me must do and will do, if you will not follow the example of Mr. Barlow, and Mr. Cardmaker, whom he there commended, adding oratoriously amplifications to move the said Bradford to yeeld to the Religion presently set forth.

Example of M. Barlow and Cardmaker laid against Bradford.

Brad. After the L. Chancellors long talk, Bradford began on this sort to speak; My Lord, and my Lords all, as now I stand in your sight before you, so I humbly beseech your Honours to consider, that you sit in the seat of the Lord, who (as David doth witness) is in the congregation of Judges, and sitteth in the midst of them judging: and as you would your place to be now of us taken as Gods place, so demonstrate your selves to follow him in your sitting, that is, seek no guiltless Blood, nor hunt not by questions to bring into the snare, them which are out of the same. At this present I stand before you guilty or guiltless, then proceed and give sentence accordingly: if guiltless, then give me the benefit of a subject, which hitherto I could not have.

Illum oportet, vitæ sanctæ, qui auxilium tulit, quid facies illi, qui dederit damnum aut malum?

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor replyed, and said, that the said Bradford began with a true sentence, Deus stetit in Synagoga, &c. But quoth he, this and all thy gesture declareth but Hypocrisie and vain-glory. And further he made much ado to purge himself, that he sought not guiltless Blood, and so began a long process how that Bradfords fact at Pauls Cross, was presumptuous, arrogant, and declared a taking upon him to lead the People, which could not but turn to much disquietnes, in that thou (speaking to Bradford) was so retract & stout in Religion at that present. For the which, as thou wast then committed to prison, so hitherto thou hast been kept in prison, where thou hast written Letters to no little hurt to the Queens people, as by report of the Earl of Derby in the Parliament House was credibly declared. And to this he added, that the said Bradford did stubbornly behave himself the last time he was before them: and therefore not for any other thing now I demand of thee, quoth he, but of and for thy Doctrine and Religion.

The witness of the Earl of Derby laid against M. Bradford.

Brad.

Anno 1555.

Brad. My Lord, where you accuſe me of Hypocriſie and Vain-glory, I muſt and will leave it to the Lords Declaration, which one day will open yours and my Truth and hearty meanings: in the mean ſeaſon, I will content my ſelf with the teſtimony of mine own Conſcience, which if it yield to Hypocriſie, could not but have God to be my foe alſo; and ſo both God and Man were againſt me. And as for my fact at Pauls-Croſs, and behaviour before you at the Tower, I doubt not but God will reveal it to my comfort. For if ever I did thing, which God uſed to publick benefit, I think that my deed was one, and yet for it I have been and am kept of long time in Priſon. And as for Letters and Religion, I anſwer, as I did the laſt time I was before you.

M. Bradford defendeth his Fact at Pauls-Croſs.

Chan. There didſt thou ſay ſtubbornly and malepertly, that thou wouldeſt manly maintain the erroneous Doctrine in King Edwards days.

The words of M. Bradford miſreported.

Brad. My Lord, I ſaid the laſt time I was before you, that I had ſix times taken an Oath, that I ſhould never conſent to the practiſing of any Juriſdiction on the Biſhop of Romes behalf, and therefore durſt I not anſwer to any thing that ſhould be demanded ſo, leſt I ſhould be forſworn, which God forbid. Howbeit, ſaving mine Oath, I ſaid that I was more confirmed in the Doctrine ſet forth publickly in the days of King Edward, than ever I was before I was put in Priſon: and ſo I thought I ſhould be, & think yet ſtill I ſhall be found more ready to give my life as God will, for the confirmation of the ſame.

M. Bradford more confirmed in his Doctrine after his Impriſonment than before.

Chan. I remember well that thou madeſt much ado about needleſs matter, as though the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome were ſo great a matter. So others have done before thee, but yet not in ſuch ſort as thou haſt done: for thou pretendeſt a Conſcience in it, which is nothing elſe but meer hypocriſie.

Wincheſter maketh but a ſmall matter of an Oath.

Brad. My Conſcience is known to the Lord: and whether I deal herein hypocritically or no, he knoweth. As I ſaid therefore then my Lord, ſo I ſay again now, That for fear leſt I ſhould be perjured, I dare not make anſwer to any thing you ſhall demand of me, if my anſwering ſhould conſent to the confirming or practiſing of any Juriſdiction for the Biſhop of Rome here in England.

L. Chan. Why didſt thou begin to tell that we are Dii, and ſit in Gods place, and now wilt thou not make us an anſwer?

Bradford ſtandeth ſtill to his Oath.

Brad. My Lord, I ſaid, you would have your place taken of us now as Gods place: and therefore I brought forth that piece of Scripture, that ye might the more be admoniſhed to follow God and his ways at this preſent, who ſeeth us all, and well perceiveth whether of Conſcience I pretend this matter of the Oath, or no.

L. Chan. No, all men may well ſee thine hypocriſie: for if for thine Oaths ſake thou didſt not anſwer, then wouldeſt thou not have ſpoken as thou didſt, and have anſwered me at the firſt: but now men well perceive, that this is but a ſtarting-hole to hide thy ſelf in, becauſe thou dareſt not anſwer, and ſo wouldeſt eſcape, blinding the ſimple Peoples eyes, as though of Conſcience you did all you do.

Brad. That which I ſpake at the firſt, was not a replication or an anſwer to that you ſpake to me: and therefore I needed not to lay for me mine Oath. For I thought you would have more weighed what I did ſpeak, than you did: but when I perceived you did not conſider it, but came to ask matter, whereto by anſwering I ſhould conſent to the practiſing of Juriſdiction on the Biſhop of Romes behalf here in England, and ſo be forſworn; then of Conſcience and ſimplicity I ſpake as I do yet again ſpeak, that I dare not for Conſcience ſake anſwer you. And therefore I ſeek no ſtarting-holes, nor go about to blind the People, as God knoweth. For if you of your Honours ſhall tell me, that you do not ask me any thing whereby mine anſwering ſhould conſent to the practiſing of the Biſhop of Romes Juriſdiction, ask me wherein you will, and you ſhall hear that I will anſwer you as flatly as ever any did that came before you. I am not afraid of death, I thank God: for I look, and have looked for nothing elſe at your hands of long time: but I am afraid, when Death cometh, I ſhould have matter to trouble my Conſcience, by the guiltineſs of Perjury, and therefore do I anſwer as I do.

The cauſe why Bradford anſwereth not to Wincheſter. Popiſh Interrogatories.

L. Chan. Theſe be gay glorious words, full of hypocriſie and vain-glory, and yet doſt thou not know that I ſit here as Biſhop of Wincheſter in mine own Dioceſs, and therefore may do this which I do, and more too?

Bradford ready to anſwer under proteſtation.

Brad. My Lord, give me leave to ask you this queſtion, that my Conſcience may be out of doubt in this matter. Tell me here Coram Deo, before God, all this Audience being witneſs, that you demand of me nothing whereby mine anſwering ſhould conſent to and confirm the practice of Juriſdiction for the Biſhop of Rome here in England, and yet your Honour ſhall hear me give you as flat and as plain anſwers briefly, to whatſoever you ſhall demand me, as ever any did.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was wonderfully offended, and ſpake much how the Biſhop of Romes Authority needed no confirmation of Bradfords anſwering, nor no ſuch as he was; and turned his talk to the People, how that Bradford followed crafty covetous Merchants, which becauſe they would lend no mony to their Neighbours when they were in need, would ſay that they had ſworn oft, that they would never lend any more mony, becauſe there Debtors had ſo oft deceived them. Even ſo thou, quoth he to Bradford, doſt at this preſent, to caſt a miſt in the Peoples eyes, to blear them with an Hereſie (which is greater, and more hurtful to the Commonwealth than the other is) pretend thine Oath, whereby the People might make a Conſcience, whereas they ſhould not. Why ſpeakeſt thou not?

Difference of Oaths: ſome with Faith and Charity, ſome againſt it.

Brad. My Lord, as I ſaid, I ſay again, I dare not anſwer you for fear of Perjury, from which God defend me, or elſe I could tell you that there is a difference between Oaths. Some be according to Faith and Charity, as the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome: ſome be againſt Faith and Charity; as this, to deny by Oath, my help to my Brother in his need.

L. Chan. Here my L. Chancellor again was much offended, ſtill ſaying that Bradford durſt not anſwer, and further made much ado to prove, that the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome was againſt Charity.

Brad. But Bradford anſwered, that howſoever his Honour took him, yet he was aſſured of his meaning, that no fear but the fear of Perjury made him unwilling to anſwer: For, as for death, my Lord (quoth he) as I know there are 12. hours in the day, ſo with the Lord my time is appointed. And when it ſhall be his good time, then I ſhall depart hence: but in the mean ſeaſon I am ſafe enough, though all the People had ſworn my death. Into his hands have I committed it, and do, his good will be done. And ſaving mine Oath, I will anſwer you in this behalf, that the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome was not, nor is againſt Charity.

L. Chan. How prove you that?

Brad. Forſooth I prove it thus:

Argument.

Fe- Nothing is againſt Charity, which is with Gods Word, and not againſt it.

The Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome, is not againſt Charity.

ſti- The Oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes Authority in England, is with Gods Word, and is not againſt it.

no. Ergo, The Oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes Authority in England, is not againſt Charity.

A King, how he may be taken for Supream Head of the Church in his own Dominion.

L. Chan. Is it againſt Gods Word, that a man ſhould take a King to be Supream Head of the Church in this Realm?

Brad. No, ſaving ſtill mine Oath, it is not againſt Gods Word, but with it, being taken in ſuch ſenſe as it may well be taken: that is, attributing to the Kings power, the Soveraignty in all his Dominion.

L. Chan. I pray you where find you that?

Rom. 13. Biſhops, Prophets and Apoſtles ſubject to Temporal Magiſtrates.

Brad. I find it in many places, but ſpecially in the 13. to the Romans, where S. Paul writeth, Every ſoul to be ſubject to the ſuperiour Power: but what Power? Quæ gladium geſtat, The Power verily which beareth the Sword; which is not the Spiritual, but the Temporal Power. As Chryſoſtom full well noteth upon the ſame place, which your Honour knoweth better than I. He (Chryſoſtom I mean) there plainly ſheweth that Biſhops, Prophets, and Apoſtles, are obedient to the Temporal Magiſtrates.

L. Chan. Here yet more the Lord Chancellor was ſtirred, and ſaid, how that Bradford went about to deny all obedience to the Queen for his Oath: and ſo (quoth he) this man would make Gods word a warrant of diſobedience: for he will anſwer the Queen on this ſort, that when ſhe ſaith, Now ſwear to the Biſhop of Rome, or obey his Authority: No (will he ſay) for I ſhould be forſworn, and ſo he makes the Queen no Queen.

all

Refuſing of the Popes obedience being ſworn againſt him is no denying of obedience to the Queen.

Brad. No, I go not about to deny all obedience to the Queens Highneſs, but denying obedience in this part, if he ſhould demand it. For I was ſworn to K. Edward, not ſimply, that is, not only concerning his own perſon, but alſo concerning his Succeſſors, and therefore in denying to do the Queens requeſt herein, I deny not her Authority, nor become diſobedient.

The prepoſterous Judgment of Wincheſter, to care ſo little for an Oath to God, and ſo much for his Vow to the Pope.

L. Chan. Yes that thou doeſt: and ſo he began to tell a long tale, how if a man ſhould make an Oath to pay to me an hundred pounds by ſuch a day, and the man to whom it was due would forget the debt, the debtor ſhould ſay, No, you cannot do it: for I am forſworn then.

Brad. Here Bradford deſired my L. Chancellor not to trifle it, ſaying, that he wondred his Honour would make Solemn Oaths made to God, trifles in that ſort; and make ſo great a matter concerning Vows (as they call it) made to the Biſhop for Marriage of Prieſts.

Chan. At theſe words the L. Chancellor was much offended, and ſaid, he did not trifle: but quoth he, thou goeſt about to deny obedience to the Queen, which now requireth obedience to the Biſhop of Rome.

Argument. A Specie ad genus negative non valet.

Brad. No my Lord, I do not deny obedience to the Queen, if you would diſcern between Genus and Species. Becauſe I may not obey in this; Ergo, I may not obey in the other, is no good reaſon. As if a man let or ſell a piece of his Inheritance, yet, this notwithſtanding, all his Inheritance is not let or ſold: and ſo in this caſe, all obedience I deny not, becauſe I deny obedience in this Branch.

Chan. I will none of theſe ſimilitudes.

Brad. I would not uſe them, if that you went not about to perſwade the People, that I meant that which I never meant: for I my ſelf not onely mean obedience, but will give enſample of all moſt humble obedience to the Queens Highneſs, ſo long as ſhe requireth not obedience againſt God.

Chan. No, no, all men may ſee your meaning well enough. There is no man, though he be ſworn to the King, that doth therefore break his Oath, if he afterwards be ſworn to the French King and to the Emperor.

Brad. It is true my Lord, but the caſes be not like. For here is an exception; Thou ſhalt not ſwear to the Biſhop of Rome at any time. If we in like manner were ſworn; Thou ſhall not ſerve the Emperor, &c. you ſee there were ſome alteration and more doubt. But I beſeech your Honour remember what ye your ſelf have written, anſwering the Objections hereagainſt in your Book De vera obedientia. Vincat modo divini verbi veritas. i. Let Gods Word, and the reaſon thereof, bear the bell away.

Winchester. pretendeth as though Bradford for fear durſt not anſwer.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was thorowly moved, and ſaid ſtill, how that Bradford hath written ſeditious Letters, and perverted the People thereby, and did ſtoutly ſtand, as though he would defend the Erroneous Doctine in King Edwards time, againſt all men: and now, quoth he, he ſaith, he dare not anſwer.

Brad. I have written no ſeditious Letters, I have not perverted the People: but that which I have written and ſpoken, that will I never deny, by Gods grace. And where your Lordſhip ſaith, that I dare not anſwer you: that all men may know that I am not afraid, ſaving mine Oath, ask me what you will, and I will plainly make you anſwer, by Gods grace, although I now ſee my life lieth thereon. But O Lord, into thy hands I commit it, come what come will: onely ſanctifie thy Name in me, as in an inſtrument of thy grace, Amen. Now ask what you will, and you ſhall ſee I am not afraid, by Gods grace, ſtarly to anſwer.

Bradford ready to tender a reaſon of his faith.

Chriſt preſent corporally in the Sacrament to faith.

L. Chan. Well then, how ſay you to the bleſſed Sacrament? Do you not believe there Chriſt to be preſent concerning his Natural Body?

Brad. My Lord, I do not believe that Chriſt is corporally preſent at and in the due Adminiſtration of the Sacrament. By this word (corporally) I mean that Chriſt is there preſent corporally unto faith.

L. Chan. Unto faith? we muſt have many more words to make it plain.

Brad. You ſhall ſo: but firſt give me leave to ſpeak two words. Anno 1555.

L. Chan. Speak on.

Brad. I have been now a year and almoſt three quarters in priſon, and of all this time you never queſtioned with me hereabout, when I might have ſpoken my conſcience frankly without peril: but now have you a Law to hang up and put to death, if a man anſwer freely, and not to your appetite, and ſo now you come to demand this queſtion. Ah my Lord, Chriſt uſed not this way to bring men to faith. No more did the Prophets or Apoſtles. Remember what Bern. writeth to Eugenius the Pope; Apoſtolos lego ſtetiſſe judicandos, ſediſſe judicantes non lego. Hoc erit, illud fuit, &c. That is, I read, that the Apoſtles ſtood to be judged, but I read not, that they ſate to judge. This ſhall be, that was, &c.

Note well the Popes way to bring men to faith.

The Popes judging and condemning men for their faith, reproved by Bernard.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was appalled, as it ſeemed, and ſaid moſt gently that he uſed not this means. It was not my doing, quoth he, although ſome there be that think this to be the beſt way: For I, for my part have been challenged for being too gentle oftentimes: Which thing the Biſhop of London confirmed, and ſo did almoſt all the audience, that he had been ever too milde and too gentle.

Winchester blamed without a cauſe, as he ſaith.

Brad. At which words Bradford ſpake thus: My Lord, I pray you ſtretch out your gentleneſs, that I may feel it, for hitherto I never felt it.

Chan. As ſoon as ever he had ſpoken thus: the Lord Chancellor, belike thinking that Bradford would have had mercy and pardon, ſaid, that with all his heart, not onely he, but the Queens Highneſs would ſtretch out mercy if with them he would return.

Bradford three quarters of a year in the Tower kept from pen and ink.

Brad. Return, my Lord? God ſave me from that going back: I mean it not ſo, but I mean, that I was three quarters of a year in the Tower; you forbad me paper, pen and ink, and never in all that time, nor ſithence did I feel any gentleneſs from you. I have rather hitherto found, as I looked for, extremity. And I thank God that I perceive now ye have kept me in priſon thus long, not for any matter ye had, but for matter ye would have; Gods good will be done.

M. Bradford impriſoned, not for matter they had, but for matter they would have againſt him.

Here now were divers telling my Lord it was dinner time. And ſo he roſe up, leaving Bradford ſpeaking, and ſaying that in the afternoon thy would ſpeak more with him. And ſo was he had into the Veſtry, and was there all that day till dark night, and ſo was conveyed again to priſon.

Bradford kept in the Veſtry till dark night.

T. Huſſey cometh to Bradford.

In the mean time, about four of the clock the ſame afternoon, a Gentleman called Maſter Thomas Huſſey of Lincolnſhire, which was once an Officer in the Duke of Northfolks Houſe, did come into the Veſtry to inquire for one Stoning: and when it was anſwered him by the undermarſhals Officers of the Kings Bench, that there was none ſuch, he entered into the houſe, and took acquaintance of John Bradford, ſaying, that he would commune and ſpeak with him the next morning for old acquaintance.

Counſell of M. Huſſey given to M. Bradford.

The next morning about ſeven of the clock, this Gentleman come into the Chamber wherein John Bradford did lye, and being with him, he began a long Oration, how that of love and old acquaintance he came unto him to ſpeak that which he would further utter. You did (ſaid he) ſo wonderfully behave your ſelf before the L. Chancellor, and other Biſhops yeſter day, that even the verieſt enemies you have, did ſee that they have no matter againſt you: & therefore adviſe you (ſpeaking as though it came of his own good will, without making any other man privie, or any other procuring him, as he ſaid) this day (for anon you ſhall be called before them again) to deſire a time, and men to confer withall, ſo ſhall all men think a wonderful Wiſdom, gravity, and godlineſs in you: and by this means you ſhall eſcape preſent danger, which elſe is neerer than you be ware of. To this John Bradford anſwered, I neither can nor will make ſuch requeſt. For then ſhall I give occaſion to the people and to all other to think that I donbt of the Doctrine which I confeſs; the which thing I do not, for thereof I am moſt aſſured, & therefore I will give no ſuch offence.

Mr. Bradford refuſeth to require reſpit.

As they were thus talking, the Chamber Door was unlocked & D. Seton came in, who when he ſaw M. Huſſey. What Sir, quoth Bradford in his heart to God, goeth the matter thus? This man told me, no man knew of his coming: Lord give me grace to remember thy leſſon, Dr. Seton cometh to Mr. Bradford.

Huſſey taken with a lye.

Cavete

Anno 1555.

Cavete ab hominibus illis, Beware of thoſe men, &c. Caſt not your Pearls before Dogs: for I ſee theſe men be come to hunt for matter, that the one may bear witneſs with the other.

Councel of D. Seton given to M. Bradford.

Seton. Dr. Seton, after ſome by-talk of Bradfords Age, of his Country and ſuch like, began a gay and long Sermon of my Lord of Canterbury, Mr. Latimer, and Mr. Ridley, and how they at Oxford were not able to anſwer any thing at all; and that therefore my Lord of Canterbury deſired to confer with the Biſhop of Dunelm and others: all which Talk tended to this end, that John Bradford ſhould make the like ſuit, being in nothing to be compared in Learning to my Lord of Canterbury.

Brad. To this John Bradford briefly anſwered as he did before to Mr. Huſſey.

The flattering commendation of D. Seton to M. Bradford.

Seton. With this Anſwer neither the Doctor nor Gentleman being contented, after many perſwaſions, Mr. Doctor ſaid, I have heard much good talk of you, and even yeſternight a Gentleman made report of you at the Lord Chancellors Table, that ye were able to perſwade as much as any that he knew. And I (though I never heard you preach, and to my knowledge did never ſee you before yeſterday,) yet methought your modeſty was ſuch, your behaviour and talk ſo without malice and impatience, that I would be ſorry you ſhould do worſe than my ſelf. And I tell you further, I do perceive my Lord Chancellor hath a fantaſie towards you: wherefore be not ſo obſtinate, but deſire reſpit and ſome Learned man to confer withal, &c.

M. Bradford refuſeth to take reſpit to confer upon his Doctrine.

Brad. But John Bradford kept ſtill one anſwer: I cannot, nor I will not ſo offend the People. I doubt not, but I am moſt certain of the Doctrine I have taught.

Seton. Here Mr. Doctor waxed hot, and called Bradford arrogant, proud, vain-glorious, and ſpake like a Prelate.

Brad. But Bradford anſwered, Beware of judging, leſt you condemn your ſelf. But ſtill Mr. Doctor Seton urged him, ſhewing him how merciful my L. Chancellor was, and how charitably they entertained him.

Little juſtice leſs love appeareth in the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Brad. I never ſaw any Juſtice, much leſs Love, I ſpeak for my part, quoth Bradford, in my Lord Chancellor. Long have I been unjuſtly impriſoned, and handled in the ſame uncharitably: and now my Lord hath no juſt matter againſt me.

This talk ſerved not the Doctors purpoſe: wherefore he went from matter to matter, from this point to that point. Bradford ſtill gave him the hearing, and anſwered not: for he perceived that they both did come but to fiſh for ſome things which might make a ſhew that my L. Chancellor had juſtly kept him in Priſon.

When all their talk took no ſuch effect as they would or looked for, Mr. Huſſey asked Bradford, will ye not admit conference, if my L. Chancellor ſhould offer it publickly?

M. Bradford refuſeth to admit conference but upon conditions.

Brad. Conference, if it had been offered before the Law had been made, or if it were offered ſo that I might be at liberty to confer, and as ſure as he with whom I ſhould confer, then it were ſomething: but elſe I ſee not to what other purpoſe Conference ſhould be offered, but to defer that which will come at the length, and the lingring may give more offence than do good. Howbeit, if my Lord ſhall make ſuch an offer of his own motion, I will not refuſe to confer with whomſoever he ſhall appoint.

D. Seton raileth againſt M. Bradford.

Mr. Doctor hearing this, called Bradford arrogant, proud, and whatſoever it pleaſed him.

Then Bradford perceiving by them that he ſhould ſhortly be called for, beſought them both to give him leave to talk with God, and to beg wiſdom and grace of him: for, quoth he, otherwiſe I am helpleſs: and ſo they with much ado departed. Then Bradford went to God and made his Prayers, which the Lord of his goodneſs did graciouſly accept in his need, praiſed therefore be his holy Name. Shortly after they were gone, Bradford was led to the foreſaid Church, and there tarried uncalled for till Eleven of the Clock, that is, till M. Sanders was Excommunicated.

The effect and ſum of the laſt Examination of John Bradford, in the Church of St. Mary Overies.

The laſt examination of M. Bradford.

AFter the Excommunication of Lawrence Sanders, John Bradford was called in, and being brought in before the L. Chancellor and other the Biſhops there ſitting, the L. Chancellor began to ſpeak thus in effect: that if Bradford, being now eftſoons come before them, would anſwer with modeſty and humility, and conform himſelf to the Catholick Church with them, he yet might find mercy, becauſe they would be loath to uſe extremity. Therefore he concluded with an Exhortation, that Bradford would recant his Doctrine.

The effect of Wincheſters talk with M. Bradford.

After the Lord Chancellor had ended his long Oration, Bradford began to ſpeak thus: As yeſterday I beſought your Honours to ſet in your ſight the Majeſty and preſence of God to follow him, which ſeeketh not to ſubvert the ſimple by ſubtile queſtions: ſo I humbly beſeech every one of you to do this day; for that you know well enough, that guiltleſs Blood will cry for Vengeance. And this I pray not your Lordſhips to do, as one that taketh upon me to condemn you utterly herein, but that ye might be more admoniſhed to do that, which none doth ſo much as he ſhould do: For our Nature is ſo much corrupt, that we are very oblivious and forgetful of God. Again, as yeſterday I pretended mine Oath and Oaths againſt the Biſhop of Rome, that I ſhould never conſent to the practiſing of any Juriſdiction for him, or on his behalf in the Realm of England: ſo do I again at this day, leſt I ſhould be perjured. And laſt of all, as yeſterday the Anſwers I made, were by proteſtation and ſaving mine Oath, ſo I would your Honours ſhould know that mine Anſwers ſhall be this day: and this I do, that when Death (which I look for at your hands) ſhall come, I may not be troubled with the guiltineſs of Perjury.

M. Bradfords Anſwer to Wincheſter.

Wincheſter replyeth again to Bradford with a lye.

L. Chan. At which words the L. Chancellor was wroth, and ſaid, that they had given him reſpit to deliberate till this day, whether he would recant his Errors of the bleſſed Sacrament, which yeſterday (quoth he) before us you uttered.

Brad. My Lord, you gave me no time of any ſuch deliberation, neither did I ſpeak any thing of the Sacrament which you did diſallow. For when I had declared a preſence of Chriſt to be there to Faith, you went from that matter to purge your ſelf, that you were not cruel, and ſo went to Dinner.

The Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome whether it be lawfull or unlawfull.

L. Chan. What? I perceive we muſt begin all again with thee. Did I not yeſterday tell thee plainly, that thou madeſt a Conſcience where none ſhould be? Did I not make it plain, that the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome was an unlawful Oath?

Brad. No indeed my Lord: You ſaid ſo, but you proved it not yet, nor ever can do.

Wincheſters ſimilitude in no point like.

L. Chan. O Lord God, what a Fellow art thou? Thou wouldeſt go about to bring into the Peoples heads, that we, all the Lords of the Parliament Houſe, the Knights and Burgeſſes, and all the whole Realm be perjured. O what an Heretick is this? here good People, you may ſee what a ſenſleſs Heretick this Fellow is. If I ſhould make an Oath I would never help my Brother, nor lend him Money in his need; were this a good anſwer to tell my Neighbour deſiring my help, that I had made an Oath to the contrary? or that I could not do it?

Wincheſters ſimilitude refuſed.

Brad. O my Lord, diſcern betwixt Oaths that be againſt Charity and Faith, and Oaths that be according to Faith and Charity, as this is againſt the Biſhop of Rome.

Chan. Here the Lord Chancellor made much ado, and a long time was ſpent about Oaths, which were good and which were evil, he captiouſly asking often of Bradford a direct anſwer concerning Oaths: which Bradford would not give ſimply, but with a diſtinction. Whereat the Chancellor was much offended: but Bradford ſtill kept him at the bay, that the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Rome, was a lawful Oath, uſing thereto the Lord Chancellors own Book, de vera Obedientia, for confirmation.

Gods Word judge only of oaths, whether they be made lawfully againſt the ſupremacy of the Pope or no.

At the length they came to this iſſue, who ſhould be judge of the lawfulneſs of the Oath; and Bradford ſaid the Word of God, according to Chriſts Word, John 12. My Word ſhall judge; and according to the teſtimony of Eſay and Micah, That Gods Word coming out of Jeruſalem, ſhall give ſentence among the Gentiles. By this Word, quoth Bradford, my Lord, I will prove the Oath againſt the Biſhop of Romes Authority, to be a good, a godly and a lawful Oath. So that the Lord Chancellor left his hold, and as the other day he pretended a denial of the Queens Authority and Obedience to her Highneſs, ſo did he now.

Wincheſter leaveth his hold.

But

Anno 1555.

One special cause of obedience denied by Conscience, maketh no general denial of obedience in causes lawful.

But Bradford, as the day before, proved, that obedience in this point to the Queens Highness, if she should demand an Oath to the Bishop of Rome, being denied, was not a general denial of her Authority, and of Obedience to her; no more, quoth he, than the sale, gift or lease of a piece of a mans Inheritance, proveth it a sale, gift, or lease of the whole Inheritance.

Winchester stumbling at Vows made to Man, and leaping over solemn Oaths made to God.

And thus much ado was made about this matter: the Lord Chancellor talking much, and using many examples of Debt, of going out of Town to morrow by Oath, and yet tarrying till Friday, and such like. Which trifling Talk Bradford did touch, saying, That it was a wonder his Honour weighed Conscience no more in this, and would be so earnest in Vows of Priests Marriages made to Bishops, and be careless in solemn Oaths made to God and to Princes. Summa, this was the end. The Lord Chancellor said, the Queen might dispense with it, and did so to all the whole Realm. But Bradford said, that the Queens Highness could do no more but remit her right; as for the Oath made to God, she could never remit, for as much as it was made unto God.

Winchester in a pelting chafe.

L.Chan. At which words the L. Chancellor chafed wonderfully, and said, that in plain sense I slandered the Realm of Perjury; and therefore (quoth he to the People) you may see how this Fellow taketh upon him to have more knowledge and conscience than all the wise Men of England, and yet he hath no Conscience at all.

M. Bradford imprisoned without a cause.

Brad. Well, my Lord, let all the standers-by see who hath Conscience: I have been a year and a half in Prison: Now before all this People, declare wherefore I was imprisoned, or what cause you had to punish me. You said the other day in your own house, my Lord of London witnessing with you, that I took upon me to speak to the People undesired. There he sitteth by you, I mean my Lord of Bathe, which desired me himself for the Passion of Christ, I would speak to the People. Upon whose words I coming into the Pulpit, had like to have been slain with a Dagger (which was hurled at him, I think) for it touched my Sleeve. He then prayed me I would not leave him, and I promised him, as long as I lived, I would take hurt before him that day, and so went out of the Pulpit and intreated with the People, and at length brought him my self into an house.

M. Bradford neer slain in the pulpit, with a Dagger, thrown against M. Bourn.

Besides this, in the Afternoon I preached at Bow-Church, and there going up into the Pulpit, one willed me not to reprove the People; for, quoth he, you shall never come down alive, if you do it. And yet notwithstanding I did in that Sermon reprove their fact, and called it Sedition at the least twenty times. For all which my doing, I have received this recompence, Prison for a year and a half and more, and Death now, which you go about. Let all men be judge where Conscience is.

M. Bradford jeoparded his life for M. Bourn.

In speaking of these words, there was endeavour to have letted it: but Bradford still spake on, and gave no place till he had made an end, speak what they would. And then the Lord Chancellor said, that for all that fair Tale, his fact at the Cross was naught.

Winchester proved double in his own words.

Brad. No, my fact was good, as you your self did bear witness with me. For when I was at the first before you in the Tower, you your self did say, that my fact was good, but (quoth you) thy mind was evil. Well, quoth I, then my Lord, in that you allow the fact, and condemn my mind; for so much as otherwise I cannot declare my mind to man, but by saying and doing. God one day, I trust, will open it to my comfort, what my mind was, and yours is.

Winchester driven to eat his own words.

L.Chan. Here the L.Chancellor was offended, and said, that he never said so. I, quoth he, had not so little wit I trow, as not to discern betwixt meaning and doing: and so brought forth, little to the purpose, many Examples to prove that men construe things by the meaning of men, and not by their doings. But when this would not serve, then cometh he to another matter, and said, that Bradford was put in Prison at the first because he would not yield, nor be conformable to the Queens Religion.

Brad. Why my Lord? your Honour knoweth that you would not reason with me in Religion, but said a time should afterwards be found out, when I should be talked withal. But if it were as your Lordship saith, that I was put in Prison for Religion, in that my Religion was then authorized by publick Laws of the Realm, could Conscience punish me, or cast me in Prison therefore? Wherefore let all men be Judges, in whom Conscience wanteth.

M. Chamberlain of Woodstock against M. Bradford.

M.Chamb. Here came forth M.Chamberlain of Woodstock, and spake to my L.Chancellor, how that Bradford had been a Serving-man, and was with M.Harrington.

L.Chan. True, and did deceive his Master of Seven-score l. and because of this, he went to a Gospeller and a Preacher (good People) and yet you see how he pretendeth Conscience.

Brad. My Lord, I set my foot by his, whosoever he be, that can come forth and justly vouch to my face, that ever I deceived my Master. And as you are Chief Justicer by Office in England, I desire Justice upon them that so slander me, because they cannot prove it.

Winchester again driven from his hold.

L.Chan. Here my Lord Chancellor and Mr.Chamberlain were smitten blank, and said they heard it. But, quoth my Lord Chancellor, we have another manner of matter than this against you: for you are an Heretick.

Bonner again cometh in with another untruth.

Lond. Yea, quoth the Bishop of London, he did write Letters to M.Pendleton, which knoweth his hand as well as his own, your Honour did see the Letters.

Brad. This is not true, I never did write to Pendleton sithence I came to Prison, and therefore I am not justly spoken of.

Lond. Yea, but you endited it.

Brad. I did not, nor know not what you mean, and this I offer to prove.

A Clerk of the Council thought to be M. Allen.

Here came in another, I trow they call him Mr.Allen, one of the Clerks of the Council, putting the Lord Chancellor in remembrance of Letters written into Lancashire.

L.Chan. You say true: for we have his hand to shew.

Brad. I deny that you have my hand to shew of Letters sent into Lancashire, otherwise than before you all I will stand to, and prove them to be good and lawful.

Here was all answered, and then the L. Chancellor began a new matter. Sir (quoth he) in my house the other day you did most contemptuously contemn the Queens mercy, and further said, that you would maintain the erroneous Doctrine in K.Edwards days against all men, and this you do most stoutly.

Winchester brought to a plain foil.

Brad. Well, I am glad that all men see now you have had no matter to imprison me afore that day justly. Now say I, that I did not contemptuously contemn the Queens mercy, but would have had it (though if Justice might take place, I need it not) so that I might have had it with Gods mercy, that is, without doing or saying any thing against God and his Truth. And as for maintenance of Doctrine, because I cannot tell how you will stretch this word Maintenance, I will repeat again that which I spake. I said I was more confirmed in the Religion set forth in King Edwards days, than ever I was: and if God so would, I trust I should declare it by giving my life for the confirmation and restification thereof. So I said then, and so I say now. As for otherwise to maintain it, than pertaining to a private person by Confession, I thought not, nor think not.

Winchesters captious quarrel answered.

L.Chan. Well, yesterday thou didst maintain false Hereste concerning the blessed Sacrament, and therefore we gave thee respit till this day to deliberate.

Another untruth in Winchester.

Brad. My Lord, as I said at the first, I spake nothing of the Sacrament, but that which you allowed, and therefore reproved it not, nor gave me any thing to deliberate.

L.Chan. Why? didst thou not deny Christs presence in the Sacrament?

Brad. No, I never denied nor taught, but that to Faith, whole Christ, Body and Blood was as present as the Bread and Wine to the due receiver.

L.Chan. Yea, but dost thou not believe that Christs Body naturally and really is there, under the forms of Bread and Wine?

Brad. My Lord, I believe Christ is present there to the Faith of the due Receiver: as for Transubstantiation, I plainly and flatly tell you, I believe it not.

Blessed are you when they shall revile you, and speak all that is naught against you for my names sake. Matth. 5.

Here was Bradford called Diabolus, a Slanderer: for we ask no question (quoth my L.Chancellor) of Transubstantiation, but of Christs presence.

Brad. I deny not his presence to the Faith of the Receiver, but deny that he is included in the Bread, or that the Bread was transubstantiate.

B.Worcest. If he be not included, how is he then present?

Brad.

Anno 1555.

Brad. Forſooth, though my Faith can tell how, yet my Tongue cannot expreſs it, nor you otherwiſe than by Faith hear it, or underſtand it.

Here was much ado, now one Doctor ſtanding up and ſpeaking thus, and others ſpeaking that, and the L. Chancellor talking much of Luther, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius; but ſtill Bradford kept him at that point, that Chriſt is preſent to Faith; and that there is no Tranſubſtantiation nor including of Chriſt in the Bread: but all this would not ſerve them.

Chriſt's bodie preſent to faith.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

Therefore another Biſhop asked this Queſtion, Whether the wicked man received Chriſts very Body or no? And Bradford anſwered plainly, No. Whereat the L. Chancellor made a long Oration, how that it could not be that Chriſt was preſent, except that the evil man received it. But Bradford put away all his Oration in few words, that Grace was at that time offered to his Lordſhip, although he received it not: ſo that (quoth he) the receiving maketh not the Preſence, as your Lordſhip would infer: but Gods Grace, Truth, and Power is the cauſe of the Preſence, which Grace the wicked that lack Faith, cannot receive. And here Bradford prayed my Lord, not to divorce that which God had coupled together. He hath coupled all theſe together; Take, eat, this is my Body: He ſaith not, See, peep, this is my Body; but, Take, eat. So that it appeareth this is a Promiſe depending upon Condition, If we take and eat.

The wicked receive not the body of Chriſt.

Receiving maketh not the Preſence of the body, but grace.

The Popes Church divorceth that the Lord hath coupled.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor and other Biſhops made a great ado, that Bradford had found out a toy that no man elſe ever did, of the Condition, and the L. Chancellor made many words to the People thereabout.

Brad. But Bradford ſaid thus, My Lord, are not theſe words, Take, eat, a Commandment? And are not theſe words, This is my Body, a Promiſe? If you will challenge the Promiſe, and do not the Commandment, may you not deceive your ſelf?

The Sacrament hath both a commandment and a promiſe, and hoſt.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor denied Chriſt to have commanded the Sacrament, and the uſe of it.

Brad. Why my Lord, I pray you tell the People what Mood Accipite, Manducate, is; Is it not plain to Children, that Chriſt in ſo ſaying, commandeth?

Mr. Bradford teacheth Winchester his Grammar.

L. Chan. At theſe words the L. Chancellor made a great toying and trifling at the Imperative Mood, and fell to parſing or examining, as he ſhould teach a Child, and ſo concluded that it was no Commandment, but ſuch a Phraſe as this, I pray you give me drink, which quoth he, is no Commandment, I trow.

Winchester denieth theſe words, Take, eat, to be a commandment.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to leave toying and trifling, and ſaid thus; My Lord, if it be not a Commandment of Chriſt to take and eat the Sacrament, why dare any take upon them to command and make that of neceſſity, which God leaveth free? as you do in making it a neceſſary Commandment, once a year for all that be of diſcretion, to receive the Sacrament.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor called him again * Diabolus or Calumniator, and began out of theſe words, Let a man prove himſelf, and ſo eat of the Bread (yea Bread, quoth Bradford) and drink of the Cup, to prove that it was no Commandment to receive the Sacrament: for then (quoth he) if it were a Commandment, it ſhould bind all men, in all places, and at all times.

* Diabolus, is as much as to ſay in Greek, a ſlanderer, or a caviller.

Diſtinction between commandments.

Brad. O my Lord, diſcern between Commandments: ſome be general, as the Ten Commandments, that they bind always, in all places, and all perſons: ſome be not ſo general, as this of the Supper, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, of the thrice appearing before the Lord yearly at Jeruſalem, of Abraham offering of Iſaac, &c.

Here my L. Chancellor denied the Cup to be commanded of Chriſt: for then, quoth he, we ſhould have eleven Commandments.

Brad. Indeed I think you think as you ſpeak: for elſe would you not take the Cup from the People, in that Chriſt ſaith, Drink ye all of it. But how ſay you my Lords? Chriſt ſaith to you Biſhops eſpecially, Ite, predicate Evangelium: Go, and preach the Goſpel: Feed Chriſts Flock, &c. Is this a Commandment, or no?

Winchester in a chafe.

B. Tonſtalls queſtion.

L. Chan. Here was my Lord Chancellor in a chafe, and ſaid as pleaſed him.

Dureſ. Another, the Bp. of Dureſme I ween, asked Bradford, when Chriſt began to be preſent in the Sacrament? whether before the Receiver received it, or no?

Brad. Bradford anſwered, that the queſtion was curious, and not neceſſary; and further ſaid, that as the Cup was the New Teſtament, ſo the Bread was Chriſts Body to him that received it duly, but yet ſo that the Bread is Bread. For, quoth he, in all the Scripture ye ſhall not find this Propoſition, Non eſt panis, There is no Bread. And ſo he brought forth Chryſoſtom, Si in corpore eſſemus, Hom. in 83. Mat. 34. Summa. Much ado was hereabouts, they calling Bradford Heretick, and he deſiring them to proceed on in Gods Name, he looked for that which God appointed for them to do.

As the Cup is the Teſtament, ſo Bread is the Body. Chryſoſt. in Mat. Hom. 8.

L. Chan. This Fellow is now in another Hereſie of fatal neceſſity, as though all things were ſo tied together, that of meer neceſſity all muſt come to paſs.

Brad. But Bradford prayed him to take things as they be ſpoken, and not wreſt them into a contrary ſenſe. Your Lordſhip, quoth he, doth diſcern betwixt God and Man. Things are not by fortune to God at any time, though to Man they ſeem ſo ſometimes. I ſpeak but as the Apoſtles ſaid, Lord (quoth he) ſee how Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Prelats, are gathered together againſt thy Chriſt, to do that which thy hand and counſel hath before ordained for them to do.

To God nothing is by fortune: to Man it may ſometimes ſo ſeem to be. Acts 4.

L. Chan. Here began the Lord Chancellor to read the Excommunication. And in the Excommunication, when he came to the name of John Bradford, Laicus, Lay-man: Why (quoth he) art thou no Prieſt?

Winchester readeth the Sentence of the Curſe againſt Mr. Bradford.

Brad. No, nor never was, either Prieſt, either Beneficed, either Married, either any Preacher, afore Publick Authority had eſtabliſhed Religion, or Preacher after Publick Authority had altred Religion, and yet I am thus handled at your hand: but God I doubt not will give his Bleſſing where you Curſe. And ſo he fell down on his knees, and heartily thanked God that he counted him worthy to ſuffer for his Names ſake. And ſo praying God to give him repentance, and a good mind, after the Excommunication was read, he was delivered to the Sheriff of London, and ſo had to the Clink, and afterwards to the Compter in the Poultry, in the ſame City of London, this being purpoſed of his Murtherers, that he ſhould be delivered from thence to the Earl of Derby, to be conveyed into Lancaſhire, and there to be burned in the Town of Mancheſter, where he was born: but their purpoſe concerning the place was afterward altered; for they burned him in London.

Mr. Bradford delivered to the Sheriff.

Mr. Bradford ſent to the Compter in the Poultry.

After the Condemnation of Mr. Bradford, which was the laſt day of January, Mr. Bradford being ſent into Priſon, did there remain until the firſt day of July, during all which time, divers other Conferences and Conflicts he ſuſtained with ſundry Adverſaries, which repaired unto him in the Priſon. Of whom firſt Biſhop Boner, coming to the Compter to degrade Dr. Taylor the fourth day of February, entred talk with the ſaid Mr. Bradford; the effect whereof here enſueth.

Private talk had with John Bradford, by ſuch as the Prelats ſent unto him, after the time of Condemnation, by his own writing.

UPon the fourth of February, that is, the ſame day Mr. Rogers was burned, Boner Biſhop of London, came to the Compter in the Poultry, to degrade Dr. Taylor, about one of the Clock at Afternoon. But before he ſpake to Mr. Taylor, he called for John Bradford which was Priſoner there, whom when he ſaw, he put off his Cap, and gave him his hand, ſaying, Becauſe I perceive that ye are deſirous to confer with ſome learned men, therefore I have brought Mr. Archdeacon Harpsfield to you. And I tell you, you do like a wiſe man. But I pray you go roundly to work, for the time is but ſhort.

Bp. Boners talk with Bradford.

Brad. My Lord, as roundly as I can I will go to work with you: I never deſired to confer with any man, nor yet do. Howbeit if ye will have one to talk with me, I am ready.

Bradford deſireth to confer with none, and yet is ready to talk with any.

Boner. What (quoth the Biſhop in a fume to the Keeper) did you not tell me that this man deſired conference?

Keeper. No my Lord, I told you that he would not refuſe to confer with any; but I did not ſay that it is his deſire.

Boner. Well, Mr. Bradford, you are welbeloved, I pray you conſider your ſelf, and refuſe not Charity when it is offered.

More charity amongst the Turks, then amongst the persecuting Papists.

Brad. Indeed, my Lord, this is small Charity, to condemn a man as you have condemned me, which never brake your Laws. In Turky a man may have Charity, but in England I could not yet find it. I was condemned for my Faith, so soon as I uttered it at your requests, before I had committed any thing against the Laws. And as for conference, I am not afraid to talk with whom ye will. But to say that I desire to confer, that do I not.

Boner. Well, well. And so he called for Mr. Taylor, and Bradford went his way.

Another private matter of talk between Mr. Bradford and Willerton, Creswell, Harding, Harpsfield, and other more.

Talk between Mr. Bradford & Willerton, Chaplain to Bp. Boner.

UPon another day of February, one Mr. Willerton, Chaplain of the Bishop of London, did come to confer with Bradford, but when he perceived that Bradford desired not his coming, and therefore wished rather his departing then abiding: Well, Mr. Bradford, quoth he, yet I pray you let us confer a little, perchance you may do me good, if I can do you none. Upon which words Bradford was content, and so they began to talk. Willerton spake much of the Doctors, the Fathers, of the Bread in the sixth of John, &c. labouring to prove Transubstantiation, and that wicked men do receive Christ.

Willerton sendeth his writing to Bradford to prove Transubstantiation.

But Bradford on the contrary part improved his Authorities, so that they came to this issue, that Willerton should draw out of the Scriptures and Doctors his Reasons, and Bradford would peruse them; and if he could not answer them, then he would give place. Likewise also should Bradford draw out his Reasons out of the Scriptures and Doctors, to which Willerton should answer if he could: and so for that day they departed.

The next day following in the Morning, Willerton sent half a sheet of Paper written on both sides, containing no Reasons how he gathered his Doctrine, but only bare Sentences; Panis quem ego dabo, &c. The Bread which I will give is my flesh: And the places in the 26. of Matthew, the 14. of Mark, the 22. of Luke, and the 10. and 11. to the Corinthians, with some Sentences of the Doctors, all which made as much against him as with him.

Willerton cometh again to Bradford.

In the Afternoon he came himself, and there they had a long talk to little effect. At the length Willerton began to talk of the Church, saying that Bradford swerved from the Church.

Brad. No that I do not, but ye do. For the Church is Christs Spouse, and Christs obedient Spouse, which your Church is not, which robbeth the People of the Lords Cup, and of Service in the English Tongue.

Willer. Why? It is not profitable to have the Service in English; for it is written, Labia Sacerdotis custodiunt legem; The lips of the Priest should keep the Law, and out of his mouth man must look for knowledge.

Brad. Should not the People then have the Scriptures? Wherefore serveth this saying of Christ, Search the Scriptures.

Willer. This was not spoken to the People, but to the Scribes and Learned men.

Brad. Then the People must not have the Scriptures.

Argument. Erunt docti a Deo: Ergo, The people must not have the Scriptures.

Willer. No, for it is written, Erunt docti à Deo; They shall be all taught of God.

Brad. And must we learn all at the Priests?

Willer. Yea.

Brad. Then I see you would bring the People to hang up Christ, and let Barabbas go, as the Priests did then persuade the People. At which words Mr. Willerton was so offended, that he had no lust to talk any more.

Mr. Bradfords Reasons against Transubstantiation not answered.

In the end Bradford gave him the Reasons which he had gathered against Transubstantiation, and prayed him to frame his into the form of Reasons, and then quoth Bradford, I will answer them.

Willer. Well, I will do so. But first I will answer yours. The which thing until this day he hath not done.

The Earl of Derby's Servant.

Upon the 12. of February, there came one of the Earl of Derby's Servants to Bradford, saying, My Lord hath sent me to you, he willeth you to tender your self, and he will be a good Lord to you.

Brad. I thank his Lordship for his good will towards me: but in this case I cannot tender my self more than Gods Honour.

Servant. Ah Mr. Bradford, consider your Mother, Sisters, Friends, Kinsfolk, and Country, what a great discomfort will it be unto them to see you dye as an Heretick? Anno 1555.

Mr. Bradford preferreth Christ before all his kin and kindred.

Brad. I have learned to forsake Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Friend, and all that ever I have, yea, even mine own self, for else I cannot be Christs Disciple.

Serv. If my Lord should obtain for you that ye might depart the Realm, would you not be content to be at the Queens appointment, where she would appoint you beyond the Sea.

Bradford contented to be burned in England, rather then to be sent over the Sea to Popish places.

Brad. No, I had rather be burned in England, then be burned beyond the Seas. For I know that if she should send me to Paris, Lovain, or some such place, forthwith they would burn me.

Talk between Mr. Bradford and one Percival Cresswell, and after that with Dr. Harding.

Percival Cresswell talketh with Bradford.

UPon the fourteenth of February, Percival Cresswell, an old Acquaintance of Bradfords, came to him, bringing with him a Kinsman of Mr. Fecknams, who after many words, said;

Cres. I pray you let me make labour for you.

Brad. You may do what ye will.

Cresswell offereth to make suit for Bradford.

Cres. But tell me what suit I should make for you.

Brad. Forsooth that ye will do, do it not at my request, for I desire nothing at your hands. If the Queen will give me life, I will thank her. If she will banish me, I will thank her. If she will burn me, I will thank her. If she will condemn me to perpetual Prisonment, I will thank her.

Mores Book brought to Bradford.

Hereupon Cresswell went away, and about eleven of the Clock he and the other man came again, and brought a Book of More's making, desiring Bradford to read it over.

Bradford taking the Book, said, Good Percival, I am setled for being moved in this Article.

Cres. Oh if ever ye loved me, do one thing for me.

Brad. What is it?

Cres. Desire and name what Learned man or men ye will have to come unto you. My Lord of York, my Lord of Lincoln, my Lord of Bathe, and others will gladly come unto you.

Brad. No, never will I desire them, or any other, to come to confer with me; for I am as certain of my Doctrine as I am of any thing. But for your pleasure, and also that all men may know I am not ashamed to have my Faith sifted and tried, bring whom ye will, and I will talk with them. So they went their way.

D. Harding cometh to Mr. Bradford.

About three of the Clock in the Afternoon, Master Dr. Harding, who was then the Bp. of Lincolns Chaplain, came to Bradford, and after a great and solemn Protestation, shewing how that he had prayed to God before he came, to turn his talk to Bradfords good, he began to tell of the good opinion he had of Bradford, and spent the time in such tatling, so that their talk was to little purpose: save that Bradford prayed him to consider from whence he was faln, and not to follow the World, nor to love it: For the Love of God is not where the World is.

Harding. But Harding counted Bradford in a damnable estate, as one being out of the Church, and therefore willed him to take heed of his Soul, and not to dye in such an Opinion.

Brad. What Master Harding, quoth Bradford? I have heard you with these ears maintain this that I stand in.

Dr. Harding inveigheth against Peter Martyr, Bucer and Luther.

Harding. I grant that I have taught that the Doctrine of Transubstantiation was a subtile Doctrine, but otherwise I never taught it. And so he inveighing against Marriages of Priests, and namely against Peter Martyr, Martin Bucer, Luther, and such, which for breaking their Vows were justly given up into Heresies (as he said.) Bradford seeing him altogether given up to Popery, after admonishment thereof, bade him farewel.

Talk between Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and Mr. Bradford.

D. Harpsfield talketh with Mr. Bradford.

UPon the 25. of February, Percival Cresswell came with Mr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, and a Servant waiting upon him. After formal Salutations

Anno 1555

Felicity or weal of all men, but the way to felicity not known to all.

lutations, he made a long Oration, of which this is a short sum; That all men, even the Infidels, Turks, Jews, Anabaptists, and Libertines, desire felicity as well as the Christians, and how that every one thinketh they shall attain to it by their Religion. To which Bradford answered briefly, that he spake not far amiss.

Harpf. Then said Harpsfield, But the way thither is not all alike: For the Infidels by Jupiter, Juno, the Turk by his Alcoran, the Jew by his Talmud, do believe to come to Heaven. For so may I speak of such as believe the Immortality of the Soul.

Brad. You speak truly.

Harpf. Well, then here is the matter, to know the way to this Heaven.

The true way to felicity.

Brad. We may not invent any manner of ways. There is but one way, and that is Jesus Christ, as he himself doth witness; I am the way.

Harpf. It is true that you say, and false also. I suppose that you mean by Christ, believing in Christ.

Brad. I have learned to discern betwixt Faith and Christ. Albeit I confess, that whoso believeth in Christ, the same shall be saved, Harpf. No, not all that believe in Christ; for some shall say, Lord, Lord, have we not cast out Devils? &c. But Christ will answer in the day of Judgment to these, Depart from me, I know you not.

Note the difference between believing and saying I believe.

Brad. You must make difference betwixt believing, and saying I believe: As for example, If one should say and swear he loveth you, for all his saying, ye will not believe him when you see he goeth about to utter and do all the evil against you that he can.

Harpf. Well, this is not much material. There is but one way, Christ. How come we to know him? Where shall we seek to find him?

The way to come to Christ is by the word: for by the word cometh faith, by faith we come to Christ.

Brad. Forsooth, we must seek him by his Word, and in his Word, and afer his Word.

Harpf. Very good: but tell me now how first we came into the company of them that could tell us this, but by Baptism.

Baptism an outward Seal, whereby we are known to be Christians.

Brad. Baptism is the Sacrament, by the which outwardly we are engrafted into Christ: I say outwardly, because I dare not exclude from Christ all that dye without Baptism. I will not tye God, where he is not bound. Some Infants dye, whose Parents desire Baptism for them, and cannot have it.

Children which dye without baptism.

Harpf. To these we may think perchance that God will shew Mercy.

Brad. Yea, the Children whose Parents do contemn Baptism will not I condemn, because the Child shall not bear the Fathers offence.

Harpf. Well, we agree, that by Baptism then we are brought, and (as a man would say) begotten to Christ. For Christ is our Father, and the Church his Spouse is our Mother. As all men naturally have Adam for their Father, and Eve for their Mother; so all spiritual men have Christ for their Father, and the Church for their Mother: and as Eve was taken out of Adams side, so was the Church taken out of Christs side; whereout flowed blood for the satisfaction and purgation of our sins.

The Church is our Mother.

Brad. All this is truly spoken.

Descent of the Church.

Harpf. Now then tell me whether this Church of Christ hath not been always?

Brad. Yea, since the creation of man, and shall be for ever.

Harpf. Very good. But yet tell me whether this Church is a visible Church, or no?

The Church of Christ is visible, even as Christ was, that is, not by exteriour pomp or shew, but by the inward eye.

Brad. It is no otherwise visible, then Christ was here on Earth; that is, by no exteriour pomp or shew that setteth her forth commonly, and therefore to see her we must put on such eyes, as good men put on to see and know Christ when he walked here on Earth: for as Eve was of the same Substance that Adam was of, so was the Church of the same Substance that Christ was of, Flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones; as Paul saith, Ephes. 5. Look therefore how Christ was visibly known to be Christ when he was on Earth, that is, by considering him after the Word of God, so is the Church known.

Multitude is not always the surest mark to know the Church.

Harpf. I do not come to reason at this present, and therefore I will go on forward. Is not this Church a multitude?

Brad. Yes that it is. Howbeit, Latet anguis in herba, as the Proverb is. For in your Question is a subtilty: What visible multitude was there in Helias time, or when Moses was on the Mount, Aaron and all Israel worshipping the Calf?

Harpf. Ye divert from the matter.

Brad. No, nothing at all. For I do prevent you, knowing well where about you go. And therefore fewer words might well serve if that you so would.

D. Harpsfield prevented of his purpose.

Harpf. Well, I perceive you have knowledge, and by a little perceive I the more. Tell me yet more, whether this multitude have not the ministery or preaching of Gods Word?

Preaching of the Gospel goeth ever with the Church, unless it be interrupted somtime by persecution.

Brad. Sir, ye go about the bush. If ye understand preaching for the confessing of the Gospel, I will go with you: for else if you will, you may know that persecution often letteth preaching.

Administration of Sacraments is one note, but not the cause of the true Church.

Harpf. Well, I mean it so. Tell me yet more: hath it not the Sacraments administred?

And yet not such a note, but that it may often be letted by persecution, and yet the true Church remain.

Brad. It hath the Sacraments, howbeit the administration of them is often letted. But I will put you from your purpose, because I see where about you go. If Hereticks have Baptism, and do baptize, as they did in S. Cyprians time, you know this Baptism is Baptism, and not to be reiterate. This Bradford did speak, that the standers by might see, that though the Papists Church have Baptism which we have received of them, yet therefore it is not the true Church; neither need we to be baptized again.

The Popes Church hath baptism and Sacraments administred: Ergo, The Popes Church is the true Church.

Harpf. You go far from the matter, and I perceive you have more Errors than one.

Brad. So you say, but that is not enough till you prove them.

The Argument faileth A causa non sufficiente, vel non causa, ut causa. A Popish distinction of the Church to be a multitude, having preaching of the Gospel, ministration of the Sacraments, power of Jurisdiction, and succession of Bishops.

Harpf. Well, this Church is a multitude. Hath it not the preaching of the Gospel, and the ministration of the Sacraments? And yet more, hath it not the power of Jurisdiction?

Brad. What Jurisdiction is exercised in Persecution and Affliction.

Harpf. I mean by Jurisdiction admonishing one another, and so forth.

Brad. Well, go to; what then?

Harpf. It hath also Succession of Bishops. And here he made much ado to prove that this was an essential point.

Succession of Bishops is no essential part of the Church, but rather accidens communis; which being interrupted, yet the Church may stand as it did both before Christs coming, and after at the coming of Antichrist.

Brad. You say as you would have it; for if this part fail you, all the Church that you go about to set up will fall down. You shall not find in all the Scripture this your essential part of Succession of Bishops. In Christs Church Antichrist will sit. And Peter telleth us, as it went in the Old Church afore Christs coming, so will it be in the New Church since Christs coming: that is, as there were false Prophets, and such as bear rule were Adversaries to the true Prophets, so shall there be (saith he) false Teachers, even of such as are Bishops, and bear rule amongst the People.

Apostles & Bishops, be sundry Offices.

Harpf. You go always out of the matter: but I will prove further the Succession of Bishops.

Brad. Do so.

Harpf. Tell me, were not the Apostles Bishops?

Brad. No, except you will make a new definition of a Bishop: that is, give him no certain place.

Harpf. Indeed, the Apostles Office was not the Bishops Office: for it was universal, but yet Christ instituted Bishops in his Church, as Paul saith, he hath given Pastors, Prophets, &c. So that I trow it be proved by the Scriptures the Succession of Bishops to be an essential point.

The ministery of Gods Word and Ministers, be an essential point of the true Church, but not the local Succession of Ministers in one certain place.

Brad. The ministery of Gods Word and Ministers, be an essential point. But to translate this to the Bishops and their Succession, is a plain subtilty: And therefore that it may be plain, I will ask you a Question. Tell me, whether that the Scripture knew any difference between Bishops and Ministers, which ye called Priests?

Harpf. No.

Brad. Well, then go on forwards, and let us see what ye shall get now by the Succession of Bishops: that is, of Ministers which can be understood of such Bishops as minister not, but Lord it.

The ascent and descent of Succession of high Priests.

Harpf. I perceive that you are far out of the way. By your Doctrine you can never shew in your Church, a multitude which ministreth Gods Word and his Sacraments, which hath Jurisdiction and Succession of Bishops, which hath from time to time believed as you believe, beginning now, and ſo going upwards, as I will do of our Doctrine, and therefore are ye out of the Church, and ſo cannot be ſaved. Perchance you will bring me downwards a ſhew to blear Peoples eyes; but to go upwards, that you can never do, and this is the true trial.

Brad. Ye muſt and will, I am aſſured, give me leave to follow the Scriptures and Examples of good men.

Harpſ. Yea.

Brad. Well then, Stephen was accuſed and condemned as I am, that he had taught new and falſe Doctrine, before the Fathers of the Church then as they were taken. Stephen for his Purgation improveth their Accuſation. But how? doth he it by going upwards? no, but by coming downwards, beginning at Abraham, and continuing ſtill till Eſaias time, and the Peoples Captivity. From whence he maketh a great leap until the time he was in, which was (I think) upon 400. years, and called them by their right names, Hell-hounds, rather then Heaven-hounds. On this ſort will I prove my Faith, and that can you never do yours.

The Papiſts challenge to them the true Church, even as the Mother of the dead Child challenged the living Child from the true Mother. 3 Reg. 3.

Harpſ. Yea Sir, if we did know that you had the Holy Ghoſt, then could we believe you. Here Bradford would have anſwered, that Stephens Enemies would not believe he had the Holy Ghoſt, and therefore they did as they did: but as he was in ſpeaking, Mr. Harpſfield roſe up, and the Keeper and others that ſtood by began to talk gently, praying Bradford to take heed to that Mr. Archdeacon ſpake, who ſtill ſaid that Bradford was out of the Church.

Brad. Sir, I am moſt certain that I am in Chriſts Church, and I can ſhew a demonſtration of my Religion from time to time continually.

Bradfords Prayer.

God our Father, for the name and blood of his Chriſt be merciful unto us, and unto all his people, and deliver them from falſe Teachers, and blind Guides, through whom (alas) I fear me, much hurt will come to this Realm of England. God our Father bleſs us, and keep us in his Truth and poor Church for ever. Amen.

Then the Archdeacon departed, ſaying, that he would come again the next Morning.

The next days talk between Dr. Harpsfield and Mr. Bradford.

Archdeacon Harpſfield returneth again to Mr. Bradford.

UPon the 16. of February in the Morning, the Archdeacon, and the other two with him, came again, and after a few by-words ſpoken, they ſate down.

M. Harpſfield again proveth his Church by ſucceſſion of high Prieſts.

Harpſ. Mr. Archdeacon began a very long Oration, firſt repeating what they had ſaid, and how far they had gone overnight, and therewith did begin to prove upwards Succeſſion of Biſhops here in England for 800 years: in France at Lyons for 1200 years: in Spain at Hiſpalen for 800 years: in Italy at Millain for 1200 years, labouring by this to prove his Church. He uſed all Succeſſion of Biſhops in the Eaſt Church for the more confirmation of his words, and ſo concluded with an Exhortation and an Interrogation: The Exhortation, that Bradford would obey this Church; the Interrogation, whether Bradford could ſhew any ſuch Succeſſion for the demonſtration of his Church (for ſo he called it) which followed.

Bradfords anſwer to Mr. Harpsfield.

Brad. Unto this his long Oration, Bradford made this ſhort Anſwer; My memory is evil, ſo that I cannot anſwer particularly your Oration.

Outward deſcent of Miniſters maketh not the true Church: but the truth of Gods Word maketh true Miniſters. The true Church not tied to ſucceſſion, but to Gods Word.

Therefore I will generally do it, thinking becauſe your Oration is rather to perſwade than to prove, that a ſhall Anſwer will ſerve. If Chriſt or his Apoſtles, being here on Earth, had been required by the Prelates of the Church then; to have made a demonſtration of that Church by Succeſſion of ſuch high Prieſts as had approved the Doctrine which he taught, I think that Chriſt would have done as I do: that is, have alledged that which upholdeth the Church, even the Verity, the Word of God taught and believed, not by the high Prieſts, which of long time had perſecuted it, but by the Prophets and other good ſimple men which perchance were counted for Hereticks of the Church: which Church was not tied to Succeſſion, but to the Word of God. And this to think S. Peter giveth me occaſion, when he ſaith that as it went in the Church before Chriſts coming, ſo ſhall it go in the Church after his coming: but then the Pillars of the Church were Perſecutors of the Church; therefore the like we muſt look for now.

Harpſ. I can gather and prove Succeſſion in Jeruſalem of the high Prieſts from Aarons time. Anno 1555.

Brad. I grant, but not ſuch Succeſſion as allowed the Truth.

The true ſucceſſion of Prieſts, and the ſucceſſion of true Prieſts are two things.

Harpſ. Why, did they not allow Moſes's Law.

Brad. Yes, and keep it, as touching the Books thereof, as you do the Bible, and holy Scriptures. But the true interpretation and meaning of it they did corrupt, as you have done and do, and therefore the Perſecution which they ſtirred up againſt the Prophets and Chriſt, was not for the Law, but for the interpretation of it. For they taught as you do now, that we muſt fetch the interpretation of the Scriptures at your hands. But to make an end, death I look daily for, yea hourly, and I think my time be but very ſhort. Therefore I had need to ſpend as much time with God as I can whilſt I have it, for his help and comfort, and therefore I pray you bear with me, that I do not now particularly and in more words anſwer your long talk. If I ſaw death not ſo near me as it is, I would then weigh every piece of your Oration, if you would give me the ſum of it; and I would anſwer accordingly: but becauſe I dare not, nor I will not leave off looking and preparing for that which is at hand, I ſhall deſire you to hold me excuſed, though I do as I do, and heartily thank you for your gentle good will: I ſhall heartily pray God our Father to give you the ſame light and life I do wiſh to my ſelf; and ſo Bradford began to riſe up.

The Jews corrupt the Law, as the Papiſts do the Scriptures.

A compariſon between the old Phariſees & our new Papiſts.

Bold confidence and hope of Gods Word and Promiſe, ſeemeth ſtrange among them which are not exerciſed in mortification.

Harpſ. But then began Mr. Archdeacon to tell him he was in very perillous caſe, and that he was ſorry to ſee him ſo ſetled. As for death, whether it be nigh or far off, I know not, neither forceth it, ſo that you did dye well.

Brad. I doubt not in this caſe but that I ſhall dye well: for as I hope and am certain my death ſhall pleaſe the Lord, ſo I truſt I ſhall dye cheerfully to the comfort of his Children.

Harpſ. But what if you be deceived?

Brad. What if you ſhould ſay the Sun did not ſhine now? (and the Sun did ſhine through the window where they ſate.)

Harpſ. Well, I am ſorry to ſee you ſo ſecure and careleſs.

Brad. Indeed I am more carnally ſecure and careleſs than I ſhould be: God make me more vigilant. But in this caſe I cannot be ſo ſecure, for I am moſt aſſured I am in the Truth.

Harpſ. That ye are not; for you are out of the Catholick Church.

Brad. No, though you have Excommunicated me out of your Church, yet am I in the Catholick Church of Chriſt, and am, and by Gods Grace ſhall be a Child, and an obedient Child of it for ever. I hope Chriſt will have no leſs care for me, than he had for the blind man Excommunicated of the Synagogue: And further, I am ſure that the neceſſary Articles of the Faith, I mean the twelve Articles of the Creed, I confeſs and believe with that which you call the holy Church, ſo that even your Church hath taken too much upon her to Excommunicate me for that, which by the teſtimony of my Lord of Dureſm, in the Book of the Sacrament lately put forth, was free many an hundred year after Chriſt, to believe or not believe.

Free to believe or not to believe Tranſubſtantiation many hundred years after Chriſt.

Harpſ. What is that?

Brad. Tranſubſtantiation.

Harpſ. Why: ye are not condemned therefore only.

Brad. For that, and becauſe I deny that wicked men do receive Chriſts Body.

Harpſ. You agree not with us in the Preſence, nor in any thing elſe.

Brad. How you believe you know: for my part I confeſs a Preſence of whole Chriſt, God and Man, to the Faith of the Receiver.

Chriſt not included really in the Sacrament.

Harpſ. Nay, you muſt believe a Real Preſence in the Sacrament.

Brad. In the Sacrament? Nay, I will not ſhut him in, nor tye him to it otherwiſe than Faith ſeeth and perceiveth. If I ſhould include Chriſt really preſent in the Sacrament, or tye him to it otherwiſe than to the Faith of the Receiver, then the wicked men ſhould receive him, which I do not, nor will by Gods Grace believe.

Chriſts Body preſent to the Faith of the Receiver.

Harpſ. More pity: But a man may eaſily perceive, you make no Preſence at all, and therefore you agree not therein with us.

Brad.

Anno 1555.

Brad. I confeſs a preſence, and a true preſence but to the Faith of the receiver.

What (quoth one that ſtood by) of Chriſts very Body which died for us?

Brad. Yea, even of whole Chriſt God and Man, to feed the Faith of him that receiveth it.

Harpſ. Why? this is nothing elſe but to exclude the Omnipotency of God, and all kind of miracle in the Sacrament.

None denieth Omnipotency more then the Papiſts, which ſay, that Chriſts Body cannot be in the Sacrament unleſs the ſubſtance of Bread be away.

Brad. I do not exclude his Omnipotency, but you do it rather: for I believe that Chriſt can accompliſh his promiſe, the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine being there, as well as the accidents, which you believe not. When we come to the Sacrament, we come not to feed our Bodies, and therefore we have but a little piece of Bread; but we come to feed our Souls with Chriſt by Faith, which the wicked do want, and therefore they receive nothing but panem Domini, as Judas did, and not panem Dominum, as the other Apoſtles did.

Argument. Who ſo receive the Body of Chriſt do receive the fruit and Grace of Life: no wicked men do receive the fruit and Grace of Life: Ergo no wicked Men receive the Body of Chriſt.

Harpſ. The wicked do receive the very Body of Chriſt, but not the Grace of his Body.

Brad. They receive not the Body. For Chriſts Body is no dead Carcaſs: he that receiveth it, receiveth the Spirit, which is not without Grace I trow.

Harpſ. Well, you have many errors. You count the Maſs for abomination, and yet Saint Ambroſe ſaid Maſs, and ſo he read out of a Book written a Sentence of S. Ambroſe to prove it.

Brad. Why Sir? the Maſs as it is now, was nothing ſo in S. Ambroſe time. Was not the moſt part of the Canon made ſince by Gregory and Scholaſticus?

Maſs in St. Ambroſe time. That is falſe for Scholaſticus was not before Ambroſe time.

Harpſ. Indeed a great piece of it was made (as ye ſay) by Gregory: but Scholaſticus was before S. Ambroſe time.

Brad. I ween not: howbeit I will not contend. Saint Gregory ſaith, that the Apoſtles ſaid Maſs without the Canon, only with the Lords Prayer.

The chief parts of the Popiſh Maſs.

Harpſ. You ſay true: for the Canon is not the greateſt part of the Maſs, the greateſt part is the Sacrifice, Elevation, Tranſubſtantiation, and Adoration.

Bran. I can away with none of thoſe.

Harpſ. No, I think the ſame: but yet Hoc facite, telleth plainly the Sacrifice of the Church.

Sacrifice of the Church. Sacrifice for the Church.

Brad. You confound Sacrifices, not diſcerning betwixt the Sacrifice of the Church, and for the Church. The Sacrifice of the Church is no propitiatory Sacrifice, but a gratulatory Sacrifice. And as for Hoc facite, is not referred to any Sacrificing, but to the whole action of taking, eating, &c.

Note this Doctrine good Reader.

Harpſ. You ſpeak not learnedly now: for Chriſt made his Supper only to the twelve Apoſtles, not admitting his Mother or any of the ſeventy Diſciples to it. Now the Apoſtles do ſignifie the Prieſts.

Brad. I think that you ſpeak as you would Men ſhould underſtand it: for elſe you would not keep the Cup away from the Laity. We have great cauſe to thank you, that you will give us of your Bread. For I perceive you order the matter ſo, as though Chriſt had not commanded it to his whole Church.

Harpſ. Then Harpsfield would have proved Elevation by a place of Baſilius.

Elevation was not brought in indeed before the time of Pope Honorius.

Brad. I have read the place, which ſeemeth to make nothing for elevation: but be it as it is, this is no time for me to ſcan the doubtful places of the Doctors with you. I have been in Priſon long without Books and all neceſſaries for ſtudy, and now death draweth nigh, and I by your leave muſt now leave off, to prepare for him.

Harpſ. If I could do you good, I would be right glad, either in Soul or Body. For you are in a perillous caſe both ways.

Brad. Sir, I thank you for your good will. My caſe is as it is. I thank God it was never ſo well with me; for Death to me ſhall be Life.

Creſwell. It were beſt for you to deſire Maſter Archdeacon that he would make ſute for you, that you might have a time to confer.

Harpſ. I will do the beſt I can: for I pity his caſe.

Brad. Sir, I will not deſire any Body to ſue for time for me. I am not wavering, neither would I that any Body ſhould think I were ſo. But if you have the Charity and love you pretend towards me, and thereto do think that I am in an errour, I think the ſame ſhould move you to do as you would be done to. As ye think of me, ſo do I of you, that you are farr out of the way, and I do not only think it, but alſo am thereof moſt aſſured. And in this and ſuch like gentle talk they departed.

Certain Biſhops talking with M. Bradford in Priſon.

Two Spaniſh Friers talking with M. Bradford.

The talk of Doctor Heath Archbiſhop of York, and Day Biſhop of Chicheſter, with Maſter Bradford.

THe three and twentieth of the ſame Month, the Archbiſhop of York, and the Biſhop of Chicheſter came to the Counter to ſpeak with Bradford. When he was come before them, they both, and ſpecially the Biſhop of York, uſed him very gently: they would have him to ſit down, and becauſe he would not, they alſo would not ſit. So they all ſtood, and whether he would or not, they would needs he ſhould put on, not only his night Cap, but his upper Cap alſo, ſaying unto him, That Obedience was better than Sacrifice.

Now thus ſtanding together, my Lord of York began to tell Bradford how that they were not ſent to him, but of love and charity they came to him: and he, for that acquaintance alſo which he had with Bradford, more then the Biſhop of Chicheſter had: and after commending Bradfords godly life, he concluded with this queſtion, How he was certain of Salvation and of his Religion.

Bradford. After thanks for their good will, Bradford anſwered, By the Word of God, even by the Scriptures I am certain of Salvation and Religion.

York. Very well ſaid; But how do ye know the Word of God and the Scriptures, but by the Church?

Brad. Indeed my Lord, the Church was and is a mean to bring a man more ſpeedily to know the Scriptures and the Word of God, as was the woman of Samaria a mean that the Samaritans knew Chriſt: but as when they had heard him ſpeak, they ſaid, Now we know that he is Chriſt, not becauſe of thy words, but becauſe we our ſelves have heard him; ſo after we come to the hearing and reading of the Scriptures ſhewed unto us, and diſcerned by the Church, we do believe them, and know them as Chriſts ſheep, not becauſe the Church ſaith they are the Scriptures, but becauſe they be ſo, being thereof aſſured by the ſame Spirit which wrote and ſpake them.

York. You know, in the Apoſtles time at the firſt the word was not written.

Although in the Apoſtles time certain Books of the New Teſtament were not written, yet the Apoſtles ſend us ad firmiorem ſermonem propheticum.

Brad. True, if you mean it for ſome Books of the New Teſtament: but elſe for the Old Teſtament Peter telleth us, Firmiorem ſermonem Propheticum habemus; We have a more ſure word of Prophecy: not that it is ſimply ſo, but in reſpect of the Apoſtles, which being alive and compaſſed with infirmity, attributed to the word written more firmity, as wherewith no fault could be found, whereas for the infirmity of their perſons men perchance might have found ſome fault at their preaching; albeit in very deed no leſs Obedience and Faith ought to have been given to the one, then to the other; for all proceedeth forth of one Spirit of Truth.

York. That place of Peter is not ſo to be underſtood of the word written.

Brad. Yea Sir, that it is, and of none other.

Chicheſter. Yea, indeed Mr. Bradford doth tell you truly in that point.

York. Well, you know that Irenæus and other do magnifie much, and alledge the Church againſt the Hereticks, and not the Scripture.

The Authority of the Church alledged againſt Hereticks, and wherefore.

Brad. True, for they had to do with ſuch Hereticks as did deny the Scriptures, and yet did magnifie the Apoſtles, ſo that they were inforced to uſe the Authority of thoſe Churches wherein the Apoſtles had taught, and which had ſtill retained the ſame Doctrine.

Chicheſt. You ſpeak the very truth; for the Hereticks did refuſe all Scriptures, except it were a piece of Luke's Goſpel.

Brad. Then the alledging of the Church cannot be principally uſed againſt me, which am ſo far from denying of the Scriptures, that I appeal unto them utterly, as to the only Judge.

York. A pretty matter, that you will take upon you to judge the Church, I pray you where hath your Church been hitherto? For the Church of Chriſt is Catholick and viſible hitherto.

To judge the Church.

The Church is Catholick and viſible, but yet ſometimes more Catholick and viſible then at ſome.

Brad. My Lord, I do not judge the Church, when I diſcern it from that Congregation, and thoſe which be not the Church, and I never denied the Church to be Catholick and viſible, although at ſometimes it is more viſible then at ſome.

Chicheſt. I pray you tell me where the Church which allowed your Doctrine, was theſe four hundred years?

Brad. I will tell you my Lord, or rather you ſhall tell your ſelf, if you will tell me this one thing, where the Church was in Helias his time, when Helias ſaid that he was left alone?

Chicheſt. That is no Anſwer.

Brad. I am ſorry that you ſay ſo: but this will I tell your Lordſhip, that if you had the ſame eyes wherewith a man might have eſpied the Church then, you would not ſay it were no anſwer. The fault why the Church is not ſeen of you, is not becauſe the Church is not viſible, but becauſe your eyes are not clear enough to ſee it. Anno 1555.

The true Church is viſible and ever hath been, but every man hath not eyes to ſee.

Chich. You are much deceived in making this collation betwixt the Church then and now.

York. Very well ſpoken my Lord; for Chriſt ſaid, Edificabo Eccleſiam, I will build my Church; and not I do, or have built it; but I will build it.

The Biſhops driven to an inconvenience.

Brad. My Lords, Peter teacheth me to make this collation, ſaying; as in the people there were falſe Prophets, which were moſt in eſtimation afore Chriſts coming, ſo ſhall there be falſe Teachers amongſt the people after Chriſts coming, and very many ſhall follow them. And as for your Future Tenſe, I hope your Grace will not thereby conclude Chriſts Church not to have been before, but rather that there is no building in the Church but by Chriſts work only: for Paul and Apollo be but waterers.

Chich. In good faith I am ſorry to ſee you ſo light in judging the Church.

York. He taketh upon him, as they all do, to judge the Church. A man ſhall never come to certainty that doth as they do.

Brad. My Lords, I ſpeak ſimply what I think, and deſire reaſon to anſwer my objections. Your affections and ſorrows cannot be my rules. If that you conſider the order and caſe of my Condemnation, I cannot think but that it ſhould ſomething move your Honours. You know it well enough (for you heard it) no matter was laid againſt me, but what was gathered upon mine own Confeſſion. Because I did deny Tranſubſtantiation, and the wicked to receive Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, therefore I was Condemned and Excommunicated, but not of the Church, although the Pillars of the Church (as they be taken) did it.

Bradford condemned without juſt cauſe, but as was gathered at his judgment againſt him.

Chich. No; I heard ſay the cauſe of your Impriſonment was, for that you exhorted the people to take the Sword in the one hand, and the Mattock in the other.

Brad. My Lord, I never meant any ſuch thing, nor ſpake any thing in that ſort.

Falſe ſurmiſe againſt Bradford.

York. Yea, and you behaved your ſelf before the Councel ſo ſtoutly at the firſt, that you would defend the Religion then; and therefore worthily were you priſoned.

Bradford impriſoned for that, for which he had the Laws on his ſide.

Brad. Your Grace did hear me anſwer my Lord Chancellor to that point. But put caſe I had been ſo ſtout as they and your Grace make it; were not the Laws of the Realm on my ſide then? Wherefore unjuſtly was I priſoned: only that which my Lord Chancellor propounded, was my Confeſſion of Chriſts Truth againſt Tranſubſtantiation, and of that which the wicked do receive, as I ſaid.

York. You deny the Preſence.

The Preſence of Chriſts Body to the Faith of the worthy Receiver.

Brad. I do not, to the Faith of the worthy Receivers.

York. Why? what is that to ſay other, then that Chriſt lieth not on the Altar?

Brad. My Lord, I believe no ſuch Preſence.

Chich. It ſeemeth that you have not read Chryſoſtom: for he proveth it.

Brad. Hitherto I have been kept well enough without Books: howbeit this I do remember of Chryſoſtom, that he ſaith that Chriſt lieth upon the Altar, as the Seraphins with their Tongs touch our Lips with the Coals of the Altar in Heaven, which is an Hyperbolical Locution, of which you know Chryſoſtom is full.

Hyperbolical Phraſe of Chryſoſtom.

York. It is evident that you are too far gone: but let us come then to the Church, out of the which ye are Excommunicate.

Bradford excommunicated with the poor blind man, John 9.

Brad. I am not Excommunicate out of Chriſts Church, my Lord, although they which ſeem to be in the Church, and of the Church, have Excommunicated me, as the poor blind man was, John 9. I am ſure Chriſt receiveth me.

York. You do deceive your ſelf.

Here, after much talk of Excommunication, at length Bradford ſaid,

Brad. Aſſuredly, as I think you did well to depart from the Romiſh Church, ſo I think ye have done wickedly to couple your ſelves to it again; for you can never prove that, which you call the Mother Church, to be Chriſts Church.

Chich.

Anno 1555.

Chich. Ah Mr. Bradford, you were but a Child when this matter began. I was a young man, and then coming from the University, I went with the World, but I tell you it was always against my Conscience.

The Pope proved to be Antichrist by Scripture.

Brad. I was but a Child then, howbeit as I told you, I think you have done evil. For you are come, and have brought others to that wicked man which sitteth in the Temple of God, that is, in the Church: for it cannot be understood of Mahomet, or any out of the Church, but of such as bear rule in the Church.

York. See how you build your Faith upon such places of Scripture as are most obscure, to deceive your self, as though ye were in the Church where you are not.

Brad. Well, my Lord, though I might by fruits judge of you and others, yet will I not utterly exclude you out of the Church. And if I were in your case, I would not condemn him utterly that is of my Faith in the Sacrament; knowing as you know, that at the least eight hundred years after Christ, as my Lord of Duresm writeth, it was free to believe or not to believe Transubstantiation.

What B. Tonstall writeth of Transubstantiation.

York. This is a toy that you have found out of your own brain; as though a man not believing, as the Church doth, that is, Transubstantiation, were of the Church.

Note how these Bishops themselves do grant that the time was when Transubstantiation was not defined by the Church, Tonstall saith that it was more then 800. years after Christ.

Chich. He is an Heretick, and so none of the Church, that doth hold any Doctrine against the definition of the Church, as a man to hold against Transubstantiation. Cyprian was no Heretick, though he believed rebaptizing of them which were baptized of Hereticks, because he held it before the Church had defined it, whereas if he had holden it after, then had he been an Heretick.

Brad. Oh my Lord, will ye condemn to the Devil any man that believeth truly the twelve Articles of the Faith (wherein I take the Unity of Christs Church to consist) although in some points he believe not the definition of that which ye call the Church? I doubt not but that he which holdeth firmly the Articles of our Belief, though in other things he dissent from your definitions, yet he shall be saved.

York. Chich. Yea, said both the Bishops? this is your Divinity.

Brad. No, it is Pauls; which saith, that if they hold the Foundation, Christ, though they build upon him straw and stubble, yet they shall be saved.

York. Lord God, how you delight to lean to so hard and dark places of the Scriptures.

Chich. I will shew you how that Luther did Excommunicate Zuinglius for this matter, and so he read a place of Luther making for his purpose.

Mr. Bradford hangeth not of Luther, &c. and yet he accounteth them good men.

Brad. My Lord, what Luther writeth, as you much pass not, no more do I in this case. My Faith is not builded on Luther, Zuinglius, or Oecolampadius in this point: and indeed to tell you truly, I never read any of their Works in this matter. As for them, I do think assuredly that they were, and are Gods Children, and Saints with him.

York. Well, you are out of the Communion of the Church.

Brad. I am not, for it consisteth, and is in Faith.

York. Lo, how you make your Church invisible; for you would have the Communion of it to consist in Faith.

Communion of the Church consisteth in Faith, and not in visible Ceremonies. Disagreeing in Rites breaketh not agreement in Faith. Irenæus. Aug. contra Epist. fundamenti.

Brad. For to have Communion with the Church needeth no visibleness of it; for Communion consisteth, as I said, in Faith, and not in exteriour Ceremonies, as appeareth both by Paul, which would have one Faith, and by Irenæus to Victor, for the observation of Easter, saying that disagreeing of Fasting should not break the agreeing of Faith.

Chich. The same place hath often even wounded my Conscience, because we dissevered our selves from the See of Rome.

Brad. Well, God forgive you; for you have done evil to bring England thither again.

Consent of People. Authority confirmed with miracles, nourished with hope, increased with charity, established with antiquity.

York. Here my Lord of York took a Book of Paper of Common Places, and read a piece of S. Augustine contra Epistolam Fundamenti, how that there were many things that did hold S. Austin in the bosom of the Church; consent of People and Nations, Authority confirmed with Miracles, nourished with Hope, increased with Charity, established with Antiquity: besides this, there holdeth me in the Church, said S. Augustine, the Succession of Priests from Peters Seat until this present Bishop. Last of all, the very name of Catholick did hold me, &c. Lo (quoth he) how say you to this of S. Augustine? Paint me out your Church thus.

Succession of Priests. The name Catholick.

Brad. My Lord, these words of St. Austine make as much for me as for you: although I might answer, that all this, if they had been so firm as you make them, might have been alledged against Christ and his Apostles. For there was the Law and the Ceremonies consented on by the whole People, confirmed with Miracles, Antiquity, and continual Succession of Bishops from Aarons time until that prese

All this might be objected against Christ and his Apostles, by the Scribes and Pharisees.

Chich. In good faith, Mr. Bradford, you make too much of the state of the Church before Christs coming.

Brad. Therein I do but as Peter teacheth, 2 Pet. 2. and Paul very often. You would gladly have your Church here very glorious, and as a most pleasant Lady. But as Christ saith, Beatus est quicunq; non fuerit offensus per me; so may his Church say, Blessed are they that are not offended at me.

York. Yea, you think that none is of the Church, but such as suffer Persecution.

The Church commonly not glorious in this world, but poor and persecuted.

Brad. What I think, God knoweth: I pray your Grace judge me by my words and speaking, and mark what Paul saith, Omnes qui, &c. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer Persecution. Sometimes Christs Church hath rest here; but commonly it is not so, and specially towards the end her form will be more unseemly.

York. But what say you to S. Austin? where is your Church that hath the consent of People and Nations?

Consent of the godly.

Brad. Even all People and Nations that be Gods People have consented with me, and I with them in the Doctrine of Faith.

York. Lo, ye go about to shift off all things.

Brad. No, my Lord; I mean simply, and so speak, God knoweth.

Succession from Peter.

York. S. Augustine doth here talk of Succession, even from Peters Seat.

Brad. Yea, that Seat then was nothing so much corrupt as it is now.

York. Well, you always judge the Church.

Christs people may discern the Church, though they judge not the Church

Brad. No, my Lord, Christs sheep discern Christs voice, but they judge it not; so they discern the Church, but judge her not.

York. Yes, that they do.

The Church of Rome swerveth from the voice of Christ, and wherein Brad. No, and it like your Grace: and yet full well may one not only doubt, but judge also of the Romish Church; for she obeyeth not Christs voice, as Christs true Church doth.

York. Wherein?

Brad. In Latin Service, and robbing the Laity of Christs Cup in the Sacrament, and in many other things, in which it committeth most horrible Sacriledge.

Chich. Why? Latin Service was in England when the Pope was gone.

Brad. True; the time was in England when the Pope was away, but not all Popery; as in K. Henry's days.

Latin Service defended.

York. Latin Service was appointed to be sung and had in the Quire, where only were Clerici, that is, such as understood Latin, the People sitting in the Body of the Church praying their own private Prayers; and this may well be yet seen by making of the Chancel and Quire, so as the People could not come in, or hear them.

Against Latin Service.

Brad. Yea, but in Chrysostoms time, and also in the Latin Church in S. Jeroms time, all the Church (saith he) reboat, Amen: that is, answereth again mightily, Amen. Whereby we may see that the Prayers were made so, that both the People heard them and understood them.

Chich. Ye are too blame, to say that the Church robbeth the People of the Cup.

The People robbed of the Cup.

Brad. Well, my Lord, term it as it please you: all men know that the Laity hath none of it.

Chich. Indeed I would wish the Church would define again, that they might have it, for my part.

Brad. If God make it free, who can define to make it bond?

York. Well, Mr. Bradford, we lose our labour; for ye seek to put away all things which are told you to your good: your Church no man can know.

Brad. Yes, that ye may well.

York.

York. I pray you whereby?

The Church known only by the Scriptures.

Brad. Forſooth Chryſoſtom ſaith, Tantummodo per Scripturas, alonely by the Scriptures; and this ſpeaketh he very oftentimes, as ye well know.

Chryſ. id opere imperfect.

York. Indeed that is of Chryſoſtom in opere imperfecto, which may be doubted of. The thing whereby the Church may be known beſt, is ſucceſſion of Biſhops.

Lyra ſupra Mat.

Bradford No, my Lord, Lyra full well writeth upon Matthew, that Eccleſia non conſiſtit in hominibus ratione poteſtatis Secularis aut Eccleſiaſticæ, ſed in hominibus in quibus eſt notitia vera, & confeſſio fidei & veritatis: that is, The Church conſiſteth not in Men by reaſon either of Secular or Temporal Power, but in Men indued with true knowledge, and confeſſion of Faith, and of verity.

Hilarius ad Auxentium.

And in Hilarius time, you know he writeth to Auxentius, that the Church did rather deliteſcere in cavernis, then eminere in primariis ſedibus: that is, was hidden rather in Caves and Holes, then did gliſter and ſhine in Thrones of preheminence.

Then came one of the Servants and told them, that my Lord of Dureſm tarried for them at Maſter Yorks Houſe; and this was after that they had tarried three hours with Bradford. And after that their Man was come they put up their written Books of common places, and ſaid that they lamented his caſe: they willed him to read over a Book which did D. Crome good; and ſo wiſhing him good in words, they went their way, and poor Bradford to his Priſon.

The coming of two Spaniſh Friers to Maſter Bradford.

After this Communication with the Biſhops ended, within two days following came into the Counter two Spaniſh Friers to talk with Maſter Bradford, ſent (as they ſaid) by the Earl of Derby; of whom the one was the Kings Confeſſor, the other was Alphonſus, who had before written a Popiſh Book againſt Hereſies, the effect of which their reaſoning here likewiſe followeth.

Talk between Maſter Bradford and two Spaniſh Friers.

The talk between certain Friars and M. Bradford.

UPon the five and twentieth day of February, about eight of the Clock in the Morning, two Spaniſh Friers came to the Counter where Bradford was Priſoner; to whom Bradford was called. Then the one Frier, which was the Kings Confeſſor, asked in Latin (for all their talk was in Latin) of Bradford, whether he had not ſeen or heard of one Alphonſus that had written againſt Hereſies?

Brad. I do not know him.

This Alphonſus had written a Book before in Latin againſt Hereſies.

Confeſ. Well, this Man (pointing to Alphonſus) is he, We are come to you of Love and Charity, by the means of the Earl of Derby, becauſe you deſire to confer with us.

Brad. I never deſired your coming, nor to confer with you, or any other. But ſeeing you are come of Charity, as you ſay, I cannot but thank you: and as touching conference, though I deſire it not, yet I will not refuſe to talk with you if you will.

Alphon. It were requiſite that you did pray unto God, that ye might follow the direction of Gods Spirit, that he would inſpire you, ſo that ye be not addict to your own ſelf-will or wit.

Bradford willed to pray, maketh his prayer.

Brad. Whereupon Bradford made a prayer, and beſought God to direct all their wills, words, and works, as the wills, words, and works of his Children for ever.

Alph. Yea, you muſt pray with your Heart. For if you ſpeak but with Tongue only, God will not give you his grace.

Brad. Sir, do not judge, leſt ye be judged. You have heard my words, now Charity would have you leave the Judgment of the Heart to God.

Alph. You muſt be as it were a neuter, and not wedded to your ſelf, but as one ſtanding in doubt: pray and be ready to receive what God ſhall inſpire; for in vain labboureth our Tongue to ſpeak elſe.

No Man ought to be in doubt of his Religion.

Brad. Sir, my Sentence, if you mean it for Religion, muſt not be in a doubting or uncertain, as I thank God I am certain in that for which I am Condemned: I have no cauſe to doubt of it, but rather to be more certain of it; and therefore I pray God to confirm me more in it. For it is his truth, and becauſe it is ſo certain and true that it may abide the light, I dare be bold to have it looked on, and confer it with you, or any Man; in reſpect whereof I am both glad of your coming, and thank you for it. Anno 1555.

Alph. What is the matter whereof you were condemned? we know not.

The cauſe why M. Bradford was Condemned.

Brad. Sir, I have been in Priſon almoſt two years: I never tranſgreſſed any of their Laws wherefore I might juſtly be Priſoned, and now am I Condemned, only becauſe I frankly confeſſed, whereof I repent not, my Faith concerning the Sacrament, when I was demanded in theſe two points: one, that there is no Tranſubſtantiation, the other, that the wicked do not receive Chriſts Body.

Alph. Let us look a little on the firſt. Do you not believe that Chriſt is preſent really, and corporally in the form of Bread?

Chriſt preſent to the Faith of the worthy receiver.

Brad. No, I do believe that Chriſt is preſent to the Faith of the worthy receiver, as there is preſent Bread and Wine to the ſenſes and outward Man: as for any ſuch preſence of including and placing Chriſt, I believe not, nor dare believe.

Alph. I am ſure you believe Chriſts Natural Body is circumſcriptible. And here he made much ado of the two Natures of Chriſt, how that the one is every where, and the other is in his proper place, demanding ſuch queſtions as no wiſe Man would have ſpent any time about. At length becauſe the Frier had forgotten to conclude, Bradford put him in mind of it, and thus then at length he concluded. How that becauſe Chriſts Body was circumſcriptible, concerning the Humane Nature in Heaven, therefore it was ſo in the Bread.

A Spaniſh Argument. Chriſts Body is circumſcriptible in Heaven: Ergo Chriſts body is circumſcriptible in Bread.

Brad. How hangeth this together? Even as if you ſhould ſay; becauſe you are here, Ergo, it muſt needs follow that you are at Rome. For thus you reaſon; Becauſe Chriſts Body is in Heaven: Ergo, it is in the Sacrament under the form of Bread: which no wiſe Man will grant.

Alph. Why? will you believe nothing but that which is expreſly ſpoken in the Scriptures?

Brad. Yes Sir, I will believe whatſoever you ſhall by demonſtration out of the Scriptures declare unto me.

Chriſt is able to do it; Ergo he doth it.

Alph. He is obſtinate, quoth Alphonſus to his fellow: and then turning to Bradford, ſaid, Is not God able to do it?

Brad. Yes, but here the queſtion is of Gods will, and not of his power.

Alph. Why? doth he not ſay plainly, This is my Body?

Brad. Yes, and I deny not but that it is ſo, to the Faith of the worthy receiver.

Alph. To the Faith? how is that?

Brad. Forſooth Sir, as I have no Tongue to expreſs it: ſo I know ye have no ears to hear and underſtand it. For Faith is more than Man can utter.

Hoc eſt corpus meum.

Alph. But I can tell all that I believe.

Brad. You believe not much then. For if you believe the joyes of Heaven, and believe no more thereof then you can tell, you will not yet deſire to come thither. For as the mind is more capable and receivable then the mouth, ſo it conceiveth more then Tongue can expreſs.

Alph. Chriſt ſaith it is his Body.

Brad. And ſo ſay I, after a certain manner.

Alph. After a certain manner? that is, after another manner then it is in Heaven.

Quodammodo do Auguſtinus Epiſtola ad Bonifacium. Argument. As grace is in the Water of Baptiſm: ſo is the Body in the Sacrament. But Grace is in the Water by ſignification: Ergo, ſo is the Body in the Sacrament.

Brad. Saint Auguſtine telleth it more plainly, that it is Chriſts Body after the ſame manner as Circumciſion was the Covenant of God, and the Sacrament of Faith is Faith; or to make it more plain, as Baptiſm and the Water of Baptiſm is Regeneration.

Alph. Very well ſaid, Baptiſm and the Water thereof is a Sacrament of Gods Grace and Spirit in the Water cleanſing the Baptized.

Brad. No Sir, away with your encloſing: but this I grant, that after the ſame ſort Chriſts Body is in the Bread, on which ſort the Grace and Spirit of God is in the Water.

Alph. In Water is Gods Grace by ſignification.

Brad. So is the Body in the Bread in the Sacrament.

A Popiſh diſtinction of Sacraments.

Alph. You are much deceived, in that you make no difference between the Sacraments that be ſtanders, and the Sacraments that are tranſitory and paſſers by. As for

Ex-

Anno 1555.

Example, the Sacrament of Orders, which you deny, though S. Auguſtine affirm it, it is a ſtander, although the Ceremony be paſt. But in Baptiſm ſo ſoon as the Body is waſhed, the Water ceaſeth to be a Sacrament.

Brad. Very good, and ſo it is in the Supper of the Lord: no longer then it is in uſe, is it Chriſts Sacrament.

The Frier in a chafe.

Here was the Frier in a wonderful rage, and ſpake ſo high (as often he had done before) that the whole Houſe rang again, chafing with cm and cho. He hath a great name of learning, but ſurely he hath little patience. For if Bradford had been any thing hot, one Houſe could not have held them. At the length he cometh to this point, that Bradford could not find in the Scripture Baptiſm and the Lords Supper to bear any ſimilitude together. And here he triumphed before the conqueſt, ſaying, that theſe Men would receive nothing but Scripture, and yet were able to prove nothing by the Scripture.

The Sacrament of the Lords Table compared with Baptiſm in the Scripture.

Brad. Be patient, and you ſhall ſee that by the Scripture I will find Baptiſm and the Lords Supper coupled together.

Alph. No, that canſt thou never do. Let me ſee a text of it.

1 Cor. 12.

Brad. Paul ſaith; That as we are Baptized into one Body, ſo were we potati in uno ſpiritu, i. we have drunk of one Spirit, meaning the Cup in the Lords Supper.

Alph. Paul hath no ſuch words.

Brad. Yes that he hath.

Confeſ. I trow he hath not.

Brad. Give me a Teſtament, and I will ſhew you.

The Frier proved a lyar in his own Teſtament.

So a Prieſt that ſate by them gave him his Teſtament, and he ſhewed them the plain Text. Then they looked one upon another. In fine the Frier found this ſimple ſhift, that Paul ſpake not of the Sacrament.

Brad. Well, the Text is plain enough, and there are of the Fathers which do ſo underſtand the place: For Chryſoſtom doth expound it ſo.

Alph. Alphonſus which had the Teſtament in his hand, deſirous to ſuppreſs this foil, turned the Leaves of the Book from Leaf to Leaf, till he came to the place, 1 Cor. 11. and there he read how that he was guilty, which made no difference of the Lords Body.

1 Cor. 11.

Brad. Yea, but therewith he ſaith, He that eateth of the Bread: calling it Bread ſtill: and that after Conſecration (as ye call it) as in the tenth of the Corinthians he ſaith;

1 Cor. 10.

The Bread which we break, &c.

Converſion is mentioned in turning Moſes Rod, ſo it is not in the Sacrament. Moſes Rod was ſeen to be turned, ſo is not the Sacrament.

Alph. Oh how ignorant are ye, which know not that things after their Converſion do retain the ſame Names which they had before, as Moſes Rod: and calling for a Bible, after he had found the place, he began to triumph: But Bradford cooled him quickly, ſaying.

Brad. Sir, there is mention made of the Converſion, as well as that the ſame appeared to the ſenſe. But here ye cannot find it ſo. Find me one word how the Bread is converted, and I will then ſay, ye bring ſome matter that maketh for you.

Alph. At theſe words the Frier was troubled, and at length he ſaid, how that Bradford hanged on his own ſenſe

Brad. No, that do I not; for I will bring you forth the Fathers of the Church 800. yeares after Chriſt, to confirm this which I ſpeak.

Alph. No, you have the Church againſt you.

Brad. I have not Chriſts Church againſt me.

Alph. Yes that you have. What is the Church?

Brad. Chriſts Wife, the Chair and Seat of verity.

Alph. Is ſhe viſible?

The Church is viſible, but to them that have Spiritual Eyes.

Brad. Yea that ſhe is to them that will put on the Spectacles of Gods Word to look on her.

Alph. This Church hath defined the contrary, and that I will prove by all the good Fathers from Chriſts Aſcenſion, even for 800. years at the leaſt continually.

Brad. What will you ſo prove? Tranſubſtantiation?

Alph. Yea, that the Bread is turned into Chriſts Body.

Brad. You ſpeak more then you can do.

Alph. That do I not.

Brad. Then will I give place.

Alph. Will you believe?

Brad. Belief is Gods gift; therefore cannot I promiſe: but I tell you that I will give place; and I hope I ſhall believe his truth always, ſo good is he to me in Chriſt my Saviour.

The Papiſts hold that the Act of believing is in Mans power.

Alph. Here the Frier found a great fault with Bradford, that he made no difference betwixt Habitus and Actus; as though Actus, which he called credulity, had been in our power. But this he let paſs, and came again asking Bradford, if he could prove it as he ſaid, whether he would give place?

Brad. Yea that I will. Then called he for Paper, Pen, and Ink, to write; and then ſaid I, What and if that I prove by the Teſtimony of the Fathers, that continually for 800. years after Chriſt, at the leaſt, they did believe that the ſubſtance of Bread doth remain in the Sacrament? what will ye do?

Alph. I will give place.

Brad. Then write you here that you will give place if I ſo prove, and I will write that I will give place if you ſo prove: becauſe ye are the ancient, ye ſhall have the Preheminency.

The Frier refuſeth to abide Tryal with Bradford.

Here the Frier fumed marvellouſly, and ſaid; I came not to learn at thee: Are not here witneſſes? (meaning the Prieſts) be not they ſufficient? But the Man was ſo chafed, that if Bradford had not paſſed over this matter of writing, the Frier would have faln to plain ſcolding.

Confeſ. At the length the Kings Confeſſor asked Bradford what the ſecond queſtion was?

Brad. That wicked Men receive not Chriſts Body in the Sacrament, as S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of Judas, that he received Panem Domini, but not Panem Dominum.

The Frier again proved a lyar.

Alph. Saint Auguſtine ſaith not ſo.

The Friers depart in a heat from M. Bradford.

Brad. Yes that doth he. So they aroſe and talked no more of the matter. Thus went they away, without bidding Bradford farewell.

A Prieſt put to a foil.

A Prieſt. After they were gone one of the Prieſts came, and willed Bradford not to be ſo obſtinate.

Brad. Sir be not you ſo wavering; in all the Scripture cannot you find me, non eſt panis:

Prieſt. Yes that I can in five places.

Brad. Then I will eat your Book. So the Book was opened, but no place found; and he went his way ſmiling. God help us.

Talk between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Weſton, and others.

IT followed after this, upon the twenty one of the Month of March, that by means of one of the Earl of Derbies Men, there came to the Counter to dinner one M. Collier, once Warden of Mancheſter, and the ſaid Servant of the Earl of Derby, of whom M. Bradford learned that Doctor Weſton Dean of Weſtminſter would be with him in the afternoon about Two of the Clock. At Dinner time, when the ſaid Warden did diſcommend King Edward, and went about to ſet forth the Authority of the Pope, which Bradford withſtood, defending the Kings Faith, that it was Catholick, and that the Authority of the Biſhop of Romes Supremacy was uſurped, bringing forth the Teſtimony of Gregory, which affirmeth the name of ſupream head, to be a Tittle of the forerunner to Antichriſt. A Woman Priſoner was brought in, whereupon the ſaid Bradford took occaſion to riſe from the Table, and ſo went to his Priſon-Chamber to beg of God Grace, and help therein, continuing there ſtill untill he was called down to ſpeak with Maſter Weſton, which was then come in.

The name ſupream head is the fore-runner to antichriſt. Gregory.

D. Weſton cometh to M. Bradford.

Mr. Bradford then being called down, ſo ſoon as he was entred into the Hall, Maſter Weſton very gently took him by the hand, and asked how he did, with ſuch other talk. At length he willed avoidance of the Chamber: So they all went out, ſave Maſter Weſton himſelf, Maſter Collier, the Earl of Derbies Servant, the Subdean of Weſtminſter, the Keeper, Mr. Clayden, and the Parſon of the Church where the Counter is.

Conference between M. Bradford and D. Weſton.

Now when he began with Maſter Bradford, to tell how that he was often minded to have come unto him, being thereto deſired of the Earl of Derby: and (quoth he) after that I perceived by this Man, that you could be contented rather to ſpeak with me, then any other; I could not but come to do you good, if I can; for hurt you be ſure I will not.

Brad. Sir, quoth Mr. Bradford, when I perceived by the report of my Lords Servant, that you did bear me good will more (as he ſaid) then any other of your ſort,

I told him then, that therefore I could be better content and more willing to talk with you, if you ſhould come unto me. This did I ſay, quoth he, otherwiſe I deſired not your coming.

Weſt. Well, quoth he; now I am come to talk with you: but before we ſhall enter into any talk, certain principles we muſt agree upon, which ſhall be this days work.

D. Weſtons Leſſons, ſuch as he did never follow himſelf. Vain Glory.

First, quoth he, I ſhall deſire you to put away all vain glory, and not hold any thing for the praiſe of the World.

Brad. Sir, S. Auguſtine maketh that indeed a piece of the definition of an Heretick; which if I cannot put away clean (for I think there will a ſpice of it remain in us, as long as this fleſh liveth) yet I promiſe you by the Grace of God, that I purpoſe not to yield to it. God I hope will never ſuffer it to bear rule in them that ſtrive there againſt, and deſire all the dregs of it utterly to be driven out of us.

Singularity.

Weſt. I am glad to hear you ſay ſo although indeed I think you do not ſo much eſteem it as others do.

Secondly, I would deſire you that you will put away ſingularity in your Judgment and Opinions.

Brad. Sir, God forbid that I ſhould ſtick to my ſingularity or private Judgment in Gods Religion. Hitherto I have not deſired it, neither do, nor mind at any time to hold any other Doctrine then is publick and Catholick, underſtanding Catholick as good Men do; according to Gods Word.

Weſton willeth M. Bradford to put down in writing the chief grounds of his Faith.

Weſt. Very well, this is a good days work, I hope to do you good: and therefore now thirdly I ſhall pray you to write me Capita of thoſe things whereupon you ſtand in the Sacrament, and to ſend them to me betwixt this and Wedneſday next: untill which time, yea, untill I come to you again, be aſſured that you are without all peril of death. Of my fidelity, I warrant you, therefore away with all dubitations, &c.

Brad. Sir, I will write to you the grounds I lean to in this matter. As for death, if it come, welcom be it; this which you require of me, ſhall be no great let to me therein.

Weſt. You know that Saint Auguſtine was a Manichean, yet was he converted at the length; ſo have I good hope of you.

Brad. Sir, becauſe I will not flatter you, I would you ſhould flatly know, that I am even ſetled in the Religion, wherefore I am condemned.

Weſt. Yea, but if it be not the truth, and you ſee evident matter to the contrary, will you not then give place?

Brad. God forbid, but that I ſhould always give place to the Truth.

Weſt. I would have you to pray ſo.

Brad. So I do, and that he will more and more confirm me in it, as I thank God he hath done and doth.

Weſt. Yea but pray with a Condition, if you be in it.

Brad. No Sir, I cannot pray ſo, becauſe I am ſetled and aſſured of his truth.

Weſt. Well, quoth Weſton, as the learned Biſhop anſwered S. Auguſtins Mother, that though he was obſtinate, yet the Tears of ſuch a Mother could not but win her Son: ſo, quoth he, I hope your Prayers (for then Bradfords eyes did ſhew that he had wept in Prayer) cannot but be heard of God, though not as you would, yet as beſt ſhall pleaſe God. Do ye not, quoth he, remember the Hiſtory thereof?

Brad. Yea Sir, quoth Bradford, I think it be of St. Ambroſe.

Weſt. No, that it is not. And here Weſton would have laid a wager, and began to triumph, ſaying to Bradford; as you are overſeen herein, ſo are you in other things.

Brad. Well, Sir, I will not contend with you for the name. This (I remember) S. Auguſtine writeth in his Confeſſions.

M. Bradford wrongfully charged with Sedition.

After this talk Weſton began to tell Maſter Bradford, how the People were by him procured to withſtand the Queen.

Whereunto Bradford anſwering again, bade him hang him up as a Traytor and a Thief, if ever he encouraged any to Rebellion: which thing his Keeper, and others that were there of the Prieſts, affirmed on his behalf. So much talk there was to little purpoſe at that time. D. Weſton declared moreover how he had ſaved Men going in the Cart to be hanged, and ſuch like. Anno 1555.

The end was this, that Bradford ſhould ſend unto him, Capita doctrinæ of the Supper, and after Wedneſday he would come unto him again, and thus departed he, after that he had drunk to him in Beer and Wine. I omit here talk of Oxford, of Books of Germany writers, of the fear of death, and ſuch other talk, which are to no purpoſe.

Another diſputation or talk between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Pendleton.

Another diſputation or talk between M. Bradford and D. Pendleton.

IN the mean time, when Maſter Bradford had written his Reaſons and Arguments, and had ſent them to Doctor Weſton, in ſhort ſpace after, about the 28. of March, there came to the Counter Doctor Pendleton, and with him the foreſaid Mr. Collier, ſometime Warden of Mancheſter, and Stephen Bech. After ſalutations Maſter Pendleton began to ſpeak to Bradford, that he was ſorry for his trouble. And further (quoth he) after that I did know you could be content to talk with me, I made the more ſpeed, being as ready to do you good, and pleaſure you what I can, as ye would wiſh.

Brad. Sir, the manner how I was content to ſpeak with you, was on this ſort: Maſter Bech was often in hand with me whom he ſhould bring unto me, and named you amongſt other: and I ſaid that I had rather ſpeak with you then with any of all the other. Now the cauſe why I ſo would, I will briefly tell you. I remember that once you were (as far as a Man might judge) of the Religion that I am of at this preſent, and I remember that you have ſet forth the ſame earneſtly. Gladly therefore would I learn of you what thing it was that moved your Conſcience to alter, and gladly would I ſee what thing it is that you have ſeen ſince, which you ſaw not before.

Pendleton once of the ſame Religion with M. Bradford.

Pendleton. Maſter Bradford, I do not know wherefore you are condemned.

Brad. Tranſubſtantiation is the cauſe wherefore I am Condemned, and becauſe I deny that wicked Men do receive Chriſts Body: wherein I would deſire you to ſhew me what reaſons, which before you knew not, did move your Conſcience now to alter. For once (as I ſaid) you were as I am in Religion.

Here Maſter Pendleton half amazed, began to excuſe himſelf, if it would have been, as though he had not denied fully Tranſubſtantiation indeed, although I ſaid, quoth he, that the word was not in Scripture, and ſo he made an endleſs tale of the thing that moved him to alter: but (ſaid he) I will gather to you the places which moved me, and ſend you them. And here he deſired Bradford that he might have a Copy of that which he had ſent to Mr. Weſton; the which Bradford did promiſe him.

Pendleton be like would ſtudie out the reaſons that moved him to alter: for he had none ready to ſhew.

Some reaſoning alſo they had, whether evil Men did receive Chriſts Body, Bradford denying, and Pendleton affirming. Bradford ſaid that they received not the Spirit: Ergo, not the Body; for it is no dead Carcaſs. Hereto Bradford brought alſo Saint Auguſtine, how Judas received Panem Domini, and not Panem Dominum, and how that he muſt be in Chriſts Body, which muſt receive the Body of Chriſt. But Pendleton went about to put it away with idem, and not ad idem, and how that in Corpore Chriſti was to be underſtood of all that be in the viſible Church with Gods elect. Bradford denied this to be Saint Auguſtines meaning, and ſaid alſo that the allegation of idem, and not ad idem, could not make for that purpoſe. They talked more of Tranſubſtantiation, Pendleton bringing forth Cyprian; Panis natura mutatur, &c. And Bradford ſaid, that in that place natura did not ſignifie ſubſtance. As the nature of an Herb is not the ſubſtance of it; ſo the Bread changed in nature is not to be taken for changed in ſubſtance: For now it is ordained not for the food of the Body ſimply, but rather for the Soul. Here alſo Bradford alledged the Sentence of Gelaſius. Pendleton ſaid, that he was a Pope. Yea, ſaid Bradford, but his Faith is my Faith in the Sacrament, if ye would receive it.

Evil men receive not Chriſts body.

He muſt be in Chriſts body, that muſt receive Chriſts body

The place of S. Cyprian expounded how the nature of bread is changed.

Cyprian expounded by Gelaſius.

They reaſoned alſo whether accidentia were Res, or no. If they be properly Res, ſaid Bradford, then are they ſubſtances; & if they be ſubſtances, they are earthly, and then are there earthly Subſtances in the Sacrament, as Irenæus ſaith, which muſt needs be Bread. But Pendleton ſaith that the Pendleton driven to ſay that accidents be ſubſtances.

Anno 1555.

the colour was the earthly thing, and called it an accidental ſubſtance.

I omit the talk they had of my Lord of Canterbury, of Peter Martyrs Book, of Pendletons Letter laid to Bradfords charge when he was Condemned, with other talk more of the Church; whether Dic Eccleſiæ was ſpoken of the Univerſal Church, or of a particular (which Pendleton at the length granted to be ſpoken of a particular Church) alſo of vain glory, which he willed Bradford to beware of, and ſuch like talk. A little before his departing Bradford ſaid thus, Maſter Doctor, as I ſaid to Maſter Weſton the laſt day, ſo ſay I unto you again, that I am the ſame Man in Religion againſt Tranſubſtantiation ſtill, which I was when I came into Priſon; for hitherto I have ſeen nothing in any point to infirm me. At which words Pendleton was ſomething moved, and ſaid that it was no Catholick Doctrine. Yes, quoth Bradford, and that will I prove even by the Teſtimony of the Catholick Fathers untill Concilium Lateranenſe, or thereabout. Thus Pendleton went his way, ſaying, that he would come oftner to Bradford. God our Father be with us all, and give us the Spirit of his Truth for ever. Amen.

Bradford could hear no reaſon of the Papiſts to infirm his Opinion againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

The ſame day in the afternoon, about five of the Clock, came M. Weſton to Bradford; and after gentle Salutations, he deſired the company every Man to depart, and ſo they two ſat down. And after that he had thanked Bradford for his writing unto him, he pulled out of his Boſom the ſame writing which Bradford had ſent him. The writing is this that followeth.

Certain reaſons againſt Tranſubſtantiation, gathered by John Bradford, and given to D. Weſton and others.

Tranſubſtantiation not brought into the Church before the year 1215. by Pope Innocentius.

THat which is former (ſaith Tertullian) is true; that which is later is falſe. But the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is a late Doctrine: for it was not defined generally afore the Councel of Lateran, about 1215. years after Chriſts coming, under Pope Innocentius the third of that name. For before that time it was free for all Men to believe it, or not believe it, as the Biſhop of Dureſm doth the witneſs in his Book of Preſence of Chriſt in his Supper lately put forth: Ergo, The Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is falſe.

The reaſons proving the words of the Lords Supper to be figurative. 1. Circumſtances of Scripture. 2. Proportion of Sacraments. 3. Teſtimony of Old Doctors.

2. That the Words of Chriſts Supper be figurative the Circumſtances of the Scripture, the Analogy or proportion of the Sacraments and the Sentences of all the Holy Fathers, which were and did write for the ſpace of 1000. years after Chriſts Aſcenſion, do teach: whereupon it followeth, that there was no Tranſubſtantiation.

3. That the Lord gave to his Diſciples Bread, and called it his Body, the Scriptures do witneſs. For he gave that, and called it his Body, which he took in his hands, whereon he gave thanks, which alſo he brake, and gave to his Diſciples, that is to ſay, Bread, as the Fathers Irenæus, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Auguſtine, and all the reſidue which are of Antiquity, do affirm: but in as much as the Subſtance of Bread and Wine is another thing than the Subſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, it plainly appeareth that there is no Tranſubſtantiation.

The Wine is not Tranſubſtantiate: Ergo, neither the bread.

4. The Bread is no more Tranſubſtantiate than the Wine: but that the Wine is not Tranſubſtantiate, Saint Matthew and Saint Mark do teach us: for they witneſs, that Chriſt ſaid that he would drink no more of the fruit of the Vine, which was not Blood, but Wine: and therefore it followeth, that there is no Tranſubſtantiation. Chryſoſtom upon Matthew, and Saint Cyprian, do affirm this reaſon.

The ſame ſpirit which ſaith This is my body, ſaith alſo, We many are one bread, and one body. &c. The words do not tranſubſtantiate the Cup into the new teſtament. Ergo neither the bread into the body.

5. As the Bread in the Lords Supper is Chriſts Natural Body, ſo it is his Myſtical Body: for the ſame Spirit that ſpake of it, This is my Body; did ſay alſo, For we many are one Bread, one Body, &c. but now it is not the Myſtical Body by Tranſubſtantiation, and therefore it is not his Natural Body by Tronſubſtantiation.

6. The words ſpoken over the Cup in Saints Luke and Paul, are not ſo mighty and effectual, as to Tranſubſtantiate it: For then it, or that which is in it, ſhould be Tranſubſtantiate into the New Teſtament: therefore the words ſpoken over the Bread, are not ſo mighty as to make Tranſubſtantiation.

7. All that Doctrine which agreeth with thoſe Churches which be Apoſtolick Mother Churches, or Original Churches, is to be counted for truth, in that it holdeth that which theſe Churches received of the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, Chriſt of GOD. But it is manifeſt, that the Doctrine taught at this preſent of the Church of Rome, concerning Tranſubſtantiation, doth not agree with the Apoſtolick and Mother Churches in Greece, of Corinthus, of Philippos, Coloſſia, Theſſalonica, Epheſus, which never taught Tranſubſtantiation; yea it agreeth not with the Doctrine of the Church of Rome taught in time paſt. For Gelaſius the Pope, ſetting forth the Doctrine which that See did then hold, doth manifeſtly confute the error of Tranſubſtantiation, and reproveth them of Sacriledge, which divided the Myſtery, and keep from the Laity the Cup, therefore the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation agreeth not with the Truth.

The doctrine of the Church of Rome for tranſubſtantiation agreeth not with the Greek Churches, nor with the old Roman Church.

This was the writing which Weſton pulled out of his Boſom: and yet before he began to read it, he ſhewed Bradford that he asked of his Converſation at Cambridge ſithence his laſt being with him, and, quoth he, M. Bradford, becauſe you are a Man not given to the glory of the World, I will ſpeak it before your face: Your Life I have learned was ſuch there always, as all men, even the greateſt enemies you have, cannot but praiſe it, and therefore I love you much better than ever I did: but now I will read over your Arguments, and ſo we will confer them. Such they are, that a Man may well perceive you ſtand on Conſcience, and therefore I am the more ready and glad to pity you. So he began to read the firſt; to the which he ſaid, that though the word Tranſubſtantiation began but lately, yet the thing always was, and hath been ſithence Chriſts Inſtitution.

Brad. I do not contend, or hang upon the word only, but upon the thing which is as new as the word.

The words of Auſtin guileſully wreſted by Weſton.

Weſt. Then went he to the ſecond, and there brought out Saint Auguſtin, how that if an evil Man going to the Devil, did make his Will, his Son and Heir would not ſay his Father did lye in it, or ſpeak tropically: much more Chriſt, going to God, did never lye, or uſe any figurative ſpeech in his laſt Will and Teſtament. Do you not remember this place of Saint Auguſtine, ſaid he?

Brad. Yea Sir, but I remember not that S. Auguſtine hath thoſe words tropice or figurative, as you rehearſe them: for any Man may ſpeak a thing figuratively, and not lye: and ſo Chriſt did in his laſt ſupper.

Weſt. After this he went to the third, and brought forth Cyprian, how that the Nature of Bread is turned into fleſh. Here (ſaith he) of my Lord Canterbury expoundeth Nature for Quality, by Gelaſius. The which interpretation ſerveth for the anſwer of your Argument, that Chriſt called Bread his Body: that is, the quality, form, and appearance of Bread. And further the Scripture is wont to call things by the ſame Names which they had before, as Symon the Leper; he was not ſo preſently, but becauſe he had been ſo.

Symon though he were called the Leper, Yet he was ſeen to be no Leper But bread is ſeen ſtill to be bread: and therefore hath his name not of that it was, but of that it is.

Brad. Cyprian wrote before Gelaſius: therefore Cyprian muſt not expound Gelaſius, but Gelaſius Cyprian: and ſo they both teach, that Bread remaineth ſtill. As for things having ſtill the Names they had, is no anſwer, except you could ſhew that this now were not Bread, as eaſily as a Man might have known and ſeen then Symon to have been healed and clear from his Leproſie.

Cyprian expounded by Gelaſius.

Weſt. After this he went to the fourth, of the Cup, the which he did not fully read, but digreſſed into a long talk of Cyprians Epiſtle De Aquatiis: alſo of S. Auguſtine, expounding the breaking of Bread by Chriſt to his two Diſciples going to Emmaus, to be the Sacrament, with ſuch other talk to no certain purpoſe: and therefore Bradford prayed him, that in as much as he had written the reaſons that ſtabliſhed his Faith againſt Tranſubſtantiation, ſo he would likewiſe do to him, that is, anſwer him by writing, and ſhew him more reaſons in writing to confirm Tranſubſtantiation. Which Doctor Weſton, promiſed to do, and ſaid that he would ſend or bring it to Maſter Bradford again within three days.

Weſton required to write his reaſons.

Thus when he had over-read the Arguments, and here and there ſpoken little to the purpoſe for the avoiding of them, and Bradford had prayed him to give him in writing his anſwers: then he began to tell Bradford how and what he had done for Grimoald, and how that Bradford needed not to fear any reproach or ſlander he ſhould ſuffer, meaning belike to have Bradford ſecretly to come to them, as Grimoald did, for he ſubſcribed.

Grimoald ſubſcribed.

Brad.

Anno 1555.

M. Bradford plain and firm in confeſſion of the Truth.

Brad. Mr. Dean, I would not gladly that you ſhould conceive of me that I paſs of ſhame of Men ſimply in this matter: I rather would have you to think of me, as the very truth is, that hitherto as I have not heard nor ſeen any thing to infirm my Faith againſt Tranſubſtantiation, ſo I am no leſs ſetled in it, than I was at my firſt coming hither. I love to be plain with you, and to tell you at the firſt, as you ſhall find at the laſt.

Weſt. In good Faith, M. Bradford, I love you the better for your plainneſs: and do not think otherwiſe of me, but that you ſhall find me plain in all my talk with you.

Here Weſton began to ask Bradford of his Impriſonment and Condemnation; and ſo Bradford told him altogether, how he had been handled. Whereat Weſton ſeemed to wonder: yea in plain words he ſaid, that Bradford had been handled otherwiſe than he had given cauſe, and ſo ſhewed Bradford how that my Lord of Bath reported that he had deſerved a benefit at the Queens hand, and at all the Councels.

In this kind of talk they ſpent an hour almoſt, and ſo, as one weary, Bradford roſe up, and Weſton called to the Keeper, and before him he bade Bradford be of good comfort, and ſaid that he was out of all peril of death.

Keeper. Sir, quoth the Keeper, but it is in every Mans Mouth, that he ſhall dye to morrow.

The vain promiſe of Weſton.

Weſton. Whereat Weſton ſeemed half amazed, and ſaid, he would goe ſay Evenſong before the Queen, and ſpeak to Her in his behalf. But it is to be thought that the Queen had almoſt ſupped at that preſent: for it was paſt ſix of the Clock.

Brad. Before the Keeper, Bradford told Weſton again that ſtill he was one Man, and even as he was at the firſt; and till he ſhould ſee matter to teach his Conſcience the contrary, he ſaid he muſt needs ſo continue.

Keep. The Keeper deſired Bradford to hearken to M. Doctors Counſel, and prayed M. Doctor to be good unto him: and ſo after they had drunk together, M. Doctor with moſt gentle words took his leave for three days.

Now when he was gone, the Keeper told Bradford, that M. Doctor ſpake openly, how that he ſaw no cauſe why they ſhould burn him. Which Sentence, for the Ambiguity of the meaning, made him ſomewhat ſorry, leſt he had behaved himſelf in any thing, wherein he had gathered any conformableneſs to them in their Doctrine, which God knoweth, ſaith Bradford, I never as yet did. God our Father bleſs us, as his Children, and keep us from all evil for ever, Amen.

Another talk or Conference between Maſter Bradford and Doctor Weſton.

Another talk or conference between M. Bradford and D. Weſton.

UPon the fifth day of April came Mr. Doctor Weſton to the Counter about two of the Clock in the afternoon, who excuſed himſelf for being ſo long abſent; partly by ſickneſs, partly for that Doctor Pendleton told him that he would come unto him; and partly for that, quoth he, I withſtood certain Monks which would have come again into Weſtminſter; telling him moreover, how that the Pope was dead, and alſo declared unto him, how he had ſpoken to the Queen in his behalf, and how that death was not near to him.

D. Weſton withſtandeth the Monks coming into Weſtminſter.

Weſton Laſt of all, he excuſed himſelf for not anſwering his Arguments againſt Tranſubſtantiation; becauſe my coming to day, quoth he, was more by fortune, than of purpoſe.

Bradfords Arguments not anſwered.

Brad. I would gladly, Mr. Doctor, if it pleaſe you, ſee your Anſwers to my Arguments.

Weſton. Why? you have remembred ſomething that I ſpake to you, when I was laſt with you.

Brad. No Sir, I never call them in manner to mind, ſithence that time, as well becauſe I hoped you would have written them; as alſo for that they ſeemed not to be ſo material.

Weſt. In good Faith I cannot ſee any other or better way for you, than to ſubmit your ſelf to the Judgment of the Church.

Brad. Marry ſo will I, Sir, if ſo be by the Church you underſtand Chriſts Church.

The Papiſts will not have the Church Judged.

Weſt. Lo, you take upon you to judge the Church.

Brad. No, Sir, that I do not; in taking upon me to diſcern, I do not judge the Church.

Weſt. Yes that you do; and make it inviſible.

Brad. I do neither.

Weſt. Why, who can ſee your Church?

Brad. Thoſe Sir, that have Spiritual Eyes, wherewith they might have diſcerned Chriſts viſible converſation here upon Earth.

The Church is viſible but only to Spiritual Eyes.

Weſt. Nay, Chriſts Church hath three tokens, that all Men may look well upon: namely, Unity, Antiquity, and Conſent.

Unity, Antiquity, Conſent.

Brad. Theſe three may be as well in evil as in good, as well in Sin as in Vertue, as well in the Devils Church, as in Gods Church: As for an Example, Idolatry amongſt the Iſraelites had all thoſe three. Chryſoſtom telleth plainly, as you well know, that the Church is well known, Tantummodo per Scripturas, Alonely by the Scriptures.

Unity, Antiquity, Conſent, as well common to the Devils Church, as to Chriſts Church.

Weſt. In good Faith, you make your Church inviſible, when you will have it known alonely by the Scriptures.

Brad. No Sir, the Scriptures do plainly ſet forth to us the Church, that all Men may well enough thereby know her, if they liſt to look.

Weſt. The Church is like a Tower or Town that all Men may ſee.

Brad. True Sir, all Men that be not blind. Viſible enough is the Church, but Mens blindneſs is great. Impute not therefore to the Church, that which is to be Imputed to Mens blindneſs.

Why the Church is not ſeen.

Weſt. Where was your Church forty years ago? or where is it now? except in a corner of Germany?

Brad. Forſooth Sir, the Church of God is diſperſed, and not tyed to this or that place, but to the Word of God; ſo that where it is, there is Gods Church, if it be truly taught.

Weſton cometh in again with his Antiquity. The Church is tied to no place but to the word.

Weſt. Lo, is not this to make the Church inviſible? point me out a Realm a hundred years paſt, which maintained your Doctrine.

Brad. Sir, if you will, or would well mark the ſtate of the Church before Chriſts coming, with it now (as Saint Paul and Peter willeth us) I think you would not look for ſuch ſhews of the Church to be made, as to point it by Realms. You know that in Helias time, both in Iſrael, and elſewhere, Gods Church was not pointable; and therefore cried he out, that he was left alone.

The Church is not always to be pointed out by Realms and Countries. The Church in Helias time was not pointable.

Weſt. No marry, did not God ſay that there was 7000. which had not bowed their Knees to Baal? Lo then 7000. ſhew me 7000. a hundred years ago of your Religion.

Brad. Sir, theſe 7000. were not known to Men: for then Helias would not have ſaid, that he had been left alone. And it is plain enough by that which the Text hath, namely that God ſaith, Reliqui mihi, I have reſerved to me ſeven thouſand. Mark that it ſaith, God hath reſerved to himſelf, to his own knowledge; as I doubt not but a hundred years ago, God had his ſeven thouſand in his proper places, though Men knew not thereof.

God ſaved the Church in Helias time, although Helias himſelf did not ſee it: and ſo is it known.

Weſton. Well, M. Bradford, I will not make your caſe worſe, than for Tranſubſtantiation: although I know that we agree not in other matters. And I pray you make you it your ſelf not worſe. If I can do you good, I will: hurt you I will not. I am no Prince, and therefore I cannot promiſe you Life, except you will ſubmit your ſelf to the definition of the Church.

Brad. Sir, ſo that you will define me your Church, that under it you bring not in a falſe Church, you ſhall not ſee but that we ſhall ſoon be at a point.

Weſt. In good Faith Mr. Bradford, I ſee no good will be done, and therefore I will wiſh you as much good as I can, and hereafter I will perchance come or ſend to you again: and ſo he ſent for Mr. Weal, and departed.

Now after his departing, came the Keeper, M. Claydon, and Stephen Bech, and they were very hot with Bradford, and ſpake with him in ſuch ſort that he ſhould not look but to have them utter enemies unto him, notwithſtanding the friendſhip they both had hitherto pretended. God be with us, and what matter is it who be againſt thee.

Among divers which came to M. Bradford in Priſon, ſome to diſpute and confer, ſome to give Counſel, ſome to take comfort, and ſome to viſit him, there was a certain Gentlewomans Servant, which Gentlewoman had been cruelly afflicted, and miſerably handled by her Father & Mother & all her kindred, in her Fathers Houſe, for not coming to the Maſs, and like at length to have been purſued to death, had not the Lord delivered her out of her Fathers houſe, being put from all that ever ſhe had. This Gentlewomans Servant therefore, being ſent to Mr. Bradford with Commendations, had this talk with him, which I thought here not to over-ſlip.

A Colloquy between Mr. Bradford, and a Gentlewomans Servant, being ſent to viſit him in Priſon.

Talk between Bradford and a certain Gentlewomans ſervant.

THis Servant or Meſſenger of the foreſaid Gentlewoman coming to Mr. Bradford, and taking him by the hand, ſaid, God be thanked for you. How do you?

Brad. Mr. Bradford anſwered, Well, I thank God. For as men in ſayling, which be near to the Shore or Haven where they would be, would be nearer; even ſo the nearer I am to God, the nearer I would be.

Serv. Sir, I have never ſeen you ſo ſtrong and healthſome of body, as me think you be now, God be thanked for it.

Brad. Why, quoth he, I have given over all care and ſtudy, and only do I covet to be talking with him, whom I have always ſtudied to be withal.

Serv. Well, God hath done much for you ſince the time that I firſt knew you, and hath wrought wonderouſly in you to his glory.

Brad. Truth it is, for he hath dealt favourably with me, in that he hath not puniſhed me according to my ſins, but hath ſuffered me to live, that I might ſeek Repentance.

Serv. Truly, we hear ſay, there is a Rod made ſo grievous, out of the which I think no man ſhall pluck his head.

Brad. Well, let all that be of Chriſts flock, arm themſelves to ſuffer: For I think verily, God will not have one of his to eſcape untouched, if he love him, let them ſeek what means or ways they can.

By this Frier he meaneth Alphonſus mentioned before.

Serv. Well Sir, there goeth talk of a Frier that ſhould preach before the King, and ſhould tell him, that he ſhould be guilty of the innocent blood that hath been ſhed of late.

Brad. Verily, quoth Bradford, I had a Book within theſe two days of his writing, and therein he ſaith, that it is not meet nor convenient that the Hereticks ſhould live; and therefore I do marvel how that talk ſhould riſe: for I have heard of it alſo, and I have alſo talked with this Frier (he is named Frier Fonſo) and with divers other, and I praiſe God they have confirmed me: for they have nothing to ſay but that which is moſt vain.

Alphonſus, otherwiſe called in the vulgar ſpeech Frier Fonſo.

Serv. Sir, Father Cardmaker hath him commended unto you.

Brad. How doth he, how doth he?

Serv. Well, God be thanked.

Brad. I am very glad thereof: for indeed my Lord Chancellor did caſt him in my teeth; but as David ſaith, God hath diſappointed him.

Serv. Forſooth, Gods Name be praiſed, he is very ſtrong.

Brad. And I truſt, ſo are we. What elſe? our quarrel is moſt juſt: therefore let us not be afraid.

Serv. My Miſtreſs hath her recommended unto you.

Brad. How doth ſhe?

A ſtory of a faithful woman and martyr in the primitive Church called Juleddo. Ex Baſilio.

Serv. Well, God, be praiſed, but ſhe hath been ſorer afflicted with her own Father and Mother, than ever you were with your Impriſonment, and yet God hath preſerved her, I truſt, to his glory.

Brad. I pray you tell her, I read this day a godly Hiſtory, written by Baſilius Magnus, of a vertuous woman which was a widow, and was named Juleddo. She had great Lands and many Children, and nigh her dwelled a Cormorant, which for her vertuouſneſs and godly living, had great indignation at her, and of very malice he took away her Lands, ſo that ſhe was conſtrained to go to the Law with him: and in concluſion, the matter came to the trial before the Judge, who demanded of this Tyrant why he wrongfully withheld theſe Lands from this woman? He made anſwer and ſaid, he might ſo do: for (ſaith he) this woman is diſobedient to the Kings proceedings; for ſhe will in no wiſe worſhip his gods nor offer Sacrifice unto them. Then the Judge hearing that, ſaid unto her, Woman, if this be true, thou art not only like to loſe thy Land, but alſo thy Life, unleſs that thou worſhip our gods, and do ſacrifice unto them. This godly woman hearing that, ſtept forth to the Judge, and ſaid, Is there no remedy but either to worſhip your falſe gods, or elſe to loſe my Lands and Life? Then farewel Suit, farewel Lands, farewel Children, farewel Friends, yea, and farewel Life too: and in reſpect of the true honour of the everliving God, farewel all. And with that ſaying did the Judge commit her to Priſon, and afterward ſhe ſuffered moſt cruel death: and being brought to the place of Execution, ſhe exhorted all women to be ſtrong and conſtant. For, ſaith ſhe, ye were redeemed with as dear a price as men. For although ye were made of the rib of the man, yet be you all of his fleſh: ſo that alſo, in the caſe and trial of your faith towards God, ye ought to be as ſtrong. And thus died ſhe conſtantly, not fearing death. I pray you tell your Miſtreſs of this Hiſtory.

Example of Juddis, martyr.

Serv. That ſhall I, Sir, by Gods grace: for ſhe told me that ſhe was with you and Mr. Sanders, and received your gentle counſel.

Brad. We never gave her other counſel but the truth, and in witneſs thereof, we have and will ſeal it with our bloods. For I thought this night that I had been ſent for, becauſe at eleven of the Clock there was ſuch rapping at the door.

M. Bradford nothing afraid of death.

Then anſwered a Maid, and ſaid, Why then I perceive you were afraid.

Brad. Ye ſhall hear how fearful I was. For I conſidered that I had not ſlept, and I thought to take a nap before I went: and after I was aſleep, theſe men came into the next Chamber, and ſang, as it was told me, and yet for all my fearfulneſs, I heard them not: therefore belike I was not afraid, that ſlept ſo faſt.

Serv. Do you lack any thing towards your neceſſity?

Brad. Nothing but your prayers, and I truſt I have them, and you mine.

Serv. I ſaw a Prieſt come to you to day in the morning.

Brad. Yea, he brought me a Letter from a Frier, and I am writing an anſwer.

Serv. Then we let you, therefore the living God be with you.

Brad. And with you alſo, and bleſs you.

Serv. Amen, ſaid we, and gave him thanks and departed.

THus ſtill in Priſon continued Bradford, until the month of July, in ſuch labours and ſufferings as he before always had ſuſtained in Priſon. But when the time of his determined death was come, he was ſuddenly conveighed out of the Compter where he was Priſoner, in the night ſeaſon to Newgate, as afore is declared, and from thence he was carried the next morning to Smithfield, where he conſtantly abiding in the ſame truth of God, which before he had confeſſed, earneſtly exhorting the People to repent, and to return to Chriſt, and ſweetly comforting the godly young ſpringal of nineteen or twenty years old, which was burned with him, chearfully he ended his painful life, to live with Chriſt.

M. Bradford had from the Counter to Newgate by night.

John Leaf burnt with Bradford.

WIth whom was burnt one John Leaf an Apprentice to Humfrey Gawdy, Tallow-Chandler, of the Pariſh of Chriſt Church in London, of the age of nineteen years and above, born at Kirkly Moreſide, in the County of York: who upon the Friday next before Palm Sunday, was committed to the Compter in Breadſtreet, by an Alderman of London, who had rule and charge of that Ward, or part of the City, where the ſaid Leaf did dwell. After, he coming to examination before Boner, gave a firm and chriſtian teſtimony of his Doctrine and Profeſſion, anſwering to ſuch Articles as were objected to him by the ſaid Biſhop.

John Leaf fellow martyr with M. Bradford.

John Leaf of the pariſh of Chriſts Church, by the Alderman of that ward committed to priſon.

Firſt, As touching his Belief and Faith in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, he anſwered, that after the words of Conſecration, ſpoken by the Prieſt over the Bread and Wine, there was not the very true and natural Body and Blood of Chriſt in Subſtance; and further did hold and believe, that the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, as it is now called, uſed, and believed in this Realm of England, is idolatrous and abominable; and alſo ſaid further, that he believed, that after the words of Conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt over the material Bread and Wine, there is not the ſelf ſame Subſtance of Chriſts Body and Blood there contained; but Bread and Wine, as it was before: and further ſaid, that he believed, that when the Prieſt delivereth the ſaid material Bread and Wine to the Communicants, he delivereth but only * material Bread and Wine; and the Communicants do receive the ſame in remembrance of Chriſts Death and Paſſion, and ſpiritually in Faith they receive Chriſts Body and Blood, but not under the Forms of Bread and Wine; and alſo affirmed that he beleived Auricular Confeſſion not to be neceſſary to be made unto a Prieſt: for it is no point of Soul health, neither that the Prieſt hath any Authority given him by the Scripture to abſolve and remit any ſin.

* Only as touching the ſubſtance, but not as concerning the effect thereof.

Auricular Confeſſion. He meaneth after the Popiſh manner of remitting &c.

Upon theſe his Anſwers, and teſtimony of his Faith, he at that time being diſmiſſed, was bid the Monday next, being the tenth of June, to appear again in the ſaid place, there and then to hear the Sentence of his Condemnation; who ſo did. At what time the foreſaid Biſhop propounding the ſaid Articles again to him, as before, aſſaying by all manner of ways to revoke him to his own Trade, that is, from Truth to Error, notwithſtanding all his perſwaſions, threats, and promiſes, found him the ſame man ſtill, ſo planted upon the ſure Rock of Truth, that no words nor deeds of men could remove him.

John Leaf. Mr. Rogers's Scholar.

Then the Biſhop, after many words to and fro, at laſt asked him, if he had been Mr. Rogers Scholar? To whom the foreſaid John Leaf anſwered again, granting him ſo ſo to be, and that he the ſame John did believe in the Doctrine of the ſaid Rogers, and in the Doctrine of Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, and others of their Opinion, which of late were burned for the teſtimony of Chriſt, and that he would dye in that Doctrine that they died for: And after other replications again of the Biſhop, moving him to return to the Unity of the Church, he with a great courage of ſpirit, anſwered again in theſe words: My Lord, quoth he, you call mine opinion Hereſie, it is the true light of the Word of God: And again repeating the ſame, he profeſſed that he would never forſake his ſtaid and well grounded opinion, while the breath ſhould be in his body. Whereupon the Biſhop being too weak, either to refute his ſentence, or to remove his conſtancy, proceeded conſequently to read the Popiſh Sentence of cruel Condemnation; whereby this godly and conſtant young man, being committed to the Secular Power of the Sheriffs there preſent, was then adjudged, and not long after ſuffered the ſame day with Mr. Bradford, confirming with his death, that which he had ſpoken and profeſſed in his life. Anno 1555.

Sentence againſt John Leaf.

It is reported of the ſaid John Leaf, by one that was in the Compter the ſame time, and ſaw the thing, that after his Examinations before the Biſhop, when two Bills were ſent unto him in the Compter in Breadſtreet, the one containing a Recantation, the other his Confeſſions, to know to which of them he would put his hand, firſt hearing the Bill of Recantation read unto him (becauſe he could not read nor write himſelf) that he refuſed. And when the other was read unto him, which he well liked of, inſtead of a Pen he took a Pin, and ſo pricking his hand, ſprinkled the Blood upon the ſaid Bill, willing the Reader thereof to ſhew the Biſhop, that he had ſealed the ſame Bill with his Blood already.

John Leaf ſealed the Bill of his Confeſſions with his blood.

The behaviour of Mr. Bradford Preacher, and the young man that ſuffered with him in Smithfield, named John Leaf, a Prentice, which both ſuffered for the teſtimony of Chriſt.

FIrſt, when they came to the Stake in Smithfield to be burned, Mr. Bradford lying proſtrate on the one ſide of the Stake, and the young man John Leaf on the other ſide, they lay flat on their faces, praying to themſelves the ſpace of a minute of an hour. Then one of the Sheriffs ſaid to Mr. Bradford, Ariſe, and make an end; for the preſs of the People is great.

At that word they both ſtood upon their feet, and then Mr Bradford took a Fagot in his hand, and kiſſed it, and ſo likewiſe the Stake. And when he had ſo done, he deſired of the Sheriffs, that his Servant might have his Raiment. For (ſaid he) I have nothing elſe to give him? and beſides that, he is a poor man. And the Sheriff ſaid he ſhould have it. And ſo forthwith Mr. Bradford did put off his Raiment, and went to the Stake: and holding up his hands, and caſting his countenance to Heaven, he ſaid thus, O England, England, repent thee of thy ſins, repent thee of thy ſins. Beware of Idolatry, beware of falſe Antichriſts, take heed they do not deceive you. And as he was ſpeaking theſe words, the Sheriff bid tye his hands, if he would not be quiet. O Maſter Sheriff (ſaid Mr. Bradford) I am quiet: God forgive you this Maſter Sheriff. And one of the Officers which made the fire, hearing Mr. Bradford ſo ſpeaking to the Sheriff, ſaid, If you have no better learning then that, you are but a fool, and were beſt hold your peace. To the which words Mr. Bradford gave no anſwer; but asked all the world forgiveneſs, and forgave all the world, and prayed the people to pray for him, and turned his head unto the young man that ſuffered with him, and ſaid; Be of good comfort Brother; for we ſhall have a merry Supper with the Lord this night: And ſo ſpake no more words that any man did hear, but imbracing the Reeds, ſaid thus; Strait is the way, and narrow is the gate that leadeth to eternal ſalvation, and few there be that find it.

The ſaying of M. Bradford at his death.

And thus they both ended their mortal lives, moſt like two Lambs, without any alteration of their countenance, being void of all fear, hoping to obtain the price of the Game that they had long run at; to the which I beſeech Almighty God happily to conduct us, through the Merits of Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour, Amen.

TOuching Mr. Woodroſe the Sheriff, mention is made a little before how churliſhly here he anſwered Mr. Bradford at the Stake, not ſuffering him to ſpeak, but commanding his hands to be tied, &c. The like extremity or worſe, he uſed alſo before to Mr. Rogers, whereof ye have heard before.

Difference between two Sheriffs, M. Cheſter and M. Woodroſe.

The ſaid Woodroſe Sheriff, above mentioned, was joyned in Office with another, called Sir William Cheſter, for the year 1555. Between theſe two Sheriffs ſuch difference there was of Judgment and Religion, that the one, that is, Mr Woodroſe, was wont commonly to laugh, the other to ſhed tears at the death of Chriſts People. And whereas the other was wont to reſtrain, and to beat the People, which were deſirous to take them by the hands that ſhould be burned: the other Sheriff contrariwiſe again with much ſorrow and mildneſs behaved himſelf, which I wiſh here to be ſpoken and known to the commendation of him, although I do not greatly know the party.

Sir W. Cheſter commended.

Furthermore, here by the way to note the ſevere puniſhment of Gods hand againſt the ſaid Woodroſe, as againſt all ſuch cruel Perſecutors, ſo it hapned, that within half a year after the burning of this bleſſed Martyr, the ſaid Sheriff was ſo ſtricken on the right ſide with ſuch a palſie, or ſtroke of Gods hand whatſoever it was, that for the ſpace of eight years after, till his dying day, he was not able to turn himſelf in his Bed, but as two men with a ſheet were fain to ſtir him; and withal ſuch an inſatiable devouring came upon him, that it was monſtrous to ſee. And thus continued he the ſpace of eight years together.

A notable example of Gods hand upon M. Woodroſe.

Here follow the Letters of Mr. Bradford.

The letters of M. Bradford.

THis godly Bradford and heavenly Martyr, during the time of his Impriſonment, wrote ſundry comfortable Treatiſes, and many godly Letters, of which, ſome he wrote to the City of London, Cambridge, Walden, to Lancaſhire and Cheſhire, and divers to his other private Friends. By the which foreſaid Letters, to the intent it may appear how godly this man occupied his time being Priſoner, what ſpecial zeal he bear to the ſtate of Chriſts Church, what care he had to perform his Office, how earneſtly he admoniſhed all men, how tenderly he comforted the heavy-hearted, how faithfully he confirmed them whom he had taught, I thought here good to place the ſame: and although to exhibit here all the Letters that he wrote (being in number ſo many, that they are able to fill a Book) it cannot well be compaſſed, yet nevertheleſs we mind to excerpt the principal of them, referring the Reader for the reſidue to the Book of Letters of the Martyrs, where they may be found.

Read the book of Letters of the Martyrs.

And firſt, forſomuch as ye heard in the ſtory before, how the Earl of Derby complained in the Parliament Houſe, of certain Letters written of John Bradford out of Priſon, to Lancaſhire, and alſo he was charged both of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and of Mr. Allen with ſome Letters; to the intent the Reader more perfectly may underſtand what Letters they were, being written indeed to his Mother, Brethren, and Siſters, out of the Tower, before his Condemnation, we will begin firſt with the ſame Letters; the Copy, with the Contents whereof, is this, as followeth.

The copy of M. Bradfords letter wherefore of the Earl of Derby complained in the Parliament.

A comfortable Letter of Mr. Bradford to his Mother, a godly Matron, dwelling in Manchester, and to his Brethren and Siſters, and other of his Friends there.

A letter of M. Bradford to his mother, brethren, & ſiſters.

OUr dear and ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe Priſoner at this preſent (praiſed be his Name therefore) I am, preſerve and keep you my good Mother, with my Brothers and Siſters, my Father John Traves, Thomas Sorrocold, Laurence and James Bradſhaw, with their Wives and Families, &c. now and for ever, Amen.

I am at this preſent in Priſon, ſure enough for ſtarting, to confirm that I have preached unto you: as I am ready (I thank God) with my life and blood to ſeal the ſame, if God vouchſafe me worthy of that honour. For, good Mother and Brethren, it is a moſt ſpecial benefit of God, to ſuffer for his Names ſake and Goſpel, as now I do: I heartily thank God for it, and am ſure that with him I ſhall be partaker of his glory, as Paul ſaith, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall reign with him. Therefore be not faint-hearted, but rather rejoyce, at the leaſt for my ſake which now am in the right and high way to Heaven: for by many Afflictions we muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Now will God make known his Children. When the wind doth not blow, then cannot a man know the Wheat from the Chaff; but when the blaſt cometh, then flieth away the Chaff, but the Wheat remaineth, and is ſo far from being hurt, that by the wind it is more cleanſed from the Chaff, and known to be Wheat. Gold when it is caſt into the fire, is the more precious; ſo are Gods Children by the Croſs of Affliction. Always God beginneth his Judgment at his Houſe. Chriſt and the Apoſtles were in moſt miſery in the Land of Jewry, but yet the whole Land ſmarted for it after: ſo now Gods Children are firſt chaſtiſed in this world, that they ſhould not be damned with the world: for ſurely, great Plagues of God hang over this Realm.

God begin-eth his judgment with his own houſe.

Ye all know there was never more knowledge of God, and leſs godly living, and true ſerving of God. It was counted a fooliſh thing to ſerve God truly, and earneſt Prayer was not paſt upon. Preaching was but a paſtime. The Communion was counted too common. Faſting to ſubdue the fleſh, was far out of uſe. Alms was almoſt nothing. Malice, Covetouſneſs, and Uncleanneſs was common every where, with Swearing, Drunkenneſs, and Idleneſs. God therefore now is come, and you have heard me preach, and becauſe he will not damn us with the world, he beginneth to puniſh us: as me for carnal living. For, as for my preaching, I am moſt certain it is and was Gods Truth, and I truſt to give my life for it by Gods grace: but becauſe I loved not the Goſpel truly, but outwardly, therefore doth he thus puniſh me; nay rather in puniſhing bleſſeth me. And indeed I thank him more of this Priſon, than of any Parlour, yea, than of any pleaſure that ever I had: for in it I find God my moſt ſweet good God always. The fleſh is puniſhed, firſt to admoniſh us now heartily to live as we profeſs; ſecondly to certifie the wicked of their juſt damnation, if they repent not.

Complaint of the carnal and wicked life among Goſpellers.

The cauſe why God firſt puniſheth his in this world.

Perchance you are weakned in that which I have preached, becauſe God doth not defend it, as you think, but ſuffereth the Popiſh Doctrine to come again and prevail: but you muſt know, good Mother, that God by this doth prove and try his Children and People, whether they will unfeignedly and ſimply hang on him and his Word. So did he with the Iſraelites, bringing them into a God uſeth to prove and try his children.

Deſert, after their coming out of Egypt, where (I mean the Wilderneſs) was want of all things, in compariſon of that which they had in Egypt. Chriſt, when he came into this World, brought no worldy Wealth, nor quietneſs with him, but rather war, The World (ſaith he) ſhall rejoyce, but ye ſhall mourn and weep, but your weeping ſhall be turned into joy: and therefore happy are they that mourn and weep, for they ſhall be comforted. They are marked then with Gods mark in their foreheads, and not with the Beaſts mark, I mean the Popes ſhavenCrown, who now with his ſhavelings rejoyce: but wo unto them; for they ſhall be caſt down, they ſhall weep and mourn. The rich Glutton had here his joy, and Lazarus ſorrow, but afterwards the time was changed. The end of carnal joy is ſorrow. Now let the Whoremonger joy with the Drunkard, Swearer, Covetous, Malicious, and blind buzzard Sir John: for the Maſs will not bite them, neither make them to bluſh, as preaching would. Now may they do what they will, come Devils to the Church, and go Devils home, for no man muſt find fault. And they are glad of this; now they have their hearts deſire, as the Sodomites had when Lot was gone, but what followed? Forſooth when they cried peace, all ſhall be well, then came Gods vengeance, fire and brimſtone from Heaven, and burnt up every Mothers Child; even ſo (dear Mother) will it do to our Papiſts.

John 1 9.

Of this place the Earl of Derby ſeemeth to take hold, complaining that he curſeth them that teacheth any falſe doctrine, &c. The Maſs rebuketh no ſin, nor ſhameth conſciences, as preaching doth.

Wherefore fear God; ſtick to his Word though all the World ſwerve from it. Dye you muſt once, and when, or how, can you not tell. Dye therefore with Chriſt, ſuffer for ſerving him truly and after his Word: for ſure may we be, that of all deaths it is moſt to be deſired to dye for Gods ſake. This is the moſt ſafe kind of dying, we cannot doubt but that we ſhall go to Heaven, if we dye for his Names ſake. And that you ſhall dye for his Names ſake, Gods Word will warrant you, if you ſtick to that which God by me hath taught you. You ſhall ſee that I ſpeak as I think; for by Gods grace I will drink before you of this Cup, if I be put to it.

The beſt death of all deaths, is to die for Gods ſake.

I doubt not but God will give me his grace, and ſtrengthen me thereunto: pray that he would, and that I refuſe it not. I am at a point, even when my Lord God will, to come to him. Death nor Life, Priſon nor Pleaſure, I truſt in God, ſhall be able to ſeparate me from my Lord God and his Goſpel. In Peace, when no Perſecution was, then were you content and glad to hear me, then did you believe me, and will ye not do ſo now, ſeeing I ſpeak that which I truſt by Gods grace, if need be, to verifie with my life? Good Mother, I write before God to you, as I have preached before him.

It is Gods Truth I have taught: It is that ſame infallible Word whereof he ſaid, Heaven and Earth ſhall paſs, but my word ſhall not paſs. The Maſs and ſuch Baggage as the falſe worſhippers of God, and enemies of Chriſts Croſs (the Papiſts I ſay) have brought in again, to poyſon the Church of God withal, diſpleaſeth God highly, and is abominable in his ſight. Happy may be he which of Conſcience ſuffereth loſs of Life or Goods in diſallowing it. Come not at it. If God be God, follow him: If the Maſs be God, let them that will ſee it, hear, or be preſent at it, and go to the Devil with it. What is there as God ordained? His Supper was ordained to be received of us in the memorial of his Death, for the confirmation of our Faith, that his Body was broken for us, and his Blood ſhed for pardon of our ſins; but in the Maſs there is no receiving, but the Prieſt keepeth all to himſelf alone. Chriſt ſaith, Take, eat: No, ſaith the Prieſt, Gape, peep. There is a ſacrificing, yea killing of Chriſt again as much as they may. There is Idolatry in worſhipping the outward ſign of Bread and Wine; there is all in Latin, you cannot tell what he ſaith. To conclude, there is nothing as God ordained. Wherefore (my good Mother) come not at it.

The Maſs is a poyſon to the Church.

Compariſon between the Lords Supper and the Maſs.

Oh, will ſome ſay, it will hinder you, if you refuſe to come to Maſs, and to do as other do. But God will further you (be you aſſured) as you ſhall one day find: who hath promiſed to them that ſuffer hinderance or loſs of any thing in this world, his great bleſſing here, and in the world to come life everlaſting.

Doubts and Objections anſwered. Matth. 19.

You ſhall be counted an Heretick: but not of others then of Hereticks, whoſe praiſe is a diſpraiſe.

You are not able to reaſon againſt the Prieſts, but God will, that all they ſhall not be able to withſtand you. No body will do ſo but you only. Indeed no matter, for few enter into the narrow Gate which bringeth to ſalvation. Howbeit, you ſhall have with you (I doubt not) Father Traves, and other my Brothers and Siſters, to go with you therein: but if they will not, I your ſon in God, I truſt, ſhall not leave you an inch, but go before you: pray that I may, and give thanks for me. Rejoyce in my ſuffering, for it is for your ſakes to confirm the truth I have taught. Howſoever you do, beware this Letter come not abroad, but into Father Traves his hands: for if it ſhould be known that I have Pen and Ink in the Priſon, then would it be worſe with me. Therefore to your ſelves keep this Letter, commending me to God and his Mercy in Chriſt Jeſus, who make me worthy for his Names ſake, to give my life for his Goſpel and Church ſake. Out of the Tower of London, the ſixth day of October, 1553.

Anno 1555.

For all this Caveat, yet this Letter came to the Earl of Derbies knowledge.

My Name I write not for cauſes, you know it well enough: Like the Letter never the worſe. Commend me to all our good Brethren and Siſters in the Lord. Howſoever you do, be obedient to the higher Powers, that is, in no point, either in hand or tongue rebel, but rather if they command that which with good Conſcience you cannot obey, lay your head on the block, and ſuffer whatſoever they ſhall do or ſay. By patience poſſeſs your ſouls.

After the time that Mr. Bradford was condemned, and ſent to the Compter, it was purpoſed of his Adverſaries (as ye heard before) that he ſhould be had to Mancheſter where he was born, and there be burned. Whereupon he writeth to the City of London, thinking to take his laſt Vale of them in this Letter.

To the City of London.

A fruitful Letter of Mr. Bradford to the City of London.

TO all that profeſs the Goſpel and true Doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in the City of London, John Bradford a moſt unworthy Servant of the Lord, now not only in Priſon, but alſo excommunicated and condemned to be burned for the ſame true Doctrine, wiſheth Mercy, Grace, and Peace, with increaſe of all godly knowledge and piety from God the Father of Mercy, through the Merits of our alone and omniſufficient Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, by the operation of the Holy Spirit for ever, Amen.

My dearly beloved Brethren in our Saviour Chriſt, although the time I have to live is very little (for hourly I look when I ſhould be had hence to be conveighed into Lancaſhire, there to be burned, and to render my life by the Providence of God, where I firſt received it by the ſame Providence) and although the charge is great to keep me from all things whereby I might ſignifie any thing to the world of my ſtate: yet having, as now I have, Pen and Ink, through Gods working, maugre the Head of Satan and his Souldiers, I thought good to write a ſhort Confeſſion of my Faith, and thereto joyn a little Exhortation unto you all, to live according to your Profeſſion.

Firſt, For my Faith, I do confeſs and pray all the whole Congregation of Chriſt to bear witneſs with me of the ſame, that I believe conſtantly, through the gift and goodneſs of GOD, (for Faith is Gods only gift) all the twelve Articles of the Symbol and Creed, commonly attributed to the Collection of the Apoſtles. This my Faith I would gladly particularly declare and expound to the confirmation and comfort of the ſimple; but alas? by ſtarts and ſtealth I write in manner that I write, and therefore I ſhall deſire you all to take this brevity in good part. And this Faith I hold, not becauſe of the Creed it ſelf, but becauſe of the Word of God, the which teacheth and confirmeth every Article accordingly. This Word of God written by the Prophets and Apoſtles, left and contained in the Canonical Books of the whole Bible, I do believe to contain plentifully all things neceſſary to Salvation, ſo that nothing (as neceſſary to Salvation) ought to be added thereto, and therefore the Church of Chriſt, nor none of his Congregation ought to be burdened with any other Doctrine, then which hereout hath his foundation and ground. In teſtimony of this Faith, I render and give my life, being condemned as well for not acknowledging the Antichriſt of Rome to be Chriſts Vicar general and ſupream Head of his Catholick and Univerſal Church here or elſe-Antichriſt of Rome not to be Chriſts general Vicar.

where

Anno 1555.

where upon Earth; as for denying the horrible and idolatrous Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and Chriſts real, corporal, and carnal Preſence in his Supper, under the forms and accidents of Bread and Wine.

Tranſubſtantiation a doctrine of Idolatry.

To believe Chriſt our Saviour to be the Head of his Church, and Kings in their Realms to be the Supream Powers, to whom every Soul oweth Obedience, and to believe that in the Supper of Chriſt (which the Sacrament of the Altar, as the Papiſts call it, and uſe it, doth utterly overthrow) is a true and very Preſence of whole Chriſt, God and Man, to the faith of the Receiver, but not to the ſtander by and looker upon, as it is a true and very Preſence of Bread and Wine to the Senſes of men: to believe this (I ſay) will not ſerve, and therefore as an Heretick I am condemned, and ſhall be burned; whereof I ask God heartily mercy that I do no more rejoyce than I do, having ſo great cauſe, as to be an Inſtrument wherein it may pleaſe my dear Lord God and Saviour to ſuffer.

The Sacrament of the Altar quite overthroweth the Lords Supper. Chriſt wholly preſent to the faith of the receiver.

For albeit my manifold ſins, even ſince I came into Priſon, have deſerved at the hands of God, not only this Temporal, but alſo Eternal fire in Hell, much more then my former ſinful life, which the Lord pardon for his Chriſts ſake, as I know he of his mercy hath done, and never will lay mine Iniquities to my charge, to condemnation, ſo great is his goodneſs, (praiſed therefore be his Holy Name) although (I ſay) my manifold and grievous late ſins have deſerved moſt juſtly all the tyranny that Man or Devil can do unto me; and therefore I confeſs that the Lord is juſt, and that his Judgments be true and deſerved on my behalf: yet the Biſhops and Prelates do not perſecute them in me, but Chriſt himſelf, his Word, his Truth, and Religion. And therefore I have great cauſe, yea moſt great cauſe to rejoyce that ever I was born, and hitherto kept of the Lord; that by my death, which is deſerved for my ſins, it pleaſeth the heavenly Father to glorifie his Name, to teſtifie his Truth, to confirm his Verity, to repugn his Adverſaries. O good God and merciful Father, forgive my great unthankfulneſs, eſpecially herein.

God puniſheth his people for one thing: but men perſecute them for another.

Bradford ſorry that he doth not more rejoyce dying in ſo good a quarrell.

And you, my dearly Beloved, for the Lord Jeſus Chriſts ſake, I humbly and heartily in his Bowels and Blood do now, for my laſt Vale and Farewel in this preſent life, beſeech you, and every of you, that you will conſider this work of the Lord accordingly: Firſt by me be admoniſhed to beware of Hypocriſie and Carnal Security; profeſs not the Goſpel with tongue and lips only, but in heart and verity; frame and faſhion your lives accordingly; beware Gods Name be not evil ſpoken of, and the Goſpel leſs regarded by y our Converſation. God forgive me that I have not ſo heartily profeſſed it as I ſhould have done, but have ſought much my ſelf therein. The Goſpel is a new Doctrine to the old man; it is new wine; and therefore cannot be put in old bottels, without more great hurt, then good to the bottles. If we will talk with the Lord, we muſt put off our ſhooes and carnal affections; if we will hear the voice of the Lord, we muſt waſh our garments and be holy; if we will be Chriſts Diſciples, we muſt deny our ſelves, take up our Croſs and follow Chriſt; we cannot ſerve two Maſters. If we ſeek Chriſts Kingdom, we muſt ſeek for the righteouſneſs thereof. To this Petition (Let thy Kingdom come) we muſt joyn, Thy will be done, done on Earth as it is in Heaven. If we will not be doers of the word, but hearers of it only, we ſore deceive our ſelves. If we hear the Goſpel, and love it not, we declare our ſelves to be but fools, and builders upon the ſand. The Lords Spirit hateth feigning; deceitfulneſs the Lord abhorreth; if we come to him, we muſt beware that we come not with a double heart; for then may chance that God will anſwer us according to the block which is in our heart, and ſo we ſhall deceive our ſelves and others.

A leſſon againſt carnal ſecurity.

The Goſpel is a new Doctrine to the old man.

Chriſtian profeſsion requireth Chriſtian converſation.

Faith would be coupled ever with a good conſcience.

To Faith ſee that we couple a good Conſcience, leſt we make a ſhipwrack. To the Lord we muſt come with fear and reverence. If we will be Goſpellers, we muſt be Chriſts; if we be Chriſts, we muſt crucifie our fleſh with the luſts and concupiſcences thereof; if we will be under grace, ſin muſt not bear rule in us. We may not come to the Lord, and draw nigh to him with our lips, and leave our hearts elſewhere, leſt the Lords wrath wax hot, and he take from us the good remaining. In no caſe can the Kingdom of Chriſt approach to them that repent not. Therefore, my dearly Beloved, let us repent and be heartily ſorry that we have ſo carnally, ſo hypocritically, ſo covetouſly, ſo vain-gloriouſly profeſſed the Goſpel. For all theſe I confeſs my ſelf, to the glory of God, that he may cover mine offences in the day of Judgment. Let the anger and plagues of God moſt juſtly faln upon us, be applied to every one of our deſerts, that from the bottom of our hearts, every of us may ſay, It is I, Lord, that have ſinned againſt thee: it is my hypocriſie, my vain-glory, my covetouſneſs, uncleanneſs, carnality, ſecurity, idleneſs, unthankfulneſs, ſelf-love, and ſuch like, which have deſerved the taking away of our good King, of thy Word and true Religion, of thy good Miniſters by exile, priſonment, and death; it is my wickedneſs that cauſeth ſucceſs and increaſe of authority and peace to thine Enemies. Oh be merciful, be merciful unto us. Turn to us again, O Lord of Hoſts, and turn us unto thee; correct us, but not in thy fury, leſt we be conſumed in thine anger; chaſtiſe us not in thy wrathful diſpleaſure; reprove us not, but in the midſt of thine anger remember thy mercy. For if thou mark what is done amiſs, who ſhall be able to abide it? But with thee is mercifulneſs, that thou mighteſt be worſhipped. Oh then be merciful unto us, that we might truly worſhip thee. Help us, for the glory of thy Name: be merciful unto our ſins, for they are great: O heal us, and help us for thine honour. Let not the wicked people ſay, Where is their God, &c.

He exhorteth to repentance.

Our ſins provoke perſecution.

He exhorteth to pray, and how to pray with repentance.

On this ſort, my right dearly Beloved, let us heartily bewail our ſins, repent us of our former evil life, heartily and earneſtly purpoſe to amend our lives in all things, continually watch in prayer, diligently and reverently attend, hear, and read the holy Scriptures, labour after our Vocation to amend our Brethren. Let us reprove the works of darkneſs. Let us fly from all Idolatry. Let us abhor the Antichriſtian and Romiſh rotten Service, deteſt the Popiſh Maſs, abrenounce their Romiſh god, prepare our ſelves to the Croſs, be obedient to all that are in Authority in all things that be not againſt God and his Word, for then Anſwer with the Apoſtles, It is more meet to obey God than man. Howbeit never for any thing reſiſt, or riſe againſt the Magiſtrates. Avenge not your ſelves, but commit your cauſe to the Lord, to whom vengeance pertaineth, and he in his time will reward it. If you feel in your ſelves an hope and truſt in God, that he will never tempt you above that he will make you able to bear, be aſſured the Lord will be true to you; and you ſhall be able to bear all brunts. But if you want this hope, fly and get you hence, rather than by your tarrying Gods Name ſhould be diſhonoured.

Praying, hearing, and reading the holy Scriptures.

Obedience to Magiſtrates in all that is not againſt Gods Word.

Patience.

In ſum, caſt your care on the Lord, knowing for moſt certain, that he is careful for you; with him all the hairs of your head are numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh without his good pleaſure and will: much more then, nothing ſhall happen to our bodies, which ſhall not be profitable, howſoever for a time it ſeem otherwiſe to your ſenſes. Hang on the Providence of God, not only when you have means to help you, but alſo when you have no means, yea when all means be againſt you. Give him this honour, which of all other things he moſt chiefly requireth at your hands: namely, believe that you are his Children through Chriſt, that he is your Father and God through him, that he loveth you, pardoneth you all your offences, that he is with you in trouble, and will be with you for ever. When you fall, he will put under his hand, you ſhall not lye ſtill: before you call upon him he heareth you, out of the evil he will finally bring you, and deliver you to his eternal joy. Doubt not, my dearly beloved, herein, doubt not (I ſay) this will God your Father do for you, not in reſpect of your ſelves, but in reſpect of Chriſt your Captain, your Paſtor, your Keeper, out of whoſe hands none ſhall be able to catch you, in him be quiet, and often conſider your dignity: namely, how that ye be Gods Children, the Saints of God, Citizens of Heaven, Temples of the Holy Ghoſt, the Thrones of God, Members of Chriſt, and Lords over all.

We ought to depend upon Gods providence always.

All our hope is only in Chriſt and for his ſake to be received.

Therefore be aſhamed to think, ſpeak, or do any thing that ſhould be unſeemly for Gods Children, Gods Saints, Chriſts Members, &c. Marvel not though the Devil and the World hate you, though ye be perſecuted here, for the Servant is not above his Maſter. Covet not earthly Riches, fear not the power of man, love not this world,

To bear the Croſs.

Mortification.

nor things that be in this world; but long for the Lord Jesus his coming, at which time your Bodies shall be made like unto his glorious Body, when he appeareth you shall be like unto him; when your life shall thus be revealed, then shall ye appear with him in glory.

In the mean season live in hope thereof. Let the life you lead be in the faith of the Son of God: For the just doth live by faith: which faith flieth from all evil, and followeth the Word of God as a Lanthorn to her feet, and a Light to her steps; her eyes be above where Christ is, she beholdeth not the things present, but rather things to come; she glorieth in Affliction; she knoweth that the Afflictions of this life are not like to be compared to the Glory which God will reveal to us, and in us. Of this Glory God grant us here a lively taste; then shall we run after the scent it sendeth forth. It will make us valiant men to take to us the Kingdom of God; whether the Lord of Mercy bring us in his good time through Christ our Lord, to whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God, be all honour and glory, world without end, Amen.

We must live in the faith of Christ. The property of faith.

My dearly beloved, I would gladly have given here my Body to have been burned for the confirmation of the true Doctrine I have taught here unto you. But that my Country must have. Therefore I pray you take in good part this signification of my good will towards every of you. Impute the want herein to time and trouble. Pardon me mine offensive and negligent behaviour when I was amongst you. With me repent, and labour to amend. Continue in the Truth which I have truly taught unto you by preaching in all places where I have come; Gods Name therefore be praised. Confess Christ when you be called, whatsoever cometh thereof, and the God of Peace be with us all, Amen. This 11. of February, 1555.

Your Brother in bonds for the Lords sake,
John Bradford.

To the University and Town of Cambridge.

Another letter of M. Bradford to the University of Cambridge.

TO all that love the Lord Jesus and his true Doctrine, being in the University and Town of Cambridge, John Bradford a most unworthy Servant of the Lord, now not only prisoned, but also condemned for the same true Doctrine, wisheth grace, peace, and mercy, with increase of all godliness from God the Father of all mercy, through the bloody Passion of our Saviour Jesus Christ, by the lively working of the holy Spirit for ever, Amen.

Although I look hourly when I should be had to the Stake (my right dearly beloved in the Lord) and although the charge over me is great and streight, yet having by the Providence of God secretly Pen and Ink, I could not but something signifie unto you my solicitude which I have for you and every of you in the Lord, though not as I would, yet as I may. You have often and openly heard the truth (specially in this matter wherein I am condemned) disputed and preached, that it is needless to do any more but only to put you in remembrance of the same: but hitherto have you not heard it confirmed, and as it were sealed up, as now you do and shall hear by me, that is, by my death and burning. For albeit I have deserved (through my uncleanness, hypocrisie, avarice, vain-glory, idleness, unthankfulness, and carnality, whereof I accuse my self, to my confusion before the world, that before God through Christ I might, as my assured hope is I shall, find mercy) eternal death, and hell fire, much more than this affliction and fire prepared for me: yet, my dearly beloved, it is not these, or any of these things, wherefore the Prelates do persecute me, but Gods verity and truth; yea, even Christ himself is the only cause and thing wherefore I am now condemned, and shall be burned as an Heretick, because I will not grant the Antichrist of Rome to be Christs Vicar general and supream Head of his Church here, and every where upon earth, by Gods Ordinance, and because I will not grant such corporal, real, and carnal Presence of Christs Body and Blood in the Sacrament, as doth transubstantiate the substance of Bread and Wine, and is received of the wicked, yea of Dogs and Mice. Also I am excommunicated, & counted as a dead Member of Christs Church, as a rotten Branch, and therefore shall be cast into the fire.

The Martyrs persecuted of the Prelates not for their sins, but only for Christ. The cause of his condemnation declared.

Therefore ye ought heartily to rejoyce with me, and to give thanks for me, that God the eternal Father hath vouchsafed our Mother to bring up any Child in whom it would please him to magnifie his holy Name as he doth, and I hope for his mercies and truths sake, will do in me, and by me. Oh, what such benefit upon earth can it be, as that I, which deserved death by reason of my sins, should be delivered to a demonstration, a testification, and confirmation of Gods verity and truth? Thou my Mother the University hast not only had the truth of Gods Word plainly manifested unto thee by reading, disputing and preaching publickly and privately; but now to make thee altogether excuseless, and as it were, almost to sin against the Holy Ghost, if thou put to thy helping hand with the Romish rout to suppress the verity, and set out the contrary, thou hast my life and blood as a Seal to confirm thee, if thou wilt be confirmed, or else to confound thee, and bear witness against thee, if thou wilt take part with the Prelates and Clergy, which now fill up the measure of their Fathers which slew the Prophets and Apostles, that all the righteous blood from Abel to Bradford, shed upon earth, may be required at their hands.

A.D. 1555.

A great mercy of God to turn the death of his Saints justly deserved to serve for a confirmation of his own glory.

Of this therefore I thought good before my death, as time and liberty would suffer me (for love and duty I bear unto thee) to admonish thee good Mother, and my Sister the Town, that you would call to mind from whence you are faln, and study to do the first works. You know (if you will) these matters of the * Romish Supremacy, and the Antichristian Transubstantiation, whereby Christs Supper is overthrown, his Priesthood evacuate, his Sacrifice frustrate, the Ministery of his Word unplaced, Repentance repelled, Faith fainted, Godliness extinguished, the Mass maintained, Idolatry supported, and all impiety cherished: you know I say (if you will) that these Opinions are not only besides Gods Word, but even directly against it, and therefore to take part with them, is to take part against God, against whom you cannot prevail.

Circumstances beneficiorum moniti.

* Read before the letter of Cambridge to King Henry 8.

Therefore for the tender mercy of Christ, in his bowels and blood I beseech you, to take Christs Collyrium and Eye-salve to anoint your eyes, that you may see what you do and have done in admitting (as I hear you have admitted, yea alas, authorized, and by consent confirmed) the Romish rotten rags, which once you utterly expelled. O be not Canis reversus ad vomitum. Be not * Sus lota reversa ad volutabrum cœni. Beware lest the Satan enter in with seven other Spirits, and then postrema shall be worse then the first. It had been better ye had never known the truth, then after knowledge to run from it. Ah, wo to this world and the things therein, which hath now so wrought with you. Oh that ever this dirt of the Devil should daub up the eye of the Realm. For thou, O Mother, art as the eye of the Realm. If thou be light and give shine, all the Body shall fare the better: But if thou the light be darkness, alas how great will the darkness be? What is man whose breath is in his nostrels, that thou should thus be afraid of him?

* The dog returned to his own vomit: The Sow that was washed returned to her wallowing in the mire. 2 Pet. 2.

Oh what is honour and life here? Bubbles. What is glory in this world, but shame? Why art thou afraid to carry Christs Cross? Wilt thou come into his Kingdom, and not drink of his Cup? Dost thou not know Rome to be Babylon? Dost thou not know that as the old Babylon had the Children of Judah in Captivity, so hath this Rome the true Judah, that is, the Confessors of Christ? Dost thou not know that as destruction hapned unto it, so shall it do unto this? And troweſt thou that God will not deliver his People now when the time is come, as he did then? Hath not God commanded his People to come out from her? and wilt thou give ensample to the whole Realm to run unto her? Hast thou forgotten the wo that Christ threatneth to offence givers? Wilt thou not remember that it were better that a Millstone were hanged about thy neck, and thou thrown into the Sea, then that thou shouldst offend the little ones?

The glory of this world is a vain thing.

Babylon hath Judah in captivity.

And alas, how hast thou offended? Yea, and how dost thou still offend? Wilt thou consider things according to the outward shew? Was not the Synagogue more seemly and like to be the true Church, then the simple Flock of Christs Disciples? Hath not the Whore of Babylon more costly Aray, and rich Apparel externally to set forth her self, then the homely Housewife of Christ?

The Church standeth not in the outward shew.

Where

Anno 1555.

where is the beauty of the Kings Daughter the Church of Christ? Without or within? Doth not David say, within? O remember that as they are happy which are not offended at Christ, so are they happy which are not offended at his poor Church. Can the Pope and his Prelates mean honestly, which make so much of the Wife and so little of the Husband? The Church they magnifie, but Christ they contemn. If this Church were an honest Woman (that is, Christs Wife) except they would make much of her Husband, Christ and his Word, she would not be made much of them.

Custom, Unity, Antiquity Consent of Multitude are marks deceivable.

When Christ and his Apostles were upon earth, who was more like to be the true Church, they or the Prelates, Bishops, and Synagogue? If a Man should have followed custom, unity, antiquity, or the more part, should not Christ and his company have been cast out of the doors? Therefore bade Christ, Search the Scriptures. And, good Mother, shall the Servant be above his Master? Shall we look for other entertainment at the hands of the World, then Christ and his dear Disciples found? Who was taken in Noah's time for the Church? Poor Noah and his Family, or others? Who was taken for Gods Church in Sodom? Lot, or others? and doth not Christ say; As it was then, so shall it go now towards the coming of the Son of Man? What meaneth Christ when he saith; Iniquity shall have the upper hand? Doth not he tell, that Charity shall wax cold? And who seeth not a wonderful great lack of Charity in those, which would now be taken for Christs Church? All that fear God in this Realm truly can tell more of this then I can write.

Therefore, dear Mother, receive some admonition of one of thy poor Children, now going to be burned for the testimony of Jesus. Come again to Gods Truth; come out of Babylon; confess Christ and his true Doctrine; repent that which is past; make amends by declaring thy repentance by the fruits. Remember the Readings and Preachings of Gods Prophet the true Preacher Martin Bucer. Call to mind the threatnings of God, now something seen by thy Children Leaver and others. Let the exile of Leaver, Pilkington, Grindal, Haddon, Horn, Scorie, Ponet, &c. something awake thee. Let the Imprisonment of thy dear Sons, Cranmer Ridley, and Latimer move thee. Consider the Martyrdom of thy Chickens, Rogers, Sanders, Taylor. And now cast not away the poor admonition of me going to be burned also, and to receive the like Crown of Glory with my fellows. Take to heart Gods calling by us. Be not as Pharaoh was: for then will it happen unto thee as it did unto him. What is that? Hardness of heart. And what then? Destruction eternally both of Body and Soul. Ah therefore, good Mother, awake, awake, repent, repent, buskle thy self, and make haste to turn to the Lord. For else it shall be more easie for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of Judgment than for thee. O harden not your hearts; O stop not your ears to day in hearing Gods voyce, though it be by a most unworthy Messenger. O fear the Lord: for his anger is begun to kindle. Even now the Ax is laid to the root of the Tree.

Martin Bucers Preaching. Pilkington, Grindall, Haddon, Horn, Ponet, Rogers, Sanders, Taylor.

Bradford prophesies before the sweat time what would follow of carnall Gospelling, if repentance did not come.

You know I prophecied truly to you before the Sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnal Gospelling. And now I tell you before I depart hence, that the ears of Men will tingle to hear the vengeance of God that will fall upon you all, both Town and University, if you repent not, if you leave not your Idolatry, if you turn not speedily to the Lord, if you still be ashamed of Christs truth which you know.

Perne, Thomson. He teacheth Cambridg to pray.

Oh Perne repent, Oh Thompson repent, Oh you Doctors, Batchelors, and Masters repent: Oh Major, Aldermen, and Town-dwellers repent, repent, repent, that you may escape the neer vengeance of the Lord. Rent your hearts, and come apace, calling on the Lord. Let us all say, Peccavimus, we have all sinned, we have done wickedly, we have not hearkened to thy voice, O Lord. Deal not with us after our deserts, but be merciful to our iniquities, for they are great. Oh pardon our offences. In thine anger remember thy mercy. Turn us unto thee, O Lord God of hosts, for the glory of thy names sake. Spare us and be merciful unto us. Let not the wicked People say; Where is now their God? O for thine own sake, for thy names sake, deal mercifully with us. Turn thy self unto us, and us unto thee, and we shall praise thy name for ever.

If in this sort (my dearly beloved) in Heart and Mouth we come unto our Father, and prostrate our selves before the throne of his grace, then surely, surely we shall find mercy. Then shall the Lord look merrily upon us, for his mercy sake in Christ: then shall we hear him speak peace unto his People. For he is gracious and merciful, of great pity and compassion: he cannot be chiding for ever: his anger cannot last long to the penitent. Though we weep in the morning, yet at night we shall have our sorrow to cease. For he is exorable, and hath no pleasure in the death of a Sinner: he rather would our conversion and turning.

Gods mercy promised to Cambridg if it repent.

Oh turn ye now and convert yet once again, I humbly beseech you, and then the Kingdom of Heaven shall draw nigh. The eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, nor the Heart of Man is able to conceive the joys prepared for us if we repent, amend our lives, and heartily turn to the Lord. But if ye repent not, but be as you were, and go on forwards with the wicked, following the fashion of the World, the Lord will lead you on with wicked doers, you shall perish in your wickedness, your Blood will be upon your own heads, your parts shall be with Hypocrites, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth; ye shall be cast from the face of the Lord for ever and ever: eternal shame, sorrow, woe, and misery, shall be both in Body and Soul to you World without end. Oh therefore, right dear to me in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, repent you, amend, amend your lives, depart from evil, do good, follow peace and pursue it. Come out from Babylon, cast of the works of darkness, put on Christ, confess his truth, be not ashamed of his Gospel, prepare your selves to the Cross, drink of Gods Cup before it come to the dregs, and then shall I with you and for you, rejoyce in the day of Judgment, which is at hand, and therefore prepare your selves thereto, I heartily beseech you. And thus I take my Vale in æternum, with you in this present life, mine own dear hearts in the Lord. The Lord of mercy be with us all, and give us a joyful and sure meeting in his Kingdom, Amen, Amen. Out of Prison the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

Your own in the Lord for ever
John Bradford.

To Lancashire and Cheshire.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to Lancashire, Cheshire and specially to Manchester.

TO all those that profess the Name and true Religion of our Saviour Christ in Lancashire and Cheshire, and specially abiding in Manchester and thereabout, John Bradford a most unworthy servant of the Lord, now not only in bonds, but also condemned for the same true Religion, wisheth mercy and grace, peace, and increase of all godliness from God the Father of all pity, through the deserts of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the working of the most mighty and lively Spirit the Comforter for ever, Amen.

I heard it reported credibly, my dearly beloved in the Lord, that my Heavenly Father hath thought it good to provide, that as I have Preached his true Doctrine and Gospel amongst you by word, so I shall testifie and confirm the same by deed, that is, I shall with you leave my life, which by his providence I first received there (for in Manchester was I born) for a seal to the Doctrine I have taught with you, and amongst you: so that if from henceforth you waver in the same, you have none excuse at all. I know the enemies of Christ, which exercise this cruelty upon me (I speak in respect of mine offence which is none to themwards) think by killing of me amongst you to affray you and others, lest they should attempt to teach Christ truly, or believe his Doctrine hereafter. But I doubt not but my Heavenly Father will by my death, more confirm you in his Truth for ever. And therefore I greatly rejoyce to see Satan and his Souldiers supplanted in their own sapience, which is plain foolishness amongst the wise indeed, that is, amongst such as have heard Gods Word, and do follow it: for they only are counted wise of the Wisdom of God our Saviour.

He confesseth his Sins before God.

Indeed if I should simply consider my life with that which it ought to have been, and as God in his Law requireth, then could I not but cry as I do, Justus es Domine, & omnia judicia tua vera.i.e. Righteous art thou, O Lord, and and all thy judgments are true. For I have much grieved thee, and transgressed thy holy precepts, not only before my professing the gospel, but sithence also: yea, sithence my coming into prison I do not excuse, but accuse my self before God and all his Church that I have grievously offended my Lord God, I have not loved his Gospel as I should have done, I have sought my self, and not simply and onely his glory and my Brethrens commodity, I have been too unthankfull, secure, carnal, Hypocritical, vain-glorious, &c. All which my evils, the Lord of mercy pardon me for his Christs sake, as I hope and certainly believe he hath done for his great mercy in Christ our Redeemer.

But when I consider the cause of my condemnation, I cannot but lament, that I do no more rejoyce then I do. For it is Gods verity and Truth; So that the condemnation is not a condemnation of Bradford simply, but rather a condemnation of Christ and of his Truth. Bradford is nothing else but an Instrument in whom Christ and his Doctrine is condemned. And therefore my dearly beloved, rejoyce, rejoyce and give thanks with me and for me, that ever God did vouchsafe so great a benefit to our Country, as to choose the most unworthy (I mean my self) to be one, in whom it would please him to suffer any kind of affliction: much more this violent kind of death, which I perceive is prepared for me with you for his sake. All glory and praise be given unto God our Father, for his great and exceeding mercy towards me through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

But perchance you will say unto me, what is the cause for the which you are condemned? We hear say, that ye deny all presence of Christ in his holy Supper, and so make it a bare sign and common Bread, and nothing else. My dearly beloved, what is said of me, and what will be, I cannot tell. It is told me that Pendleton is gone down to Preach with you, not as he once recanted (for you all know he hath Preached contrary to that he was wont to Preach afore I came amongst you) but to recant that which he hath recanted. How he will speak of me, and report before I come, when I am come, and when I am burned, I much pass not: for he that is so uncertain, and will speak so often against himself, I cannot think he will speak well of me, except it make for his purpose and profit: but of this enough.

D. Pendleton recanted first in K. Edwards time, and now again in Q. Marys time.

Indeed the chief thing which I am condemned for, as an Heretick, is because I deny in the Sacrament of the Altar (which is not Christs Supper, but a plain perverting of it, being used as the Papists now use it) to be a real, natural, and corporal presence of Christs Body and Blood, under the forms and accidents of Bread and Wine, that is, because I deny Transubstantiation, which is the darling of the Devil, and daughter and heir to Antichrists Religion, whereby the Mass is maintained, Christs Supper perverted, his Sacrifice and Cross imperfected, his Priesthood destroyed, the Ministry taken away, Repentance repelled, and all true Godliness abandoned. In the Supper of our Lord, or Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, I confess and believe that there is a true, and very presence, of the whole Christ, God and Man, to the Faith of the receiver (but not of the standers by and looker on) as there is a very true presence of Bread and Wine to the senses of him that is partaker thereof. This Faith, this Doctrine, which consenteth with the Word of God, and with the true testimony of Christs Church, which the Popish Church doth prosecute) will I not forsake, and therefore I am condemned as an Heretick, and shall be burned. But, my dearly beloved, this Truth (which I have taught, and you have received, I believed, and do believe, and therein give my life) I hope in God shall never be burned, bound, nor overcome: but shall triumph, have Victory, and be at liberty, maugre the head of all Gods adversaries. For there is no counsel against the Lord, nor can any device of Man be able to defeat the verity in any other then such as be Children of unbelief, which have no love to the Truth, and therefore are given up to believe lies. From which plague the Lord of mercy deliver you and all the Realm, my dear hearts in the Lord, I humbly beseech his mercy, Amen.

The cause why M. Bradford was condemned.

Transubstantiation the divels darling, and daughter of Antichrist.

M. Bradfords farewel to the Country of Lancashire.

And to the end you might be delivered from this plague, (right dear to me in the Lord) I shall for my farewel with you for ever in this present life, heartily desire you all in the Bowels and Blood of our most merciful Saviour Jesus Christ, to attend unto these things which I now shall shortly write unto you out of the Holy Scriptures of the Lord.

Anno 1555.

You know an heavy plague (or rather plagues) of God is faln upon us, in taking away our good King, and true Religion, Gods true Prophets and Ministers, &c. And setting over us, such as seek not the Lord after knowledge: whose endeavours God prospereth wonderfully to the tryal of many, that his People may both better know themselves, and be known. Now the cause hereof is our iniquities and grievous Sins. We did not know the time of our visitation: we were unthankful unto God: we contemned the Gospel, and carnally abused it, to serve our Hypocrisie, our vain-glory, our viciousness, avarice, idleness, security, &c. Long did the Lord linger, and tarry to have shewed mercy upon us, but we were ever the longer the worse. Therefore most justly hath God dealt with us, and dealeth with us: yea, yet we may see that his justice is tempered with much mercy, whereto let us attribute that we are not utterly consumed. For if the Lord should deal with us after our deserts, alas, how could we abide it? In his anger therefore, seeing he doth remember his mercy undeserved (yea undesired on our behalf) let us take occasion the more speedily to go out to meet him, not with force of arms (for we are not so able to withstand him, much less to prevail against him) but to beseech him to be merciful unto us, and according to his wonted mercy to deal with us.

Gods manifold Plagues upon England in Q. Marys days.

The cause of Gods Plagues is our iniquities, and not knowing the time of Gods visitation.

Let us arise with David, and say, Ne intres in judicium cum Servo tuo, &c. i. e. Enter not into judgment with thy Servant O Lord; for in thy sight no flesh living shall be justified. Let us send Embassadors with the Centurion, and say, Lord, we are not worthy to come our selves unto thee; Speak the word, and we shall have peace. Let us penitently with the Publican look down on the earth, knock our hard hearts to burst them, and cry out, O God be merciful unto us wretched Sinners: Let us with the lost Son return and say, O Father, we have sinned against Heaven and Earth, and before thee, we are unworthy to be called thy Children. Let us I say do on this sort, that is, heartily repent us of our former evil life, and unthankful Gospelling past, convert and turn to God with our whole hearts, hoping in his great mercy through Christ, and heartily calling upon his holy Name, and then undoubtedly we shall find and feel otherwise then yet we feel, both inwardly and outwardly. Inwardly we shall feel peace of Conscience between God and us, which peace passeth all understanding, and outwardly we shall feel much mitigation of these miseries, if not an utter taking of them away.

Rising with David.

Suing with the Centurion.

Repenting with the Publican.

Returning with the lost Son.

Therefore my dearly beloved in the Lord, I your poorest Brother now departing to the Lord, for my Vale in æternum for this present life, pray you, beseech you, and even from the very bottom of my heart, for all the mercies of God in Christ shewed unto you, most earnestly beg and crave of you out of Prison (as often out of your Pulpits I have done) that you will repent you, leave your wicked and evil life, be sorry for your offences, and turn to the Lord, whose arms are wide open to receive and imbrace you, whose stretched out hand to strike to death stayeth that he may shew mercy upon you. For he is the Lord of mercy, and God of all comfort, he will not the death of a Sinner, but rather that ye should return, convert, and amend. He hath no pleasure in the destruction of Men; his long suffering draweth to repentance before the time of vengeance, and the day of wrath which is at hand, doth come.

Bradfords ultimum vale.

The day of Gods wrath at hand.

Now is the Ax laid to the Root of the Tree utterly to destroy the impenitent. Now is the fire gone out before the face of the Lord, and who is able to quench it? Oh therefore repent you, repent you. It is enough to have lived as we have done. It is enough to have played the wanton Gospellers, the proud protestants, Hypocritical and false Christians, as alas, we have done. Now the Lord speaketh to us in mercy and grace; Oh turn before he speaketh in wrath. Yet is there mercy with the Lord, and plentious redemption: yet he hath not forgotten to shew mercy to them that call upon him. Oh then call upon him while he may be found. For he is rich in mercy, and plentiful to all them that call upon him Wanton Gospellers. Proud Protestants. False Christians.

So

Anno 1555.

So that he that calleth on the Name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved. If your Sins be as red as ſcarlet, the Lord ſaith, he will make them as white as ſnow. He hath ſworn, and never will repent him thereof, that he will never remember our iniquities: but as he is good, faithful, and true, ſo will he be our God, and we ſhall be his People; his Law will he write in our Hearts, and ingraff in our minds and never will he have in mind our unrighteouſneſs.

Therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, turn you, turn you to the Lord your Father, to the Lord your Saviour, to the Lord your Comforter. Oh why do you ſtop your ears, and harden your hearts to day, when you hear his Voice by me your pooreſt Brother? Oh forget not how that the Lord hath ſhewed himſelf true, and me his true Preacher, by bringing to paſs theſe plagues which at my Mouth you oft heard before they came to paſs, ſpecially when I intreated of Noahs flood, and when I Preached of the twenty two Chapter of S. Matthews Goſpel, on S. Stevens day the laſt time that I was with you. And now by me the Lord ſendeth you word (dear Countrymen) that if you will go on forward in your Impenitency, Carnality, Hypocriſie, Idolatry, Covetouſneſs, Swearing, Gluttony, Drunkenneſs, Whoredom, &c. (wherewith, alas, alas, our Country floweth:) if (I ſay) you will not turn and leave off, ſeeing me now burned amongſt you, to aſſure you on all ſides how God ſeeketh you, and is ſorry to do you hurt, to plague you, to deſtroy you, to take vengeance upon you,. Oh your Blood will be upon your own heads: you have been warned, and warned again, by me in Preaching, by me in Burning.

Bradford prophefied of theſe plagues before.

Deſtruction threatned to them that repent not.

As I ſaid therefore, I ſay again, my dear hearts and dearlings in the Lord, turn you, turn you, repent you, ceaſe from doing evil, ſtudy to do well, away with Idolatry, flye the Romiſh God and Service, leave off from Swearing, cut off Carnality, abandon Avarice, drive away Drunkenneſs, fly from Fornication and Flattery, Murther and Malice, deſtroy Deceitfulneſs, and caſt away all the works of Darkneſs. Put on Pity and Godlineſs, ſerve God after his Word, and not after Cuſtom, uſe your Tongues to glorifie God by Prayer, Thankſgiving, and Confeſſion of his Truth, &c. be ſpiritual, and by the Spirit mortifie carnal affections, be Sober, Holy, True; Loving, Gentle, Mercifull, and then ſhall the Lords wrath ceaſe, not for this our doings ſake, but for his mercies ſake. Go to therefore (good Countrymen) take this Counſel of the Lord, by me now ſent unto you, as the Lords Counſel, and not as mine, that in the day of Judgment I may rejoyce with you, and for you; the which thing I heartily deſire, and not to be a witneſs againſt you. My Blood will cry for vengeance, as againſt the Papiſts Gods enemies (whom I beſeech God, if it be his will, heartily to forgive, yea, even them which put me to death and are the cauſers thereof, for they know not what they do) ſo will my Blood cry for vengeance againſt you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) if ye repent not, amend not, and turn unto the Lord.

Precepts of life.

Good counſell given.

Bradfords blood will cry againſt the recuſers of his Counſel.

Turn unto the Lord yet once more, I heartily beſeech thee thou Mancheſter, thou Aſhton-under-Line, thou Bolton, Bury, Wigine, Lierpool, Motrine, Steppor, Winſley, Eccles, Prieſtwich, Middleton, Radclief, and thou City of Weſtcheſter, where I have truly taught and Preached the Word of God. Turn, I ſay unto you all and to all the Inhabitants thereabouts, unto the Lord our God, and he will turn unto you, he will ſay unto his Angel, it is enough, put up the Sword. The which thing that he will do, I humbly beſeech his goodneſs, for the precious Bloods ſake of his dear Son, our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. Ah good Brethren, take in good part theſe my laſt words unto every one of you. Pardon me mine offences and negligences in behaviour amongſt you. The Lord of Mercy pardon us all our offences, for our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts ſake, Amen. Out of Priſon ready to come to you, the eleventh of February, Anno 1555.

To the Town of Walden.

Another letter of M. Bradford to the town of Walden.

TO the Faithfull, and ſuch as profeſs the true Doctrine of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, dwelling at Walden and thereabouts, John Bradford a moſt unworthy Servant of the Lord, now in bands and condemned for the ſame true Doctrine, wiſheth Grace, Mercy, and Peace, with the increaſe of all godlineſs in knowledge and living, from God the Father of all comfort, through the deſerts of our alone and full Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, by the mighty working of the moſt Holy Spirit, the Comforter for ever, Amen.

When I remember, how that by the providence and Grace of God I have been a Man, by whom it hath pleaſed him through my Miniſtry to call you to Repentance and Amendment of Life, ſomething effectually, as it ſeemed, and to ſow amongſt you his True Doctrine and Religion, leſt that by my affliction, and ſtorms now ariſen to try the Faithful, and to conform them like to the Image of the Son of God, into whoſe company we are called, you might be faint-hearted; I could not but out of Priſon ſecretly (for my Keepers may not know that I have Pen and Ink) write unto you a ſignification of the deſire I have, that you ſhould not only be more confirmed in the Doctrine I have taught amongſt you, which I take on my death, as I ſhall anſwer at the day of doom, I am perſwaded to be Gods aſſured, infallible, and plain Truth; but alſo ſhould after your vocation avow the ſame by confeſſion, profeſſion, and living. I have not taught you (my dearly beloved in the Lord) fables, tales, or untruths, but I have taught you the verity, as now by my Blood, gladly (praiſed be God therefore) I do ſeal the ſame.

M. Bradford anſwereth with his Blood for his doctrine.

Indeed to confeſs the truth unto you, and to all the Church of Chriſt, I do not think of my ſelf, but that I have moſt juſtly deſerved, not only this kind, but alſo all kinds of death, and that eternally, for mine Hypocriſie, Vain-glory, Uncleanneſs, Self-love, Covetouſneſs, Idleneſs, Unthankfulneſs, and Carnal profeſſing of God holy Goſpel, living therein not ſo purely, lovingly, and painfully as I ſhould have done. The Lord of mercy for the Bloods ſake of Chriſt pardon me, as I hope, yea, I certainly believe he hath done for his holy Names ſake through Chriſt. But, my dearly beloved, you and all the whole World may ſee, and eaſily perceive, that the Prelates perſecute in me another thing then mine iniquities, even Chriſt himſelf. Chriſts Verity and Truth, becauſe I cannot, dare not, nor will not confeſs Tranſubſtantiation, and how that wicked Men, yea Mice and Dogs eating the Sacrament, which they term, of the Altar, thereby overthrowing Chriſts Holy Supper utterly, do eat Chriſts Natural and Real Body born of the Virgin Mary.

M. Bradford accuſeth again his own life.

Chriſt himſelf perſecuted in his Martyrs.

To believe and confeſs as Gods Word teacheth, the Primitive Church believed, and all the Catholick and good holy Fathers taught 500. years at the leaſt after Chriſt, that in the Supper of the Lord (which the Maſs overthroweth, as it doth Chriſts Prieſthood, Sacrifice, Death, and Paſſion, the Miniſtry of his Word, true Faith, Repentance, and all Godlineſs) whole Chriſt, God and Man, is preſent by grace to the Faith of the receivers, but not of the ſtanders by and lookers on, as Bread and Wine is to their ſenſes, will not ſerve: and therefore I am condemned and ſhall be burned out of hand as an Heretick. Wherefore I heartily thank my Lord God, that will and doth vouch me worthy to be an Inſtrument, in whom he himſelf doth ſuffer. For you ſee my affliction and death is not ſimply, becauſe I have deſerved no leſs, but much more at his hands and juſtice: but rather becauſe I confeſs his Verity and Truth, and am not afraid through his gift that to do, that you alſo might be confirmed in his Truth. Therefore my dearly beloved, I heartily do pray you, and ſo many as unfainedly love me in God, to give with me and for me moſt hearty thanks to our Heavenly Father, through our ſweet Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, for this his exceeding great mercy towards me and you alſo, that your Faith waver not from the Doctrine I have taught, and ye have received. For what can you deſire more, to aſſure your Conſciences of the Verity taught by your Preachers, than their own Lives?

M. Bradford perſecuted for confeſſing the truth.

Go to therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, waver not in Chriſts Religion truly taught you, and ſet forth in King Edwards days. Never ſhall the enemies be able to burn it, and Priſon it, and keep it in bonds. Us they may Priſon, they may bind and burn as they do, and will do, ſo long as ſhall pleaſe the Lord: but our Cauſe, Religion, and Doctrine which we confeſs, they ſhall never be able to vanquiſh and put away. Their Idolatry and Popiſh Religion ſhall never be built in the Conſciences of Men that love Gods Truth. As for thoſe that love not Gods truth, that have no pleaſure to walk in the ways of the Lord, thoſe Gods truth can never be kept under by the adverſaries.

Anno. 1555.

He exhorteth them to love Gods truth and to live thereafter.

those I say the Devil shall prevail: For God will give them strong illusion to believe lyes. Therefore dear Brethren, and Sisters in the Lord, I humbly beseech you and pray you in the Bowels and Blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, now going to the death, for the Testimony of Jesus, as oftentimes I have done before this present out of your Pulpit, that you would love the Lords truth; love (I say) to love it, and frame your lives thereafter. Alas, you know the cause of all these plagues fallen upon us, and of the success which Gods adversaries have daily, is for our not loving Gods Word.

Gods Gospel abused.

You know how that we were but Gospellers in lips, and not in life. We were carnal, concupiscentious, idle, unthankful, unclean, covetous, arrogant, dissemblers, crafty, subtile, malicious, false, backbiters, &c. and even glutted with Gods Word, yea, we loathed it, as did the Israelites the Manna in the Wilderness; and therefore as to them the Lords wrath waxed hot, so doth it unto us. So that there is no remedy, but that (for it is better late to turn, than never to turn) we confess our faults even from the bottom of our Hearts, and with hearty repentance (which God work in us all for his mercies sake) we run unto the Lord our God, which is exorable, merciful, and sorry for the evil poured out upon us, and cry out unto him with Daniel, saying; We have Sinned, we have Sinned grievously, O Lord God, against thy Majesty, we have heaped Iniquity upon Iniquity; the measure of our Transgressions floweth over, so that justly is thy Vengeance and Wrath fallen upon us. For we are very miserable, we have contemned thy long suffering, we have not hearkened to thy Voyce. When thou hast called us by Preachers, we hardned our Hearts, and therefore now deserve that thou send thy curse hereupon to harden our Hearts also that we should henceforth have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, hearts and understand not, lest we should convert and be saved. Oh be merciful unto us; spare us good Lord, and all thy People, whom thou hast dearly bought. Let not thine enemies triumph altogether, and always against thee, for then will they be puft up. Look down and behold the pitiful complaint of the poor; let the sorrowful sighing of the simple come in thy sight, and be not angry with us for ever. Turn us O Lord God of hosts unto thee, and turn thee unto us, that thou maist be justified in thy sweet Sentences, and overcome when thou art judged, as now thou art of our adversaries. For they say, Where is their God? Can God deliver them now? Can their Gospel serve them? O Lord how long? for the glory of thy name, and for thy honours sake, in the Bowels and Blood of Jesus Christ, we humbly beseech thee, come and help us, for we are very miserable.

He exhorteth to repentance and prayer, and to bewail our sins before the Lord our God.

On this sort I say, dearly beloved, let us publickly and privately bewail our Sins; but so that hereto we joyn ceasing from wilfulness and Sin of purpose, for else the Lord heareth not our Prayer, as David saith. And in S. John it is written; The impenitent Sinners God heareth not. Now, impenitent are they which purpose not to amend their lives: As for example, not only, such which follow still their pleasures, uncleanness, carnality; but those also which for fear or favour of Men, do against their Consciences consent to the Romish Rags, and resort to the rotten Religion, communicating in Service and Ceremonies with the Papists, thereby declaring themselves to love more the World than God, to fear Man more than Christ, to dread more the loss of Temporal things than Spiritual; in whom it is evident that the love of God abideth not. For he that loveth the World, hath not Gods Word abiding in him, saith S. John: therefore my dear Hearts, and dear again in the Lord, remember what you have professed, Christs Religion and name, and the renouncing of the Devil, Sin, and the World.

The prayers of sinners be not heard.

Romish Rags and rotten Religion.

The A.B.C. of the Christians beginneth with Christs Cross.

Remember that before ye learned A. B. C. your lesson was Christs Cross. Forget not that Christ will have no Disciples, but such as will promise to deny themselves, and take up their Cross (mark, take it up) and follow him, and not the multitude, custom, &c. Consider for Gods sake, that if we gather not with Christ, we scatter abroad. What should it profit a Man to win the whole World, and lose his own Soul? We must not forget that this life is a Wilderness, and not a Paradise: here is not our home, we are now in warfare: we must needs fight; or else be taken Prisoners. Of all things we have in this life, we shall carry nothing with us. If Christ be our Captain, we must follow him as Souldiers. If we keep company with him in affliction we shall be sure of his society in glory. If we forsake not him, he will never forsake us. If we confess him, he will confess us; but if we deny him, he will deny us. If we be ashamed of him, he will be ashamed of us. Wherefore, as he forsook his Father, and Heaven, and all things to come to us, so let us forsake all things and come to him, being sure and most certain that we shall not lose thereby. Your Children shall find, and feel it double, yea treble, whatsoever you lose for the Lords sake; and you shall find and feel peace of Conscience and friendship with God which is more worth than all the Goods of the World.

They never lose that follow Christ.

My dearly beloved, therefore for the Lords sake, consider these things which I now write unto you of love, for my vale, and last farewell for ever in this present life. Turn to the Lord, repent you of your evil and unthankful life, declare repentance by the fruits; take time while ye have it; come to the Lord whiles he calleth you; run into his lap, whiles his arms be open to imbrace you; seek him whiles he may be found; call upon him whiles time is convenient; forsake and flye from all evil, Both in Religion, and in the rest of your life and Conversation. Let your light so shine before Men, that they may see your good works, and praise God in the day of his visitation. Oh come again, come again you strange Children, and I will receive you, saith the Lord. Convert and turn to me, and I will turn unto you. Why, will ye needs perish? As sure as I live (sweareth the Lord) I will not your death; turn therefore unto me. Can a Woman forget the Child of her Womb? if she should, yet I will not forget you, saith the Lord your God. I am he, I am he which put away your Sins for mine own sake.

He exhorteth to amendment of life in Religion and conversation.

Oh then dear friends, turn I say unto your dearest Father. Cast nor these sweet and loving words to the ground, and at your tail; for the Lord watcheth on his word to perform it: which is in two sorts; to them that lay it up in their hearts, and believe it, will he pay all, and eternal joy and comfort. But to them that cast it at their backs, and will forget it, to them (I say) will he pour out Indignation and eternal shame. Wherefore I heartily yet once more beseech and pray you, and every of you, not to contemn this poor and simple exhortation, which now out of Prison I make unto you, or rather the Lord by me. Loath would I be a witness against you in the last day; as of truth I must be if ye repent not, if ye love not Gods Gospel, yea, if ye love it not.

The Lord watcheth to perform his word double wise.

Therefore (to conclude) repent, love Gods Gospel, live in it all your conversation, so shall Gods name be praised, his plagues be mitigated, his People comforted, and his enemies ashamed. Grant all this, thou gracious Lord God, to every one of us for thy dear Sons sake, our Saviour Jesus Christ: To whom with thee and the Holy Ghost be eternal glory for ever and ever, Amen. The 12. of February, Anno 1555

Bradford must be a witness in the last day to them that reject his counsel.

By the Bondman of our Lord, and your afflicted poor Brother,
John Bradford.

To my loving Brethren, B.C. &c. their Wives and whole Families, J. Bradford.

Another letter of M. Bradford to certain freinds of his, whom for danger of that time he would not name.

I Beseech the everliving God to grant you all, my good Brethren and Sisters, the comfort of the Holy Spirit, and the continual sense of his Mercy in Christ our Lord, now and for ever, Amen.

The World (my Brethren) seemeth to have the upper hand, Iniquity overfloweth, the truth and verity seemeth to be oppressed, and they which take part therewith, are unjustly intreated; as they which love the truth, lament to see and hear, as they do. The cause of all this, is Gods anger, and mercy: his anger, because we have grievously Sinned against him; his mercy, because he here punisheth us, and as a Father nurtureth us. We have been unthankful for his Word; We have contemned his kindness; We have been negligent in Prayer; We have been so carnal, covetous, licentious, &c. We have not hastned to Gods anger and mercy both together upon his Church.

Heaven-

Anno 1555.

Heaven-ward, but rather to Hell-ward. We were fallen almoſt into an open contempt of God, and all his good ordinances; ſo that of his juſtice he could no longer forbear, but make us feel his anger, as now he hath done, in taking his word and true ſervice from us, and permitting Satan to ſerve us with Antichriſtian Religion, and that in ſuch ſort, that if we will not yield to it, and ſeem to allow it indeed and outward fact, our Bodies are like to be laid in priſon, and our goods given we cannot tell to whom.

The contempt of God and his Goſpel puniſhed.

This ſhould we look upon as a ſign of Gods anger procured by our ſins; which my good Brethren, every of us ſhould now call to our Memories oftentimes, ſo particularly as we can, that we might heartily lament them, repent them, hate them, ask earneſtly mercy for them, and ſubmit our ſelves to bear in this Life any kind of puniſhment, which God will lay upon us for them. This ſhould we do in conſideration of Gods anger in this time. Now his mercy in this time of wrath is ſeen, and ſhould be ſeen in us, my dearly beloved, in this, that God doth vouchſafe to puniſh us in this preſent Life. If he ſhould not have puniſhed us, do not you think that we would have continued in the evils we were in? Yes verily, we would have been worſe, and have gone forwards in hardning our hearts by impenitence, and negligence of God and true godlineſs. And then if death had come, ſhould not we have periſhed both Soul and Body in eternal fire in perdition? Alas, what miſery ſhould we have fallen into, if God ſhould have ſuffered us to have gone on forward in our evils? No greater ſign of Damnation there is, than to lye in evil and Sin unpuniſhed of God, as now the Papiſts (my dearly beloved) are caſt into Jeſabels Bed of ſecurity, which of all plagues is the moſt grievous that can be. They are Baſtards and not Sons, they are not under Gods Rod of Correction.

Exhortation to repentance and amendment.

Gods mercy the cauſe why we are puniſhed here.

Jezabels bed of ſecurity.

A great mercy it is therefore, that God doth puniſh us: For if he loved us not, he would not puniſh us. Now doth he chaſtiſe us, that we ſhould not be damned with the world. Now doth he nurture us, becauſe he favoureth us. Now may we think our ſelves Gods Houſe and Children, becauſe he beginneth his chaſtiſing at us: Now calleth he us to remember our ſins paſt. Wherefore? That we might repent, and ask mercy. And why? That he might forgive us, pardon us, juſtifie us, and make us his Children, and ſo begin to make us here like unto Chriſt, that we might be like unto him elſewhere, even in Heaven, where already we are ſet by Faith with Chriſt; and at his coming in very deed we ſhall then moſt joyfully enjoy, when our ſinful and vile Bodies ſhall be made like to Chriſts glorious Body, according to the power whereby he is able to make all things ſubject to himſelf.

'Apoch. 3. Heb. 12. 1 Cor. 11. 1 Pet. 4.

Phil. 3.

Therefore my Brethren, let us in reſpect hereof not lament, but laud God, not be ſorry, but be merry, not weep, but rejoyce and be glad, that God doth vouchſafe to offer us his Croſs, thereby to come to him to endleſs joys and comforts. For if we ſuffer, we ſhall reign, if we confeſs him before Men, he will confeſs us before his Father in Heaven; if we be not aſhamed of his Goſpel now, he will not be aſhamed of us in the laſt day, but will be glorified in us, Crowning us with Crowns of Glory and endleſs felicity: For, bleſſed are they that ſuffer Perſecution for Righteouſneſs ſake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: Be glad (ſaith Peter) for the ſpirit of God reſteth upon you. After that you are a little afflicted, God will comfort, ſtrengthen and confirm you. And therefore, my good Brethren, be not diſcouraged for Croſs, for Priſon, or loſs of Goods for confeſſion of Chriſts Goſpel and Truth which ye have believed, and lively was taught amongſt you in the days of our late good King, and moſt holy Prince, King Edward. This is moſt certain, if you loſe any thing for Chriſts ſake, and for contemning the Antichriſtian ſervice, ſet up again amongſt us: as you for your parts even in priſon ſhall find Gods great and rich mercy, far-paſſing all Worldly wealth; ſo ſhall your Wives and Children in this preſent Life, find and feel Gods Providence, more plentifully than Tongue can tell. For he will ſhew mercifull kindneſs on thouſands of them that love him. The good Mans ſeed ſhall not go a begging his Bread. You are good Men, ſo many as ſuffer for Chriſts ſake.

I truſt you all, my dearly beloved, will conſider this gear with your ſelves, and in the Croſs ſee Gods mercy, which is more ſweet, and to be ſet by, than Life it ſelf, much more than any muck or pelf of this World. This mercy of God ſhould make you merry and cheerfull: for the afflictions of this Life, are not to be compared to the joys of the Life prepared for you. You know the way to Heaven is not the wide way of the World, which wideth to the Devil, but it is a ſtraight way which few walk in. For few live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, few regard the Life to come, few remember the day of Judgment, few remember how Chriſt will deny them before his Father, that do deny him here, few conſider that Chriſt will be aſhamed of them in the laſt day, which are aſhamed of his Truth and true ſervice, few caſt their accounts, what will be laid to their charge in the day of vengeance, few regard the Condemnation of their own Conſciences, in doing that which inwardly they diſallow, few love God better than their Goods.

And of this I would ye were all certain, that all the hairs of your heads are numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh, neither ſhall any Man or Devil be able to attempt any thing, much leſs to do any thing to you, or any of you, before your Heavenly Father, which loveth you moſt tenderly, ſhall give them leave; and when he hath given them leave, they ſhall go no further than he will, nor keep you in trouble any longer than he will. Therefore caſt on him all your care, for he is careful for you. Only ſtudy to pleaſe him, and to keep your Conſciences clean, and your Bodies pure from the Idolatrous ſervice, which now every where is uſed, and God will marvellouſly and mercifully defend and comfort you; which thing he do for his holy names ſake in Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

To his dearly beloved in Chriſt, Erkinalde Rawlins, and his Wife.

Another letter of M. Bradford unto agodly couple, to the ſame effect as the other before.

GOD our dear and moſt Merciful Father through Chriſt, be with you my good Brother and Siſter, as with his Children for ever, and in all things ſo guide you with his holy Spirit, the leader of his People, as may be to his glory, and your own everlaſting joy and comfort in him, Amen. Becauſe I have oftentimes received from either of you comfort corporal (for the which I beſeech the Lord, as to make me thankful, ſo to recompence you both now and eternally) I cannot but go about (Lord help hereto for thy mercies ſake) to write ſomething for your comfort ſpiritually.

Diet of affliction to the godly are joyfull: to the unrepenting ſinners be dolful days.

My dearly beloved, look not upon theſe days and the afflictions of the ſame here with us, ſimply as they ſeem unto you, that is, as diſmal days, and days of Gods vengeance, but rather as lucky days, and days of Gods Fatherly kindneſs towards you, and ſuch as you be, that is, towards ſuch as repent their Sins and evil Life paſt, and earneſtly purpoſe to amend, walking not after the will of the World, and moſt part of Men, for the preſervation of their pelf, which, will they, nill they, they ſhall leave ſooner or later, and to whom or how it ſhall be uſed, they know not. Indeed to ſuch as walk in their wickedneſs, and wind on with the World, this time is a time of wrath and vengeance, and their beginning of ſorrow is but now, becauſe they contemn the phyſick of their Father, which by this purging time and cleanſing days would work their weal, which they will not: and becauſe

they will not have Gods blessing, which both ways he hath offered unto them by prosperity and adversity; therefore it shall be kept far enough from them. As when the sick Man will no kind of Physick at the hands of the Physician, he is left alone, and so the malady increaseth, and destroyeth him at the length. To such Men indeed these days are and should be doleful days, and days of woe and weeping, because their Damnation draweth nigh.

Gods physick not to be refused.

But unto such as be penitent, and are desirous to live after the Lords will (among whom I do not only count you, but as far as a Man may judge, I know ye are) unto such I say this time is and should be comfortable. For first, now your Father chastiseth you and me for our Sins; for the which if he would have destroyed us, then would he have letten us alone, and left us to our selves, in nothing to take to heart his Fatherly visitation, which here it pleaseth them to work presently, because elsewhere he will not remember our Transgressions, as Paul writeth; he chastiseth us in this World, lest with the World we should perish. Therefore (my dear hearts) call to mind your Sins to lament them, and to ask mercy for them in his sight, and withal undoubtedly believe to obtain pardon and assured forgiveness of the same, for twice the Lord punisheth not for one thing.

Gods chastisement to be received with comfort.

God punisheth not twice for one thing.

So that I say, first we have cause to rejoyce for these days, because our Father suffereth us not to lye in Jesabels Bed, sleeping in our own Sins and Security, but as mindful of us, doth correct us as his Children. Whereby we may be certain, that we be no Bastards, but Children; for he chastiseth every Child whom he receiveth. So that they which are not partakers of his chastising, or that contemn it, declare themselves to be Bastards, and not Children, as I know you are, which, as ye are chastised, so do ye take it to heart accordingly. And therefore be glad my dear hearts and folks, knowing certainly even by these visitations of the Lord, that ye are his dear elect Children, whose faults your Father doth visit with the Rod of Correction, but his mercy will he never take away from us, Amen.

Difference between bastards and Children.

Secondly, ye have cause to rejoyce for these days, because they are days of tryal, wherein not only ye your selves, but also the World shall know that ye be none of his, but the Lords Dearlings. Before these days came, Lord God, how many thought of themselves, they had been in Gods Bosom, and so were taken, and would be taken of the World? But now we see whose they are. For to whom we obey, his servants we are. If we obey the World (which God forbid, and hitherto ye have not done it) then are we the Worlds; but if we obey God, then are we Gods. Which thing (I mean that ye are Gods) these days have declared both to you, to me, and to all other that know you, better than ever we knew it. Therefore ye have no cause to sorrow, but rather to sing, in seeing your selves to be Gods Babes, and in seeing that all Gods Children do so count you.

Trouble trieth who be Gods and who be not.

What though the World repine thereat? What though he kick? What though he seek to trouble and molest you? My dear hearts, he doth but his kind: he cannot love the Lord, which liveth not in the Lord: he cannot brook the Child, that hateth the Father: he cannot mind the servant, that careth not for the Master. If ye were of the World, the World would love you, ye should dwell quietly, there would be no grief, no molestation. If the Devil dwelt in you (which the Lord forbid) he would not stir up his Knights to besiege your house, to snatch your goods, or suffer his Fiends to enter into your Hogs. But because Christ dwelleth in you (as he doth by Faith) therefore stirreth he up his first-begotten Son, the World, to seek how to disquiet you, to rob you, to spoil you, to destroy you: and perchance your dear Father, to try and to make known unto you, and to the World, that ye are destinate to another dwelling then here on Earth, to another City than Mans eyes have seen at any time; hath given or will give power to Satan, and to the World, to take from you the things which he hath lent you, and by taking them away, to try your fidelity, obedience, and love towards him (for ye may not love them above him) as by giving that ye have, and keeping it, he hath declared his love towards you.

A true lover of the world, is declared by his life.

The Devill never entreth into his own hogs.

The Lord giveth power to Satan sometimes over his servants, and to what end God useth to try his.

Satan perchance telleth God (as he did of Job) that ye love God for your goods sake. What now then, if the Lord to try you with Job, shall give him power on your Goods and Body accordingly, should ye be dismayed? should ye dispair? should ye be faint-hearted? should ye not rather rejoyce, as did the Apostles, that they were counted worthy to suffer any thing for the Lords sake? Oh forget not the end that happened to Job: for as it hapned to him, so shall it happen unto you. For God is the same God, and cannot long forget to shew mercy to them that look and long for it, as I know ye do, and I pray you so to do still. For the Lord loveth you, and never can nor will forget to shew and pour out his mercy upon you. After a little while that he hath afflicted and tryed you (saith Peter) he will visit, comfort, and confirm you. As to Jacob wrestling with the Angel, at the length morning came, and the Sun arose; so, dear hearts, doubtless it will happen unto you. Howbeit, do ye as Job and Jacob did, that is, order and dispose your things that God hath lent you, as ye may, and whiles ye have time. Who knoweth whether God hath given you power thus long, even to that end?

Anno 1555.

Jacob must teach us to wrestle.

Go to therefore, dispose your goods, prepare your selves to trial, that either ye may stand to it like Gods Champions, or else if you feel such infirmity in your selves that ye be not able, give place to violence, and go where you may with free and safe Conscience serve the Lord. Think not this counsel to come by chance, or fortune, but to come from the Lord. Other Oracles we may not look for now. As God told Joseph in a dream by an Angel, that he should flye; so if you feel such infirmity in your selves, as should turn to Gods dishonour, and your own destruction withal, know that at this present I am as Gods Angel, to admonish you to take time whiles ye have it, and to see that in no case Gods name by you might be dishonoured. Joseph might have objected the omission of his vocation, as perchance ye will do. But (dear hearts) let vocations and all things else give place to Gods name, and the sanctifying thereof.

This Erkenald and his wife following this counsel, did flie both beyond sea.

This I speak, not as though I would not have you rather to tarry, and to stand to it: but I spake it in respect of your infirmity, which if you feel to be so great in you, that you are not certain of this hope, that God will never tempt you above your ability; flye and get you hence, and know that thereby God will have you tryed to your selves and to others. For by it you shall know how to take this World, and that your home here is no home, but that ye look for another, and so give occasion to others less to love this World, and perchance to some to doubt of their Religion. Wherein though they be earnest, yet would they not loose so much as ye do for your Religion, which ye do confirm to me and others, by your giving place to violence.

Last of all, ye have cause to rejoyce over these our days, because they be the days of Confirmation, in the which, and by which, God our Heavenly Father maketh us like unto Christs Image here, that we may be like unto him elsewhere. For if that we suffer with him, then we shall Reign also with him; if we be buried with him, then we shall rise with him again: if that we company with him in all troubles and afflictions, then we shall rejoyce with him in glory: if we now sow with him in tears, we shall reap with him in gladness: if we confess him before Men, he will confess us before his Father in Heaven: if we take his part, he will take ours: if we leese ought for his names sake, he will give us all things for his truths sake. So that we ought to rejoyce and be glad; for it is not given to every one to suffer loss of country, life, goods, house, &c. for the Lords sake. What can God the Father do more unto us, than to call us into the Camp with his Son? What may Christ our Saviour do more for us, than to make us his Warriours? What can the holy Ghost do to us above this, to mark us with the cognizance of the Lord of hosts?

Tribulation doth conform us to the image of Christ.

This cognizance of the Lord, standeth not in forked caps, tippets, shaven crowns, or such other baggage and Antichristian pelf, but in suffering for the Lords sake. The World shall hate you, saith Christ. Lo, there is the cognizance and badge of Gods Children; The World shall hate you. Rejoyce therefore (my dearly beloved) rejoyce, that God doth thus vouchsafe to begin to conform you, and to make you like to Christ. By the tryal of these days ye are occasioned more to repent, more to pray, more to contemn this this World, more to desire life everlasting, more to be holy (for holy is the end wherefore God doth afflict us) and so to come to Gods company. Which thing because we cannot do, as long as this Body is as it is, therefore by the door of Death we must enter with Christ into eternal life, and immortality of Soul and Body; which God of his mercy send shortly for our Saviour Jesus Christs sake, Amen.

The Lords cognizance standeth not in forked caps, &c. but in suffering for the Lords sake.

To Mistres A. Warcup.

THe everlasting Peace of Christ be more and more lively felt in our hearts, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, now and for ever, Amen.

Although I know it to be more than needless to write any thing unto you (good Sister,) being, as I doubt not but you be, diligently exercised in reading of the Scriptures, in meditating of the same, and in hearty prayer to God for the help of his Holy Spirit, to have the sense and feeling, especially of the comforts you read in Gods sweet Book: yet having such opportunity, and knowing not whether hereafter I shall ever have the like (as this bringer can declare) I thought good in few words to take up my farewel in writing, because otherwise I cannot. And now methinks I have done it. For what else can I, or should I say unto you (my dearly Beloved in the Lord) but farewel? Farewel, dear Sister, farewel; howbeit in the Lord, our Lord (I say) farewel. In him shall you farewel, and so much the better, by how much in your self you fare evil, and shall fare evil.

Bradfords farewel to Mrs. Warcup.

When I speak of your self, I mean also this world, this life, and all things properly pertaining to this life. In them as you look not for your welfare, so be not dismayed, when accordingly you shall not feel it. To the Lord our God, to the Lamb our Christ, which hath born our sins on his back, and is our Mediator for ever, do I send you. In him look for welfare, and that without all wavering, because of his own goodness and truth, which our evils and untruth cannot take away: Not that therefore I would have you to flatter your self in any evil or unbelief, but that I would comfort you, that they should not dismay you. Yours is our Christ wholly, yours I say he is, with all that ever he hath. Is not this welfare, trow you? Mountains shall move, and the Earth shall fall, before you find it otherwise, say that lyar Satan what he list.

Christ is wholly ours with all that ever he hath.

Therefore, good Sister, farewel, and be merry in the Lord, be merry I say, for you have good cause. If your welfare, joy, and salvation hanged upon any other thing than only Gods mercy and truth, then might you well be sad, heavy, and stand in a doubt: but in that it hangeth only upon these two, tell Satan he lyeth, when he would have you to stand in a mammering, by causing you to cast your eyes (which only in this case should be set on Christ your sweet Saviour) on your self. In some part indeed look on your self, on your Faith, on your Love, Obedience, &c. to wake you up from security, to stir you up to diligence, in doing the things appertaining to your vocation: but when you would be at peace with God, and have true consolation in your Conscience, altogether look upon the goodness of God in Christ. Think on this Commandment which precedeth all other, That you must have no other Gods but the Lord Jehovah, which is your Lord and God: the which he could not be, if that he did not pardon your sins in very deed. Remember that Christ commandeth you to call him Father for the same intent. And hereto call to mind all the benefits of God, hitherto shewed upon you: and so shall you feel in very deed, that which I wish unto you now, and pray you to wish unto me. Farewel, or welfare in the Lord Jesus, with whom he grant us shortly to meet as his Children, for his name and mercies sake, to our eternal welfare, Amen.

How to answer to Satan, when he moveth us to doubt of Gods favour.

How to look upon Christ.

How to look upon our selves. In case of Justification, let no man look upon himself, but only upon the goodness of God in Christ.

To mine own dear Brother, Mr. Lawrence Sanders, Prisoner in the Marshalsey.

A Letter of M. Bradford to M. Sanders.

MY good Brother, I beseech our good and gracious Father always to continue his gracious favour and love towards us, and by us, as by Instruments of his grace, to work his glory and the confusion of his Adversaries. Ex ore Infantium & lactentium fundet laudem ad destruendum inimicum, &c. id est, Out of the mouth of Infants and Babes, he will shew forth his praise to destroy the Enemy, &c.

I have perused your Letters to my self, and have read them to others. For answer whereof, if I should write what Dr. Taylor and Mr. Philpot do think, then must I say, that they think, the Salt sent unto us by your * Friend, is unseasonable. And I think they both will declare it heartily, if they should come before men. As for me, if you would know what I think (my good and most dear Brother Lawrence) because I am so sinful and so conspurcate (the Lord knoweth I lye not) with many grievous sins which I hope are washed away Sanguine Christi nostri) I neither can nor would be consulted withal, but as a Cypher in Agrime. Howbeit, to tell you how and what I mind, take this for a sum: I pray God in no case I may seek my self, and indeed (I thank God therefore) I purpose it not.

*This Friend moved them to subscribe to the Papists Articles, with this condition: so far as they were not against Gods Word being indeed clean contrary to it: and yet shortly after he valiantly suffered death for refusing the same.

Quod reliquum est Domino Deo meo committo, & spero in illum, quod ipse faciet juxtà hoc; Jacta in Dominum curam, &c. Omnis cura vestra conjecta sit in illum. &c. Revela Domino viam tuam, & spera, &c. Sperantem in Domino misericordia circundabit: id est, That which remaineth, I commit to my Lord God; and I trust in him, that he will do according to this; Cast thy care on the Lord, &c. Cast all your care upon him, &c. Reveal unto the Lord thy way, and trust, &c. Who that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about. I did not, nor do not know, but by your Letters, quod cras we shall come coram nobis. Mine own heart, still stick v. dabitur vobis.

God our Father and gracious Lord make perfect the good he hath begun in us.

For ever your own, John Bradford.

Another Letter to Mr. Lawrence Sanders.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to the said Sanders.

GOds sweet Peace in Christ be with you, my good Brother in the Lord Jesus, and with all your Concaptives, Amen.

I was letted this morning from musing on that which I was purposed to have thought on by reason of you, against whom I saw my self guilty of negligence, even in this point that I would not write, I should say, that I had not written unto you as yet: therefore out of hand in manner I prepared my self to purge my self hereof, not that I will go about to excuse my fault (for that were more to load me) but by asking both God and you pardon, to get it no more laid to my charge. Now when I was thus purposing, and partly doing, * cometh there one with a Letter from you: for the which as I have cause to thank God and you (howbeit not so that you should think, I give not the whole to God) so I see my self more blame-worthy, for this long holding my peace. Howbeit (good Brother) in this I have given a demonstration to you, to behold my negligence in all other things, and especially in praying for you, and for the Church of God, which for my sins and hypocrisie (hypocrisie indeed even in this writing, God deliver me from it) have deserved to be punished. Just is God, for we have deserved all kind of plagues at his hands: but yet merciful is he that will on this wise chastise us with this World, Ne cum mundo condemnemur. i. That we should not be condemned with the World. He might otherwise have punished us, I mean, he might have for other causes cast us in Prison, me especially, then for his Gospel and Words sake. Praised therefore be his Name, which voucheth us worthy this honour. Ah good God forgive us our ſins, and work by this thy Fatherly correction on us, on me eſpecially, effectually to love thee and thy Chriſt; and with joyfulneſs unto the end to carry thy Croſs through thick and thin. Always ſet before our eyes, not this Gallows on Earth, if we will ſtick to thee; but the Gallows in Hell, if we deny thee, and ſwerve from that we have profeſſed.

M. Bradford accusing himself of negligence, &c.

Ah good Brother, if I could always have God, his Majeſty, Mercy, Heaven, Hell, &c. before mine eyes, then ſhould I Obdurare, as Paul writeth of Moſes, Hebr. 11. Obduravit, inquit, perinde quaſi vidiſſet cum qui eſt inviſibilis. i. He endured, ſaith he) as he that ſaw him which is inviſible. Pray for me, as I know you do, and give thanks alſo: for, In Domino ſpero, non mutabo. Si ambulavero per vallem umbræ mortis, non timebo, quia tu Domine mecum es, &c. Amen. i. In the Lord I truſt, I ſhall not waver. If I walk by the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will not fear, for thou art with me, O Lord. I think we ſhall be ſhortly called forth; for now legem habent, & ſecundum legem, &c. otherwiſe will they not reaſon with us; And I think their ſhoot-Anchor will be, to have us to ſubſcribe. The which thing if we do, though with this condition (ſo far as the thing ſubſcribed to, repugneth not againſt Gods Word) yet this will be offenſive. Therefore let us vadere plane, and ſo ſanè, I mean, let us all confeſs that we are no changlings, but reipſa, are the ſame we were in Religion, and therefore cannot ſubſcribe except we will diſſemble both with God, our ſelves, and the world. Hæc tibi ſcribo, frater mi chariſſime in Domino. Jam legam tuam Epiſtolam. i. *Theſe things I write to you, dear Brother in the Lord. To my dear Fathers, Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Ridley, and Dr. Latimer.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to D. Cranmer, D. Ridley, and D. Latimer.

JEſus Emmanuel. My dear Fathers in the Lord, I beſeech God our ſweet Father through Chriſt, to make perfect the good he hath begun in us all, Amen.

I had thought that every of your ſtaves had ſtood next the door, but now it is otherwiſe perceived. Our dear Brother Rogers hath broken the Ice valiantly, as this day (I think) or to morrow at the uttermoſt, hearty Hooper, ſincere Sanders, and truſty Taylor end their courſe, and receive their Crown. The next am I, which hourly look for the Porter to open me the gates after them, to enter into the deſired reſt. God forgive me mine unthankfulneſs for this exceeding great mercy, that amongſt ſo many thouſands it pleaſeth his Mercy to chuſe me to be one, in whom he will ſuffer. For although it be moſt true, that juſte patior, i. I juſtly ſuffer, (for I have been a great hypocrite, and a grievous ſinner, the Lord pardon me, yea, he hath done it, he hath done it indeed) yet hic autem quid mali fecit? i. What evil hath he done? Chriſt, whom the Prelates perſecute, his verity which they hate in me, hath done no evil, nor deſerveth death. Therefore ought I moſt heartily to rejoyce of this dignation and tender kindneſs of the Lords towards me, which uſeth remedy for my ſin as a teſtimonial of his Teſtament, to his glory, to my everlaſting comfort, to the edifying of his Church, and to the overthrowing of Antichriſt and his Kingdom. Oh what am I, Lord, that thou ſhouldeſt thus magnifie me ſo vile a Man and Miſer, as always I have been? Is this thy wont, to ſend for ſuch a wretch and an hypocrite as I have been, in a fiery Chariot, as thou didſt for Helias? Oh dear Fathers, be thankful for me, that I ſtill might be found worthy in whom the Lord would ſanctifie his holy Name. And for your part, make you ready: for we are but your Gentlemen-Uſhers. Nuptiæ agni paratæ ſunt, venite ad nuptias. i. The marriage of the Lamb is prepared, come unto the marriage. I now go to leave my fleſh there, where I received it. I ſhall be conveyed thither, as Ignatius was at Rome, Leopardis; by whoſe evil I hope to be made better. God grant, if it be his will that I ask, it may make them better by me, Amen.

This is a ſingular mercy of God, to have death, which is a due puniſhment for ſin, turned into a demonſtration and teſtification of the Lords truth.

For my farewel therefore, I write and ſend this unto you, truſting ſhortly to ſee you where we ſhall never be ſeparated. In the mean ſeaſon I will not ceaſe, as I have done, to commend you to our Father of Heaven, and that you would ſo do by me, I moſt heartily pray every one of you: you know now I have moſt need. But Fidelis Deus, qui nunquam ſinet nos tentari ſupra id quod poſſumus. i. Faithful is God, which will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength. He never did it hitherto, nor now, and I am aſſured he will never, Amen. A dextris eſt mihi, non movebor. Propter hoc lætabitur cor meum, quia non derelinquet animam meam in inferno, nec dabit me, ſanctum ſuum per gratiam in Chriſto, videre corruptionem. E carcere raptim, expectans omni momento carnifficem. i. *He is on my right hand, therefore I ſhall not fall. To the Right Honourable Lord Ruſſel, now Earl of Bedford, being then in trouble for the verity of Gods Goſpel.

A Letter of M. Bradford to the Lord Ruſſel now Earl of Bedford.

THE everlaſting and moſt gracious God and Father of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, bleſs your good Lordſhip with all manner of heavenly bleſſings in the ſame Chriſt our only comfort and hope, Amen.

Praiſed be God our Father, which hath vouched you worthy, as of Faith in his Chriſt, ſo of his Croſs for the ſame. Magnified be his holy Name, who as he hath delivered you from one Croſs, ſo he hath made you willing (I truſt) and ready to bear another when he ſhall ſee his time to lay it upon you: for theſe are the moſt ſingular gifts of God, given as to few, ſo to none elſe but to thoſe few which are moſt dear in his ſight. Faith is reckoned, and worthily, among the greateſt gifts of God, yea, it is the greateſt it ſelf that we may enjoy. For by it, as we be juſtified and made Gods Children, ſo are we Temples and poſſeſſors of the Holy Spirit, yea, of Chriſt alſo, Epheſ. 4. And of the Father himſelf, John 14. By Faith we drive the Devil away, 1 Pet. 5. We overcome the world, 1 Joh. 5. And are already Citizens of Heaven, and Fellows with Gods dear Saints. But who is able to reckon the riches that this Faith bringeth with her unto the Soul ſhe ſitteth upon? No man nor Angel. And therefore (as I ſaid) of all Gods gifts ſhe may be ſet in the top, and have the upmoſt ſeat. The which thing if men conſidered (in that ſhe cometh alonely from Gods own Mercy ſeat, by the hearing, not of Maſs or Mattins, Dirges, or ſuch droſs, but the Word of God in ſuch a Tongue as we can and do underſtand) as they would be diligent and take great heed for doing or ſeeing any thing which might caſt her down (for then they fall alſo) ſo would they with no leſs care read and hear Gods holy Ward, joyning thereto moſt earneſt and often Prayer, as well for the more and better underſtanding, as for the loving, living, and confeſſing of the ſame, maugre the head of the Devil, the World, our Fleſh, Reaſon, Goods, Poſſeſſions, carnal Friends, Wife, Children, and very life here; if they ſhould pull us back to hearken to their voice and counſel, for more quiet, ſure, and longer uſe of them.

The excellency of faith, and what it worketh.

Faith cometh by hearing the word, and not by hearing Maſs.

Now notwithſtanding this excellency of Faith, in that we read the Apoſtle to match there with, yea, (as it were) to prefer, ſuffering perſecution for Chriſts ſake, I trow no man will be ſo fond as to think otherwiſe, but that I and all Gods Children have cauſe to glorifie and praiſe God, which hath vouched you worthy ſo great a bleſſing. For though the reaſon or wiſdom of the world, think of the Croſs according to their reach, and according to their preſent ſenſe, and therefore flieth from it as from a moſt great ignominy and ſhame: Yet Gods Scholars have learned otherwiſe to think of the Croſs, that is, the frame-houſe in the which God frameth his Children like to his Son Chriſt; the fornace that fineth Gods gold; the high-way to Heaven; the Sute and Livery that Gods Servants are ſerved withal; the earnest and beginning of all consolation and glory. For they (I mean Gods Scholars, as your Lordship is, I trust) do enter into Gods Sanctuary, lest their feet slip. Psam 72. They look not as Beasts do, on things present only, but on things to come, and so have they as present to Faith the judgment and glorious coming of Christ Jesus, as the wicked have now their worldly wealth wherein they wallow and will wallow, till they tumble headlong into The end of prosperity. Hell, where are torments too terrible and endless. Now they follow the Fiend as the Bear doth the train of Hony, and the Sow the Swillings, till they be brought into the Sapienc. 5. Slaughter-house, and then they know that their prosperity hath brought them to perdition. Then cry they, Wo, wo, we went the wrong way: we counted these men (I mean such as you be that suffer for Gods sake, loss of goods, friends and life, whom they shall see endued with rich robes of Righteousness, Crowns of most pure precious gold, and Palms of conquest in the goodly glorious Palace of the Lamb, where is eternal joy, felicity, &c.) We counted (will they then say) these Men but fools and mad-men, we took their conditions to be but curiosity. But then will it be too late, then the time will be turned, laughing shall be turned into weeping, and weeping into rejoycing. Read Sapien. 2, 3, 4, 5.

Therefore (as before I have said) great cause have I to thank God, which hath vouched you worthy of his most bountiful blessing: much more then have you cause (my good Lord) so to be, I mean thankful. For look upon your Few Noble men called to Christs Kingdom. vocation I pray you, tell me how many Noblemen, Earls Sons, Lords, Knights, and Men of Estimation, hath God in this Realm of England dealt thus withal? I dare say, you think not that you have deserved this. Only Gods mercy in his Christ hath wrought this on you, as he did in Jeremiahs time on Abimelech, in Achabs time on Abdias, in Christs time on Joseph of Arimathea, in the Apostles time on Sergius Paulus, and the Queen of Candaces Chamberlain. Only now be thankful and continue, continue, continue (my good Lord) continue to confess Christ. Be not ashamed of him before men: for then will not he be ashamed of you. Now will he try you; stick fast unto him; and he will stick fast by you, he will be with you in trouble, and deliver you. But then must you cry unto him: for so it proceedeth, He cried unto me and I heard him, Psal 91. I was with him in trouble, &c.

Gods Remembrancers. Remember Lots Wife, which looked back. Remember Francis Spira. *Remember that none is crowned, but he that striveth lawfully. Remember that all you have is at Christs commandment. Remember he lost more for you, than you can lose for him. Remember you lose not that which is lost for his sake: for you shall find much more here and elsewhere. Remember you shall dye, and when, where, and how, ye cannot tell. Remember the death of Sinners is most terrible. Remember the death of Gods Saints is most precious in his sight. Remember the multitude goeth the wide way which windeth to wo. Remember that the strait-gate which leadeth to Glory, hath but few Travellers. Remember Christ biddeth you to strive to enter in thereat. Remember he that trusteth in the Lord, shall receive strength to stand against all the assaults of his Enemies. Be certain all the hairs of your head are numbred. Be certain your good Father hath appointed bounds, over the which the Devil dares not look. Commit your self to him; he is, hath been, and will be your Keeper. Blessed is he that walketh not to these Popish Prayers, nor standeth at them, nor sitteth at them; glorifie God both in Soul and Body. He that gathereth not with Christ, scattereth abroad. Use Prayer, look for Gods help, which is at hand to them that ask and hope thereafter assuredly. To Mr. Warcup and his Wife; Mrs. Wilkenson; and others of his godly Friends, with their Families.

A pithy and effectual Letter of M. Bradford to M. Warcup, and Mrs. Wilkinson.

THe same Peace our Saviour Christ left with his People, which is not without war with the World, Almighty God work plentifully in your hearts now and for ever. Amen.

The time I perceive is come wherein the Lords ground will be known, I mean, it will now shortly appear who have received Gods Gospel into their hearts indeed, to the taking of good root therein: for such will not for a little heat or Sun-burning wither, but stiffly will stand and grow on, maugre the malice of all burning showers and tempests. And forasmuch as (my Beloved in the Lord) I am perswaded of you, that ye be indeed the Children of God; Gods good ground, which groweth and will grow on (by Gods grace) bringing forth fruit to Gods glory after your vocations, as occasions shall be offered, (burn the sun never so hot) therefore I cannot but signifie unto you, and heartily pray you and every one of you, accordingly to go on forwards after your Master Christ, not sticking at the foul way and stormy weather, which you are to come into, and are like so to do: of this being most certain, that the end of your Journey shall be pleasant and joyful in such a perpetual rest and blissfulness, as cannot but swallow up the showres that ye now feel and are soused in, if ye often set it before your eyes, after Pauls counsel in the latter end of the fourth, and beginning of the fifth Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians. Read it I pray you, and remember it often as a restorative to refresh you, lest ye faint in the way.

And besides this set before you also, that though the weather be foul, and storms grow apace, yet go not ye alone, but other your Brothers and Sisters tread the same path, as S. Peter telleth us: and therefore company should cause you to be the more couragious and chearful. But if you had no company at all to go presently with you, I pray you tell me, if even from the beginning, the best of Gods Friends have found any fairer weather and way to the place whither ye are going (I mean Heaven) than ye now find and are like to do, except ye will with the worldlings, which have their portion in this life, tarry still by the way till the storms be overpast, and then either night will so approach that ye cannot travel, either the doors will be sparred before ye come, and so ye then lodge without in wonderful and evil lodgings. Read Apocalyps 22. Begin at Abel, and come from him to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, the Patriarchs, Moses, David, Daniel, and all the Saints of the Old Testament, and tell me whether ever any of them found any fairer way than ye now find.

Foul way and foul weather to the kingdom of heaven.

If the Old Testament will not serve, I pray you come to the New, and begin with Mary and Joseph, and come from them to Zachary and Elizabeth, John Baptist and every one of the Apostles and Evangelists, and search whether they all found any other way into the City we travel towards, than by many tribulations.

The passage of all Gods Saints both in the old and new Testament hath been through Affliction. Read the story of the Primitive Church above described.

Besides these, if ye should call to remembrance the Primitive Church, Lord God, ye should see many to have given chearfully their Bodies to most grievous torments, rather than they would be stopped in their Journey, that there is no day in the year, but (I dare say) a thousand was the fewest that with great joy lost their homes here, but in the City they went unto, have found other manner of homes than Mans mind is able to conceive. But if none of these were, if ye had no company now to go with you, as you have me your poor Brother and Bondman of the Lord, with many other, I trust in God, if you had none other of the Fathers, Patriarchs, Kings, Prophets, Apostles, Evangelists, Martyrs, and other holy Saints and Children of God, that in their Journey to Heaven-ward, found as ye now find, and are like to find if ye go on forward, as I trust ye will, yet ye have your Master and your Captain Jesus Christ, the dear darling and only begotten and beloved Son of God, in whom was all the Fathers pleasure, joy and delectation, ye have him to go before you, no fairer way, but much fouler into this our City of Jerusalem. I need not (I trust) to rehearse what manner of way he found. Begin at his birth, and till ye come at his burial, ye ſhall find that every foot and ſtride of his Journey was no better, but much worſe than yours is now.

Christ Jesus the Ring-leader of all Gods Children afflicted

We muſt not be ſo dainty, to look for fairer weather than Chriſt himſelf went thorow.

Wherefore (my dearly beloved in the Lord) be not ſo dainty, as to look for that at Gods hands, your dear Father, which the Fathers, Patriarchs, Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, Martyrs, Saints, and his own Son Jeſus Chriſt did not find. Hitherto we have had fair way (I trow) and fair weather alſo: now becauſe we have loitered by the way, and not made the ſpeed we ſhould have done, our loving Lord and ſweet Father hath overcaſt the weather, and ſtirred up the ſtorms and tempeſts, that we might with more haſt run out our race before night come, and the doors be ſparred. The Devil ſtandeth now at every Inn door in his City and Country of this World, crying unto us to tarry and lodge in this or that place till the ſtorms be overpaſt; not that he would not have us wet to the skin, but that the time might overpaſs us to our utter deſtruction. Therefore beware of his enticements. Caſt not your eyes on things to be preſent, how this man doth, and how that man doth: but caſt your eyes on the gleve ye run at, or elſe ye will loſe the game. Ye know that he which runneth at the gleve, doth not look on others that ſtand by, and go this way or that way, but altogether looketh on the gleve, and on them that run with him, that thoſe which be behind overtake him not, and that he may overtake them which be before: even ſo ſhould we do, leave off looking on thoſe which will not run the race to Heavens bliſs by the path of Perſecution with us, and caſt our eyes on the end of our race, and on them that go before us, that we may overtake them, and on them which come after us, that we may provoke them to come the faſter after.

Phil. 3. The Devils enticements not to be truſted.

To look to the mark.

He that ſhooteth, will not caſt his eyes in his ſhooting on them that ſtand by, or ride by the ways (I trow,) but rather at the mark he ſhooteth at: for elſe he were like to win the wrong way: Even ſo, my dearly beloved, let your eyes be ſet on the mark ye ſhoot at, even Chriſt Jeſus, who for the Joy ſet before him, did joyfully carry his Croſs, contemning the ſhame, and therefore he now ſitteth on the right hand of the Throne of God. Let us follow him: for this did he that we ſhould not be faint-hearted. For we may be moſt aſſured, that if we ſuffer with him, we ſhall undoubtedly reign with him: but if we deny him, ſurely he will deny us; for he that is aſhamed of me, ſaith Chriſt, and of my Goſpel, in this faithleſs Generation, I will be aſhamed of him before the Angels of God in Heaven. Oh how heavy a Sentence is this to all ſuch as know the Maſs to be an abominable Idol, full of Idolatry, Blaſphemy and Sacriledge againſt God and his Chriſt, (as undoubtedly it is) and yet for fear of men, for loſs of life or goods, yea, ſome for advantage and gain, will honeſt it with their preſence, diſſembling both with God and Man, as their own heart and Conſcience doth accuſe them. Better it were that ſuch had never known the Truth, than thus wittingly, and for fear or favour of man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, to diſſemble it, or rather (as indeed it is) to deny it. The end of ſuch is like to be worſe than their beginning. Such had need to take heed of the two terrible places to the Hebrews in the 6. and 10. Chapters, leſt by ſo doing they fall therein. Let them beware they play no wily beguile with themſelves, as ſome do I fear me, which go to Maſs, and becauſe they worſhip not nor kneel not, nor knock not as others do, but ſit ſtill in their Pues, therefore they think they rather do good to others than hurt.

Eſay 2. 2 Pet. 2. Heb. 6. 10.

But (alas) if theſe men would look into their own Conſciences, there ſhould they ſee they are very Diſſemblers, and in ſeeking to deceive others (for by this means the Magiſtrates think them of their ſort) they deceive themſelves. They think at the elevation time, all mens eyes are ſet upon them, to mark how they do. They think others, hearing of ſuch men going to Maſs, do ſee, or enquire of their behaviour there. Oh if there were in thoſe men that are ſo preſent at the Maſs, either love to God, or to their Brethren, then would they for the one or both, openly take Gods part, and admoniſh the people of their Idolatry. They fear man more than him which hath power to caſt both Soul and Body into Hell fire: they haſt on both knees: they ſerve two Maſters. God have mercy upon ſuch, and open their eyes with his Eye-ſalve, that they may ſee, that they which take no part with God are againſt God, and that they which gather not with Chriſt, do ſcatter abroad. Oh that they would read what St. John ſaith will be done to the fearful. The counſel given to the Church of Laodicea, is good counſel for ſuch.

Apoc. 21. Apoc. 3.

But to return to you again (dearly Beloved,) be not ye aſhamed of Gods Goſpel: It is the power of God to ſalvation to all thoſe that do believe it. Be therefore partakers of the afflictions, as God ſhall make you able, knowing for certain, that he will never tempt you farther than he will make you able to bear: and think it no ſmall grace of God to ſuffer perſecution for Gods Truth: for the Spirit of God reſteth upon you, and ye are happy, as one day ye ſhall ſee. Read 2 Theſſalonians 1. Hebrews 12. As the fire hurteth not gold, but maketh it finer, ſo ſhall ye be more pure by ſuffering with Chriſt, 1 Pet. 1. The flail and wind hurteth not the wheat, but cleanſeth it from the chaff. And ye (dearly Beloved) are Gods wheat: fear not therefore the flail: fear not the fanning wind, fear not the Milſtone, fear not the Oven: for all theſe make you more meet for the Lords own Tooth. Sope, though it be black, ſoileth not the cloth, but rather at the length maketh it more clean: ſo doth the black Croſs help us to more whiteneſs, if God ſtrike with his Battledore. Becauſe ye are Gods Sheep, prepare your ſelves to the ſlaughter, always knowing that in the ſight of the Lord our death ſhall be precious. The Souls under the Altar look for us to fill up their number: happy are we if God have ſo appointed us. Howſoever it be (dearly Beloved) caſt your ſelves wholly upon the Lord, with whom all the hairs of your heads are numbred, ſo that not one of them ſhall periſh. Will we, nill we, we muſt drink Gods Cup, if he have appointed it for us. Drink it willingly then, and at the firſt when it is full, leſt peradventure if we linger, we ſhall drink at the length of the dregs with the wicked, if at the beginning we drink not with his Children: for with them his Judgment beginneth, and when he hath wrought his will on Mount Sion, then will he viſit the Nations round about.

Submit your ſelves therefore under the mighty hand of the Lord. No man ſhall touch you without his knowledge. When they touch you therefore, know it is your weal. God thereby will work to make you like unto Chriſt here, that ye may be alſo like unto him elſewhere. Acknowledge your unthankfulneſs and ſin, and bleſs God that correcteth you in the world, becauſe you ſhall not be damned with the world. Otherwiſe might he correct us, than in making us to ſuffer for Righteouſneſs ſake: but this he doth becauſe we are not of the world. Call upon his Name through Chriſt for his help, as he commandeth us. Believe that he is merciful to you, heareth you, and helpeth you: I am with him in trouble, and will deliver him, ſaith he. Know that God hath appointed bounds, over which the Devil and all the world ſhall not paſs. If all things ſeem to be againſt us, yet ſay with Job, if he will kill me, I will hope in him. Read the 91 Pſalm, and pray for me your poor Brother and Fellow-ſufferer for Gods Goſpel ſake, his Name therefore be praiſed; and of his mercy he make me and you worthy to ſuffer with good Conſcience for his Names ſake. Dye once we muſt, and when we know not: happy are they to whom God giveth to pay Natures debt, I mean, to dye for his ſake.

To Sir James Hales Knight, then priſoner in the Counter in Breadſtreet.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to Sir James Hales, Knight

THe GOD of Mercy, and Father of all Comfort, plentifully pour out upon you and in you his Mercy, and with his Conſolations comfort and ſtrengthen you to the end, for his and our Chriſts ſake.

Although, right worſhipful Sir, many cauſes might move me to be content with crying for you to your God and my God, that he would give you grace to preſevere well, as he hath right notably begun, to the great glory of his Name, and Comfort of all ſuch as fear him; as lack of learning, of familiarity, yea, acquaintance (for I think I am unknown to you, both by face and Name) and other ſuch like things; yet I cannot content my ſelf, but preſume ſomthing to ſcrible unto you, not that I think my ſcribling can do you any good, but that I might declare my συμπαθειαν and compaſſion, love, and affection I bear towards your maſterſhip, which is contented, yea deſirous with us poor miſers, to confeſs Chriſts Goſpel in theſe perillous times and days of tryal. Oh Lord God, how good art thou, which doeſt thus glean out grapes, I mean Children for thy ſelf, and Brethren for Chriſt! Look, good Maſter Hales, on your vocation; not many Judges, not many Knights, not many landed men, not many rich men, and wealthy to live as you are, hath God choſen to ſuffer for his ſake, as he hath now done you. Certainly I dare ſay you think not ſo of your ſelf, as though God were bound to prefer you, or had need of you, but rather attribute this as all good things unto his free Mercy in Chriſt. Again, I dare ſay that you being a wiſe man, do judge of things wiſely, that is, concerning this your Croſs, you judge of it not after the World and People which is magnus erroris magiſter, nor after the judgment of reaſon and worldly wiſedom, which is fooliſhneſs to Faith, nor after the preſent ſenſe, to which non videtur gaudii, ſed moleſtiæ. i. e. It ſeemeth not to be joyous but grievous, as Paul writeth: but after the word of God, which teacheth your Croſs to be, in reſpect of your ſelf between God and you, Gods chaſtiſing, and your Fathers correction, nurture, ſchool, tryall, path-way to Heaven, Glory and felicity, and the furnace to conſume the droſs, and mortifie the reliques of Old Adam which yet remain, yea even the Frame-Houſe to faſhion you like to the deareſt Saints of God here, yea to Chriſt the Son of God, that elſewere you might be like unto him.

How God gleaneth out his People.

The World, People, worldly wiſdom, are evil judges of things ſpiritual. Heb. 12.

Praiſe of the Croſs.

Now concerning your Croſs in reſpect of the World, between the World and you, Gods Word teacheth it to be a teſtimonial of Gods Truth, of his Providence, of his Power, of his Juſtice, of his Wiſdom, of his anger againſt Sin, of his Goodneſs, of his Judgment, of your Faith and Religion, ſo that by it you are to the World a witneſs of God, one of his Teſtes, that he is true, he ruleth all things, he is juſt, wiſe, and at length will judge the World, and caſt the wicked into perdition, but the godly he will take and receive into his eternal habitation. I know you judge of things after Faiths fetch, and the effects or ends of things, and ſo you ſee æternum pondus gloriæ. i.e. an eterall weight of glory, which this Croſs ſhall bring unto you, dum non ſpectas ea quæ videntur, ſed ea quæ non videntur. i.e. while ye look not on things which are ſeen, but on the things which are not ſeen. Let the worldlings weigh things and look upon the affairs of men with their worldly and corporal eyes, as did many in ſubſcription of the Kings laſt will, and therefore they did that, for the which they beſhrewed themſelves: but let us look on things with other manner of eyes, as God be praiſed you did, in not doing that which you were deſired, and driven at to have done. You then beheld things not as a man, but as a man of God, and ſo you do now in Religion, at the leaſt hitherto you have done, and that you might do ſo ſtill, I humbly beſeech and pray you, ſay with David, Defecerunt oculi mei in eloquium tuum: quando conſolaberis me? i. Mine eyes fail for thy word ſaying; when wilt thou comfort me? Though you be as uter in fumo. i. like a bottle in the ſmoke: (for I hear you want health) yet ne obliviſcaris juſtificationes Dei. i. Do not forget the ſtatutes of the Lord: but cry out, Quot ſunt dies ſervi tui? quando facies de perſequentibus me judicium? i. e. How many are the days of thy Servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that perſecute me? And be certain, Quod Dominus veniens veniet, & non tardabit. Si moram fecerit, expecta illum. i. The Lord will ſurely come, and not ſtay; though he tarry, wait for him: for he is but ad momentum in ira ſua, & vita in voluntate ejus: Ad veſperam demorabitur fletus, & ad matutinam lætitia. i. He is but a while in his anger; but in his favour is life: weeping may abide at evening, but joy cometh in the morning. Follow therefore Eſays Counſel, Abſcondere ad modicum, ad momentum, donec pertranſeat indignatio ejus. i. Hide thy ſelf for a very little while, until his indignation paſs over, which is not indignatio indeed, but to our ſenſe, and therefore in the ſix and twentieth Chapter of Eſay, God ſaith of his Church and People, that as he keepeth night and day: ſo Non eſt indignatio mihi. i. There is no anger in me (ſaith he.)

The Mother ſometime beateth the Child, but yet her heart melteth upon it, even in the very beating: and therefore ſhe caſteth the rod into the fire, and colleth the Child, giveth it an apple, and dandleth it moſt motherly. And to ſay the truth, the love of Mothers to their Children, is but a trace to train us to behold the love of God towards us: and therefore ſaith he: Can a Mother forget the Child of her womb? As who ſhould ſay, No: but if ſhe ſhould ſo do, yet will not I forget thee, ſaith the Lord of Hoſts. Ah comfortable ſaying! I will not forget thee, ſaith the Lord. Indeed the Children of God think oftentimes that God hath forgotten them, and therefore they cry, Ne abſcondas faciem tuam à me, &c. i. Hide not thy face from me, &c. Ne derelinquas me Domine, &c. i. Leave me not, O Lord, &c. Whereas in very truth it is not ſo, but to their preſent ſenſe: and therefore David ſaid, Ego dixi in exceſſu meo projectus ſum à facie tua. i. I ſaid in my agony, I was clean caſt away from thy face. But was it ſo? Nay verily. Read his Pſalms, and you ſhall ſee. So writeth he alſo in other places very often, eſpecially in the perſon of Chriſt: as when he ſaith, Deus meus, Deus meus, ut quid dereliquiſti me? i. My God, my God why had thou forſaken me? He ſaith not, Ut quid derelinquis? i. Why doeſt thou forſake me? or, derelinques? i. Why wilt thou forſake me? But, Ut quid dereliquiſti? i. Why haſt thou forſaken me? Where indeed God had not left him, but that it was ſo to his ſenſe, and that this Pſalm telleth us full well: which Pſalm I pray you now and then read, it is the two and twentieth, and thereto joyn the thirtieth, and the hundred and ſixteenth, with divers other. The ſame we read in the Prophet Eſay, the fortieth Chapter, where he reproveth Iſrael for ſaying, GOD had forgotten them Nunquid neſcis, ſaith he? Knoweſt thou not An non audiviſti? &c. Haſt thou not heard? &c. Qui ſperant in Domino mutabunt fortitudinem. i. They that truſt in the Lord, ſhall renew their ſtrength. And in his four and fiftieth Chapter, Noli timere, &c. Ad punctum enim, in modico dereliqui te, at in miſerationibus magnis congregabo te. In momento indignationis abſcondi faciem meam parumper à te, at in miſericordia ſempiterna miſertus ſum tui, dicit Redemptor tuus Dominus. Nam iſtud erit mihi ſicut aquæ Noe. Vt enim juravi ne porro aquæ Noe pertranſirent terram, ſic juravi ut non iraſcar tibi & non increpem te. Montes enim commovebuntur & colles contremiſcent, miſericordia autem mea non recedet à te, & fœdus pacis meæ non movebitur, dicit miſerator tuus Dominus. i. Fear not, &c. For a little while I have forſaken thee, but with great compaſſion will I gather thee. For a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee, for a little ſeaſon: but in everlaſting Mercy have I had compaſſion on thee, ſaith the Lord thy Redeemer. For this is unto me, as the waters of Noe. For as I have ſworn that the waters of Noe ſhould no more go over the earth, ſo have I ſworn that I would not be angry with thee nor rebuke thee. For the mountains ſhall remove, and hils ſhall fall down, but my Mercy ſhall not depart from thee, neither ſhall the covenant of my peace fall away, ſaith the Lord that hath compaſſion on thee.

1 Cor. 11. Psal. 144.

Be certain, be certain, good Master Hales, that all the hairs of your head, your dear Father hath numbred; so that one of them shall not perish: your name is written in the book of life. Therefore upon God cast all your care, which will comfort you with his Eternal Consolations, and make you able to go through the fire (if need be) which is nothing to be compared to the fire wherein our enemies shall fall and lye for ever, from the which the Lord deliver us, though it be through temporal fire, which must be construed according to the end and profit that cometh after it; so shall it then not much fear us to suffer it for our Master Christs cause, the which the Lord grant us for his mercies sake, Amen From the Kings Bench.

A letter to D. Hill, physician

THe God of mercy and Father of all comfort at this present and for ever ingraff in your heart the sense of his mercy in Christ, and the continuance of his consolation, which cannot but enable you to carry with joy whatsoever Cross he shall lay upon you, Amen.

Hitherto I could have no such liberty, as to write unto you, as I think you know: but now in that through Gods providence I have no such restraint, I cannot but something write, as well to purge me of this suspicion of unthankfulness towards you, as also to signifie my carefulness for you in these perillous days, lest you should wax cold in Gods cause (which God forbid) or suffer the light of the Lord once kindled in your heart to be quenched, and so become as you were before, after the example of the World, and of many other, which would have been accounted otherwise in our days, and yet still beguil themselves, still would be so accounted, although by their outward life they declare the Contrary, in that they think it enough to keep the heart pure, notwithstanding that the outward man doth curry favour.

In which doings, as they deny God to be jealous, and therefore requireth the whole man as well Body as Soul, being both create, as to immortality and society with him, so redeemed by the Blood of Jesus Christ, and now sanctified by the Holy Spirit to be the Temple of God, and member of his Son (as I say) by their parting stake to give God the heart, and the World the Body, they deny God to be jealous (for else they would give him both, as the wife would do to her husband whether he be jealous or no, if she be honest) so they play the dissemblers with the Church of God by their fact, offending the godly whom either they provoke to fall with them, or make more careless and conscienceless if they be fallen, and occasioning the wicked and obstinate to triumph against God, and the more vehemently to prosecute their malice against such as will not defile themselves in Body or Soul with the Romish rags now received amongst us. Because of this, I mean, lest you, my dear Master and Brother in the Lord, should do as many of our Gospellers do for fear of man, whose breath is in his nostrils, and hath power but of the Body, not fearing the Lord, which hath power both of Soul and Body, and not only temporally, but also eternally: I could not but write something unto you, as well because duty deserveth it for the which he reward you, for I cannot as also because charity and love compelleth me; not that I think you have need (for as I may rather learn of you, so I doubt not but you have hitherto kept your self upright from halting) but that I might both quiet my Conscience, calling upon me hereabout, and signifie unto you by something, my carefulness for your Soul, as painfully and often you have lone for my Body.

Dr Hill M. Bradfords Physician.

Therefore I pray you call to mind, that there be but two Masters, two kinds of People, two ways, and two mansion places. The Masters be Christ and Satan, the People be servitors to either of these, the ways be strait and wide, the mansions be Heaven and Hell. Again, consider that this World is the place of tryal of Gods People, and the Devils Servants: for as the one will follow his Master whatsoever cometh of it, so will the other. For a time it is hard to discern who pertaineth to God, and who to the Devil: as in the calm and peace, who is a good shipman and warriour, and who is not? But as when the storm ariseth, the expert Mariner is known, and as in war the good Souldier is seen, so in affliction and the Cross, easily Gods Children are known from Satans Servants: for then, as the good Servant will follow his Master, so will the godly follow their Captain, come what will come, whereas the wicked and hypocrites will bid adieu, and desire less of Christs acquaintance. For which cause the Cross is called a probation and tryal, because it trieth who will go with God, and who will forsake him. And now in England we see how small a company Christ hath in comparison of Satans Souldiers. Let no man deceive himself: for he that gathereth not with Christ scattereth abroad. No man can serve two Masters; the Lord abhorreth double hearts; the luke-warm, that is, such as are both hot and cold, he spitteth out of his mouth. None that halt on both knees doth God take for his Servants. The way of Christ is the strait way, and so strait, that as a few find it, and few walk in it, so no man can halt in it, but must needs go upright: for as the straitness will suffer no reeling to this side or that side: so if any halt: he is like to fall off the bridge into the pit of eternall perdition.

Two Masters. Two sorts of Subjects. Two ways. Two Kingdoms.

Affliction trieth who go with God & who goeth with the Devel.

Christs part the smallest, and why.

Strive therefore, good Master Doctor, now you have found it, to enter into it: and if you should be called or pulled back, look not on this side, or that side or behind you, as Lots Wife did, but straight forwards is the end which is set before you (though it be to come) as even now present: like as you do and will your patients to do in purgations, and other your ministrations, to consider the effect that will ensue; where through the bitterness and loathsomness of the purgation is so overcome, and the painfulness in abiding the working of that is ministred, is so eased, that it maketh the patient willingly and joyfully to receive that is to be received, although it be never so unpleasant: so (I say) set before you the end of this strait way, and then doubtless, as Paul saith, æternum pondus gloriæ parlet, i. It shall bring with it an eternall weight of glory, whilst we look not on the thing which is seen, for that is temporal, but on the thing which is not seen, which is eternall. So doth the Husbandman in plowing and tilling set before him the harvest time; so doth the Fisher consider the draught of his net, rather than the casting in; so doth the Merchant the return of his Merchandise; and so should we in these stormy days set before us not the loss of our goods, liberty, and very life, but the reaping time, the coming of our Saviour Christ to Judgment, the fire that shall burn the wicked and disobedient to Gods Gospel, the blast of the Trump, the exceeding glory prepared for us in Heaven Eternally, such as the eye hath not seen, the ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. The more we lose here, the greater joy shall we have there. The more we suffer, the greater triumph. For corruptible dross, we shall find incorruptible treasures; for gold, glory: for silver, solace without end; for riches, robes royal; for earthly Houses, eternal Palaces; mirth without measure, pleasure without pain, felicity endless; Summa, we shall have God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

A wise man will ever consider the end.

The glorious recompence of such as suffer for the Lord.

O happy place. Oh that this day would come. Then shall the end of the wicked be lamentable, then shall they receive the just reward of Gods vengeance, then shall they cry woe, woe, that ever they did as they have done.

You know this is our Alphabet; He that will be my Disciple, saith Christ, must deny himself, and take up his Cross, and follow me, Not this Bishop nor that Doctor, not this Emperour, nor that King, but me, saith Christ: For he that loveth Father, Mother, Wife, Children, or very life, better then me, is not worthy of me. Remember that the same Lord saith; He that will save his life shall lose it. Comfort your self with this, that as the Divels had no power over the Porkets, or over* Jobs *goods without Gods leave, so shall they have none over you. Remember also that all the hairs of your head are numbred with God. The way to Heaven is by tribulations.

Matth. 8.

On God therefore cast your care, love him, serve him after his Word, fear him, trust in him, hope at his hand for all help, and always pray, looking for the Cross, and whensoever it cometh, be assured, the Lord, as he is faithfull, so he will never tempt you further the he will make you able to bear, but in the midst of the Temptation will make such an evasion, as shall be most to his glory, and your eternall comfort. God for his mercy in Christ, with his Holy Spirit endue you, comfort you, under the wings of his mercy shaddow you, and as his dear Child guide you for evermore. To whose merciful tuition, as I do with my hearty prayer commit you, so I doubt not but you pray for me, and so I beseech you to do still. My Brother P. telleth me, you would have the last part of Saint Jeromes *works, to have the use thereof for a fortnight. To Mistris M. H. a godly Gentlewoman, comforting her in that common heavines and godly sorrow, which the feeling and sense of sin worketh in Gods Children.

Another ghostly Letter of M. Bradford to Mistris M. H.

I Humbly and heartily pray the everlasting God and Father of mercy to bless and keep your heart and mind in the knowledge and love of his Truth, and of his Christ, through the inspiration and working of his Holy Spirit, Amen.

Although I have no doubt, but that you prosper and go forward daily in the way of godliness, more and more drawing towards perfection, and have no need of any thing that I can write; yet because my desire is that you might be more fervent and persevere to the end, I could not but write something unto you, beseeching you both often and diligently to call unto your mind, as a mean to stir you hereunto, yea, as a thing which God most straitly requireth you to believe, that you are beloved of God, and that he is your dear Father, in, through, and for Christ and his deaths sak This love and tender kindness of God towards us in Christ is abundantly herein declared, in that he hath to the godly work of creation of this World made us after his Image, redeemed us being lost, called us into his Church, sealed us with his mark and sign manual of Baptism, kept and conserved us all the days of our life, fed, nourished, defended and most Fatherly chastised us, and now hath kindled in our hearts the sparkles of his fear, faith, love and knowledge of his Christ and truth, and therefore we lament, because we lament no more our unthankfulness, our frailness, our diffidence and wavering in things wherein we should be most certain.

Gods benefits to be declared.

All these things we should use as means to confirm our Faith of this, that God is our God and Father, and to assure us, that he loveth us as our Father in Christ: to this end (I say) we should use the things before touched, especially in that, of all things, God requireth this Faith and Fatherly perswasion of his Fatherly goodness, as his chiefest service. For before he ask any thing of us, he saith; I am the Lord thy God, giving himself, and then all he hath to us to be our own. And this he doth in respect of himself, of his own mercy and truth, and not in respect of us, for then were grace no grace. In consideration whereof, when he saith; Thou shalt have none other Gods but me, thou shalt love me with all thy heart, &c. though of dutie we are bound to accomplish all that he requireth, and are culpable and guilty if we do not the same, yet he requireth not these things further of us, then to make us more in love, and more certain of this his covenant, that he is our Lord and God. In certainty whereof, as he hath given this whole World to serve to our need and commodity; so hath he given his Son Christ Jesus, and in Christ, himself to be a pledge and gage, whereof the Holy Ghost doth now and then give us some taste and sweet smell to our eternal joy.

The chiefest Service of God is to think well of his fatherly goodness in Christ.

Therefore (as I said) because God is our Father in Christ, and requireth of you straitly to believe it, give your self to obedience, although ye do it not with such feeling as you desire. First must Faith go before, and then feeling will follow. If our imperfection, frailty, and many evils should be occasions whereby Satan would have us to doubt; as much as we can, let us abhor that suggestion, as of all others most pernicious; for so indeed it is. For when we stand in a doubt, whether God be our Father, we cannot be thankful to God, we cannot heartily pray or think any thing we do acceptable to God, we cannot love our Neighbours, and give over our selves to care for them, and do for them as we should do, and therefore Satan is most subtile hereabouts, knowing full well that if we doubt of God eternal mercys towards us through Christ, we cannot please God, or do any thing as we should do to man. Continually casteth he into our memories our imperfection, frailty, falls, and offences, that we should doubt of Gods mercy and favour towards us.

Where feeling faileth yet obedience is required.

Let no suggestion make us doubt of Gods favour in Christ.

Therefore (my good Sister) we must not be sluggish herein, but as Satan laboureth to loosen our Faith, so must we labour to fasten it by thinking on the promises and covenant of God in Christs Blood; namely, that God is our God with all that ever he hath: which covenant dependeth and hangeth upon Gods own goodness, mercy and truth only, and not on our obedience or worthiness in any point; for then should we never be certain. Indeed God requireth of us obedience and worthiness, but not that thereby we might be his Children, and he our Father: but because he is our Father and we his Children through his own goodness in Christ, therefore requireth he Faith and Obedience. Now if we want this obedience and worthiness, which he requireth, should we doubt whether he be our Father? Nay, that were to make our obedience and worthiness the cause, and so to put Christ out of place, for whose sake God is our Father: But rather because he is our Father, and we feel our selves to want such things as he requireth, we should be stirred up to a shamefastness and blushing, because we are not as we should be: and thereupon should we take occasion to go to our Father in prayer on this manner:

To stay upon Gods promise in Christs Blood.

Obedience giveth not to us to be Gods Children, but to be Gods Children giveth obedience.

Dear Father, thou of thine own mercy in Jesus Christ hast chosen me to be thy Child, & therefore thou wouldst I should be brought into thy Church and faithful company of thy Children; wherein thou hast kept me hitherto, thy name therefore be praised. Now I see my self to want faith, hope, love, &c. which thy Children have and thou requirest of me, wherethrough the Divel would have me to doubt, yea utterly to despair of thy Fatherly goodness, favour and mercy. Therefore I come to thee as to my mercifull Father, through thy dear Son Jesus Christ, and pray thee to help me good Lord: help me, and give me faith, hope, love, &c. and grant that thy Holy Spirit may be with me for ever, and more and more to assure me that thou art my Father; that this mercifull covenant that thou madest with me in respect of thy grace in Christ and for Christ, and not in respest of any my worthiness, is alwayes to me, &c.

How a man should pray when feeling of Gods comfort lacketh.

On this sort (I say) you most pray and use your cogitations, when Satan would have you to doubt of salvation.

He

He doth all he can to prevail herein. Do you all you can to prevail herein against him. Though you feel not as you would, yet doubt not, but hope beyond all hope, as Abraham did. For always (I said) goeth faith before feeling. As certain as God is Almighty, as certain as God is Merciful, as certain as God is True, as certain as Jesus Christ was crucified, is risen, and sitteth on the right hand of the Father, as certain as this is Gods Commandment: I am thy Lord thy God, &c. so certain ought you to be that God is your Father. As you are bound to have no other Gods but him, so are ye no less bound to believe that God is your God. What profit should it be to you to believe this to be true; I am the Lord thy God, to others, if you should not believe that his is true to your self? The Divel believeth on this fort. And whatsoever it be that would move you to doubt of this, whether God be your God through Christ, that same cometh undoubtedly of the Divel. Wherefore did he make you, but because he loved you? Might not he have made you Blind, Deaf, Lame, Frantick, &c? Might not he have made you a Jew, a Turk, a Papist, &c? And why hath he not done so? Verily because he loved you? And why did he love you? What was there in you to move him to love you? Surely nothing moved him to love you, and therefore to make you, and so hitherto to keep you, but his own goodness in Christ. Now then in that his goodness in Christ still remaineth as much as it was, that is, even as great as himself, for it cannot be lessened; how should it be but that he is your God and Father? Believe this, believe this my good Sister, for God is no Changeling; them whom he loveth, he loveth to the end.

Hope beyond hope. Faith goeth before feeling.

Doubting cometh of the Divel.

Eccles. 2.

Cast therefore your self wholly upon him, and think without all wavering, that you are Gods Child, that you are a Citizen of Heaven, that you are the Daughter of God, the Temple of the Holy Ghost, &c. If hereof you be assured as you ought to be, then shall your conscience be quieted, then shall you Lament more and more that you want many things which God loveth; then shall you labour to be Holy in Soul and Body; then shall you go about that Gods Glory may shine in all your words and works; then shall you not be affraid what man can do unto you; then shall you have Wisdom to answer your Adversaries, as shall serve to their shame, and your comfort; then shall you be certain that no man can touch one hair of your head further then shall please your good Father, to your everlasting joy; then shall you be most certain, that God as your good Father will be more careful for your Children, and make better provision for them, if all you have were gon, then you can; then shall you (being assured I say of Gods favour towards you) give over your self wholy to help and care for others that be in need; then shall you contem this life, and desire to be at home with your good and sweet Father; then shall you labour to mortifie all things that would spot either Soul or Body. All these things spring out of this certain perswasion and Faith, that God is our Father, and we are his Children by Christ Jesus. All things should help our Faith herein; but Satan goeth about in all things to hinder us.

Faith and assured hope of Gods favour, is the fountain of all well-doing.

Therefore let us use earnest and hearty Prayer; let us often remember this Covenant; I am the Lord thy God; let us look upon Christ and his Precious Blood shed for the obsignation and Confirmation of his Covenant; let us remember all the free promises of the Gospel; let us set before us Gods benefits generally in making this World, in ruling it, in governing it, in calling and keeping his Church, &c. let us set before us Gods benefits particularly, how he hath made his Creatures after his Image, how he made us of perfect limbs, form, beauty, memory, &c. how he hath made us Christians, and given us a right Judgment in his Religion; how he hath ever since we were born, blessed, kept, nourished, and defended us; how he hath often beaten, chastised, and fatherly corrected us; how he hath spared us, and doth now spare us, giving us time, space, place, grace. This if you do and use earnest Prayer, and to flee from all things which might wound your Conscience, giving your self to diligence in your vocation, you shall find at the length (which God grant to me with you) a sure certainty of salvation, without all such doubt as may trouble the peace of Conscience to your eternal joy and comfort, Amen, Amen.

Consideration of Gods promises and benefits.

Yours to use in Christ, J. Bradford.

Another Letter full of godly comfort, written to the same person.

Anno 1555

THe good Spirit of God which guideth his Children, be with you my good Sister in the Lord for ever, Amen.

Another like letter of comfort to M. H.

Although, as I to you, so you unto me in prison are unknown, yet to him whom we desire to please, we are not only in persons, but also in hearts known and throughly seen: and therefore as for his sake you would by that you sent, of me be perceived how that in God you bear to me a good will; so that I to you might be seen in God to bear you the like, I send to you these few words in writing, wishing that in all your doings and speech, yea even in your very thoughts you would labour to feel that they are all present and open before the sight of God, be they good or bad. This cogitation often had in mind, and Prayer made to God for the working of his Spirit, thereby, as a mean, you shall at the length feel more comfort and commodity, then any man can know, but such as be exercised therein. Howbeit this is to be added, that in thinking your self, and all that you have and do, to be in the sight of God; this (I say) is to be added, that you think his sight is the sight not only of a Lord, but rather of a Father, which tendereth more your infirmities, then you can tender the infirmities of any your Children. Yea, when in your self you see a motherly affection to your little one that is weak, let the same be unto you a trace to train you to see the unspeakable kind affection of God your Father towards you.

Consideration of Gods tender affection to us in Christ his Son.

And therefore upon the consideration of your infirmities and natural evils, which continually cleave unto us, take occasion to go to God as your Father through Christ: and before his merciful heart lay open your infirmtys and evils, with desire of pardon and help after his good will and pleasure, but in his time, and not when you will, and by what means he will, not by that way you would; in the mean season hang on hope of his fatherly goodness, and surely you shall never be ashamed. For if a Woman that is natural cannot finally forget the Child of her womb, be sure God which is a Father supernatural cannot, nor will not forget you. Yea if a Woman could be so forgetful, yet God himself saith, he will not be so.

No time nor means to be prescribed to God.

Isai. 49.

This opinion, yea rather certain perswasion of God our Father through Christ see that you cherish, and by all means, as well by diligent consideration of his benefits, as of his loving corrections, whether they be inward or outward, see that you nourish; knowing for certain, that as the Divel goeth about nothing so much as to bring you in a doubt whether ye be Gods Child or no: so whatsoever shall move you to admit that dubitation, be assured the same to come from the Divel, if you feel in your self not only the want of good things, but also plenty of evil, do not therefore doubt whether you be Gods Child in Christ, or no.

The practice of the Divel to bring a man in doubt whether he be God's Child, or no.

We ought to measure Gods favour neither by our goodness nor ilness, but only by our faith in Christ.

For if for your goodness or ilness sake, which you feel or feel not, ye should believe or doubt, then should you make Christ Jesus, for whose sake only God is your Father, either nothing, or else but half Christ.

But rather take occasion of your wants in good, and of your plenty in evil, to go to God as to your Father, and to Pray to him, that in as much as he commandeth you to believe that he is your God and Father; so he would give you his good Spirit, that you might feel the same, and live as his Child, to his glory: and cease not upon such Prayers to look for comfort in Gods good time, still hoping the best, and rejecting all dubitation, and so all evil works, words, and cogitations, as the Lord shall enable you by his good Spirit and grace, which I beseech him to give unto you, my good Sister, for ever. And further I pray you, that as he hath made you to be an helper unto your Husband, so you would endeavour your self therein to shew the same as well in Soul as Body; and beg grace of God, that your endeavour may be effectual to both your comforts in Christ, Amen.

To my well beloved in the Lord, W. P.

A Letter of M. Bradford to W. P.

GRace and Peace from God the Father, through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

Dear Brother, God most justly hath cast me down into a Dungeon, but much better than I deserve; wherein I see no man but my Keeper, nor can see any except they come to me. Something in the Earth my lodging is, which is an example and memorial of my Earthly affections (which God I trust will mortifie) and of my Sepulchre, whereunto I trust my Lord God will bring me in peace in his good time. In the mean season he give me patience, lively hope, and his good Spirit. I pray you pray for me, for the Prayer of the godly, if it be fervent, worketh much with God. I thank God my common disease doth less trouble me than when I was abroad, which doth teach me the merciful Providence of God towards me. Use true and hearty Prayer, and you shall perceive God at length will declare himself to see, where now many think he sleepeth.

This disease was a Rheum with a feebleness of stomach wherewith he was much troubled while he was at liberty.

Out of the Tower, by the Lords Prisoner, John Bradford.

A Letter which he wrote to a faithful Woman in her heavines and trouble: most comfortable for all those to read that are afflicted and broken hearted for their sins.

A Letter of M. Bradford to a faithful woman inwardly afflicted.

GOD our good Father, for his mercies sake in Christ, with his eternal Consolation so comfort you, as I desire to be comforted of him in my most need: Yea, he will comfort you (my dear Sister) only cast your care upon him, and he never can nor will forsake you. For his calling and gifts be such, that he can never repent him of them. Whom he loveth, he loveth to the end; none of his chosen can perish. Of which number I know you are, my dearly beloved Sister: God increase the Faith thereof daily more and more in you, he give unto you to hang wholly on him and on his Providence and Protection. For whoso dwelleth under * that secret thing, and help of the Lord, he shall be cock-sure for evermore. He that dwelleth, I say; for if we be flitters and not dwellers, as was Lot a flitter from Segor, where God promised him protection, if he had dwelled there still: we shall remove to our loss, as he did into the Mountains.

* Gods Providence and Protection. Psalm. 91. 90. Gen. 19.

Dwell therefore, that is, trust, and that finally unto the end, in the Lord (my dear Sister) and you shall be as Mount Sion. As Mountains compass Jerusalem, so doth the Lord all his People. How then can he forget you, which are as the apple of his Eye, for his dear Sons sake? Ah dear heart, that I were now but one half hour with you, to be a Simon to help carry your Cross with you. God send you some good Simon to be with you, and help you.

You complain in your Letters of the blindness of your Mind, and the troubles you feel. My dearly beloved, God make you thankful for that which God hath given unto you; he open your eyes to see what and how great benefits you have received, that you may be less covetous, or rather impatient, for so (I fear me) it should be called, and more thankful. Have you not received at his hands sight to see your blindness, and thereto a desirous and seeking heart to see where he lieth in the mid-day, as his dear Spouse speaketh of her self in the Canticles? Oh Joyce, my good Joyce, what a gift is this? Many have some sight, but none this sobbing and sighing, none this seeking which you have, I know, but such as he hath married unto him in his mercies. You are not content to kiss his feet, with the Magdalen, but you would be kissed even with the kiss of his Mouth, Canticles 1. You would see his face with Moses, forgetting how he biddeth us seek his face, Psalm 27. yea, and that for ever, Psalm 105. Which signifieth no such sight, as you desire to be in this present life, which would see God now face to face, whereas he cannot be seen, but covered under something, yea, somtime in that which is (as you would say) clean contrary to God; as to see his mercy in his anger. In bringing us to Hell, Faith seeth him to bring us to Heaven; in darkness it beholdeth brightness: in hiding his face from us, it beholdeth his merry countenance. How did Job see God, but as (you would say) under Satans cloak? For who cast the fire from Heaven upon his goods? Who overthrew his house, and stirred up men to take away his Cattel, but Satan? and yet Job pierced through all these, and saw Gods work, saying, The Lord hath given, the Lord hath taken away, &c.

God cannot be seen, but covered under something, how faith seeth God, where flesh seeth hell.

In reading of the Psalms, how often do you see that David in the shadow of death saw Gods sweet love? And so, my dearly beloved, I see that you in your darkness and dimness by Faith do see clarity and brightness: by Faith, I say, because Faith is of things absent, of things hoped for, of things which I appeal to your Conscience, whether you desire not. And can you desire any thing which you know not? And is there of heavenly things any other true knowledge than by Faith?

Therefore (my dear Heart) be thankful, for (before God I write it) you have great cause. Ah, my Joyce, how happy is the stay wherein you are? Verily you are even in the blessed state of Gods Children; for they mourn, and do not you so? And that not for worldly weal, but for spiritual riches, Faith, Hope, Charity, &c. Do you not hunger and thirst for Righteousness? And I pray you, saith not Christ, who cannot lie, that happy are such? How should God wipe away the tears from your eyes in Heaven, if now on Earth ye shed no tears? How could Heaven be a place of rest, if on Earth ye find it? How could ye desire to be at home, if in your Journey you found no grief? How could yo so often call upon God, and talk with him, as I know you do, if your Enemy should sleep all day long? How should you elsewhere be made like unto Christ, I mean in joy, if in sorrow you sobbed not with him? If you will have joy and felicity, you must first needs feel sorrow and misery. If you will go to Heaven, you must sail by Hell, if you will embrace Christ in his robes, you must not think scorn of him in his rags. If you will sit at Christs table in his Kingdom, you must first abide with him in his temptations. If you will drink of his Cup of glory, forsake not his Cup of ignominy.

The state of Gods Children described.

Matth. 5:

The way to heaven is through hell.

Can the Head Corner-stone be rejected, and the other more base Stones in Gods building be in this world set by? you are one of his lively Stones, be content therefore to be hewn and shagged at, that you might be made more meet to be joyned to your fellows which suffer with you Satans snatches, the Worlds wounds, contempt of Conscience, and threats of the Flesh, where-through they are enforced to cry, Oh Wretches that we are, who shall deliver us? you are of Gods Corn, fear not therefore the Flail, the Fan, Millstone nor Oven. You are one of Christs Lambs, look therefore to be fleeced, haled at, and even slain.

Threats of the flesh. Rom. 6.

If you were a Market-sheep, you should go in more fat and grassie Pasture. If you were for the Fair, you should be Stall-fed, and want no weal: but because you are of Gods own occupying, therefore you must pasture on the bare Common, abiding the storms and tempests that will fall. Happy, and twice happy are you (my dear Sister) that God now haileth you whither you would not, that you might come whither you would. Suffer a little and be still. Let Satan rage against you, let the World cry out, let your Conscience accuse you, let the Law load you and press you down, yet shall they not prevail, for Christ is Emmanuel, that is, God with us. If God be with us, who can be against us? The Lord is with you, your Father cannot forget you; your Spouse loveth you. If the waves and surges arise, cry with Peter, Lord, I perish; and he will put out his hand and help you. Cast out your anchor of Hope, and it will not cease for the stormy surges, till it take hold on the rock of Gods truth and mercy.

Gods sheep must feed on the base common, where the Devils cattel are stalled. John 21.

Matth 8.

Think not that he which hath given you so many things corporally, as inductions of Spiritual and Heavenly Mercies, and that without your deserts or desire, can deny you any spiritual comfort, desiring it. For if he give to desire, he will give you to have and enjoy the thing desired. The desire to have, and the going about to ask, ought to certifie your Conscience, that they be his earnest of the thing which you asking he will give you; yea, before you ask, and whilst you are about to ask he will grant the same, as Isaiah saith, to his glory and your eternal consolation. He that spared not his own Son for you, will not nor cannot think any thing too good for you, my heartily Beloved.

not

If he had not choſen you, (as moſt certainly he hath) he would not have ſo called you, he would never have juſtified you; he would never have ſo glorified you with his gracious gifts, which I know, praiſed be his Name therefore; he would never have ſo exerciſed your Faith with Temptations, as he hath done and doth; if (I ſay) he had not choſen you. If he hath choſen you (as doubtleſs, dear Heart, he hath done in Chriſt, for in you I have ſeen his earneſt, and before me and to me you could not deny it, I know both where and when) if I ſay, he have choſen you, then neither can you, nor ever ſhall you periſh. For if you fail, he putteth under his hand; you ſhall not lie ſtill; ſo careful is Chriſt your keeper over you. Never was Mother ſo mindful over her Child, as he is over you. And hath not he always been ſo?

Rom. 8.

Exerciſe of Temptations a great token of Election.

Speak Woman, when did he finally forget you? And will he, how trow you, in your moſt need do otherwiſe, you calling upon him, and deſiring to pleaſe him? Ah (my Joyce) think you God to be mutable? Is he a changling? Doth not he love to the end them whom he loveth? Are not his gifts and calling ſuch, that he cannot repent him of them? For elſe were he no God. If you ſhould periſh, then wanted he power; for I am certain his will towards you is not to be doubted of. Hath not the Spirit, which is the Spirit of Truth, told you ſo? And will you now hearken with Eve to the lying Spirit which would have you not to deſpair (no, he goeth more craftily to work, howbeit to that end, if you ſhould give ear unto it, which God forbid) but to doubt and ſtand in a mammering, and ſo ſhould you never truly love God, but ſerve him of a ſervile fear, leſt he ſhould caſt you off for your unworthineſs and unthankfulneſs; as though your thankfulneſs or worthineſs were any cauſe with God, why he hath choſen you, or will finally keep you.

Rom. 11.

Every lying ſpirit not to be hearkned unto. Satan ſeeketh to bring tender Conſciences to doubting, but Gods promiſe in Chriſt ſtandeth ſure for ever.

Ah mine own dear Heart, Chriſt only, Chriſt only, and his Mercy and Truth. In him is the cauſe of your Election. This Chriſt, this Mercy, this Truth of God remaineth for ever, is certain for ever, I ſay, for ever. If an Angel from Heaven ſhould tell you contrary, accurſed be he. Your thankfulneſs and worthineſs are fruits and effects of your Election, they are no cauſes. Theſe fruits and effect, ſhall be ſo much more fruitful and effectual, by how much you waver not.

All our Election is in and for Chriſt only.

Therefore (my dearly Beloved) ariſe, and remember from whence you are faln. You have a Shepherd which never ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth; No Man nor Devil can pull you out of his hands. Night and day he commandeth his Angels to keep you. Have you forgotten what I read to you out of the Pſalm, The Lord is my Shepherd, I can want nothing? Do you not know that God ſpared Noah in the Ark on the outſide, ſo that he could not get out? So hath he done to you (my good Siſter,) ſo hath he done to you. Ten thouſand ſhall fall on your right hand, and twenty thouſand on your left hand, yet no evil ſhall touch you. Say boldly therefore, Many a time from my youth up have they fought againſt me, but they have not prevailed; no, nor never ſhall prevail, for the Lord is round about his People. And who are the People of God, but ſuch as hope in him? Happy are they that hope in the Lord, and you are one of thoſe, my dear Heart, for I am aſſured you have hoped in the Lord; I have your words to ſhew moſt manifeſtly, and I know they were written unfeignedly. Indeed not to ſay, that even before God you have ſimply confeſſed to me, and that oftentimes no leſs. And if once you had this hope, as you doubtleſs had it, though now you feel it not, yet ſhall you feel it again: for the anger of the Lord laſteth but a moment, but his mercy laſteth for ever. Tell me (my dear Heart) who hath ſo weakned you? Surely not a perſwaſion which came from him that called you. For why ſhould you waver? Why ſhould you waver, and be ſo heavy hearted? Whom look you on? On your ſelf? on your worthineſs? On your thankfulneſs? On that which God requireth of you, as faith, hope, love, fear, joy, &c. Then can you not but waver indeed: for what have you as God requireth? Believe you, hope you, love you, &c. as much as you ſhould do? No, no, nor ever can in this life. Ah, my dearly Beloved, have you ſo ſoon forgotten that which ever ſhould be had in memory? Namely, that when you would and ſhould be certain and quiet in Conſcience, then ſhould your Faith burſt throughout all things not only that you have in you, or elſe are in Heaven, Earth or Hell, until it come to Chriſt crucified, and the eternal ſweet mercies and goodneſs of God in Chriſt? Here, here is the reſting place, here is your Spouſes bed; creep into it, and in your arms of Faith embrace him, bewail your weakneſs, unworthineſs, your diffidence, &c. and you ſhall ſee he will turn to you. What ſaid I, You ſhall ſee? Nay, I ſhould have ſaid, You ſhall feel he will turn to you. You know that Moſes, when he went to the Mount to talk with God, he entred into a dark Cloud, and Helias had his face covered when God paſſed by. Both theſe dear Friends of God heard of God, but they ſaw him not, but you would be preferred before them. See now (my deart Heart) how covetous you are. Ah be thankful, be thankful. But God be praiſed your covetouſneſs is Moſes covetouſneſs. Well, with him you ſhall be ſatisfied. But when? Forſooth when he ſhall appear. Here is not the time of ſeeing, but as it were in a glaſs. Iſaak was deceived, becauſe he was not content with hearing only.

Pſalm. 23.

Pſalm. 90.

Pſalm. 125.

Though feeling fail, yet let hope hold faſt.

The eye of Faith muſt look upon nothing elſe but only Chriſt crucified.

Therefore to make an end of theſe many words, wherewith I fear me I do but trouble you from better exerciſes; inaſmuch as you are indeed the Child of God elect in Chriſt before the beginning of all times, inaſmuch as you are given to the cuſtody of Chriſt, as one of Gods moſt precious Jewels; inaſmuch as Chriſt is faithful, and hitherto hath all power, ſo that you ſhall never periſh, no, one hair of your head ſhall not be loſt: I beſeech you, I pray you, I deſire you, I crave at your hands with all my very heart, I ask of you with hand, pen, tongue and mind, in Chriſt, through Chriſt, for Chriſt, for his Name, Blood, Mercies, Power, and Truths ſake, my moſt entirely beloved Siſter, that you admit no doubting of Gods final mercies towards you, howſoever you feel your ſelf; but to complain to God, and crave of him, as of your tender and dear Father, all things, and in that time which ſhall be moſt opportune, you ſhall find and feel far above that your heart or the heart of any Creature can conceive, to your eternal Joy. Amen, Amen, Amen.

Learn here to put away doubting, all tender hearts that ſeek after Chriſt.

The good Spirit of God always keep us as his dear Children; he comfort you, as I deſire to be comforted, my dearly Beloved, for evermore, Amen.

I break up thus abruptly, becauſe our Common Prayer time calleth me. The Peace of Chriſt dwell in both our hearts for ever, Amen.

As for the Report of W. Po. if it be as you hear, you muſt prepare to bear it. It is written on Heavens door, Do well, and bear evil. Be content therefore to hear whatſoever the Enemy ſhall imagine to blot you withal. Gods Holy Spirit always comfort and keep you, Amen, Amen. This 8*th* of Auguſt, by him that in the Lord deſireth to you, as well and as much felicity as to his own heart.

The Poeſie written upon Heaven gates.

Here followeth another Letter of his written to the good Lady Vane, wherein he reſolveth certain queſtions which ſhe demanded. This Lady Vane was a ſpecial Nurſe, with a great ſupporter to her power of the godly Saints, which were impriſoned in Q. Maries time. Unto whom divers Letters I have both of Mr. Philpot, Careles, Trahern, Thomas Roſe, and of others more, wherein they render vnto her moſt grateful thanks for her exceeding goodneſs extended towards them, with their ſingular commendation and teſtimony alſo of her Chriſtian zeal towards Gods afflicted Priſoners, and to the verity of his Goſpel. She departed of late at Holborn, Anno 1568. whoſe end was more like a ſleep, than any death; ſo quietly and meekly ſhe deceaſed and parted hence in the Lord.

Commendation of the Lady Vane.

Note how God commonly rewardeth the helpers and friends of his Saints.

Amongſt other which wrote unto her, Mr. Bradford alſo ſent theſe Letters to the ſaid Lady; the tenor whereof here followeth.

To my good Lady Vane.

A Letter of M. Bradford written to the good Lady Vane, wherein he diſcuſſeth doubts concerning the coming to God.

THe true ſenſe and ſweet feeling of Gods eternal mercies in Chriſt Jeſus be ever more and more lively wrought in your heart by the Holy Ghoſt, Amen.

I moſt heartily thank you (good Madam) for your comfortable Letter; and whereas you would be adviſed what were beſt to be done on your behalf, concerning your three queſtions; the truth is that the queſtions are

Anno 1555.

The abomination of the Mass set forth. These questions were concerning the Mass wherein he desireth his judgement.

are never well seen, nor answered, until the thing whereof they arise be well considered, I mean until it be seen how great an evil the thing is. If it be once indeed in your heart perceived, upon probable and pithy places gathered out of Gods Book, that there was never thing upon the Earth so great, and so much an Adversary to Gods true service, to Christs Death, Passion, Priesthood, Sacrifice and Kingdom, to the ministery of Gods Word and Sacraments, to the Church of God, to Repentance, Faith, and all true godliness of Life, as that is whereof the questions arise (as most assuredly it is indeed) then cannot a Christian heart but so much the more abhor it, and all things that in any point might seem to allow it, or any thing pertaining to the same, by how much it hath the name of Gods service.

Again, your Ladiship doth know, that as all is to be discommended and avoided, which is followed or fled from in respect of our selves, in respect of avoiding Christs Cross: so the end of all our doings should be to Godwards, to his glory, to our Neighbours, to edification and good Example, whereof none can be given in allowing any of the three questions by you propounded. But because this which I write now is brief, and needeth the more consideration or explication; as I doubt not of the one in you, so from me by Gods grace you shall receive the other shortly. For I have already written a little Book of it, which I will send unto you, in the which you shall have your questions fully answered and satisfied, and therefore I omit to write any more hereabout presently; beseeching God, our good Father, to guide you as his dear Child with his Spirit of wisdom, power, and comfort, unto eternal life, that you may be strong, and rejoyce in him and with his Church, to carry Christs Cross, if he shall so think it need, 1 Pet. 1. Which is a thing to be desired, wished, and embraced, if we looked on things after the judgment of Gods Word, and tried them by that Touch-stone.

He meaneth his book which he calleth the hurt of hearing Mass.

If you be accustomed to think on the brevity, vanity, and misery of this life, and on the eternity, truth, and felicity of everlasting life; if you look on things after their ends, and not after their present appearance only; if you use your self to set Gods presence, power and mercy always before your eyes, to see them, as God by every Creature would you should; I doubt not but you shall find such strength and comfort in the Lord, as you shall not be shaken with all the power of Satan. Gods mercy in Christ be with you, and his good Spirit guide you for ever, Amen.

Another Letter to the Lady Vane.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to the foresaid Lady Vane.

AS to mine own Soul, I wish to your Ladiship grace and mercy from God our dear Father in Christ our Lord and Saviour.

I thank God that something he hath eased you, and mitigated his Fatherly correction in us both; I would to God he had done so much in the behalf of the grief of the Body to you, as he hath done to me. For as for the Soul, I trust you feel that which I pray God increase in you, I mean his Fatherly love, and grant that I may with you feel the same in such degree as may please him; I will not say as you feel, lest I should seem to ask too much at one time. God doth often much more plentifully visit with the sense of his mercy them that humble themselves under his mighty hand, and are sore exercised as you long have been) than others, which to the face of the World have a more shew and appearance.

Therefore I wish as I do, and that not only for mine own commodity, but also that I might occasion you to the consideration of the goodness of God, which I by your Letters do well espy; which is indeed the high-way, whereby as God increaseth his gifts, so sheweth he more lively his salvation, Psal. 50. 107. I have received Gods Blessing from you, the which I have partly distributed unto my three Fellow-Prisoners, Mr. Farrar, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Philpot, and the residue I will bestow upon four poor Souls which are imprisoned in the common Gaol for Religion also. As for mine own part, if I had need, I would have served my turn also. But because I had not, nor (I thank God) have not, I have been and will be your Almner in such sort as I have already advertized you. God reward you, and give you to find it spiritually and corporally. Because otherwise I cannot talk with you, therefore on this sort, as occasion and opportunity will serve, I am ready to shew my good will and desire of your help and furtherance in the Lord to everlasting life, whereunto God bring us shortly for his mercies sake. Amen.

Good Madam, be thankful to God, as I hope you be; be earnest in prayer, continue in reading and hearing Gods Word, and if Gods further Cross come, as therein God doth serve his Providence (for else it shall not come unto you) so be certain the same shall turn to your eternal joy and comfort, Amen.

John Bradford.

To my dear Friends and Brethren, R. and E. with their Wives and Families.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to two faithful Friends of his, one Roydon, and Eline.

THE comfort of Christ felt commonly of his Children in their Cross for his sake, the everlasting God work in both your hearts, my good Brethren, and in the hearts of both your Yoke-fellows, especially of good Mary, my good Sister in the Lord, Amen.

If I had not something heard of the hazard which you are in for the Gospels sake, if you continue the profession and confession thereof, as I trust you do and will do, and that unto the end, God enabling you, as he will doubtless for his mercies sake, if you hope in him (for this bindeth him, as David in Christs person witnesseth, Our Fathers hoped in thee, and thou deliveredst them, &c. Psal. 22.) yet by conjectures I could not but suppose (though not so certainly) the time of your suffering and probation to be at hand. For now is the power of darkness fully come upon this Realm most justly for our sins, and abusing the Light lent us of the Lord, to the setting forth of our selves more than Gods glory, that as well we might be brought into the better knowledge of our evils, and so heartily repent (which God grant us to do) as also we might have more feeling and sense of our sweet Saviour Jesus Christ, by the humbling and dejecting us, thereby to make us as more desirous of him, so him more sweet and pleasant unto us; the which thing the good Spirit of God work sensibly in all our hearts for Gods holy Names sake.

For this cause I thought it my duty, being now where I have some liberty to write (the Lord be praised) and hearing of you as I hear; to do that which I should have done, if I had heard nothing at all; that is, to desire you to be of good cheer and comfort in the Lord (although in the world you see cause rather to the contrary) and to go on forwards in the way of God whereinto you are entred, considering that the same cannot but so much more and more wax strait to the outward man, by how much you draw nearer to the end of it: even as in the travel of a Woman, the nearer she draweth to her delivery, the more her pains increase; so it goeth with us in the Lords way, the nearer we draw to our deliverance by death to our eternal felicity.

The nearer we come to our Journies end, travelling to Heaven, the straiter is the way. Example of the travel of a Woman. John 21.

Example whereof we have, I will not say, in the holy Prophets and Apostles of God, which when they were young girded themselves, and went in manner whither they would, but when they waxed old, they went girded of others, whither they would not, concerning the outward man; but rather and most lively in our Saviour Jesus Christ, whose life and way was much more painful to him towards the end, than it was at the beginning. And no marvel, for Satan can suffer something abide a man to begin well, and set forwards, but rather than he should go on to the end, he will vomit his gorge, and cast out floods to overflow him, before he will suffer that to come to pass.

Example of Christ and his Apostles.

Therefore as we should not be dismayed now at this world, as though some strange thing were happened unto us, in that it is but as it was wont to be to the godly, in that the Devil declareth himself after his old wont, in that we have professed no less, but to forsake the World and the Devil, as Gods very Enemies, in that we learned no less at the first, when we came to Gods School, than to deny our selves, and take up our Cross and follow our Master, which leadeth us none other way than he himself hath gone before us: as (I say) we should not be dismayed, so we should with patience and joy go forwards, if we set before us as present the time to come, like as the wife in her travel doth the deliverance of her Child, and as the Saints of God did, but especially our Saviour and pattern Jesus Christ; for the Apostle saith, He set before him the joy and glory to come, and therefore contemned the shame and sorrow of the Cross: so if we did, we should find at the length as they found.

The malice of the Devil no new thing.

Heb 12.

For

Godly counsel stirring us to the contempt of this transitory life.

For whom would it grieve which hath a long journey to go through a piece of foul way, if he knew that after that the way should be most pleasant, yea the journey should be ended, and he at his resting place most happy? Who will be afraid, or loath to leave a little pelf for a little time, if he knew he should shortly after receive most plentiful riches? Who will be unwilling for a little while to forsake his Wife, Children, or Friends, &c. when he knoweth he shall shortly after be associated unto them inseparably, even after his own hearts desire? Who will be sorry to forsake his life, which cannot but be most certain of Eternal life? Who loveth the shadow better than the Body? Who can love this life, but they that regard not the life to come? Who can desire the dross of this World, but such as be ignorant of the treasures of the everlasting joy in Heaven? I mean, who is afraid to dye, but such as hope not to live eternally? Christ hath promised pleasures, riches, joy, felicity, and all good things to them that for his sake lose any thing, and suffer any sorrow. And is he not true? How can he but be true? for guile was never found in his mouth.

Matth. 19.

1 Pet. 2.

Alas then, why are we so slack and slow, yea hard of heart to believe him, promising us thus plentifully eternal blisfulness, and are so ready to believe the World promising us many things, and paying us nothing? If we will curry favour now, and halt on both parts, then it promiseth us peace, quietness, and many others things else. But how doth it pay this gear? or if it pay it, with what quietness of conscience? Or if so; how long I pray you? Do not we see before our eyes, men to dye shamefully, I mean as rebels and other malefactors, which refuse to dye for Gods cause? What way is so sure a way to heaven, as to suffer in Christs cause: If there be any way on horse-back to Heaven, surely this is the way; By many troubles (saith the Apostle) we must enter into Heaven. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer persecution. For the World cannot love them that are of GOD; the Devil cannot love his enemies; the World will love none but his own: you are Christs, therefore look for no love here. Should we look for fire to quench our thirst? And as soon shall Gods true Servants find peace and favour in Antichrists regiment.

The flattering promises of this world, ill-favouredly performed.

Acts. 14. 2 Tim. 3.

Therefore (my dearly beloved) be stout in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on you his armour; stand in the liberty of Christ which you have learned; rejoyce that you may be counted worthy to suffer any thing for Gods cause: to all men this is not given. Your reward is great in Heaven, though in Earth ye find nothing. The journey is almost past, you are almost in the Haven. Hale on apace I beseech you, and merrily hoise up your sails. Cast your selves on Christ, who careth for you. Keep company with him now still to the end; he is faithful, and will never leave you, nor tempt you further then that he will make you able to bear; yea in the midst of the temptation he will make an out-scape. Now pray unto him heartily, be thankful of his indignation, rejoice in hope of the health you shall receive, & be mindful of us which are in the vaward, and by Gods grace trust in Christ to be made able to break the Ice before you, that you following may find the way more easie. God grant it may so be, Amen, Amen.

To bear the Cross with courage.

Out of prison by your Brother in Christ.
John Bradford.

To Mrs. Wilkinson.

A Letter of M. Bradford to Mr. Wilkinson.

ALmighty God our most loving Father, increase in your heart (my good Mother and dear Mistris in the Lord) his true knowledge and love in Christ, to the incouraging and comforting of your faith in these stormy days; as necessary unto us, so profitable if we persist unto the end, which thing God grant to us, Amen.

My right dearly beloved, I know not what other thing to Write unto you, than to desire you to be thankful to the Lord, in that amongst the not many of your calling and state, it pleaseth him to give you his rare blessing, I mean to keep you from all the filth wherewith our country is horribly defiled. This blessing assuredly is rare as you see. But now if he shall bless you with another blessing, which is more rare, I mean to call you forth as a Martyr, and a witness against this filth, I hope you will become double thankful. For a greater token commonly we have not to judge of our election and salvation, next to Christ and faith in him, than the Cross, especially when it is so glorious, as on this sort to suffer any thing, but chiefly loss of this life, which indeed is never found till it be so lost; except the grain of wheat fall and be dead, it remaineth fruitless.

Anno 1555.

The Cross a great token of Election.

You know that he which was rapt into the third Heaven, and did know what he wrote, doth say, That as the corn liveth not, except it be dead and cast into the Earth, so truly our bodies. And therefore the Cross should so little fear us, that even Death it self should altogether be desired of us, as the Taylor which putteth off our rags, and arayeth us with the royall robes of immortality, incorruption and glory. Great shame it should be for us, that all the whole creatures of God should desire, yea groan in their kind for our liberty, and we our selves to loath it, as doubtless we do, if for the Cross, yea for Death it self, we with joy swallow not up all sorrow that might let us from following the Lords calling, and obeying the Lords providence; whereby doubtless all Crosses, and Death it self, doth come, and not by hap or chance. In consideration whereof, right dear Mother, that this providence stretcheth it self so unto us, and for us, that even the hairs of our heads are numbred with God, not one of them to fall to our hurt; surely we declare our selves very faint in faith, if we receive not such comfort, that we can willingly offer our selves to the Lord, and cast our whole care upon his back, honouring him with this honour, that he is and ever will be careful for us, and all we have, as for his dear Children. Wherefore of good cheer even in the midst of these miseries, be thankful to the Lord, and prepare your self for a further triall; which if God send you, as I hope, so do you believe, that God therein will help and comfort you, and make you able to bear whatsoever shall happen. And thus much, having this opportunity, I thought good to write, praying God our Father to recompence into your bosome all the good that ever you have done, to me especially, and to many other, both in this time of trouble, and always heretofore.

Your own in the Lord,
John Bradford.

Another Letter written to certain godly persons, incouraging them to prepare themselves with patience to the Cross.

Another fruitful Letter of M. Bradford exhorting from the love of this world, to the patient bearing of the Cross.

GRacious God and most merciful Father, for Jesus Christs sake, thy dearly beloved Son, grant us thy mercy, grace, wisedom, and Holy Spirit to counsel, comfort, and guide us, in all our cogitations, words and works, to thy glory, and our everlasting joy and peace for ever, Amen.

In my last Letter you might perceive my conjecturing to be no less towards you, than now I have learned. But (my dearly beloved) I have learned none other thing than before I have told you would come to pass, if ye cast not away that which ye have learned. I do appeal to both your Consciences, whether herein I speak truth, as well of my telling (though not so often as I might and should, God forgive me) as also of your learning. Now God will try you, to make others to learn by you, that which ye learned by others, and by them which have suffered this day ye might learn (if already ye had not learned) that life and honour is not to be set by more than Gods commandment. They in no point for all that ever their ghostly Fathers could do, having Doctor Death to take their part, would consent, or seem to consent to the Popish Mass and Papisticall god, otherwise than in the days of our late King they had received. And this their faith they have confessed with their deaths, to their great glory, and all our comforts, if we follow them; but to our confusion, if we start back from the same. Wherefore I beseech you to consider, as well to praise God for them, as to go the same way with them, if God so will.

Now will he try your love whether ye ſet more by him than by his tokens, or no. If ye for his tokens ſake, that is for your home, houſe, goods, yea life, will go with the world, leſt ye ſhould loſe them, then be aſſured, your love, as he cannot but eſpy it to be a Stumpets love, ſo will he caſt it away with the world. Remember that he which will ſave his life ſhall loſe it, if Chriſt be true: but he which adventureth, yea loſeth his life, for the Goſpels ſake, the ſame ſhall be ſure to find it eternally. Do not ye know that the way to ſalvation, is not the broad way which many run in, but the ſtraight way which few now walk in?

Example of Moſes, forſaking Pharaohs houſe, to go with Gods People.

Gods love-tokens.

A Strumpet ſetteth more by her tokens, than by her lover.

Before Perſecution came, men might partly have ſtood in a doubt by the outward ſtate of the world with us (although by Gods Word it was plain) whether was the high way (for there were as many that pretended the Goſpel, as Popery:) but now the Sun is riſen, and the wind bloweth, ſo that the corn which hath not taken faſt root, cannot nor will not abide; and therefore eaſily ye may ſee the ſtraight way by the ſmall number that paſſeth thorow it. Who will now adventure their goods and life for Chriſt ſake, which yet gave his life for our ſakes? We are now become Gergeſites, that would rather loſe Chriſts than our Porkets. A faithful wife is never tried ſo to be, but when ſhe rejecteth and withſtandeth wooers. A faithful Chriſtian is then found ſo to be, when his Faith is aſſaulted.

In King Edwards time the high-way could not be known.

Matth. 8. Gergeſites ſet more by their Pigs, than by Chriſt.

If we be not able, I mean, if we will not forſake this world for Gods glory and Goſpels ſake, trow ye that God will make us able, or give us a will to forſake it for natures ſake? Dye ye muſt once, and leave all ye have (God knoweth how ſoon and when) will ye, or will ye not; and ſeeing perforce ye muſt do this, will ye not willingly now do it for Gods ſake?

If ye go to Maſs, and do as the moſt part doth, then may ye live at reſt and quietly; but if ye deny to go to it then ſhall ye go to priſon, loſe your goods, leave your Children comfortleſs, yea loſe your life alſo. But (my dearly Beloved) open the eyes of your faith, and ſee how ſhort a thing this life is, even a very ſhadow and ſmoke. Again, ſee how intolerable the puniſhment of hell fire is, and that endleſs. Laſt of all, look on the Joys incomprehenſible, which God hath prepared for all them world without end, which loſe either lands or goods for his Names ſake. and then do ye reaſon thus; If we go to Maſs, the greateſt enemy that Chriſt hath, though for a little time we ſhall live in quiet, and leave to our Children that they may live by herafter, yet ſhall we diſpleaſe God, fall into his hands (which is horrible to hypocrites) and be in wonderful hazard of falling from eternal joy into eternal miſery, firſt of ſoul, and then of body, with the Devil and all Idolaters.

The tranſitory pleaſures of this life, weighed with the endleſs puniſhment to come hereafter both of Body and Soul.

Again, we ſhall want peace of Conſcience, which ſurmounteth all the riches of the world: and for our Children, who knoweth whether God will viſit our Idolatry on them in this life? yea our houſe and goods are in danger of loſing, as our lives be through many caſualties: and when God is angry with us, he can ſend always, when he will, one mean or another to take all from us for our ſins, and to caſt us into care for our own ſakes, which will not come into ſome little trouble for his ſake.

On this ſort reaſon with your ſelves, and then doubtleſs God will work otherwiſe with you, and in you, than ye are ware of. Where now ye think your ſelves unable to abide perſecution, be moſt aſſured, if ſo be you purpoſe not to forſake God, that God will make you ſo able to bear his Croſs, that therein you ſhall rejoyce. Faithful is God (ſaith Paul) which will not tempt you further than he will make you able to bear, yea he will give you an out-ſcape in the Croſs, which ſhall be to your comfort. Think how great a benefit it is, if God will vouch you worthy this honour; to ſuffer loſs of any thing for his ſake. He might juſtly caſt moſt grievous plagues upon you, and yet now he will correct you with that Rod whereby you ſhall be made like to his Chriſt, that for ever ye may reign with him. Suffer your ſelves therefore now to be made like to Chriſt, for elſe ye ſhall never be made like unto him. The Devil would gladly have you now to overthrow that which godly ye have of long time profeſſed. Oh how would he triumph, if he could win his purpoſe? Oh how would the Papiſts triumph againſt Gods Goſpel in you? Oh how would you confirm them in their wicked Popery? Oh how would the poor Children of God be diſcomforted; if now you ſhould go to Maſs and other Idolatrous ſervice, and do as the world doth?

1 Cor. 10. God will give ability, not only to bear his Croſs, but alſo to rejoyce in bearing it.

Hath God delivered you from the ſweat to ſerve him ſo? Hath God miraculouſly reſtored you to health from your grievous Agues for ſuch a purpoſe? Hath God given you ſuch bleſſings in this world, and good things all the days of your life hitherto, and now of equity will ye not receive at his hands, and for his ſake, ſome evil? God forbid: I hope better of you. Vſe prayer, and caſt your care upon God; commit your Children into his hand; give to God your goods, bodies, and lives, as he hath given them, or rather lent them unto you. Say with Iob; God hath given, and God hath taken away. his name be praiſed for ever. Caſt your care upon him, Iſay, for he is careful for you; and take it amongſt the greateſt bleſſings of God, to ſuffer for his ſake. I truſt he hath kept you hitherto to that end.

A great bleſſing of God to ſuffer for his ſake.

And I beſeech thee, O merciful Father, for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, that, thou wouldeſt be merciful unto us, comfort us with thy grace, and ſtrengthen us in thy truth, that in heart we may believe, and in tongue boldly confeſs thy Goſpel, to thy glory, and our eternal ſalvation, Amen. Pray for me, and I by Gods grace will do the ſame for you.

John Bradford.

An admonition to certain Profeſſours of the Goſpel, to beware they fall not from it; in conſenting to the Romiſh Religion, by the example of other halting and double-faced Goſpellers.

Another Letter or admonition of M. Bradford to certain godly Profeſſors of Gods Truth.

THe peace of Chriſt, which is the true effect of Gods Goſpel believed (my dearly Beloved) be more and more plentifully perceived of you, through the grace of our dear Father, by the mighty working of the holy Spirit our comforter; Amen.

Though I have many Letters preſently to hinder me from writing unto you, yet being deſired, I could not but ſomething ſignifie my ready good will in this behalf ſo much as I may, when I cannot ſo much as I would.

You hear and ſee how Satan beſtirreth him, raging as a roaring Lion to devour us. You ſee and feel partly what ſtorms he hath raiſed up to drown the poor boat of Chriſt, I mean his Church. You ſee how terribly he traineth his ſouldiers, to give a fierce on-ſet on the vaward of Gods battle. You ſee how he hath received power of God, to moleſt Gods Children, and to begin at his Houſe. By reaſon whereof conſider two things; one, the cauſe on our behalf; the other, what will be the ſequel on ſtrangers.

For the firſt, if we be not blind, we cannot but well ſee that our ſins are the cauſe of all this miſery; our ſins, I ſay, which I would that every one of us would apply to our ſelves after the example of Jonas and David, turning over the wallet, that other mens offences might lye behind, and our own before. Not that I would excuſe other men, which exteriorly have walked much more groſsly than many of you have done; but that I would provoke you all as my ſelfe, to more hearty repentance and prayer. Let us more and more increaſe to know and lament our doubting of God, of his preſence, power, anger, mercy, &c.

Two things to be conſidered in the perſecution of Gods People.

Let us better feel and hate our ſelf-love, ſecurity, negligence, unthankfulneſs, unbelief, impatience, &c. and then doubtleſs the Croſs ſhall be leſs fearfull, yea it ſhall be comfortable, and Chriſt moſt dear and pleaſant; death then ſhall be deſired, as the diſpatcher of us out of miſery, and entrance into eternal felicity: and joy unſpeakable, the which is ſo much the more longed for, by how much we feel indeed the ſerpents bites, wherewith he woundeth our heels, that is, our outward Adam and Senſes. If we had, I ſay, a lively and true feeling of his poyſon, we could not but as rejoyce over our Captain that hath bruiſed his head, ſo be deſirous to follow his example, that is, to give our lives with him and for him, and ſo fill up his paſſions, that he might conquer and overcome in us and by us, to his glory and comfort of his Children.

Barneſt repentance maketh the Croſs more pleaſant. Coloſſ. 1.

Anno 1555.

If Gods Judgment be ſo ſharp to his Children, what will it be to his Enemies?

Now the ſecond (I mean the ſequel, or that which will follow on the ſtrangers) my dearly Beloved, let us well look upon. For if ſo be that God juſtly do thus give to Satan and his ſeed to vex and moleſt Chriſt and his penitent people; Oh what and how juſtly may he and will he give to Satan to intreat the wretchleſs and impenitent ſinners? If Judgments begin thus at Gods houſe, what will follow on them that be without, if they repent not: Certainly for them is reſerved the dregs of Gods Cup, that is Brimſtone, fire, and tempeſt intolerable. Now are they unwilling to drink of Gods Cup of afflictions, which he offereth common with his Son Chriſt our Lord, leſt they ſhould loſe their Pigs with the Gergeſites. They are unwilling to come into the way that bringeth to Heaven, even afflictions; they in their hearts cry, Let us caſt his yoke from us; thy walk two wayes, that is, thy ſeek to ſerve God and Mammon, which is unpoſſible; they will not come nigh the ſtrait way that bringeth to life; they ſet their eyes to behold preſent things only; they judge of Religion after reaſon, and not after Gods word; they follow the more part, and not the better; they profeſs God with their mouths, but in their hearts thay deny him or elſe they would ſanctifie him by ſerving him more than men; they partake with God, which would have all, giving part to the world, to the Romiſh rout, and Antichriſtian Idolatry now ſet abroad amongſt us publikly; they will have Chriſt, but none of his Croſs, which will not be; they will be counted to live godly in Chriſt, but yet they will ſuffer no perſecution; they love this world, where-through the love of God is driven forth of them; they ſavour of thoſe things that be of men, and not that be of God: Summa, they love God in their lips, but in their hearts, yea and in their deeds deny him, as well by not repenting thei evils paſt, as by continuing in evil ſtill, by doing as the world, the fleſh and the Devil willeth, and yet ſtill perchance they will pray, or rather prate, Thy will be done in earth, which is generally that every one ſhould take up his Croſs and follow Chriſt. But this is a hard ſaying, Who is able to abide it? Therefore Chriſt muſt be prayed to depart, leſt all the Pigs be drowned. The Devil ſhall have his dwelling again in themſelves rather than in their Pigs, and therefore to the Devil they ſhall go, and dwell with him in eternal perdition and damnation, even in hell fire, a torment endleſs, and above all cogitations incomprehenſible, if they repent not.

Matth. 8.

The doings and ways of the wicked deſcribed, and what is the end thereof.

Wherefore by them, my dearly Beloved, be admoniſhed to remember your profeſſion, how that in Baptiſm you made a ſolemn vow to forſake the Devil, the world, &c. You promiſed to fight under Chriſts ſtandard. You learned Chriſts Croſs afore you begun with A. B. C. Go to then, pay your vow to the Lord; fight like men, and valiant men under Chriſts ſtandard; take up your Croſs and follow your Maſter, as your Brethren, M. Hooper, Rogers, Taylor, and Sanders have done, and as now your Brethren, M. Cranmer, Latimer, Ridly, Farrar, Brad. ford, Hawks, &c, be ready to do. The Ice is broken before you, therefore be not afraid, but be content to dye for the Lord. You have no cauſe to waver or doubt of the Doctrine thus declared by the blood of the Paſtors. Remember that Chriſt ſaith; He that will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. And what ſhould it profit you to win the whole world, much leſs a little quietneſs, your goods, &c, and to loſe your own ſouls? Render to the Lord that he hath lent you, by ſuch means as he would have you render it, and not as you world. Forget not, Chriſts Diſciples muſt deny themſelves, as well concerning their will as concerning their wiſdom. Have in mind, that as it is no ſmall mercy to believe in the Lord, ſo it is no ſmall kindneſs of God towards you, to ſuffer any thing, much more death for the Lord. If they be bleſſed that dye in the Lord, how ſhall they be that dye for the Lord? Oh what a bleſſing is it to have death, due for our ſins, diverted into a demonſtration and teſtification of the Lords truth? Oh that we had a little of Moſes faith to look upon the end of the Croſs, to look upon the reward, to ſee continually with Chriſt and his people greater riches than the riches of Egypt. Oh let us pray that God would open our eyes to ſee his hid Manna, heavenly Jeruſalem, the Congregation of his firſt born, the melody of the Saints, the Tabernacle of God dwelling with men: then ſhould we run and become violent men, and ſo take the Kingdom of Heaven as it were by force. God our Father give us for his Chriſts ſake to ſee a little, what and how great joy he hath prepared for us, he hath called us unto, and moſt aſſuredly giveth us for his own goodneſs and truths ſake, Amen.

He doth imbolden them to take up Chriſts Croſs, and to follow him.

Bleſſed be they that dye in the Lord, but more bleſſed be they that dye for the Lord. The end and riches that follow the Croſs.

My dearly beloved, repent, be ſober, and watch in prayer, be obedient, and after your vocations, ſhew your obedience to the Higher Powers in all things that are not againſt Gods word, therein acknowledge the ſoveraign power of the Lord: howbeit, ſo that ye be no rebels, or rebelers for no cauſe; but becauſe with good conſcience you cannot obey, be patient, ſuffer, and the glory and good ſpirit of God ſhall dwell upon us. I pray you remember us your afflicted brethren, being in the Lords bonds for the teſtimony of Chriſt, and abiding the gracious hour of our dear and moſt merciful Father. The Lord for Chriſts ſake, give us merry hearts to drink luſtily of his ſweet cup, which daily we groan and ſigh for, lamenting that the time is thus prolonged, The Lord Ieſus give us grace to be thankful, and to abide patiently the provident hour of his moſt gracious will, Amen, Amen. From the Counter in the Poultry.

Yours in Chriſt, John Bradford.

To my good Brother John Careles, Priſoner in the Kings Bench.

A Letter of M. Bradford to J. Careles.

THE Father of mercy and God of all comfort, viſit us with his eternal conſolation, according to his great mercies in Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, Amen.

My very dear Brother, if I ſhall report the truth unto you, I cannot but ſignifie, that ſince I came into priſon, I never received ſo much conſolation as I did by your laſt Letter, the Name of God be moſt heartily praiſed therefore. But if I ſhall report the truth unto you, and as I have begun, ſpeak ſtill the verity, I muſt confeſs, that for mine unthankfulneſs to you-wards, and to God eſpecially I have more need of Gods merciful tidings, than I had ever heretofore. Ah that Satan envieth us ſo greatly; Ah that our Lord would tread his head under our feet ſhortly. Ah that I might for ever both my ſelf beware, and be a godly example to you and others to beware of unthankfulneſs. Good Brother Careleſs, we had more need to take heed, after a lightning of a foil than before. God therefore is to be praiſed even when he hideth, and that not of long, his cheerful countenance from us, leſt we being not expert how to uſe it as we ſhould do, do hurt more our ſelves thereby, ſo great is our ignorance and corruption. This, my good Brother and right dear to my very heart, I write unto you, as to one whom in the Lord I imbrace, and I thank God that you do me in like manner. God our Father more and more give us both his good Spirit, that as by Faith we may feel our ſelves united unto him in Chriſt, ſo by love we may feel our ſelves linked in the ſame Chriſt one to another, I to you, and you to me, we to all the Children of God, and all the Children of God to us, Amen, Amen.

After a lightning take heed of a foil.

Commend me to your good Brother Skelthrop, for whom I heartily praiſe my God, which hath given him to ſee his truth at the length, and to give place to it. I doubt but that he will be ſo heedy in all his converſation, that his old acquaintance may ever thereby think themſelves aſtray. Wo and wo again ſhould be unto us, if we by our example ſhould make men to ſtumble at the truth. Forget not ſalutations in Chriſt, as you ſhall think good to Trew, and his fellows. The Lord hath his time (I hope) for them alſo, although we perchance think otherwiſe. A drop maketh the ſtone hollow, not with once, but with often dropping: ſo if with hearty prayer for them, and good example, you ſtill and drop upon them as you can, you ſhall ſee Gods work at the length. I beſeech God to make perfect all the good he hath begun in us all, Amen. I deſire you all to pray for me the moſt unworthy priſoner of the Lord.

This Skelthrop was Free-will man.

The charitable ſpirit of Mr. Bradford in reducing them that be weak and ignorant.

To Mr. John Hall and his Wife, Priſoners in Newgate for the teſtimony of the Goſpel.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to M. Hall and his Wife in Newgate Priſon.

ALmighty God our heavenly Father through Jeſus Chriſt, be with you both, my dearly Beloved, as with his dear Children for ever, and ſo he bleſs you with his Holy Spirit, that you may in this your Croſs (for his cauſe doubtleſs) rejoyce and gladly take it up to bear it ſo long as he ſhall think good. I have heard (my good Brother and Siſter) how that God hath brought you both into his School-houſe (whereas both purpoſed by his leave to have played the Trewands) that thereby you might ſee his carefulneſs and love towards you. For if it be a token of a loving and careful Father for his Children, to prevent the purpoſe, and diſappoint the intent of his Children, purpoſing to depart a while from the School for fear of beating (which thing they would not do, if they did as much conſider the commodity of Learning which there they might get:) how ſhould you take this work of the Lord preventing your purpoſe, but as an evident ſign of love and fatherly carefulneſs that he beareth towards you? if he ſhould have winked at your wills, then would you have eſcaped beating, I mean the Croſs; but then ſhould you have loſt the commodity of learning that which your Father will now have you to learn and feel, and therefore hath he ſent to you his Croſs. He, I ſay, hath brought you where you be; and though your reaſon and wit will tell you, it is by chance or fortune, or otherwiſe, yet (my dearly Beloved) know for certain that, whatſoever was the means, God your Father was the worker hereof, and that for your weal, although otherwiſe your old Adam doth tell you, and you feel: yet I ſay of truth that your duty is to think of this Croſs, that as it is of Gods ſending, and cometh from him; ſo although your deſerts be otherwiſe, it is of love and fatherly affection for your weal and commodities ſake.

The Croſs cometh not without Gods ſending.

What commodity is hereby? you will perchance object. You are now kept to cloſe Priſon, you will ſay; your Family and Children be without good Over-ſeers; your ſubſtance diminiſheth by theſe means; your poverty will approach; and perchance more perils alſo, yea and loſs of life too. Theſe are no commodities, but diſcommodities, and that no ſmall ones; ſo that juſtly you would be glad to know what commodity can come to you by this Croſs, whereby cometh ſo great diſcommodities.

Worldly loſs recompenced with endleſs and perpetual gain by the Croſs.

To theſe things I anſwer, that indeed it it true you ſay of your Bodies, Families, Children, ſubſtance, poverty, life &c. Which things, if you would conſider a while with inward eyes, as you behold them with outward; then perhaps you ſhould find more eaſe. Do not you now by the inward ſenſe perceive that you muſt part from all theſe and all other commodities in the world? Tell me then, have not you this commodity by your Croſs, to learn to loath and leave the world, and to long for and deſire another world, where is perpetuity? You ought of your own head and free will to have (according to your profeſſion in Baptiſm) forſaken the world and all earthly things, uſing the world as though you uſed it not. Your heart ſet only upon your hoard in heaven, or elſe you could never be Chriſts true diſciples, that is to be ſaved, and be where he is. And trow you (my good hearts in the Lord) trow you, I ſay, that this is no commodity, by this Croſs to be compelled hereto, that you might aſſuredly enjoy with the Lord endleſs glory? How now doth God, as it were, Fatherly pull you by the ears, to remember your former offences concerning theſe things and all other things, that repentance and remiſſion might enſue? How doth God now compel you to call upon him, and to be earneſt in Prayer: Are theſe no commodities? Doth not the Scripture ſay, that God doth correct us in this World, becauſe we ſhall not be Damned with the World? That God chaſteneth every one whom he loveth? That the end of this correction ſhall be joy and holineſs? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That they are happy that ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, as you now do? That the glory and ſpirit of God is upon them? That, as you are now made like unto Chriſt in ſuffering, ſo ſhall you be made like him in reigning? Doth not the Scripture ſay, That you are now going the high and right way to Heaven? That your ſuffering is Chriſts ſuffering? My dearly Beloved, what greater commodities than theſe can a godly heart deſire?

Promiſes annexed to the Croſs.

Therefore ye are commanded to rejoyce and be glad, when ye ſuffer as now ye do: for through the goodneſs of God great ſhall be your reward: Where? Forſooth on earth firſt your Children; for now they are in Gods meer and immediate protection. Never was Father ſo careful for his Children, as God is for yours preſently. Gods bleſſing, which is more worth than all the world, you leave indeed to your Children: Though all your Providence for them ſhould be pulled away; yet God is not poor; he hath promiſed to provide for them moſt Fatherly. Caſt thy burthen upon me, ſaith he, and I will bear it. Do you therefore caſt them, and commend them unto God your Father, and doubt not that he will dye in your debt. He never was found unfaithful, and he will not now begin with you. The good mans ſeed ſhall not go a begging his Bread; for he will ſhew mercy upon thouſands of the poſterity of them that fear him. Therefore (as I ſaid) Gods reward firſt upon earth ſhall be felt by your Children even corporally, and ſo alſo upon you, if God ſee it more for your commodity, at the leaſt inwardly you ſhall feel it by quietneſs and comfort of Conſcience: and ſecondly, after this life you ſhall find it ſo plentifully, as the eye hath not ſeen, the ear hath not heard, the heart cannot conceive how great and glorious Gods reward will be upon your bodies, much more upon your ſouls. God open our eyes to ſee and feel this indeed. Then ſhall we think the Croſs which is a mean hereto to be commdious. Then ſhall we thank God that he would chaſtiſe us. Then ſhall we ſay with David; Happy am I that thou haſt puniſhed me: for before I went aſtray, but now I keep thy Laws.

Pſal. 55.

Care of Children to be left to Gods Providence. Pſal. 37.

Two things to be conſidered of all men that be under the Croſs.

This that we may do indeed (my dearly Beloved) let us firſt know that our Croſs cometh from God: Secondly, that it cometh from God as a Father, that is, to our weal and good. Therefore let us thirdly call to mind our ſins, and ask pardon. Whereto let us fourthly look for help certainly at Gods hand in his good time: help I ſay, ſuch as ſhall make moſt to Gods glory, and to the comfort and commodity of our ſouls and bodies eternally. This if we certainly conceive, then will there iſſue out of us hearty thankſgiving, which God requireth as a moſt precious ſacrifice. That we may all through Chriſt offer this, let us uſe earneſt prayer to our God and dear Father, who bleſs us, keep us, and comfort us under his ſweet Croſs for ever, Amen, Amen.

My dear hearts, if I could any way comfort you, you ſhould be ſure thereof, though my life lay thereon, but now I muſt do as I may, becauſe I cannot as I would. Oh that it would pleaſe our dear Father ſhortly to bring us where we ſhould never depart, but enjoy continually the bleſſed fruition of his heavenly preſence: Pray, pray that it may ſpeedily come to paſs, pray. To morrow I will ſend to you to know your eſtate; ſend me word what are the cheifeſt things they charge you with all. From the Counter.

To Mrs. Hall, Priſoner in Newgate, and ready to make anſwer before her Adverſaries.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to Mrs. Hall.

OUr moſt merciful God and Father through Chriſt Jeſus our Lord and Saviour, be merciful unto us, and make perfect the good he hath begun in us unto the end, Amen.

Matth. 5.

My dear Siſter, rejoyce in the Lord, rejoyce; be glad, I ſay, be merry and thankful, not only becauſe Chriſt ſo commandeth us, but alſo becauſe our ſtate wherein we are preſently, requireth no leſs, for we are the Lords witneſſes: God the Father hath vouchſafed to chuſe us amongſt many, to witneſs and teſtifie that Chriſt his Son is King, and that his Word is true. Chriſt our Saviour, for his loves ſake towards us, will have us to bear record that he is no uſurper nor deceiver of the people, but Gods Embaſſadour, Prophet, and Meſſias; ſo that of all dignities upon earth this is the higheſt. Greater honour had not his Prophets, Apoſtles, nor deareſt Friends, than to bear witneſs with Chriſt, as we now do. The world, following the counſel of their Sire Satan, would gladly condemn Chriſt and his verity, but lo the Lord hath choſen us to be his Champions to let his. As ſtout Souldiers therefore let us ſtand to our Maſter, who is with us, and ſtandeth on our right hand, that we ſhall not be much moved, if we hope and hang on his mercy; he is ſo faithful and true, that he will never tempt us farther than he will make us able to bear.

The blood of Martyrs ſtandeth for the verity of Chriſt againſt the World and Satan, who would ſuppreſs the ſame.

The Lord promiſeth, and will give them that ſtand in his defence, how and what to anſwer.

Therefore be not careful (for I hear ſay this day you ſhall be called forth) what you ſhall anſwer. The Lord which is true and cannot lye, hath promiſed, and will never fail nor forget it, that you ſhall have both what and how to anſwer, ſo as ſhall make his ſhameleſs Adverſaries aſhamed. Hang therefore on this Promiſe of God, who is an helper at a pinch, and a moſt preſent remedy to them that hope in him. Never was it ever heard of, or ſhall be, that any hoping in the Lord was put to foil.

A bleſſed thing ſeeing a man muſt needs dye, to dye for the Lord.

Therefore as I ſaid, I ſay again, Dear Siſter, be not only not careful for your anſwering, but alſo be joyful for your cauſe. Confeſs Chriſt, and be not aſhamed, and he will confeſs you, and never be aſhamed of you. Though loſs of goods and life be like here to enſue; yet if Chriſt be true (as he is moſt true) it is otherwiſe indeed: for he that loſeth his life, ſaith he, winneth it; but he that ſaveth it, loſeth it. Our ſins have deſerved many deaths. Now if God ſo deal with us, that he will make our deſerved death a demonſtration of his Grace, a teſtimonial of his Verity, a confirmation of his People, and overthrow of his Adverſaries; What great cauſe have we to be thankful? Be thankful therefore good Siſter, be thankful. Rejoyce and be merry in the Lord; be ſtout in his cauſe and quarrel, be not faint-hearted, but run out your race, and ſet your Captain Chriſt before your eyes. Behold how great your reward is. See the great glory, and the eternity of felicity prepared for you. Strive and fight lawfully, that you may get the Crown. Run to get the game, you are almoſt at your journeys end; I doubt not but our Father will with us ſend to you alſo, as he did to Helias a fiery Chariot, to convey us into his Kingdom. Let us therefore not be diſmayed, to leave our Cloak behind us, that is, our Bodies to aſhes. God will one day reſtore them to us like to the Body of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe coming is now at hand; Let us look for it and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh, Amen, Amen. The Lord of mercy, grant us his mercy, Amen. I pray you, pray for me, and ſo deſire my Brethren which be with you. Gods peace be with us all, Amen. Bleſſed be the dead that dye in the Lord; then how much more they that dye for the Lord?

4 Reg. 2.

Your Brother in bonds, J. Bradford.

To a Woman that deſired to know his mind, whether ſhe refraining from the Maſs, might be preſent at the Popiſh Mattins, or no.

I Beſeech Almighty God our heavenly Father to be merciful unto us, and to increaſe in you my good Siſter, the knowledge and love of his Truth, and at this preſent give me grace ſo to write to you ſomething of the ſame, as may make to his glory and our own comfort and confirmation in him, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

A reſolution of M. Bradford, whether a Chriſtian abſtaining from the Maſs, may hear the Popiſh Mattins, or no.

Whether you may come with ſafe Conſcience to the Church now, that is, to the Service uſed commonly, in part, as at Mattins, or at Evenſong, or no, is your deſire to have me to write ſomething for your further ſtay. My dearly Beloved, although your benefits towards me might perchance make you to think, that in reſpect thereof I would bear with that which elſe were not to be born withal; yet by Gods grace I am purpoſed, ſimply and without all ſuch reſpect in this matter, to ſpeak to you the truth according to my Conſcience, as I may be able to ſtand unto, when I ſhall come before the Lord.

Three Leſſons to be learned of every Chriſtian.

Firſt therefore, go about to learn perfectly the firſt Leſſon to be learned of all that profeſs Chriſt, that is, to deny your ſelf, and in nothing to ſeek your ſelf.

Secondly, learn after this, to begin at the next Leſſon to it, which is, to ſeek God in all things you do, and leave undone.

Thirdly, know that then you ſeek God, when in his ſervice you follow his Word, and not mans fantaſies, cuſtom, multitude, &c. and when with your Brother you follow the rule of Charity, that is, To do as you would be done by. In theſe is a ſum of all the counſel I can give you, if that hereto I admoniſh you of the Service now uſed, which is not according to Gods Word, but rather againſt Gods Word directly, and in manner wholly. So that your going to the Service, is a declaration that you have not learned the firſt Leſſon, nor never can learn it, ſo long as you go thither; therefore the ſecond Leſſon you ſhall utterly loſe, if you ceaſe not the ſeeking of your ſelf, that is, if for company, cuſtom, father or friend, life or goods, you ſeem to allow that which God diſalloweth. And this that you the better may perceive, I purpoſe by Gods grace briefly to ſhew.

Anno 1555.

Reaſons proving that no Chriſtian may come to the Popiſh Mattins and Evenſong, with a good Conſcience.

Firſt, the Mattins and Evenſong is in a Tongue forbidden publickly to be uſed in the Congregation that perceiveth not the Tongue. Read how Paul affirmeth it, to pray in an unknown Tongue, to be againſt Gods Commandment. This one (I trow) were enough, if nothing elſe were. For how can Gods glory be ſought, where his Word and Commandment is wilfully broken? How can charity to Man ſtand, when charity to God, which is obedience to his Word, is overthrown?

The Popes Service is in a Tongue unknown.

Again, both in Mattins and in Evenſong is Idolatry maintained for Gods ſervice; for there is Invocation and Prayer made to Saints departed this life, which robbeth God of that glory which he will give to none other.

The Popes Service is full of Idolatry. Eſay 5.

Moreover, this Service, and the ſetters forth of it condemneth the Engliſh Service as Hereſie, thereby falling into Gods Curſe, which is threatned to be all ſuch as call good evil, and evil good; whereof they ſhall be partakers that do communicate with them.

The Popes Service condemneth the Engliſh Service of Hereſie.

Beſides this, this Latin Service is a plain mark of Antichriſts Catholick Synagogue; ſo that the Communicants and Approvers of it thereby declare themſelves to be Members of the ſame Synagogue, and ſo ſhut off from Chriſt and his Church, whoſe exterior mark is the true adminiſtration of Gods Word and Sacraments.

The Popes Latin Service is a mark of Antichriſt.

Furthermore, the example of your going thither to allow the Religion of Antichriſt (as doubtleſs you do indeed, howſoever in heart you think) occaſioneth the obſtinate to be utterly intractable; the weak Papiſts to be more obſtinate, the ſtrong Goſpellers to be ſore weakened, and the weak Goſpellers to be utterly overthrown: which things, how great offences they be, no Pen is able to utter by Letters. All theſe evils you ſhall be guilty of, that company with theſe in Religion exteriorly, from whom you are admoniſhed to fly. If Chriſt be Chriſt, follow him: gather with him, leſt you ſcatter abroad. Serve God, not only in Spirit, but alſo in Body. Make not your Body, now a member of Chriſt, a member of Antichriſt. Come out from amongſt them, ſaith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing. Confeſs Chriſt and his Truth, not only in heart, but alſo in tongue, yea in very deed, which few Goſpellers do. Indeed they deny him, and therefore had need to tremble, leſt that Chriſt will deny them in the laſt day: the which day, if it were ſet before our eyes often, then would the pleaſures and treaſures of this World be but trifles.

The going to the Popes Service giveth ill example, and is offenſive.

Therefore good Siſter, often have it before your eyes, daily ſet your ſelf and your doings as before the Judgment Seat of Chriſt now, that hereafter you be not called into Judgment. Think that it will little profit you to win the whole World, and to loſe your own Soul. Mark Chriſts Leſſons well, He that will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it. The Father of Heaven commandeth you to hear Chriſt, and he ſaith, Follow me: this can you not do, and follow Idolatry or Idolaters. Fly from ſuch, ſaith the Scripture.

Chriſts Leſſon.

This God grant to you, to me, and to all Gods Children, Amen. Thus in haſte I have accompliſhed your requeſt. God grant that as you have done me much good bodily, ſo that this may be a little mean to do you ſome good ſpiritually, Amen. If time would ſerve, I would have written more at large. The ſecond of March, Anno 1555.

To the Worſhipful, and in God my moſt dear Friend, the Lady Vane.

An Epiſtle of M. Bradford to the Lady Vane, concerning the Seat of the Popes pretenced Primacy.

THe good Spirit of God our Father be more and more plentifully perceived of your good Ladiſhip, through the mediation and merits of our dear Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

Although your benefits towards me have deſerved at my hands the ſervice I can do for you, yet (Right Wor-Worſhipful and dearly beloved in the Lord) the true fear of God, and the love of his truth, which I perceive to be in you; ſpecially, and above all other things do bind me hereunto. This bearer hath told me that your deſire is to have ſomthing ſent to you concerning the uſurped Authority of the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome (which is undoubtedly that great Antichriſt, of whom the Apoſtles do ſo much admoniſh us) that you may have as well ſomthing the more to ſtay on, as alſo wherewith to anſwer the Adverſaries, becauſe you may perchance therein be ſomthing appoſed. To ſatisfie this your deſire, I will briefly go about, and ſo, that I will by Gods grace fully ſet forth the ſame, to enarm you to withſtand the Aſſaults of the Papiſts herein, if you mark well and read over again that which I now Write.

Anno 1555.

The Pope proved to be the great Antichriſt ſpoken of by the Apoſtles.

The Papiſts do place in preheminence over the whole Church, the Pope, thereby unplacing Chriſt, which is the head of the Church, that giveth life to the whole Body, and by his Spirit doth make lively every member of the ſame. This they do without all Scriptures. For where they bring in this ſpoken to Peter, Feed my Sheep; I would gladly know whether this was not commanded unto others alſo. As for that (which perchance they will urge) that he ſpake to Peter by name, if they had any learning, they would eaſily perceive how that it was not for any ſuch cauſe as they pretend, but rather by a threefold commandment to reſtore him to the honour of an Apoſtle, which he had loſt by his threefold denial. And how dare they interpret this word, My Sheep, my Lambs, to be the univerſal Church of Chriſt? I trow a man might eaſily by the like "reaſon prove that Peter himſelf had reſigned that which Chriſt had given to him, in exhorting his fellow Paſtors to feed the flock of Chriſt. Is not this pretty ſtuff? Becauſe Chriſt ſaith to Peter, Feed my Sheep, therefore he ought to rule the univerſal and whole Church of Chriſt? If Peter do truely Write unto others that they ſhould do the like, that is, Feed Chriſts flock, either he tranſlateth his right and Authority committed to him upon them, or elſe he doth participate or communicate with them; ſo that fooliſhly they go about to eſtabliſh that which hath no ground. Peter indeed was a ſhepherd of the Sheep, but ſuch a one as beſtowed his labour on them ſo far, as he could ſtretch himſelf by his Miniſtery. But the Papiſts prate that he had full power over all Churches: Wherein they may ſee Paul to improve them, for elſe he had done unjuſtly in denying him the ſuperiour place. Howbeit, who ever yet read that Peter did take any thing upon him over Churches committed to other men? Was not he ſent of the Church, & ſent of one not having rule over the reſt? I grant that he was an excellent inſtrument of God, and for the excellency of his gifts, whenſoever they met together, place therefore was commonly given unto him. But what is this to the purpoſe, to make him ruler and head over all the whole Church, becauſe he was ſo over a ſmall Congregation?

The Pope diſplacing Chriſt.

The words of Chriſt to Peter, Feed my Sheep, expounded.

"Argument. Chriſt bidding Peter, Feed his flock, made him head over the Univerſal Church; Ergo Peter bidding the Paſtors feed the flock of Chriſt made them alſo heads over the Univerſall Church. Abuna expetenſe ad ſuam excluſivam non valet conſequentia.

Chriſt made Peter a Shepherd: Ergo Chriſt made Peter only the chief Shepherd of his Sheep.

Peter was excellent for his gifts, and not for the place where he

But be it ſo that Peter had as much given to him as they do affirm: Who yet will grant that Peter had a patrimony given for his heirs? He hath left (ſay the Papiſts) to his ſucceſſors the ſelf ſame right which he received. O Lord God, then muſt his ſucceſſour be a Satan: for he received that title of Chriſt himſelf. I would gladly have the Papiſts to ſhew me one place of ſucceſſion mentioned in the Scriptures. I am ſure that when Paul purpoſely painteth out the whole Adminiſtration of the Church, he neither maketh one head, nor any Inheritable Primacy, and yet he is altogether in commendation of unity. After he hath made mention of one God the Father, of one Chriſt, of one Spirit, of one Body of the Church, of one Faith, and of one Baptiſm, [illegible] deſcribeth the mean and manner how unity is [illegible]kept; namely, becauſe unto every Paſtor is grace given after the meaſure wherwith Chriſt hath endued them. Where I pray you is now any title of Plenitudinis poteſtatis, of fulneſs of power? When he calleth home every one unto a certain meaſure, why did he not forthwith ſay one Pope? Which he could not have forgotten, if the thing had been as the Papiſts make it.

Argument. Peter left the title which he received, to his ſucceſſors. Peter received the title of Satan: Ergo, Peter left the title of Satan to his ſucceſſors

No mention of ſucceſſion nor primacy inheritable in all the Scripture.

But let us grant that perpetuitie of the primacie in the Church was eſtabliſhed in Peter; I would gladly learn why the ſeat of the Primacie ſhould be rather at Rome then elſewhere. Marry ſay they, becauſe Peters chair was at Rome: This is even like to this, that becauſe Moſes the greateſt Prophet, and Aaron the firſt Prieſt exerciſed their offices unto their Death in the deſert, therefore the principalleſt place of the Jewiſh Church ſhould be in the Wilderneſs. But grant them their reaſon that it is good; What ſhould Antioch claim? For Peters Chair was there alſo, wherein Paul gave him a Check, which was unſeemly and unmannerly done of Paul, that would not give place to his Preſident and better.

Rome more then to other place.

As Peters chair was in Rome, ſo Moſes chair was in the wilderneſs? Ergo the principallity of the Jewiſh Church ſhould be in the wilderneſs.

No, ſay the Papiſts, Rome muſt have this Authority becauſe Peter died there. But what if a man ſhould by probable conjectures ſhew, that it is but a fable which is feigned of Peters Biſhoprick at Rome? Read how Paul doth ſalute very many private perſons when he writeth to the Romans. Three years after his Epiſtle made, he was brought to Rome priſoner. Luke telleth, that he was received of the Brethren, and yet in all theſe, is no mention at all of Peter, which then by their ſtories was at Rome. Belike he was proud, as the Pope and Prelates be, or elſe he would have viſited Paul. Paul being in priſon in Rome did write divers Epiſtles, in which he expreſſeth the names of many which were in compariſon of Peter, but raſcal perſonages, but of Peter he ſpeaketh never a word. Surely if Peter had been there, this ſilence of him had been ſuſpicious. In the 2 Epiſtle to Timothy, Paul complaineth that no man was with him in his Defence, but all had left him. If Peter had been then at Rome, as they write, then either Paul had belied him, or Peter had played his Peters part, Luke 23. In another place, how doth he blame all that were with him, only Timothy excepted? Therefore we may well doubt whether Peter was at Rome Biſhop as they prate: for all this time and long before, they ſay that Peter was Biſhop there.

Peter had no Biſhoprick at Rome.

Conjectures that Peter was not at Rome.

2 Tim. 4. Phil. 2.

But I will not ſtir up coals in this matter. If Rome be the chief ſeat becauſe Peter died there, why ſhould not Antioch be the ſecond? Why ſhould not Iames and John which were taken with Peter to be as Pillars? Why, I ſay, ſhould not their ſeats have honour next to Peters ſeat? Is not this gear prepoſterous, that Alexandria where Mark (which was but one of the Diſciples) was Biſhop, ſhould be preferred before Epheſus, where John the Evangeliſt taught and was Biſhop, and before Jeruſalem, where not only James taught and died Biſhop, but alſo Chriſt Jeſus our Lord and High Prieſt for ever, by whom being Maſter, I hope, honour ſhould be given to his chair, more then to the chair of his Chaplains?

If Peters chair make the primacie: why might not Antioch claim as much as Rome, where he ſate firſt?

I need to ſpeak nothing how that Paul telleth Peters Apoſtleſhip to concern rather Circumciſion or the Jews, and therefore properly pertaineth not to us. Neither do I need to bring in Gregorius the firſt Biſhop of Rome, which was about the year of our Lord 600. who plainly in his works doth write that this title of Primacy, and to be head over all Churches under Chriſt, is a title meet and agreeing only to Antichriſt, and therefore he calleth it a prophane, a miſchievous, and an horrible title. Whom ſhould we believe now, if we will neither believe Apoſtle nor Pope?

Peters Apoſtleſhip was over the circumciſed, and not over the Gentiles.

The title of primacy a foretoken of Antichriſt.

If I ſhould go about to tell how this name was firſt gotten by Phocas, I ſhould be too long. I purpoſe God willing to ſet it forth at large in a work which I have begun of Antichriſt, if God for his mercies ſake give me life to finiſh it. For this preſent therefore I ſhall deſire your Ladyſhip to take this in good part. If they will needs have the Biſhop of Rome to be acknowledged for the head of the Church, then will I urge them that they ſhall give us a Biſhop. But they obtrude unto us a butcher rather, or a biteſheep, then a Biſhop. They brag of Peters ſucceſſion, or wherein doth the Pope and Chriſt agree? How ſupplyeth he Peters Miniſtery, that boaſteth of his ſucceſſion? Therefore to begin withal, which I will uſe preſently for a concluſion, if the Papiſts will have the Biſhop of Rome ſupreme head of the Church of Chriſt in Earth, they muſt, afore they attain this, give us a Biſhop in deed, & not in name. For whoſoever he be that will make this the bond of unity, whatſoever the Biſhop of Rome be, ſurely

How the title of primacy firſt came up, and by whom.

The Biſhop of Rome ſeemeth indeed rather a butcher then a Biſhop

If they will needs make the Biſhop of Rome the ſupreme head, they muſt firſt prove him a Biſhop indeed and not in name.

No cauſe why any perpetuity of primacy ſhould belong to this muſt needs follow, that they do nothing elſe but teach a moſt wicked defection, and departing from Chriſt.

But of this, if God lend me life, I purpoſe to ſpeak more at large hereafter. Now will I betake your Ladyſhip unto the tuition of God our Father, and Chriſt our only Head, Paſtor and Keeper, to whom ſee that you cleave by true Faith, which dependeth only upon the Word of God; which if you do follow as a lantern to your feet, and a light to your ſteps, you ſhall then avoid darkneſs, and the dangerous deeps whereinto the Papiſts are fallen by the Judgment of God, and ſeek to bring us into the ſame dungeon with them, that the blind following the blind, they both may fall into the ditch: out of the which God deliver them according to his good will, and preſerve us for his Names ſake, that we being in his light, may continue therein, and walk in it whilſt it is day; ſo ſhall the night never overpreſsus, we going from light to light, from verute to vertue, from Faith to Faith, from glory to glory, by the governance of Gods good Spirit, which God our Father give unto us all fro ever, Amen.

Your Brother in bonds for the teſtimony of Ieſus Chriſt,
John Bradford.

He wrote alſo another fruitful Letter to this R. Hopkins, which you may read in the book of Letters of the Martyrs.

Here followeth another Letter of M. Bradford, to one Richard Hopkins, Sheriff ſomtimes of Coventry, and yet being (as I hear ſay) alive. This Hopkins, whom Mr. Bradford commendeth ſo much in this Letter, during the time of his Sheriffaltie was detected and accuſed, by certain malignant Adverſaries, of matter pertaining to Religion. What matter it was, I am not yet certainly informed, unleſs it were for ſending and lending unto a thief, being then in priſon ready to be hanged, a certain Engliſh Book of Scripture for his Spirituall comfort.

Whereupon, or elſe upon ſome ſuch like matter, he being maliciouſly accuſed, was ſent for and committed to the Fleet, and there endured a ſufficient time, not without great peril of life. Notwithſtanding, the ſaid Hopkins being at length delivered out of priſon, following this Counſel of Mr. Bradford, and minding to keep his Conſcience pure from idolatry, was driven with his Wife and eight young Children, to avoid the Realm, and ſo, leaving all other worldly reſpects, with his great loſs and damage went into High-Germany, where he continued in the City of Baſil, till the Death of Queen Mary; being like a good Tobias, to his power a friendly helper, and a comfortable reliever of other Engliſh Exiles there about him, Gods holy bleſſing ſo working with him therefore, that in thoſe far Countries neither he fell in any great decay, neither any one of all his houſhold, during all that time there, miſcarried, but ſo many as he brought out, ſo many he recarried home again, yea and that with advantage, and Gods plenty withal upon him. Now the Letter Written to this Richard Hopkins by Mr. Bradford, is this.

A Letter to Maſter Richard Hopkins, then Sheriff of Coventry, and priſoner in the Fleet, for the faithful and conſtant confeſſing of Gods Holy Goſpel.

A Letter of M. Bradford to R. Hopkins priſoner the ſame time for his Conſcience.

DEarely beloved in the Lord, I wiſh unto you, as unto mine own Brother, yea as to mine own heart root, Gods mercy, and the feeling of the ſame plentifully in Chriſt our ſweet Saviour, who gave himſelf a ranſom for our ſins, and price for our redemption, praiſed therefore he his Holy Name for ever and ever. Amen.

I will not go about to excuſe my ſelf for not ſending unto you hitherto, ſuffering for the Lords ſake as you do, to the comfort of me and all that love you in the Truth; but rather accuſe my ſelf both before God and you, deſiring of you forgiveneſs, and with me to pray to God for pardon of this my unkind forgetting you, and all other my ſins, which I beſeech the Lord in his Mercy to do away for his Chriſts ſake. Amen.

Now to make amends to you ward, I would be glad if I could: but becauſe I cannot, I ſhall heartily deſire you to accept that will, and this which I ſhall now write unto you thereafter; I mean, after my will and not after the deed to accept and take it. At this preſent, my dear heart in the Lord, you are in a bleſſed ſtate, although it ſeem otherwiſe to you, or rather unto your old Adam, the which I dare now be ſo bold as to diſcern from you, becauſe you would have him not only diſcerned, but alſo utterly deſtroyed. For if God be True, then is his Word True.

Anno 1555.

Now his word pronounceth of your ſtate that it is happy, therefore it muſt needs be ſo. To prove this, I think it need not: for you know that the Holy Ghoſt ſaith, That they are happy which ſuffer for Righteouſneſs ſake, and that Gods Glory and Spirit reſteth on them which ſuffer for Conſcience to God. Now this you cannot but know, that this your ſuffering is for Righteouſneſs ſake, and for Conſcience to God-wards, for elſe you might be out of trouble even out of hand. I know in very deed that you have felt and do feel your unthankfulneſs to God, and other ſins, to witneſs to you, that you have deſerved this impriſonment, and lack of liberty, betwixt God and your ſelf, and I would you ſo would confeſs unto God in your prayers, with petition for pardon and thankſgiving, for his correcting you here. But you know that the Magiſtrates do not perſecute in you your ſins, your unthankfulneſs, &c. But they perſecute in you Chriſt himſelf, his Righteouſneſs, his verity, and therefore happy be you that have found ſuch favour with God your Father, to accompt you worthy to ſuffer for his ſake, in the ſight of man; ſurely you ſhall rejoyce therefore one day with a joy unſpeakable, in the ſight of man alſo.

Martyrs perſecuted not for their ſins, but for Chriſt only, and the Goſpel.

You may think your ſelf born in a bleſſed time, that have found this grace with God, to be a veſſel of honour to ſuffer with his Saints, yea with his Son. My beloved, God hath not done ſo with many. The Apoſtle ſaith, Not many noble, not many rich, not many wiſe in the World, hath the Lord God choſen. Oh then what cauſe have you to rejoyce, that amongſt the not many, he hath choſen you to be one? For that cauſe hath God placed you in your office, that therefore ye might the more ſee his ſpecial dignation and love towards you. It had not been ſo great a thing for Mr. Hopkins to have ſuffered as Mr. Hopkins, as it is for Mr. Hopkins alſo to ſuffer as Maſter Sheriff. Oh happy day that you were made Sheriff! by the which as God in this World would promote you to a more honourable degree, ſo by ſuffering in this room he hath exalted you in Heaven, and in the ſight of his Church and Children, to a much more excellent glory. When was it read that a Sheriff of a City hath ſuffered for the Lords ſake? Where read we of any Sheriff that hath been caſt into priſon for Conſcience to God-ward? How could God have dealt more lovingly with you, then herein he hath done? To the end of the World it ſhall be written for a memorial to your praiſe, that Richard Hopkins Sheriff of Coventry, for Conſcience to do his Office before God, was caſt into the Fleet, there kept priſoner along time. Happy and twice happy are you, if herefore you may give your life. Never could you have attained to this promotion on this ſort out of that Office. How do you preach now, not only to all men, but ſpecially to Magiſtrates in this Realm? Who would ever have thought that you ſhould have been the firſt Magiſtrate that for Chriſts ſake ſhould have loſt any thing? As I ſaid before, therefore I ſay again, that your ſtate is happy. Good Brother, before God I write the Truth unto you, my Conſcience bearing me witneſs that you are in a moſt happy ſtate with the Lord, and before his ſight.

1 Cor. 1.

R. Hopkins the firſt Magiſtrate that ſuffered for his Conſcience.

Be thankful therfore, rejoyce in your trouble, pray for patience, preſevere to the end, let patience have her perfect work. If you want this, Wiſdom and Power, ask it of God, who will give it to you in his good time. Hope ſtill in him, yea if he ſhould ſlay you, yet truſt in him with Job, and you ſhall perceive that the end will be to find him merciful and full of compaſſion: for he will not break promiſe with you, which hitherto did never ſo with any. He is with you in trouble, he heareth you calling upon him, yea before you call, your deſires are not only known, but accepted through Chriſt. If now and then he hide his face from you, it is but to provoke your appetite, to make you the more to long for him. This is moſt true, He is coming, and will come, he will not be long. But if for a time he ſeem to tarry, yet ſtand you ſtill, and you ſhall ſee the wonderful works of the Lord. Oh beloved, wherefore ſhould you be heavy? Is not Chriſt Emmanuel, God with us? ſhall you not find that as he is true in ſaying, In the World you ſhall have trouble; ſo is he in ſaying, In me you ſhall have comfort? He doth not ſwear only that trouble will come, but withal he ſweareth that comfort ſhall enſue. And what comfort? Such a comfort as the eye hath not ſeen, the Ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man can conceive. O great comfort! who ſhall have this? Forſooth they that ſuffer for the Lord. And are not you one of them? Yea verily are you. Then, as I ſaid, happy, happy, and happy again are you, my dearly beloved in the Lord. You now ſuffer with the Lord, ſurely you ſhall be glorified with him. Call upon God therefore in your trouble, and he will hear you, yea deliver you in ſuch ſort, as moſt ſhall make both to his and your glory alſo. And in this calling I heartily pray you to pray for me your fellow in affliction. Now we be both going in the high way to Heaven: for by many afflictions muſt we enter in thither, whither God bring us for his mercies ſake, Amen, Amen.

Your fellow in affliction, John Bradford.

To my good Siſter Miſtreſs Elizabeth Brown.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford to Miſtreſs Brown now called Miſtreſs Ruſhbrough.

GOod Siſter, God our Father make perfect the good he hath begun in you unto the end.

I am affraid to write unto you becauſe you ſo over charge your ſelf at all times, even whenſoever I do but ſend to you commendations. I would be more bold on you then many others, and therefore you might ſuſpend ſo great tokens till I ſhould write unto you of my need; which thing doubtleſs I would do if it urged me. Dear Siſter, I ſee your unfained love to me wards in God, and have done of long time, the which I do recompence with the like, and will do by God's grace ſo long as I live, and therefore I hope not to forget you, but in my poor prayers to have you in remembrance, as I hope you have me. Otherwiſe I can do you no ſervice, except it be now and then by my writing to let you from better exerciſe; where yet the end of my writing is to excite and ſtirr up your heart more earneſtly to go onwards in your well begun enterpriſe. For you know none ſhall be crowned, but ſuch as ſtrive lawfully, and none receiveth the gleve, but thoſe that run to the appointed mark. None ſhall be ſaved but ſuch as perſiſt and continue to the very end.

Heb. 10.

Therefore, Dear Siſter, remember that we have need of patience, that when we have done the good will of God, we may receive the promiſe. Patience and perſeverance be the proper notes, whereby Gods Children are known from counterfeits. They that perſevere not, were always but Hypocrites. Many make godly beginnings, yea their progreſs ſeemeth Marvelous, but yet after in the end they fail. Theſe were never of us, ſaith Saint John: for if they had been of us, they would have continued unto the very end.

Wholeſom leſſons of life.

Go to now therefore mine own beloved in the Lord, as you have well begun, and well gone forward, ſo well perſiſt, and happily end, and then all is yours. Though this be ſharp and ſower, yet it is not tedious and long. Do all that ever you do, ſimply for God, and as to God; ſo ſhall neyther unkindneſs nor any other thing make you to leave off from well doing, ſo long as you may do well. Accuſtom your ſelf now to ſee God continually, that he may be all in all unto you. In good things behold his mercy, and apply it unto your ſelf. In evil things and plagues behold his judgments, where through learn to fear him. Beware of Sin, as the Serpent of the Soul, which ſpoileth us of all our ornature and ſeemly apparel in Gods ſight. Let Chriſt Crucified be your book to ſtudy on, and that both night and day. Mark your Vocation, and be diligent in the works thereof. Uſe hearty and earneſt prayer, and that in Spirit. In all things give thanks to God our Father through Chriſt. Labour to have here life everlaſting begun in you: for elſe it will not be elſewhere enjoyed. Set Gods judgment often before your eyes, that now examining your ſelf, you may make diligent ſute, and obtain, never to come into judgment. Uncover your evils to God, that he may cover them. Beware of this Antichriſtian Traſh: defile not your ſelf in Soul or Body therewith, but accompliſh holineſs in the fear of God, and bear no Yoak with unbelievers. Look for the coming of the Lord which is at hand; by earneſt prayer and godly life haſten it. God our Father accompliſh his good work in you, Amen. Commend me to my good Mother Miſtreſs Wilkinſon, and to my very dear Siſter Miſtreſs Warcup. I ſhall daily commend you all to God, and I pray you do the like for me.

John Bradford.

To a Friend of his, Inſtructing him how he ſhould Anſwer his Adverſaries.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to his friend, with inſtructions how to anſwer his adverſaries.

MY good Brother, our merciful God and dear Father through Chriſt, open your eyes effectually to ſee, and your heart ardently to deſire the everlaſting joy which he hath prepared for his ſlaughter-ſheep, that is, for ſuch as ſhrink not from his truth for any ſuch ſtorms ſake Amen.

When you ſhall come before the Magiſtrates to give an anſwer of the hope which is in you, do it with all reverence and ſimplicity. And becauſe you may be ſomthing afraid by the power of the Magiſtrates and cruelty which they will threaten againſt you, I would you ſet before you the good Father Moſes to follow his example: for he ſet the inviſible God before his eyes of Faith, and with them looked upon God and his glorious Majeſtie and power, as with his corporal eys he ſaw Pharoah and all his fearful terrors. So do you my dearly beloved: let your inward eyes give ſuch light unto you, that as you know you are before the Magiſtrates, ſo and much more, you and they alſo are preſent before the Face of God, which will give ſuch Wiſedom to you, fearing him and ſeeking his praiſe, as the Enemies ſhall wonder at; and further, he will ſo order their hearts and doings, that they ſhall, will they nill they, ſerve Gods Providence towards you (which you cannot avoid though you would) as ſhall be moſt to his glory, and your everlaſting comfort.

Example of Moſes anſwering before K. Pharoah.

Therefore, my good Brother, let your whole ſtudy be only to pleaſe God: put him always before your eys, for he is on your right hand leſt you ſhould be moved; he is faithful, and never will ſuffer you to be tempted above that he will make you able to bear. Yea, every hair of you head he hath numbred, ſo that one of them ſhall not periſh without his good will, which cannot but be good unto you, in that he is become your Father through Chriſt: and therefore as he hath given you to believe in him (God increaſe his belief in us all) ſo doth he now gracieuſly give unto you to ſuffer for his names ſake: the which you ought with all thankfulneſs to receive, in that you are made worthy to drink of the ſelf ſame cup, which not only the very Sons of God have drank of before you, but even the very natural Son of God himſelf hath brought you good luck! Oh he of his mercy make us thankful to pledge him again, Amen.

Inſtructions how to anſwer, and to behave himſelf before the Judges.

Becauſe the chiefeſt matter they will trouble you, and go about to deceive you withall, is the Sacrament, not of Chriſts Body and Blood, but of the Altar as they call it, thereby deſtroying the Sacrament which Chriſt inſtituted. I would you noted theſe two things: Firſt, that the Sacrament of the Altar which the Prieſt offereth in the Maſs and eateth privately with himſelf, is not the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood inſtituted by him, as Chriſts inſtitution plainly written and ſet forth in the Scriptures, being compared to their uſing of it, plainly doth declare.

Again, if they talk with you of Chriſts Sacrament inſtituted by him, whether it be Chriſts Body or no: anſwer them, that as to the eys of your reaſon, to your taſte and corporal ſenſe it is Bread and Wine, and therefore the Scripture calleth it after the Conſecration ſo: even ſo to the eys, taſte, and ſenſe of your Faith, which aſcendeth to the Right Hand of God in Heaven, where Chriſt ſitteth, it is in very deed Chriſts Body and Blood, which ſpiritually your Soul feedeth on to everlaſting life in Faith, and by Faith, even as your Body preſently feedeth on the Sacramental Bread and Sacramental Wine.

By this mean, as you ſhall not allow tranſubſtantation, nor none of their Popiſh Opinions: ſo ſhall you declare the Sacrament to be a matter of Faith, and not of reaſon, as the Papiſts make it. For they deny Gods Omnipotency, in that they ſay Chriſt is not there, if Bread be there: but Faith looketh on the Omnipotency of God, joyned with his promiſe, and doubteth not but that Chriſt is able to give that he promiſeth us ſpiritually by Faith, the Bread ſtill remaining in ſubſtance, as well as if the ſubſtance of Bread were taken away: for Chriſt ſaith not in Chriſt is able to keep his promiſe in the Sacrament, the ſubſtance of Bread ſtill remaining. The Papiſts deny the Omnipotency of God and how.

any

any place this is no Bread. But of this gear God shall instruct you, if you hang on his promise, and pray for the power and Wisdom of his Spirit, which undoubtedly as you ere bound to look for, praying for it, so he hath bound himself by his promise to give it: the which thing he grant unto us both, and to all his People, for his names sake, through Christ our Lord, Amen.

John Bradford.

To certain godly men, whom he exhorteth to be patient under the Cross, and constant in the true doctrine which they had professed.

A Letter, or exhortation of Mr. Bradford to certain friends, to be patient under the Cross.

MY dearly beloved in the Lord, as in him I wish you well to fare, so I pray God I and you may continue in his true service, that perpetually we may enjoy the same welfare, as here in hope, so in Heaven indeed, and eternally.

You know this World is not your Home, but a Pilgrimage and place wherein God trieth his Children: and therefore as it knoweth you not, nor can know you, so I trust you know not it, that is, you allow it not, nor in any point will seem so to do, although by many you be occasioned thereto. For this hot Sun, which now shineth, burneth so sore, that the corn which is sown upon sand and stony ground, beginneth to wither, that is, many which before times were taken for hearty Gospellers, begin now for the fear of afflictions to relent, yea to turn to their vomit again, thereby declaring that though they go from among us, yet were they never of us: or else they would have still tarried with us, and neither for gain nor loss have left us, either in word or in deed. As for their heart (which undoubtedly is double, and therefore in danger of Gods curse) we have as much with us, as the Papists have with them, and more too by their own judgment. For they playing wily beguile themselves, think it enough inwardly to favour the truth, though outwardly they curry favour, What though with my Body, say they, I do this or that? God knoweth my heart is whole with him.

Backsliding of Gospellers.

Ah Brother, if thy heart be whole with God, why doest not thou confess and declare thy self accordingly by word and fact? Either that, which thou sayest thou believest in thy heart, is good or no. If it be good, why art thou ashamed of it? If it be evil, why doest thou keep it in thy heart? Is not God able to defend thee, adventuring thy self for his cause? Or will he not defend his worshippers? Doth not the Scripture say, that the eys of the Lord are on them that fear him, and trust in his mercy? And whereto? Forsooth to deliver their Souls from Death, and to feed them in the time of hunger.

Ministers of God. Psal. 33.

If this be true, as it is most true, why are we afraid of Death, as though God could not comfort or deliver us, or would not, contrary to his promise? Why are we afraid of the loss of our goods, as though God would leave them that fear him destitute of all good things, and so do against his most ample promises? Ah Faith, Faith, how few feel thee now adays? Full truely said Christ, that he should scarcely find Faith when he came on Earth. For if men believed these promises, they would never do any thing outwardly, which inwardly they disallow. No example of men, how many soever they be, or how learned soever they be, can prevail in this behalf: for the pattern which we must follow is Christ himself, and not the more company or custom. His Word is the lantern to lighten our steps, and not learned men. Company and custom are to be considered according to the thing they allow. Learned men are to be listned to and followed according to Gods lore and law; for else the more part goeth to the Divel. As custom causeth errour & blindness, so learning, if it be not according to the light of Gods Word, is poyson, and learned men most pernicious. The Divel is called Demon for his cunning, and the Children of the World are much wiser then the Children of light in their generation: and I know the Divel and his darlings have always for the most part more helps in this life then Christs Church and her Children. They (the Divel and his Synagogue I mean) have custom, multitude, unitie, antiquitie, learning, power, riches, honour, dignitie and promotions plenty, as always they have had, and shall have commonly & for the most part until Christs coming, much more then the true Church hath presently, heretofore hath had, or here after shall have. For her glory, riches, and honour is not here; her Triall, Cross, and warfare is here.

Luke 18. Lack of faith.

Psal. 119. Learning to be followed, so far as it concurreth with Gods Word.

Luke 15.

The Synagogue of the Divel more furnished with worldly helps then the Church of Christ.

And therefore, my dear hearts in the Lord, consider these things accordingly. Consider what you be, not Worldings, but Gods Children. Consider where you be, not at Home, but in a strange Country. Consider among whom you are conversant, even in the midst of your enemies, & of a wicked generation, and then I trust you will not much muse at affliction. Which you cannot be without, being as you be, Gods Children, in a strange Countrey, and in the midst of your enemies, except you would leave your Captain Christ, and follow Satan for the muck of this world, rest & quietness, which he may promise you, and you indeed think you shall receive it by doing as he would have you to do: My sweet hearts, he is not able to pay that he promiseth. Peace and warr come from God, riches and poverty, wealth and woe. The Divel hath no power but by Gods permission. If then God permit him a little on your goods, Body or life, I pray you tell me what can much hurt you, as Peter saith, you being followers of godlines? Think you that God will not remember you in his time as most shall be to your comfort? Can a woman forget the Child of her womb? And if she should, yet will not I forget thee (saith the Lord). Look upon Abraham in his exile and misery, look upon Jacob, Ioseph, Moses, David, the Prophets, Apostles, and all the godly from the beginning: and my good Brethren, is not God the same God? Is he a changling? you have heard of the patience of Job (saith Saint James) and you have seen the end, how that God is merciful, patient and long suffering: even so I say unto you that you shall find accordingly, if so be you be patient, that is, if so be you fear him, set his Word before you, serve him thereafter, and if he lay his Cross on you, you bear it with patience: the which you shall do when you consider it not according to the present sense, but according to the end, Heb. 12. 1.

What we be. Where we be. Amongst whom we be.

Jacob.

Therefore I heartily beseech you, and out of my bonds which I suffer for your sake, pray you mine own sweet hearts in the Lord, that you would cleave in heart and humble obedience to the doctrine taught you by me, and many other my Brethren. For we have taught you no fables nor tales of men, or our own fantasies, but the very Word of God, which we are ready with our lives (God so enabling us, as we trust he will) to confirm, and by the shedding of our Bloods, in all patience and humble obedience to the superiour powers, to testifie and seal up, as well that you might be more certain of the doctrine, as that you might be ready to confess the same before this wicked World; knowing that if we confess Christ and his truth before men, he will confess us before his Father in Heaven: if so be we be ashamed hereof for loss of life, friends or goods, he will be ashamed of us before his Father, and his Holy Angels in Heaven.

He exhorteth to come from the Mass.

Therefore take heed, for the Lords sake take heed, take heed, and defile not your Bodies or Souls with this Romish and Antichristian Religion set up amongst us again: but come away, come away, as the Angel crieth, from amongst them in their idolatrous service, lest you be partakers of their iniquitie. Hearken to your Preachers as the Apoc. 18. Thessalonians did to Paul; that is, confer their sayings with the Scriptures, and if they sound not thereafter, the morning light shall not shine upon them.

Use much and hearty prayer for the Spirit of Wisdom, knowledg, humblenes, meeknes, sobrietie and repentance; which we have great need of, because our sins have thus provoked the Lords anger against us: but let us bear his anger, and acknowledge our faults with bitter tears, and sorrowful sighs, and doubtless he will be merciful to us after his wonted mercy. The which thing he vouchsafe to do for his Holy Names sake in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom with the Father, and the Holy Ghost, be all honour, glory, praise, and everlasting thanks, from this time forth for evermore. Amen.

Out of Prison by yours in the Lord to command,

A Letter to Mr. George Eaton.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford to Mr. George Eaton.

ALmighty God our Heavenly Father, recompence abundantly into your Bosom, my dearly beloved, here and eternally, the good which from him by you I have continually received sithence my coming into prison. Otherwise can I never be able to requite your loving-loving kindneſs here, then by praying for you are after this life, by witneſſing your Faith declared to me by your fruits, when wee ſhall come and appear together before the Throne of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whither I thank God I am even now a going, ever looking when Officers will come, and ſatisfie the Precept of the Prelates, whereof though I cannot complain, becauſe I haue juſtly deſerved an hundred thouſand deaths at Gods hands by reaſon of my ſins, yet I may and muſt reioyce, becauſe the Prelates do not perſecute in me mine iniquities, but Chriſt Jeſus and his Verity: ſo that they perſecute not me, they hate not me, but they perſecute Chriſt, they hate Chriſt.

The Prelates perſecute and hate the Martyrs, not for their Iniquities, but for hatred of Chriſt, and of his verity in them.

And becauſe they can do him no hurt (for he ſitteth in Heaven, and laugheth them and their devices to ſcorn, as one day they ſhall feel) therefore they turn their rage upon his poor ſheep, as Herod their Father did upon the Infants Matth. 2. Great cauſe therefore have I to rejoyce, that my dear Saviour Chriſt will vouchſafe, amongſt many, to chooſe me to be a veſſel of grace to ſuffer in me (which have deſerved ſo often and juſtly to ſuffer for my ſins) that I might be moſt aſſured I ſhall be a veſſel of honour, in whom he will be glorified.

Therefore, my right dear Brother in the Lord, rejoyce with me, give thanks for me, and ceaſe not to pray, that God for his mercies ſake would make perfect the good he hath begun in me. And as for the Doctrine which I have profeſſed and preached, I do confeſs unto you in writing, as to the whole world I ſhortly ſhall by Gods grace in ſuffering, that it is the very true Doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, of his Church, of his Prophets, Apoſtles, and all good men: ſo that if an Angel ſhould come from Heaven and preach otherwiſe, the ſame were accurſed.

John Bradford giveth teſtimony of his Doctrine.

Therefore waver not, dear heart in the Lord, but be confirmed in it, and as your vocation requireth, when God ſo will, confeſs it, though it be perillous ſo to do. The end ſhall evidently ſhew another manner of pleaſure for ſo doing, then tongue can tell. Be diligent in prayer, and watch therein. Uſe reyerent reading of Gods Word. Set the ſhortneſs of this time before your eyes and let not the Eternity that is to come, depart out of your memory. Practiſe in doing, that you learn by reading and hearing. Decline from evil, and purſue good. Remember them that be in bonds, eſpecially for the Lords cauſe, as members of your body, and fellow heirs of grace. Forget not the afflictions of Sion, and the oppreſſion of Jeruſalem; and God our Father ſhall give us his continual bleſſing through Chriſt our Lord, who guide us as his dear Children for ever. Amen.

And thus I take my Vale and farewel with you dear Brother for ever in this preſent life, till we ſhall meet in eternal bliſs; whither our good God and Father bring us ſhortly, Amen. God bleſs all your Babes for ever, Amen. Out of Priſon this 8*th* of February.

Your afflicted Brother for the Cauſe,
John Bradford.

Another Letter to Mrs. Anne Warcup.

ALmighty God our heavenly Father for his Chriſt ſake, encreaſe in us faith, by which we may more and more ſee what glory and honour is repoſed and ſafely kept in Heaven, for all them that believe with the heart, and confeſs Chriſt and his truth with the mouth, Amen. My dearly beloved, I remember that once heretofore I wrot unto you a Vale, or a farewel upon conjecture: but now I write my farewel to you in this life in deed, upon certain knowledg. My ſtaff ſtandeth at the door, I continually look for the Sheriff to come for me, and I thank God I am ready for him. Now go I to practiſe that which I have preached. Now am I climing up the hill, it will cauſe me to puff and to blow before I come to the cliff: The hill is ſteep and high, my breath is ſhort, and my ſtrength is feeble: pray therefore to the Lord for me, that as I have now through his goodneſs, even almoſt come to the top, I may by his grace be ſtrengthened, not to reſt till I come where I ſhould be. Oh loving Lord, put out thy hand, and draw me unto thee: for no man cometh, but he whom the Father draweth. See, my dearly beloved, Gods loving mercy: he knoweth my ſhort breath and great weakneſs. As he ſent for Helias in a fiery Chariot, ſo ſendeth he for me: for by fire my droſs muſt be purified, that I may be fine gold in his ſight. O unthankful wretch that I am! Lord do thou forgive me mine unthankfulneſs. Indeed I confeſs (right dear to me in the Lord) that my ſins have deſerved Hell fire, much more then this fire. But lo, ſo loving is my Lord, that he converteth the remedy for my ſins, the puniſhment for my tranſgreſſions, into a teſtimonial of his Truth, and a teſtification of his Verity, which the Prelates do perſecute in me, and not my ſins: Therefore they perſecute not me, but Chriſt in me, which, I doubt not, will take my part unto the very end. Amen.

God turneth the deſerved death of his, to a glorious teſtimonial of his Truth.

O that I had ſo open an heart, as could ſo receive as I ſhould do this great benifit and unſpeakable dignity, which God my Father offereth to me! Now pray for me, my dearly beloved: pray for me that I never ſhrink. I ſhall never ſhrink I hope. I truſt in the Lord I ſhall never ſhrink: for he that always hath taken my part, I am aſſured will not leave me when I have moſt need, for his truth and mercies ſake. Oh Lord help me. Into thy hands I commend me wholly. In the Lord is my truſt, I care not what man can do unto me, Amen. My dearly beloved, ſay you Amen alſo, and come after if ſo God call you. Be not aſhamed of the Goſpel of Chriſt, but keep company with him ſtill. He will never leave you, but in the midſt of temptation will give you an eſcape: to make you able to bear the brunt. Uſe hearty prayer, reverently read and hear Gods Word, put it in practice: look to the Croſs lift up your hands, for your redemption draweth nigh; know that the death of Gods Saints is precious in his ſight. Be merry in the Lord, pray for mitigation of Gods heavy diſpleaſure upon our Country. God keep us for ever, God bleſs us with his Spiritual bleſſings in Chriſt. And thus I bid you farewel for ever in this preſent life. Pray for me, pray for me, for Gods ſake pray for me. God make perfect his good work begun in me, Amen. Out of Priſon the 7*th* of February.

In the ſtory of Mr. Bradford it was above rehearſed, how a certain Gentlewoman, being in trouble by her Father and Mother for not coming to Maſs, ſent her Servant to viſit M. Bradford in Priſon. Who tendring the woful caſe of the Gentlewoman, to the intent partly to confirm her with counſel, partly to relieve her oppreſſed mind with ſome comfort, directed this Letter unto her; the contents whereof are theſe.

IWiſh unto you, right Worſhipful and my dearly beloved Siſter in the Lord, as to my ſelf, the continual grace and comfort of Chriſt, and of his holy Word, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, who ſtrengthen your inward man with the ſtrength of God, that you may continue to the end in the faithful obedience of Gods Goſpel, whereto you are called, Amen. Rom. 1.

I perceived by your ſelf the laſt day when you were with me, how that you are in the School-houſe and trial Parlor of the Lord; which to me is (at the leaſt it ſhould be) a great comfort to ſee the number of Gods elect by you increaſed, which is in that ſtate whereof God hath not called many, as Paul ſaith. And as it is a comfort to me, ſo ſhould it be a confirmation unto me, that the Lord for his faithfulneſs ſake will make perfect and finiſh the good he hath begun in you to the end. 1 Cor. 1. 1 Cor. 1. and 10.

If then your Croſs be to me a comfort or token of your Election, and a confirmation of Gods continual favour (my dearly Beloved) how much more ought it to be ſo unto you? Unto whom he hath not only given to believe, but alſo to come into the trace of ſuffering for his ſake, and that not commonly of common Enemies, but even of your own Father, Mother, and all your Friends, I mean Kinsfolks, as you told me. By which I ſee Chriſts words to be true, How that he came to give his Children ſuch a Peace with him, as the Devil might not, nor may abide, and therefore ſtirreth up Father and Mother, Siſter and Brother, rather than it ſhould continue. But (my dear Siſter) if you cry with David to the Lord, and

For he will make your body, which now you defile not with Idololatrical ſervice in going to Maſs, like unto his own glorious and immortal Body, according to the power whereby he is able to do all things. He will confeſs you before his Father, which do not deny his verity in word nor deed before your Father; he will make you to reign with him, that now ſuffer for him and with him; he will not leave you comfortleſs, that ſeek no comfort but at his hand; though for a little time you be afflicted, yet therein will he comfort and ſtrengthen you, and at the length make you to be merry with him in ſuch joy as is infinite and endleſs. He will wipe all the tears from your eyes; he will embrace you as your dear husband; he will after he hoth proved you, crown you with a Crown of glory and immortality, ſuch as the heart of man ſhall never be able to conceive in ſuch ſort as the thing is. He now beholdeth your ſtedfaſtneſs, and ſtriving to do his good will; and ſhortly will he ſhew you how ſtedfaſt he is, and will be ready to do your will, after that you have fully reſigned it to his will.

Communicating with Chriſt in ſuffering.

Pledge him in his cup of the Croſs, and you ſhall pledge him in the cup of his Glory. Deſire to drink it before it be come to the dregs, whereof the wicked ſhall drink, and all thoſe that for fear of the Croſs and pledging the Lord, do walk with the wicked in betraying in fact and deed that which their heart embraceth for verity. The which thing if you ſhould do (which God forbid) then, my dear Miſtris and Siſter in the Lord, you ſhould not only loſe all that I have before ſpoken, and much more infinitely of eternal joy and glory, but alſo be a caſt-away, and partaker of Gods moſt heavy diſpleaſure in Hell fire eternally; and ſo for a little eaſe, which you cannot tell how long it will laſt, to loſe for ever and ever all eaſe and comfort. For he that gathereth not with me (ſaith Chriſt; as no Maſs-Goſpeller doth) ſcattereth abroad. According to that we do in this Body, we ſhall receive, be it good or bad. If of our words we ſhall be judged to condemnation or ſalvation; much more then of our facts and deeds. You cannot be partaker of Gods Religion and Antichriſts ſervice, whereof the Maſs is moſt principal. You cannot be a member of Chriſts Church, and a member of the Popes Church. You muſt glorifie God not only in ſoul and heart, but alſo in body and deed. You may not think that God requireth leſs of you his Wife now, then your Husband did of you. If both Heart and Body your Husband would have, ſhall Chriſt have leſs, trow you, which hath ſo bitterly and dearly bought it? If your Husband could not admit an excuſe how your heart is his only, if he ſhould have taken your Body in bed with another; do you think that Chriſt will allow your Body at Maſs, although your heart conſent not to it?

Luke 11. 2 Cor. 5. Matth. 12. 1 Cor. 10.

The Maſs is the principal ſervice of Antichriſt. 1 Cor. 6.

God eſteemeth his Children, not only of their hearts, but of their pure hands and works, and therefore in Helias time he counted none to be his Servants and People, but ſuch as had not bowed their knees to Baal; as now he doth not in England account any other to be his darlings, which know the Truth in heart, and deny it in their deeds, as do our Maſs-Goſpellers.

Pſal. 125.

3 Reg. 19. Againſt Maſs-Goſpellers, which know the truth in their heart, and deny it in their deeds.

We ought to deſire above all things the ſanctifying of Gods holy Name, and the coming of his Kingdom; and ſhall we then ſee his Name blaſphemed ſo horribly as it is at Maſs, by making it a Sacrifice propitiatory, and ſetting forth a falſe Chriſt of the Prieſts and Bakers making, to be worſhipped as God, and ſay nothing? The Jews rent their cloaths aſunder in ſeeing or hearing any thing blaſphemouſly done or ſpoken againſt God, and ſhall we yet come to Church where Maſs is, and be mute? Paul and Barnabas rent their cloaths to ſee the People of Lycaonia to offer Sacrifice unto them, and ſhall we ſee Sacrifice and Gods ſervice done to an inanimate Creature, and be mum? What thing helpeth more or ſo much Antichriſts Kingdom as doth the Maſs? And what deſtroyeth preaching and the Kingdom of Chriſt upon Earth more than it doth? And how can we then ſay, Let thy Kingdom come; and go to Maſs? How can we pray before God, Thy will be done on Earth, when we will do our own will, and the will of our Father or Friends? How pray we, Deliver us from evil, which knowing the Maſs to be evil, do come to it?

A falſe Chriſt of the Prieſt and the Bakers making.

Anno 1555.

The Maſs deſtroyeth preaching and the Kingdom of Chriſt.

But what go I about to light a Candle in the Noon-day, that is, to tell you that we may not go to Maſs, or to the Congregation where it is, except it be to reprove it, in that all men in ſo doing do but diſſemble both with God and Man? And is diſſembling now to be allowed? How long will men yet halt on both knees (ſaith God?) Halting (ſaith Paul) bringeth out of the way, that is to ſay, out of Chriſt, which is the way: ſo that he which is not in him ſhall wither away, and be caſt into Hell fire. For Chriſt will be aſhamed of them before his Father, which be now aſhamed of his Truth before this wicked generation.

He diſſwadeth her from the Maſs.

Therefore (my good Miſtreſs) take good heed; for it had been better for you never to have known the Truth, and there-through to have eſcaped from Papiſtical uncleanneſs, then now to return to it, making eftſoons your members, being members of righteouſneſs, members of unrighteouſneſs, as you do, if you do but go to the Church where Maſs is. Be pure therefore, and keep your ſelf from all filth of the ſpirit, and of the fleſh. Abſtain not only from all evil, but from all appearance of evil.

And ſo the God of Peace ſhall be with you, the glory of God ſhall govern you, the Spirit of God ſhall ſanctifie you, and be with you for ever, to keep you from all evil, and to comfort you in all your diſtreſs and trouble; which is but ſhort if you conſider the eternity you ſhall enjoy in glory and felicity in the Lord, which undoubtedly you ſhall not fail but inherit for ever, if ſo be you, as the elect Child of God, put your truſt in his mercy, call upon his Name unfaignedly, and yield not over to the wicked world, but ſtick ſtill againſt it unto the end. God for his holy Names ſake, which is properly the God of the widows, be your good and dear Father for ever, and help you always, as I my ſelf would be holpen at his hands in all things, and eſpecially in this his own cauſe, Amen, Amen.

John Bradford.

To one by whom he had received much comfort and relief in his Trouble and Impriſonment.

A Letter of thanks to a good Benefactor of his.

THe mercy of God in Chriſt, peculiar to his Children, be evermore felt of you, my dearly beloved in the Lord, Amen.

When I conſider with my ſelf the benefits which God hath ſhewed unto me by your means, if I had ſo good and thankful a heart as I would I had, I could not with dry eyes give him thanks; for certainly they are very many and great. And now being yet ſtill the Lords Priſoner, I receive from him more benefits by you. For the which I think my ſelf ſo much bound to you, my good Brother, (although you were but the inſtrument by whom God wrought and bleſſed me) that I look not to come out of your debt by any pleaſure, or ſervice that I ſhall ever be able to do you in this life. I ſhall heartily pray unto God therefore to requite you the good you have done to me for his ſake: for I know that which you have done, you have done it ſimply in reſpect of God and his Word. He therefore give you daily more and more to be confirmed in his Truth and Word, and ſo plentifully pour upon you the riches of his holy Spirit and heavenly Treaſures laid up in ſtore for you, that your corporal and earthly riches may be uſed of you as Sacraments and ſignifications thereof; the more to deſire the one, that is, the heavenly, and the leſs to eſteem the other, that is, the earthly. For Satans ſolicitation is, ſo to ſet before you the earthly, that therein and thereby you ſhould not have acceſs to the conſideration of the heavenly, but as one bewitched ſhould utterly forget them, and altogether become a lover and worſhipper of the earthly Mammon, and ſo to fall to covetouſneſs, and a deſire to be rich, by that means to bring you into many noyſom and hurtful luſts: as now adays I hear of many which have utterly forſaken God and all his Heavenly riches, for Antichriſts pleaſure, and the preſerving of their worldly pelf, which they imagine to leave to their poſterity, whereof they are uncertain, as they may be moſt certain they leave to them Gods wrath and vengeance, in his time to be ſent by viſitation, if they in time heartily repent not, and prevent not the ſame by earneſt Prayer. Wherein (my good Brother) if you be diligent, hearty, and perſevere, I am ſure God will preſerve you from evil, and from yielding your ſelf to do as the world now doth, by allowing in bodily fact in the Romiſh ſervice, that which the inward cogitation and mind doth diſallow. But if you be cold in Prayer, and come into conſideration of earthly and preſent things ſimply, then ſhall you fall into faithleſs follies and wounding of your Conſcience; from which God evermore preſerve you with your good Wife, and your Babe Leonard, and all your Family, to the which I wiſh the bleſſing of God now and for ever, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Chriſt forſaken of many for the preſerving of worldly Pelf.

I pray you give thanks for me to your old Bed-fellow, for his great friendſhip for your ſake ſhewed to me when I was in the Tower. John Bradford.

To a faithful Friend of his, and his Wife, reſolving their doubt, why they ought not to come to auricular Confeſſion.

Another Letter of M. Bradford, diſproving auricular Confeſſion.

THe merciful God, and Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which loveth us as a moſt dear Father, and hath put upon him towards us the affections of a moſt tender Mother towards her Children, ſo that he can no leſs think upon us (although of our ſelves we be moſt unworthy, and deſerve nothing leſs) than ſhe can think on her only begotten Child in his diſtreſs, yea, if ſhe ſhould forget her Child, as ſome unnatural Mother will do, yet will he never forget us, although for a time he ſeem to ſleep, that we might be occaſioned to call loud and awake him: this good God keep you, my dear Brother Nathanael, and your good Yoke-fellow, my heartily beloved Siſter in the Lord, in all things now and for ever, to his glory and your eternal comfort: and alſo of his goodneſs he grant you both the feeling of that hope, which undoubtedly he hath laid up in ſtore for you both, far paſſing the ſtore and proviſion, not only which you have made, but all the world is able to make, as I truſt already he hath wrought it in you, but I beſeech him to increaſe it more and more, and kindle in you a hearty longing for the enjoying of the ſame: the which once felt and had indeed, then the means by the which we come thereto, cannot be ſo greatly dread, as moſt men do dread them, becauſe either they want this feeling (I mean it, of altogether) or elſe becauſe the ſenſe of this preſent time and things therein, are as a miſt to the hiding of thoſe things from our ſight, leſt we ſhould run and imbrace them by hearty Prayer; the Spirit whereof God grant us, and indeed we ſhould attain enough in this behalf, if we continued therein.

Note that this Nathanael was not his proper name, but he was ſo called for his unfaigned ſimplicity and truth.

For auricular Confeſſion, whercin you deſire my advice for your good Yoke-fellow and Family (my moſt dear Brother) I am as ready to give it, as you to deſire it, yea more glad, foraſmuch as half a ſuſpicion was in me (at the leaſt touching my dear Siſter your wife) of a lothing of my advice, that too much had been given, where indeed I ſhould lament my too little feeding you ſpiritually, as both you out of Priſon and in Priſon have fed me corporally. But as I always thought of her, ſo I yet think that ſhe is the Child of God, whom God dearly loveth, and will in his good time to her eternal comfort give her her hearts deſire in ſure feeling and ſenſible believing of this, which I would ſhe had often in her mind; namely, that he is her God and Father through Jeſus Chriſt our dear Lord and Saviour. A greater ſervice to God ſhe cannot give, than to believe this. If Satan ſay, ſhe believeth not, to anſwer, not him but the Lord, and to ſay, yea, Lord help my unbelief, and increaſe my poor Faith, which Satan ſaith is no Faith: make him a Liar, Lord, as always he hath been, is, and ſhall be. Undoubtedly, ſooner or later God will graciouſly hear her groans, and keep all her tears in his Bottel, yea write them in his counting Book, for he is a righteous God, and hath no pleaſure in the death of his Creature; he loveth mercy, he will return and ſhew her his mercy, he will caſt all her ſins and iniquities into the bottom of the Sea; and the longer that he tarrieth (as he doth it but to prove her) ſo the more liberally will he recompence her long looking, which no leſs pleaſeth him, than it grieveth now her outward Adam. For the mortification whereof God uſeth this Croſs, and therefore if ſhe deſire to bear the ſame, doubtleſs God will make her able to bear it; and in preſumption of his goodneſs and ſtrength, let her caſt her ſelf wholly upon him: for he is faithful, and will aſſuredly confirm, and bring to a happy end that good which graciouſly he hath begun in her. The which thing I deſire him to do for his own glory and names ſake, Amen, Amen.

What to do if Satan charge our Conſcience with unbelief.

The Lord the longer he tarrieth, the more liberally he recompenceth at his coming.

And now to the matter. Confeſſion auricular, as it was firſt uſed and inſtituted (which was by the way of counſel asking) I take to be amongſt thoſe traditions which are indifferent, that is, neither unlawful, nor neceſſarily binding us, except the offence of the weak could not be avoided. But to conſider it, as it is now uſed (I write to you but as I think, and what my mind is; which follow no further, than good men by Gods Word do allow it) to conſider it, I ſay, as it is now uſed, methink, it is plainly unlawful and wicked, and that for theſe cauſes.

Confeſſion auricular to what end it was firſt inſtituted.

Auricular Confeſſion, as it is abuſed, is to be rejected, as unlawful and wicked for eight cauſes.

Firſt, becauſe they make it a ſervice of God, and a thing which pleaſeth God of it ſelf, I will not ſay meritorious; this bringer my Brother can tell you at large how great evil this is.

Secondly, becauſe they make it of neceſſity, ſo that he or ſhe that uſeth it not, is not taken for a good Chriſtian.

Enumeration of ſins impoſſible.

Thirdly, becauſe it requireth of it ſelf an impoſſibility, that is, the numbring and telling of all our ſins, which no man perceiveth, much leſs can utter.

Fourthly, becauſe it eſtabliſheth and confirmeth, at the leaſt alloweth praying to Saints; Precor Sanctam Mariam, you muſt ſay or the Prieſt for you.

Confeſſion prejudicial to Chriſtian liberty.

Fifthly, becauſe it is very injurious to the liberty of the Goſpel, the which to affirm in example and fact, I take to be a good work and dear in Gods ſight.

Confeſſion a mark of the Popes Church.

Sixthly, becauſe (as it is uſed) it is a note, yea a very ſinew of the Popiſh Church: and therefore we ſhould be ſo far from allowing the ſame, that we ſhould think our ſelves happy to loſe any thing in bearing witneſs there againſt.

Confeſſion inſtead of counſel, giveth poyſon.

Seventhly, becauſe inſtead of counſel, thereat you ſhould receive poyſon, or if you refuſe it under Sir Johns Benedicite, you ſhould no leſs there be wound in the Briars.

8ly, becauſe the end and purpoſe why we go thither, is for the avoiding of the Croſs, that is, for our own cauſe, and not for Chriſts cauſe, or for our Brethrens commodity. For in that they make it ſo neceſſary a thing, and a worſhipping of God, it cannot but be againſt Chriſt, and the freedom of his Goſpel: and the ſame thing teacheth us, that it is againſt the commodity of our Brethren, which either be weak, either be ſtrong, either be ignorant, either be obſtinate. If they be weak, by your reſorting to it, they be made more weak. If they be ſtrong, you do what you can to infirm their ſtrength. If they be ignorant, therein you help to keep them by your fact. If they be obſtinate, your reſorting to it cannot but rock them aſleep in their obſtinate Error of the neceſſity of this rite and ceremony. Theſe cauſes recited, do ſhew you what I think in this: but my thinking muſt no farther bind you than a mans thought ſhould do, except the ſame be grounded upon Gods Word which bindeth indeed, as I think they do. I doubt not but you weighing theſe cauſes, and eſpecially two of the firſt and the laſt, if you pray to God for his Spirit to direct you, and thereto ask the advice of this my good Brother and other godly Learned men, I doubt not (I ſay) but you ſhould be guided to do that which is beſt in Gods ſight, although in the ſight of the world perhaps you ſhould be counted fooliſh and preciſe. But be at a point with your ſelves as the Diſciples of Chriſt, which had forſaken themſelves, to follow not your will, but Gods will, as you daily pray in the Lords Prayer.

Four Croſſes, whereof three bring to Hell.

The Croſs of Chriſt be willing to carry, leſt you carry the Croſs of the World, the Fleſh, or the Devil. One of theſe four Croſſes you muſt carry Three of them bring to hell, and therefore the more part goeth that way, which is a broad way. Only the fourth bringeth to Heaven, but few go that way, as well becauſe the way is ſtrait, as alſo becauſe few walk in it. Howbeit, though it be ſtrait, it is but ſhort, and the few are many, if you conſider the godly, as the Patriarks, Prophets, Apoſtles, Martyrs, Confeſſors, and Chriſt Jeſus, with all his guard and train.

Why the more part go that way that leadeth to perdition.

Think

Think not ſcorn to come after them which are gone before you, and after them which now go before you, in whoſe number I truſt I am appointed to be one, and I beſeech you pray for me, that God would vouch me worthy that honour. Our ſins deſerve plagues, priſon, and the loſs of all that ever we have: therefore if God remove our ſins out of ſight, and ſend us Priſon, and loſs of goods and living for his Names ſake, Oh how happy are we? My dear hearts in the Lord, conſider this gear, and be aſſured that he which loſeth any thing for Chriſts ſake, the ſame in his poſterity ſhall find it here, and in Heaven elſewhere. As for unableneſs to anſwer for your Faith; it ſhall be enough to will them to diſpute with your teachers. Faith ſtandeth not in diſputing. I think few, if it came to diſputing, could defend the Godhead of Chriſt and many other Articles; I ſpeak it for the ſimple ſort. Pray for me. Lack of Paper maketh this end. Commend me to my good Brother R. B. and my good Siſter his Wife. I pray them to pray for me. I truſt by this Bearer to hear how you do.

John Bradford.

Another Letter to N. and his Wife.

Another Letter of M. Bradford to a dear Friend and his Wife.

GOds mercy in Chriſt I wiſh you to feel, my dear Brother, with my faithful Siſter your Wife, now and for ever, Amen.

Having this occaſion, I could not but write ſomething, as well to put my ſelf in remembrance of my duty to God-wards for you both in thankfulneſs and prayer, as to put you in remembrance of me: and your duty towards God for me, in praying for me; for I dare not ſay in thankfulneſs for me: not that I would have you to give no thanks to God for his wonderful great and ſweet mercies towards me, and upon me in Chriſt his Son; but becauſe I have not deſerved it at either of your hands. For ye both know right well, at leaſt my Conſcience doth accuſe me, how that I have not only not exhorted and taught you (as both my vocation and your deſerts required) to walk worthy of that vocation which God hath made you worthy of, and with trembling and fear to work out your ſalvation, that is, in the fear of God to give your ſelves to great vigilancy in Prayer for the increaſe of Faith, and to a wary circumſpection in all your converſation, not only in works and words, but alſo in thoughts, becauſe God is a ſeather of the heart, and out of the heart it cometh that defileth us in Gods ſight: I have (I ſay) not only not done this, but alſo have given you example of negligence in prayer, watching, faſting, talking, and doing, ſo that wo to me for giving ſuch offence. Partly for this cauſe, dear Brother and Siſter, God hath caſt me here, that I might repent me and turn to him, and that ye might alſo by his correction upon me be more diligent to redreſs theſe things and others, if they in your Conſcience do accuſe you.

Antichriſt reigning in England.

My dearly Beloved, heavy is Gods anger faln upon us all; doleful is this day. Now hath Antichriſt all his power again. Now is Chriſts Goſpel trodden under foot. Now is Gods People a deriſion and prey for the wicked. Now is the greateſt plague of all plagues faln, the want of Gods Word: and all theſe we have, yea I alone have juſtly deſerved. Oh that as I write (I alone) I could with David, 1 Par. 21. and with Jonas in heart ſay ſo. But I do not, I do not, I ſee not how grievouſly I have ſinned, and how great a miſery is faln for mine unthankneſs for Gods Word, for mine hypocriſie in profeſſing, preaching, hearing, and ſpeaking of Gods Word: for my not praying to God for the continuance of it, for my not loving of it throughly as it requireth, &c. I will ſpeak nothing of my manifeſt evils, for they are known to you well enough.

M. Bradford confeſſing himſelf to the Lord.

He exhorteth them by his confeſſion to do the like.

Dear Brother and Siſter, with me ſay ye the like for your own parts, and with me joyn your hearts, and let us go to our heavenly Father, and for his Chriſts ſake beſeech him to be merciful unto us, and to pardon us: Oh good Father, it is we that have deſerved the taking away of thy Word, it is we that have deſerved theſe thy juſt plagues faln upon us; we have done amiſs, we have dealt unjuſtly with thy Goſpel, we have procured thy wrath, and therefore juſt art thou in puniſhing us, juſt art thou in plaguing us, for we are very miſerable. But good Lord and dear Father of mercy, whoſe juſtice is ſuch, that thou wilt not puniſh the poor Souls of this Realm, which yet have not thus ſinned againſt thee, as we have done (for many yet never heard thy Word) for our Treſpaſſes; and whoſe mercy is ſo great, that thou wilt put our iniquities out of thy remembrance for thy Chriſts ſake, if we repent and believe: grant us we beſeech thee, true Repentance and Faith, that we, having obtained pardon for our ſins, may through thy Chriſt get deliverance from the tyranny of Antichriſt now oppreſſing us.

Anno 1555.

Oh good Father, which haſt ſaid, that the Scepter of the wicked ſhould not long lye upon and over the juſt, Pſal. 125. leſt they ſhould put forth their hands to iniquity alſo; make us juſt, we pray thee in Chriſts Name, and cut aſunder the cords of them that hate Sion; let not the wicked people ſay, Where is their God? Thou our God art in heaven, and doſt whatſoever pleaſeth thee upon earth.

Oh that thou wouldeſt in the mean while, before thou doſt deliver us, that (I ſay) thou wouldeſt open our eyes to ſee all theſe plagues to come from thee, and all other that ſhall come, whatſoever they be, publik or private, that they come not by chance nor by fortune, but that they come even from thy hand, and that juſtly, and mercifully; Juſtly, becauſe we have and do deſerve them, not only by our birth-poyſon ſtill ſticking and working in us, but alſo by our former evil life paſt, which by this puniſhment and all other puniſhments thou wouldeſt have us to call to our remembrance, and to ſet before us, that thou mighteſt put them from before thee, where as they ſtand ſo long as they are not in our remembrance, to put them away by repentance. Mercifully, O Lord God, doſt thou puniſh, in that thou doſt not correct to kill, but to amend, that we might repent our ſins, ask mercy, obtain it freely in Chriſt, and begin to ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake; to be part of thy houſe, whereat thy Judgment beginneth; to be partakers of the afflictions of thy Church, and thy Chriſt, that we might be partakers of the glory of the ſame; to weep here, that we might rejoyce elſewhere; to be judged in this world, that we might with thy Saints judge hereafter the world; to ſuffer with Chriſt, that we might reign with him; to be like to Chriſt in ſhame, that we might be like to him in glory; to receive our evils here, that we might with poor Lazarus find reſt elſewhere; reſt, I ſay, and ſuch a reſt as the eye hath not ſeen, the ear hath not heard, nor the heart of man is able to conceive.

The Croſs ſent from God, and to what end.

Oh that our eyes were open to ſee this, that the Croſs cometh from thee to declare thy juſtice and thy mercy, and hereto, that we might ſee how ſhort a time the time of ſuffering is; how long a time the time of rejoycing is to them that ſuffer here, but to them that will not, how long and miſerable a time is appointed and prepared; a time without time in eternal wo and perdition, too horrible to be thought upon. From the which keep us, dear Father, and give us more light in Soul to ſee this gear, and how that all thy deareſt Children have carried the Croſs of grievous afflictions in this life; in whoſe company do thou place us, and ſuch a Croſs lay upon us, as thou wilt make us able to bear, to thy glory and our ſalvation in Chriſt, for whoſe ſake we pray thee to ſhorten the days of this our great miſery ſhalt len upon us moſt juſtly, and in the mean ſeaſon give us patience, repentance, faith, and thy eternal conſolation; Amen, Amen, Amen.

And thus dear hearts, I have talked (methinks) a little while with you, or rather we have all talked with God. Oh that God would give us his Spirit of Grace and Prayer. My dearly Beloved, pray for it, as for your ſelves, ſo for me, and that God would vouchſafe to make me worthy to ſuffer with a good Conſcience for his Names ſake. Pray for me, and I ſhall do the like for you. This 20. of December, by him whom by this Bringer you ſhall learn. I pray you give my commendations to all that love me in the Lord. Be merry in Chriſt, for one day in Heaven we ſhall meet and rejoyce together for evermore, Amen.

Pſal. 101.

John Bradford.

To theſe Letters of Mr. Bradford above ſpecified, here is alſo adjoyned another Letter of the ſaid Bradford, written to certain of his faithful Friends, worthy of all Chriſtians to be read; wherein is deſcribed a lively compariſon between the Old man and the New: Alſo between the Law and the Goſpel, containing much fruitful matter of Divinity, neceſſary for Chriſtian Conſciences to read and underſtand.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford, deſcribing a Compariſon between the Old man and the New, &c.

A compariſon between the Old man and the New, by M. Bradford.

A Man that is regenerate and born of God, (the which thing that every one of us be, our Baptiſm, the Sacrament of Regeneration, doth require under pain of damnation, and therefore let every one of us with the Virgin Mary ſay, Be it unto me, O Lord, according to thy word, according to the Sacrament of Baptiſm, wherein thou haſt declared our Adoption; and let us lament the doubting hereof in us, ſtriving againſt it, as we ſhall be made able of the Lord) a man, I ſay, that is regenerate, conſiſteth of two men (as a man may ſay) namely of the Old man, and of the New man. The Old man is like to a mighty Giant, ſuch a one as was Goliah, for his birth is now perfect. But the New man is like unto a little Child, ſuch a one as was David, for his birth is not perfect until the day of his general Reſurrection.

The Old man. The New man.

The Old man therefore is more ſtrong, luſty, and ſtirring then is the New man, becauſe the birth of the New man is begun now, and the Old man is perfectly born. And as the Old man is more ſtirring, luſty, and ſtronger then the New man; ſo is the nature of him clean contrary to the nature of the New man, as being earthly and corrupt with Satans ſeed, the nature of the New man being heavenly, and bleſſed with the Celeſtial ſeed of God. So that one man, inaſmuch as he is corrupt with the Seed of the Serpent, is an Old man; and inaſmuch as he is bleſſed with the ſeed of God from above, he is a New man. And as inaſmuch as he is an Old man, he is a ſinner and an enemy to God; ſo inaſmuch as he is regenerate, he is righteous and holy, and a friend to God, the ſeed of God preſerving him from ſin, ſo that he cannot ſin, as the ſeed of the Serpent, wherewith he is corrupt even from his Conception, inclineth him, yea inforceth him to ſin, and nothing elſe but to ſin: So that the beſt part in man before Regeneration, in Gods ſight, is not only an enemy, but enmity it ſelf.

Why the Old man is ſtronger then the New.

In what reſpect one man is both an Old man and alſo a New man.

One man therefore which is regenerate, well may be called always juſt, and always ſinful; juſt in reſpect of Gods ſeed, and his regeneration; ſinful in reſpect of Satans ſeed and his firſt birth. Betwixt theſe two men therefore there is continual conflict, and war moſt deadly. The fleſh and Old man, by reaſon of his birth that is perfect, doth often for a time prevail againſt the New man (being but a child in compariſon) and that in ſuch ſort, as not only other, but even the children of God themſelves think that they be nothing elſe but Old, and that the Spirit and Seed of God is loſt and gone away; where yet notwithſtanding the truth is otherwiſe, the Spirit and the Seed of God at the length appearing again, and diſpelling away the clouds which cover the Sun of Gods Seed from ſhining, as the clouds in the Air do the corporal Sun; ſo that ſometimes a man cannot tell by any ſenſe, that there is any Sun, the clouds and wind ſo hiding it from our ſight: Even ſo our ceeltie or blindneſs, and corrupt affections do often ſhadow the ſight of Gods Seed in Gods Children, as though they were plain Reprobates. Whereof it cometh, that they praying according to their ſenſe, but not according to the truth, deſire of God to give them again his Spirit, as though they had loſt it, and he had taken it away. Which thing God never doth indeed, although he make us to think ſo for a time; for always he holdeth his hand under his children in their falls, that they lye not ſtill as other do which are not regenerate. And this is the difference betwixt Gods children which are regenerate and elect before all times in Chriſt, and the wicked always; that the elect lye not ſtill continually in their ſin, as do the wicked, but at the length do return again by reaſon of Gods Seed, which is in them hid as a ſparkle of fire in the aſhes; as we may ſee in Peter, David, Paul, Mary Magdalen, and others. For theſe (I mean Gods children) God hath made all things in Chriſt Jeſus, to whom he hath given his dignity, that they ſhould be his Inheritance and Spouſes.

How one man may be called always ſinful and always juſt.

Why the Old man oftentimes prevaileth againſt the New man.

The Old man ſo mightily prevaileth ſometimes againſt the New in the Children of God, that the Spirit and Seed of God ſeemeth to be utterly taken from them: wherein indeed it is not ſo, as afterwards to their great comfort they find and feel.

1 Pet. 1.

This our Inheritour Chriſt Jeſus, God with God, Light of Light, coeternal and conſubſtantial with the Father, and with the holy Ghoſt, to the end that he might become our husband (becauſe the husband and the wife muſt be one body and fleſh) hath taken our nature upon him, communicating with it and by it in his own perſon, to us all his children, his Divine Majeſty (as Peter ſaith) and ſo is become fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bones ſubſtantially; as we are become fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones ſpiritually, all that ever we have pertaining to him, yea even our ſins; as all that ever he hath, pertaineth unto us, even his whole glory. So that if Satan ſhould ſummon us to anſwer for our debts or ſins, in that the wife is no ſueable perſon, but the husband, we may well bid him enter his Action againſt our husband Chriſt, and he will make him a ſufficient anſwer.

As the wife is no ſueable perſon, but the husband: ſo Chriſt being our husband, let him enter the action for our ſins againſt him.

For this end (I mean that we might be coupled and married thus to Chriſt, and ſo be certain of Salvation, and at godly peace with God in our Conſciences) God hath given his holy word, which hath two parts (as now the children of God do conſiſt of two men) one part of Gods word being proper to the Old man, and the other part of Gods word being proper to the New man. The part properly pertaining to the Old man is the Law; the part properly pertaining to the New man is the Goſpel.

The Law pertaineth to the old man, and the Goſpel to the new.

The Law is a Doctrine which commandeth and forbiddeth, requiring doing and avoiding. Under it therefore are contained all precepts, threatnings, promiſes upon conditions of our doing and avoiding, &c. The Goſpel is a Doctrine which always offereth and giveth, requiring Faith on our behalf, not as of worthineſs, or as a cauſe, but as a certificate unto us, and therefore under it are contained all the free and ſweet promiſes of God; as I am the Lord thy God, &c.

What the Law is.

What the Goſpel is.

The conſcience feared and beaten down with the terrour of Gods judgement againſt ſin, may not look upon the Law, but fly to the Goſpel for relief and comfort.

In thoſe that be of years of diſcretion, it requireth Faith, not as a cauſe, but as an inſtrument, whereby we our ſelves may be certain of our good husband Chriſt, and of his glory, and therefore when the Conſcience feeleth it ſelf diſquieted for fear of Gods judgment againſt ſin, ſhe may in no wiſe look upon the Doctrine pertaining to the Old man, but on the Doctrine only that pertaineth to the New man, in it not looking for that which it requireth, that is Faith, becauſe we never believe as we ſhould; but only on it which it offereth, and which it giveth, that is, on Gods grace and eternal mercy and peace in Chriſt. So ſhall ſhe be in quiet, when ſhe looketh for it, altogether out of her ſelf, in Gods mercy in Chriſt Jeſus: in whoſe lap if ſhe lay her head with S. John, then is ſhe happy, and ſhall find quietneſs indeed. When ſhe feeleth her ſelf quiet, then, in Gods Name, let her look on the Law, and upon ſuch things as it requireth, thereby to bridle and keep down the Old Adam, to ſlay that Goliah; from whom ſhe muſt needs keep the ſweet Promiſes, being the bed wherein her Spouſe and ſhe meet and lye together. For as the wife will keep her bed only for her husband, although in other things ſhe is contented to have fellowſhip with others, as to ſpeak, ſit, eat, drink, go, &c. ſo our Conſciences, which are Chriſts wives, muſt needs keep the bed, that is, Gods ſweet Promiſes alonely for our ſelves and our husband, there to meet together, to embrace and laugh together, and to be joyful together. If Sin, the Law, the Devil, or any thing would creep into the bed, and lye there, then complain to thy husband Chriſt, and forthwith thou ſhalt ſee him play Phineas's part. Thus (my dearly beloved) I have given you in few words a ſum of all the Divinity which a Chriſtian Conſcience cannot want.

John. 13. To the conſcience quieted and at peace with God, the Law ſerveth only to keep down the old man.

Num. 25.

A Letter written to his Mother, as a Farewel, when he thought he ſhould have ſuffered ſhortly after.

Another Letter of leave-taking to his Mother ſuppoſing that he ſhould have ſuffered ſhortly.

THe Lord of Life and Saviour of the World, Jeſus Chriſt, bleſs you and comfort you, my good and dear Mother, with his heavenly comfort, conſolation, grace, and ſpirit, now and for ever. Amen.

If I thought that daily, yea almoſt hourly you did not cry upon God the Father through Jeſus Chriſt, that he would give me his bleſſing, even the bleſſing of his Children; then would I write more hereabouts. But foraſmuch as herein I am certain you are diligent, and ſo I beſeech you, good Mother, to continue; I think it good to write ſomething, whereby this your crying might be furthered. Furthered it will be, if thoſe things which hinder it be taken away. Among the which, in that I think my Impriſonment is the greateſt and chiefeſt, I will thereabout ſpend this Letter, and that briefly, leſt it might increaſe the let, as my good Brother, this bringer, can tell you. You ſhall know therefore, good Mother, that for my Body, though it be in an Houſe, out of the which I cannot come when I will, yet in that I have conformed my will to Gods will, I find herein liberty enough, I thank God. And for my lodging, bedding, meat, drink, godly and learned company, Books, and all other neceſſaries for mine eaſe, comfort, and commodity, I am in much better caſe then I could wiſh, and Gods merciful Providence here is far above my worthineſs. Worthineſs, quoth I? Alas, I am worthy of nothing but damnation.

He meaneth the danger of more ſtraight impriſonment that might hereby follow.

But beſides all this, for my Soul I find much more commodity. For God is my Father, I now perceive, through Chriſt; therefore in priſoning me for his Goſpel, he maketh me like to the Image of his Son Jeſus Chriſt here, that when he cometh to Judgment, I might then be like unto him, as my truſt and hope is, I ſhall be. Now maketh he me like to his Friends the Prophets, Apoſtles, the holy Martyrs and Confeſſors. Which of them did not ſuffer at the leaſt impriſonment or baniſhment for his Goſpel and Word?

Now Mother, how far am I unmeet to be compared to them? I (I ſay) which always have been, and am ſo vile an Hypocrite and grievous a Sinner. God might have cauſed me long before this time to have been caſt into Priſon as a Thief, a Blaſphemer, an unclean Liver, and an heynous Offender of the Laws of the Realm; but (dear Mother) his mercy is ſo great upon both you, and all that love me, that I ſhould be caſt into Priſon as none of theſe, or for any ſuch Vices, but only for his Chriſts ſake, for his Goſpels ſake, for his Churches ſake, that thereby as I might learn to lament and bewail my ingratitude and ſins, ſo I might rejoyce in his mercy, be thankful, look for eternal joy with Chriſt, for whoſe ſake, praiſed be his Name for it, I now ſuffer, and therefore ſhould be merry and glad. And indeed (good Mother) ſo I am, as ever I was, yea never ſo merry and glad was I, as now I ſhould be, if I could get you to be merry with me, to thank God for me, and to pray on this ſort: Ah good Father, which doſt vouchſafe that my Son, being a grievous ſinner in thy ſight, ſhould find this favour with thee, to be one of thy Sons Captains and Men of War to fight and ſuffer for his Goſpels ſake, I thank thee, and pray thee, in Chriſts Name, that thou wouldſt forgive him his ſins and unthankfulneſs, and make perfect in him that good which thou haſt begun; yea Lord, I pray thee make him worthy to ſuffer, not only impriſonment, but even very death for thy Truth, Religion, and Goſpels ſake. As Anna did apply and give her firſt Child Samuel unto thee, ſo do I dear Father, beſeeching thee for Chriſts ſake to accept this my Gift, and give my Son, John Bradford, grace always truly to ſerve thee and thy people, as Samuel did, Amen, Amen.

Anno 1555.

A prayer for his Mother to offer unto God in his behalf.

If on this ſort (good Mother) from your heart you would pray, as I ſhould be the moſt merrieſt man that ever was; ſo am I certain the lets of your prayer for my impriſonment would be taken away. Good Mother therefore mark what I have written, and learn this prayer by heart, to ſay it daily, and then I ſhall be merry, and you ſhall rejoyce if that you continue, as I truſt you do, in Gods true Religion, even the ſame I have taught you, and my Father Traves I truſt will put you in remembrance of: my Brother Roger alſo, I truſt, doth ſo daily. Go to therefore, and learn apace. Although the Devil caſt divers lets in the way, God in whom you truſt, will caſt them away for his Chriſts ſake, if you will call upon him; and never will he ſuffer you to be tempted above that he will make you able to bear. But how you ſhould do herein, the other Letter which I have written herewith, ſhall teach you, which I would have none ſhould read till my Father Traves have read it, and he will give you by Gods grace ſome Inſtructions.

This Letter came not to our hands.

Now therefore will I make an end, praying you good Mother, to look for no more Letters: for if it were known that I have Pen and Ink, and did write, then ſhould I want all the foreſaid commodities I have ſpoken of concerning my Body, and be caſt into ſome Dungeon in fetters of Iron: which thing I know would grieve you, and therefore for Gods ſake, ſee that theſe be burned, when this little Prayer in it is copied by my Brother Roger: for perchance your Houſe may be ſearched for ſuch gear, when you think little of it: and look for no more, ſweet Mother, till either God ſhall deliver me, and ſend me out, either you and I ſhall meet together in Heaven, where we ſhall never part aſunder, Amen.

Exhortation to his two Siſters.

I require you Elizabeth and Margaret my Siſters, that you will fear God, uſe Prayer, love your Husbands, be obedient unto them, as God willeth you: bring up your Children in Gods fear: and be good Houſwives. God bleſs you both, with both your Husbands, my good Brethren, to whom to do good, becauſe I now cannot. I will pray for them and you. Commend me to my Siſter Anne, Mother Pike, Th. Sorrocold and his wife, R. Shalcroſs and his wife, R. Bolton, J. Wild, Mr. Vicar, the Parſon Mottrom, Sir Laurence Hall, with all that love, and I truſt, live in the Goſpel; and God turn Sir Thomas his heart, Amen. I will daily pray for him. I need not to ſet my name, you know it well enough.

Becauſe you ſhould give my Letters to my Father Traves to be burned, I have written here a Prayer for you to learn to pray for me, good Mother, and another for all your Houſe in your Evening Prayer to pray with my Brother. Theſe Prayers are written with mine own hand: keep them ſtill, but the Letters give to Father Traves to burn, and give Father Traves a Copy of the later Prayer.

Another Letter to his Mother, at his laſt Farewel unto her in this world, a little before he was burned.

Another, and the laſt Letter of M. Bradford, written to his Mother a little before his death.

GOds mercy and peace in Chriſt, be more and more perceived of us, Amen.

My moſt dear Mother, in the Bowels of Chriſt I heartily

Anno 1555. heartily pray and beſeech you to be thankful for me unto God, which thus now taketh me unto himſelf: I dye not, my good Mother, as a Thief, a Murderer, an Adulterer, &c. but I dye as a Witneſs of Chriſt his Goſpel and Verity, which hitherto I have confeſſed (I thank God) as well by preaching, as by impriſonment, and now even preſently I ſhall moſt willingly confirm the ſame by fire. I knowledge that God moſt juſtly might take me hence ſimply for my ſins (which are many, great, and grievous: but the Lord for his mercy in Chriſt, hath pardoned them all, I hope) but now dear Mother, he taketh me hence by this death, as a Confeſſor and Witneſs, that the Religion taught by Chriſt Jeſus, the Prophets, and the Apoſtles, is Gods Truth. The Prelates do perſecute in me Chriſt whom they hate, and his Truth which they may not abide, becauſe their works are evil, and may not abide the Truth and Light, leſt men ſhould ſee their Darkneſs. Therefore my good and moſt dear Mother, give thanks for me to God, that he hath made the Fruit of your Womb to be a witneſs of his glory, and attend to the Truth, which (I thank God for it) I have truly taught out of the Pulpit of Mancheſter. Uſe often and continual prayer to God the Father through Chriſt. Hearken, as you may, to the Scriptures: ſerve God after his Word, and not after Cuſtom: beware of the Romiſh Religion in England, defile not your ſelf with it: carry Chriſts Croſs as he ſhall lay it upon your back: forgive them that kill me: pray for them, for they know not what they do: commit my Cauſe to God our Father: be mindful of both your Daughters, and help them as you can.

Bradford perſecuted of the Prelates, not for his ſins, but for the truth of Chriſt.

I ſend all my writings to you and my brother Roger, do with them as you will, becauſe I cannot as I would, he can tell you more of my mind. I have nothing to give you, or to leave behind me for you: only I pray God my Father, for his Chriſts ſake, to bleſs you, and keep you from evil. He give you patience, he make you thankful, as for me, ſo for your ſelf, that he will take the Fruit of your Womb to witneſs his Verity: wherein I confeſs to the whole world, I dye and depart this life, in hope of a much better: which I look for at the hands of God my Father, through the Merits of his dear Son Jeſus Chriſt.

Thus, my dear Mother, I take my laſt farewel of you in this life, beſeeching the Almighty and eternal Father by Chriſt, to grant us to meet in the life to come, where we ſhall give him continual thanks and praiſe for ever and ever, Amen. Out of Priſon the 24. of June, 1555.

Your Son in the Lord,
John Bradford.

A Letter ſent with a Supplication to Queen Mary, her Councel, and the whole Parliament.

A letter of M. Bradford joyned with a Supplication ſent to Q. Mary, her Councel, and the Parliament.

IN moſt humble wiſe complaineth unto your Majeſty and Honours, a poor Subject perſecuted for the Confeſſion of Chriſts Verity: the which Verity deſerveth at your hands to be maintained and defended, as the thing by the which you reign and have your Honours and Authorities. Although we that be Profeſſors, and through the grace of God the conſtant Confeſſors of the ſame, are (as it were) the outſweepings of the world: yet (I ſay) the Verity it ſelf is a thing not unworthy for your ears to hear, for your eyes to ſee, and for your hands to handle, help, and ſuccour, according to that the Lord hath made you able, and placed you where you are, for the ſame purpoſe. Your Highneß and Honours ought to know, that there is no innocency in words or deeds, where it is enough and ſufficeth only to accuſe. It behoveth Kings, Queens, and all that be in Authority, to know that in the adminiſtration of their Kingdoms they are Gods Miniſters. It behoveth them to know, that they are no Kings, but plain Tyrants, which reign not to this end, that they may ſerve and ſet forth Gods glory after true knowledge: and therefore it is required of them, that they would be wiſe, and ſuffer themſelves to be taught, to ſubmit themſelves to the Lords diſcipline, and to kiſs their Sovereign, leſt they periſh; as all thoſe Potentates with their Principalities and Dominions cannot long proſper, but periſh indeed, if they and their Kingdoms be not ruled with the Scepter of God, that is, with his Word; which whoſo honoureth not, honoureth not God, and they that honour not the Lord, the Lord will not honour them, but bring them into contempt, and at the length take his own cauſe, which he hath moſt chiefly committed unto them to care for, into his own hands, and ſo overthrow them, and ſet up his Truth gloriouſly; the People alſo periſhing with the Princes, where the word of prophecy is wanting, much more is ſuppreſſed, as it is now in this Realm of England; over which the eyes of the Lord are ſet to deſtroy it, your Highneß, and all your Honours, if in time you look not better to your office and duties herein, and not ſuffer your ſelves to be ſlaves and hangmen to Antichriſt and his Prelates, which have brought your Highneß and Honours already to let Barrabas looſe, and to hang up Chriſt: as by the grace and help of God I ſhall make apparent, if firſt it would pleaſe your excellent Majeſty, and all your Honours, to take to heart Gods Doctrine, which rather through the malice of the Phariſees, I mean the Biſhops and Prelates, then your Conſciences, is oppreſſed; and not for our contemptible and execrable ſtate in the ſight of the world, to paß the leß of it. For it (the Doctrine I mean) is higher, and of more honour and majeſty, than all the whole world. It ſtandeth invincible above all power, being not our Doctrine, but the Doctrine of the everliving God, and of his Chriſt, whom the Father hath ordained King, to have dominion from Sea to Sea, and from the River unto the ends of the world. And truly ſo doth he, and will he reign, that he will ſhake all the whole earth with his iron and brazen power, with his golden and ſilvery brightneß, only by the rod of his mouth, to ſhivers, in ſuch ſort as though they were pots of clay, according to that which the Prophets do write of the magnificence of his Kingdom. And thus much for the thing, I mean the Doctrine, and your duties to hearken, to propagate, and defend the ſame.

Difference between Kings and Tyrants.

Good warning to Q. Mary.

Princes made ſlaves to Antichriſt.

Chriſt ordained to bear dominion over all.

But now will our Adverſaries mainly cry out againſt us, becauſe no man may be admitted once to whiſt againſt them, that we pretend falſly the Doctrine and Word of God, calling us the moſt wicked Contemners of it, and Hereticks, Schiſmaticks, Traytors, &c. All which their ſayings, how malicious and falſe they are, though I might make report to that which is written by thoſe men whoſe works they have condemned, and all that retain any of them, publickly by Proclamation: yet here will I occaſion your Majeſty and Honours by this my writing, to ſee that it is far otherwiſe than they report of us. God our Father for his holy Names ſake, direct my Pen to be his Inſtrument to put into your eyes, ears and hearts, that which moſt may make to his glory, to the ſafeguard of your ſouls and bodies, and preſervation of the whole Realm, Amen.

Chriſts Martyrs falſly belyed of the Prelates for Hereticks, and Schiſmaticks.

John Bradford.

To certain of his Friends, N. S. and R. C.

A Letter of M. Bradford to certain perſons being at that time not throughly inſtructed in the doctrine of Gods Election.

I Wiſh to you, my good Brethren, the ſame grace of God in Chriſt, which I wiſh and pray the Father of Mercies to give me for his holy Names ſake, Amen.

Your Letter, though I have not read my ſelf, becauſe I would not alienate my mind from conceived things, to write to others, yet I have heard the ſum of it, that it is of Gods Election; wherein I will briefly write to you my Faith, and how I think it good and meet for a Chriſtian man to wade in it. I believe, that man, made after the Image of God, did fall from that bleſſed ſtate, to the condemnation of himſelf, and all his Poſterity. I believe that Chriſt, for man being thus faln, did oppoſe himſelf to the Juſtice of God, a Mediator, paying the ranſom and price of redemption for Adam and his whole Poſterity that refuſe it not finally. I believe, that all that believe in Chriſt, I ſpeak of ſuch as be of years of diſcretion, are partakers of Chriſt and all his Merits. I believe that Faith, and to believe in Chriſt (I ſpeak not now of Faith that men have by reaſon of Miracles, John 2. 11. Acts 8. or by reaſon of earthly Commodity, Matth. 13. Cuſtom and Authority of men, which is commonly ſeen, the hearts of them that ſo believe, being not right and ſimple before God: but I ſpeak of that Faith which indeed is the true Faith, the juſtifying and regenerating Faith) I believe, I ſay, that this Faith and Belief in Chriſt, is the work and gift of God, given to none other than to thoſe which be the Children of God, that is, to thoſe whom God the Father before the beginning of the world hath predeſtinate in Chriſt unto eternal life.

True faith, Exod. 4.

M. B. for the certainty of this faith, search your hearts. If you have it, praise the Lord, for you are happy, and therefore cannot finally perish, for then happiness were not happiness, if it could be lost. * When you fall, the Lord will put under his hand, that you shall not lie still. But if ye feel not this faith, then know that Predestination is too high a matter for you to be disputers of, until you have been Scholars in the schoolhouse of repentance and justification, which is the Grammar School, wherein we must be conversant and learned before we go to the University of Gods most holy Predestination and Providence. Of this matter he writeth more at large in the book of Letters of the Martyrs Fol. 325.

* Thus do I wade in Predestination, in such sort as God hath pacified and opened it. Though in God it be the first, yet to us it is last opened. And therefore I begin with Creation, from whence I come to Redemption, so to Justification, and so to Election. On this sort I am sure, that warily and wisely a man may walk in it easily by the light of Gods Spirit, in and by his Word, seeing this Faith not to be given to all men, 2 Thess. 3. but to such as are born of God, predestinate before the World was made, after the purpose and good will of God: which will we may not call into disputation, but in trembling and fear submit our selves to it, as to that which can will none otherwise than that which is holy, right, and good, how far soever otherwise it seem to the Judgment of Reason, which must needs be beaten down to be more careful for Gods glory, than for mans salvation, which dependeth only thereon, as all Gods children full well see: for they seek not the glory which cometh of men, but the glory which cometh of God, Jer. 9. John 5. They know God to be a God which doth on earth, not only Mercy, but also Judgment, which is his Justice and most Justice, although our foolish reason cannot see it. And in this knowledge they glory and rejoyce, though others through vain curiosity, grudge and murmur there-against. Thus briefly I have sent you my mind and meaning concerning this matter. Hereafter you shall have (I think) your Letter particularly answered by Mr. Philpot; as also, if I have time, and so you require it, I will do.

John Bradford.

Notes upon the same Epistle, and to the matter of Election appertaining.

AS touching the Doctrine of Election (whereof this Letter of Mr. Bradford, and many other his Letters more do much intreat) three things must be considered.

1. First, What Gods Election is, and what is the cause thereof.
2. Secondly, How Gods Election proceedeth in working our Salvation.
3. Thirdly, To whom Gods Election pertaineth, and how a man may be certain thereof.

Notes to this Epistle added.

Between Predestination and Election, this difference there is: Predestination is as well to the Reprobate, as to the Elect. Election pertaineth only to them that be saved.

Difference between Predestination and Election.

Predestination, in that it respecteth the Reprobate, is called Reprobation: in that it respecteth the saved, is called Election, and is thus defined.

Definition of Predestination.

Predestination is the eternal decreement of God, purposed before in himself, what shall befall on all men, either to Salvation or Damnation.

Election defined.

Election is the free mercy and grace of God in his own will, through faith in Christ his Son, choosing and preferring to life such as pleaseth him.

The parts of the definition examined.

In this definition of Election, first goeth before (the mercy and grace of God) as the causes thereof, whereby are excluded all the works of the Law, and merits of deserving, whether they go before faith, or come after. So was Jacob chosen, and Esau refused, before either of them began to work, &c.

Mercy and grace.

Secondly, In that this mercy and grace of God in this definition is said to be (free) thereby is to be noted the proceeding and working of God not to be bounded to any ordinary place, or to any succession of Chair, nor to state and dignity of person, nor to worthiness of blood, &c. but all goeth by the meer will of his own purpose; as it is written, Spiritus ubi vult, spirat, &c. And thus was the outward race and stock of Abraham after the flesh refused (which seemed to have the preheminence) and another Seed after the Spirit raised up to Abraham of the Stones, that is, of the Gentiles. So was the outward Temple of Jerusalem and Chair of Moses, which seemed to be of price, forsaken, and Gods Chair advanced in other Nations. So was tall Saul refused, and little David accepted: the Rich, the Proud, the Wise of this world rejected, and the Word of Salvation daily opened to the poor and miserable Abjects, the high Mountains cast under, and the low Vales exalted, &c.

Free mercy and grace.

Thirdly, Where it is added (in his own will) by this falleth down the free will and purpose of man, with all his actions, counsels, and strength of Nature; according as it is written, Non est volentis, neque currentis, sed miserentis Dei, &c. i. It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. So we see how Israel ran long, and yet got nothing. The Gentiles later began to set out, and yet got the game. So they which came at the first hour did labour more, and yet they which came last, were rewarded with the first, Matthew 20. The working will of the Pharisee seemed better, but yet the Lords will was rather to justifie the Publican, Luke 18. The elder son had a better will to tarry by his Father, and so did indeed: and yet the fat Calf was given to the younger son that ran away, Luke the 15. Whereby we are to understand, how the matter goeth, not by the will of man, but by the will of God; as it pleaseth him to accept, according as it is written, Non ex voluntate carnis, neque ex voluntate viri, sed ex Deo nati sunt, &c. i. Which are born, not of the will of the flesh, nor yet of the will of man, but of God. Furthermore, as all then goeth by the will of God only, and not by the will of man: so again here is to be noted, that this will of God never goeth without faith in Christ Jesus his Son.

The free mercy and grace of God in his own will. Rom. 9.

Matth. 20.

Luke 18.

Luke 15.

John 1.

God's mercy in saving the elect ever includeth the condition of faith in Christ.

And therefore, fourthly, is this Clause added in the definition; through faith in Christ his Son. Which faith in Christ to us-ward maketh all together. For first, it certifieth us of Gods Election; as this Epistle of Mr. Bradford doth well express. For whosoever will be certain of Election in God, let him first begin with his faith in Christ: which if he find in him to stand firm, he may be sure, and nothing doubt, but that he is one of the number of Gods Elect. Secondly, The said faith, and nothing else, is the only condition and means whereupon Gods mercy, grace, election, vocation, and all Gods promises to salvation do stay, according to the words of S. Paul, Si permanseritis in fide, &c. i. If ye abide in the faith, Coloss. 1. Thirdly, This faith also is the immediate and next cause of our Justification simply, without any other condition annexed. For as the mercy of God, his grace, election, vocation, and other precedent causes do save and justifie us upon condition, If we believe in Christ: so this faith only in Christ without condition is the next and immediate cause, which by Gods promise worketh our justification; according as it is written. Credo in Dominum Iesum, & salvus eris, tu & domus tua; i. Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy whole house, Acts 16. And thus much touching the definition of Election, with the causes thereof declared. Which you see now to be no merits, nor works of man, whether they go before or come after faith, but only the meer mercy of God through faith. For like as all they that be born of Adam, do taste of his malediction, though they tasted not his Apple: so all they that be born of Christ, (which is by faith) take part of the obedience of Christ, although they never did that obedience themselves, which was in him, Rom. 5.

The free mercy and grace of God in his own good will through faith in Christ his Son our Lord.

Faith is the only condition where-by Gods grace doth save us.

Acts 16.

Faith only is the immediate cause of our justifying.

Now to the second Consideration, let us see likewise, how, and in what order this election of God proceedeth in choosing and electing them which he ordaineth to salvation; which order is this. In them that be chosen to life, first Gods mercy and free grace bringeth forth Election; election worketh vocation, or Gods holy calling; which vocation, through hearing, bringeth knowledge and faith of Christ. Faith through promise, obtaineth justification, justification through hope, waiteth for glorification.

The second consideration.

Grace, Election, Vocation, Faith, Justification, Glorification.

Election is before time. Vocation and faith cometh in time. Justification and glorification is without end.

Election, depending upon Gods free grace and will, excludeth all mans will, blind fortune, chance and all peradventures.

Mans free will, Blind Fortune, Mans wisdom, Mans learning, Mans merits, Works of the Law excluded from the causes of our salvation in Christ.

Vocation, standing upon Gods election, excludeth all mans wisdom, cunning, learning, intention, power and presumption.

Faith in Christ, proceeding by the gift of the Holy Ghost, and freely justifying man by Gods promise, excludeth all other merits of men, all condition of deserving, and all works of the Law, both Gods Law and mans Law, with all other outward means whatsoever.

Justi-

Anno 1553

Juſtification cometh freely by faith, ſtandeth ſure by promiſe, without doubt, fear, or wavering in this life.

Glorification pertaining only to the life to come, by hope is looked for.

Grace and Mercy preventeth.

Election ordaineth.

Vocation prepareth and receiveth the Word, whereby cometh Faith.

Faith juſtifieth.

Juſtification bringeth glory.

Election is the immediate and next cauſe of Vocation.

Vocation. (which is the working of Gods Spirit by the Word) is the immediate and next cauſe of Faith.

Faith is the immediate and next cauſe of Juſtification.

Papiſts confound the doctrine of Election.

And this order and connexion of Cauſes is diligently to be obſerved, becauſe of the Papiſts, which have miſerably confounded and inverted this Doctrine, thus teaching, That Almighty God ſo far forth as he foreſeeth mans merits before to come, ſo doth he diſpenſe his Election. Dominus prout cujuſque merita fore prævidet, ita diſpenſat electionis gratiam. And again, Nullis præcedentibus meritis Dominum rependere electionis gratiam, futuris tamen concedere: that is, That the Lord recompenceth the grace of Election, not to any merits preceding; but yet granteth the ſame to the merits which follow: As though we had our Election by our Holineſs that followeth after, and not rather have our Holineſs by Gods Election going before.

Election.

But we, following the Scripture, ſay otherwiſe, that the only cauſe of Gods Election, is his own free mercy; and the only cauſe of our Juſtification is our Faith in Chriſt, and nothing elſe. As for example; firſt concerning Election, if the queſtion be asked, Why was Abraham choſen, and not Nachor? Why was Jacob choſen, not Eſau? Why was Moſes elected, and Pharaoh hardned? Why David accepted, and Saul refuſed? Why few be choſen, and the moſt forſaken? It cannot be anſwered otherwiſe but thus, Becauſe it was ſo the good will of God.

That vocation he meaneth here which is after purpoſe.

In like manner touching Vocation, and alſo Faith, if the queſtion be asked, Why this Vocation and Gift of Faith was given to Cornelius the Gentile, and not to Tertullus the Jew? Why to the Poor, to the Babes, and little Ones of this world, (of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, I thank thee Father, which haſt hid this from the wiſe, &c. Math 11. Why to the Unwiſe, the ſimple Abjects and Outcaſts in this world? (Of whom ſpeaketh Saint Paul, 1 Corinthians 1. Ye ſee your calling my brethren, how not many of you, &c.) Why to the Sinners, and not to the Juſt? Why the Beggers by the High-ways were called, and the bidden Gueſts excluded? We can go to no other cauſe, but to Gods Purpoſe and Election, and ſay with Chriſt our Saviour, Quia, pater, ſic complacitum eſt ante te; i. Yea Father, for ſo it ſeemeth good in thy ſight, Luke 10.

Vocation bringeth faith.

Juſtification by faith only.

And ſo for Juſtification likewiſe, if the queſtion be asked, Why the Publican was juſtified, and not the Phariſee? Luke 18. Why Mary the ſinner, and not Simon the inviter? Luke 11. Why Harlots and Publicans go before the Scribes and Phariſees in the Kingdom? Matthew 21. Why the Son of the Free-woman was received, and the Bond-womans Son, being his elder, rejected? Geneſis 21. Why Iſrael, which ſo long ſought for Righteouſneſs, found it not; and the Gentiles, which ſought not for it, found it? Romans 9. We have no other cauſe hereof to render, but to ſay with Saint Paul, Becauſe they ſought for it by works of the Law, and not by Faith: which Faith, as it cometh not by mans will (as the Papiſt falſly pretendeth) but only by the Election and free Gift of God; ſo it is only the immediate cauſe whereunto the Promiſe of our Salvation is annexed, according as we read; And therefore of Faith is the Inheritance given, as after Grace, that the Promiſe might ſtand ſure to every Seed, Romans 4. Item, in the ſame Chapter, Faith, believing in him which juſtifieth the wicked, is imputed to righteouſneſs.

And thus concerning the cauſes of our Salvation, ye ſee how Faith in Chriſt, only and immediately, without any Condition doth juſtifie us, being ſo linked with Gods Mercy and Election, that whereſoever Election goeth before, there Faith in Chriſt muſt needs follow after. And again, whoſoever believeth in Chriſt Jeſus, through the Vocation of God, he muſt needs be partaker of Gods Election.

How faith and election are linked together in the act of juſtifying.

Whereupon reſulteth now the third note or conſideration; which is, to conſider whether a man in this life may be certain of his Election. To anſwer to which queſtion, this firſt is to be underſtood; That although our Election and Vocation ſimply indeed be known to God only in himſelf, à priore; yet notwithſtanding it may be known to every particular faithful man, à poſteriore; that is, by means, which means is Faith in Chriſt Jeſus crucified. Forſomuch as by Faith in Chriſt a man is juſtified, and thereby made the Child of Salvation, Reaſon muſt needs lead the ſame to be then the Child of Election, choſen of God unto everlaſting life. For how can a man be ſaved, but by conſequence it followeth, that he muſt alſo be elected?

The third conſideration.

Election known to God ſimply.

Election known to man by means.

Faith is the means whereby we be certified of our election.

And therefore of Election it is truly ſaid, De electione judicandum eſt à poſteriore; that is to ſay, We muſt judge of Election, by that which cometh after, that is, by our Faith and Belief in Chriſt: which Faith, although in time it followeth after Election, yet this is the proper and immediate cauſe aſſigned by the Scripture, which not only juſtifieth us, but alſo certifieth us of this Election of God.

De electione judicandum eſt a poſteriore.

Whereunto likewiſe well agreeth this preſent Letter of M^r. Bradford, wherein he ſaith, Election, albeit in God it be the firſt, yet to us it is the laſt opened. And therefore beginning firſt (ſaith he) with Creation, I come from thence to the Redemption and Juſtification by Faith, and ſo to Election. Not that Faith is the cauſe efficient of Election, being rather the effect thereof, but is to us the cauſe certificatory, or the cauſe of our certification, whereby we are brought to the feeling and knowledge of our Election in Chriſt. For albeit that Election firſt be certain in the knowledge of God; yet in our knowledge, Faith only that we have in Chriſt, is the thing that giveth to us our certificate and comfort of this Election.

Election firſt known to God and laſt opened to man.

Wherefore, whoſoever deſireth to be aſſured that he is one of the elect number of God, let him not climb up to Heaven to know, but let him diſcend into himſelf, and there ſearch his Faith in Chriſt the Son of God: which if he find in him not feigned, by the working of Gods Holy Spirit accordingly; thereupon let him ſtay, and ſo wrap himſelf wholly, both Body and Soul, under Gods general Promiſe, and cumber his head with no further Speculations; knowing this, That whoſoever believeth in him ſhall not periſh, John 3. ſhall not be confounded, Romans 9. ſhall not ſee death, John 8. ſhall not enter into judgment, John 5. ſhall have everlaſting life, John 3.7. ſhall be ſaved, Matthew 28. Acts 16. ſhall have remiſſion of all his ſins, Acts 10. ſhall be juſtified, Romans 3. Galatians 2. ſhall have floods flowing out of him of water of life, John 7. ſhall never dye, John 11. ſhall be raiſed in the laſt day, John 6. ſhall find reſt to his ſoul, and ſhall be refreſhed, Matthew 11.

Every man to ſtay himſelf upon Gods general promiſe.

Now then, forſomuch as we ſee Faith to be the ground whereupon dependeth the whole Condition of our juſtifying, let us diſcuſs in like manner what is this Faith whereof the Scripture ſo much ſpeaketh, for the more plain underſtanding of the ſimple. For many kinds there be of Faith: as a man may believe every thing that is true, yet not every truth doth ſave, neither doth the believing of every Truth juſtifie a man. He that believeth that God created all things of nought, believeth truly. He that believeth that God is a juſt God, that he is Omnipotent, that he is merciful, that he is true of promiſe, believeth well, and holdeth the truth. So he that believeth that God hath his Election from the beginning, and that he alſo is one of the ſame Elect and Predeſtinate, hath a good belief, and thinketh well: but yet this belief alone, except it be ſeaſoned with another thing, will not ſerve to Salvation: as it availed not the old Jews, which ſo thought of themſelves, and yet think to this day to be only Gods elect People,

What faith is. Divers kinds of faith. Every truth hath his faith, but every truth juſtifieth not, no more doth every faith.

Faith the action, Christ the object of Faith. Faith and Christ correlatives.

Only the Faith which availeth to Salvation is that, whose Object is the Body and Passion of Jesus Christ crucified. So that in the act of justifying, these two, Faith and Christ, have a mutual relation, and must always concur together; Faith as the action which apprehendeth; Christ as the object which is apprehended.

Christ without Faith, saveth not. Faith without Christ helpeth not.

For neither doth the Passion of Christ save without Faith, neither doth Faith help, except it be in Christ: as we see the body of man sustained by bread and drink, not except the same be received and conveyed into the stomack: and yet neither doth the receiving of every thing sustain mans body, except it be meat and drink, which have power to give nourishment. In like sort it is with Faith; for neither doth the believing of every thing save, but only Faith in the Blood of Christ: neither again doth the same Blood of Christ profit us, except by Faith it be received. And as the Sun, being the cause of all light, shineth not but to them only which have eyes to see; nor yet to them neither, unless they will open their eyes to receive the light: so the Passion of Christ is the efficient cause of Salvation, but Faith is the Condition whereby the said Passion is to us effectual.

Grace, Election, Vocation, Christs death, causes external of our salvation. Faith the only internal cause of mans salvation. Faith is an action in man, but not of man.

And that is the cause why we say with the Scripture, that Faith only justifieth us, not excluding thereby all other external causes that go before Faith, as Grace, Mercy, Election, Vocation, the Death of Christ, &c. all which be external causes, working our Salvation through Faith. But when we say that Faith only justifieth us, the meaning thereof is this; that of all internal actions, motions, or operations in man, given to him of God, there is none other that contenteth and pleaseth God, or standeth before his Judgment, or can help any thing to the justifying of man before him, but only this one action of Faith in Jesus Christ the Son of God.

Vertues and works of Charity, though they be good gifts of God in man, yet they serve not to justification. Faith taketh his dignity of his object. Looking up to the brazen-Serpent, and believing upon the body of Christ compared.

For although the action of Praying, Fasting, Alms, Patience, Charity, Repentance, the fear and love of God be high gifts in man, and not of man, given of God to man, yet be none of all these actions in man imputed of God to Salvation, but only this one action of Faith in man upon Christ Jesus the Son of God. Not that the action it self of believing, as it is a quality in man, doth deserve, but because it taketh that dignity of the object. For as I said, the act of justifying Faith, as it is an action in man, is not to be considered alone, but must ever go with his object, and taketh his virtue thereof. Like as the looking up of the old Israelites did not of it self procure any health unto them, but the promise made in the object, which was the brazen Serpent, whereupon they looked, gave them health by their looking up: Even so after like sort are we saved by Faith and spiritual looking up to the Body of Christ crucified. Which Faith to define is this.

To believe Jesus Christ to be the Son of the living God, sent into this World, by his death to satisfie for our sins, and so to receive the same.

The error of the Papists perverting the mind of Gods Testament, how, and wherein.

And thus much touching Election and Faith; with the order and explication of the causes necessary to be considered in our Salvation, whereby may appear how far the pretensed Catholicks do swerve from the right mind of the Scriptures. For where the Scriptures in declaring the causes of Salvation, do send us only to Faith, as the only Condition whereby these causes have their working, these Catholicks do quite leave out Faith, and in stead thereof, place in other Conditions of Doings, Merits, Will-works, Pardons, Masses, and especially Auricular Confessions, with Penance and Satisfaction for our Sins, &c.

And besides these Letters above specified of Mr. John Bradford, there hath come to our hands certain other Letters of his, not long ago, sent by a certain old Friend of the said John Bradford unto us. Which Letters being written of him in former times before his trouble, as they have not been yet printed nor seen abroad, so I thought it not amiss to communicate the same to the Christian Reader, for the worthiness of the matter, and the goodness of the man, which may redound, I trust, to no small fruit to him, that with godly eyes shall advise the same.

A Letter of Mr. Bradford to Father Traves, Minister of Blackley. Anno 1555.

THe abundant Grace and rich Mercy of God in Christ our only Saviour and high Bishop, be increased in your heart, through the lively worker of all goodness, the holy Spirit, until the day of the Lord, &c.

I have received your two Letters (good Father Traves) sithence that I did write unto you, whereof though honesty willeth to make an excuse, yet truth biddeth me otherwise, and saith, it is better with shame to confess the fault (for therein is, as a man might say, half a deserving of pardon) than without shame to lye. I might have written unto you twice (notwithstanding indeed some business wherein I have something been occupied) but yet I have not. Now the cause is, because I would not. And why would I not? but because I could not, I mean, because my canning is taken away by sin, for my sins do forbid goodness unto me. Indeed if my sinning were of infirmity, there were good hope of recovery of that which I have lost: But seeing, both willing and knowing I have too much yielded, and yet do yield to my infirmities, justly I do deserve, that because I have cast away, and rejected the word of the Lord behind my back, the Lord should reject me. And because I would not have blessing, I am worthy (as David saith) that it be taken away from me. I have now at length experience, that to bring a man forth of Gods favour, is sooner seen when a man hath received all things abundantly, than when need or the Cross pincheth. Afore it pleased God to work the restitution (you know what I mean) and afore it pleased God to provide for me as he hath done, so that I can say in nothing, where any want is, as pertaining to my body: I was another manner of man, than now I am, and yet Gods deserts have otherwise bounden me: but the Scripture is true, I have advanced my children, and nourished them, but they have contemned me, I have fed them that they were fat and gross, and they spurned against me. Perchance you will ask me wherein? Oh Father Traves, I warrant you, this is my stile, in carnal, and not in spiritual writing, doth something shew unto you; but as for it, in comparison of other things is nothing. For where the life of man is such, that either it paireth or amendeth, as Paul saith, The outward man is corrupted day by day, and therefore except the inward man be renewed, the shoe goeth awry, every building in Christ doth grow to a holy Temple, as the wicked on the contrary part shall proceed to worser, 2 Tim. 3. I have made a change far otherwise in going back, than I think by Letters I can perswade you: Wherein will you say? For the first, second, and third, and to be brief, in all things: As for an example, Gods true fear is flown away from me, love to my Brethren is exiled from me, faith is utterly taken away. In stead whereof is distrust and doubtfulness bearing rule, contempt of Gods honour, and of my Brethren reigning, and in stead of true fear, an imagined fear, according to my brain holding the Principality. For I extenuate sin, and I do not consider that in sin, which a Christian ought to consider; that sin being not forgiven, is suth a thing for the which God casteth his Creature away, as examples not only of Saul, of Judas, of the Israelites (which were beloved indeed, and yet for sin are rejected) but also of others, on whom lately for my warning God hath shewed the same, do admonish me. But it is but my Pen which writes this: For the wicked, saith Solomon, when they come into the depth of their sins, then they grow in security. I am I cannot tell what: I fear, but it is but blindly, or else would I awake otherwise than I do; I fear me, I say, that I am intangled of the Devil, after his desire. Pray for me, that the Lord would give me repentance, that I may escape out of his Snares. Alas, the Spirit of Prayer, which before I have felt plentifully, is taken clean away from me. The Lord be merciful unto me. I am sold under sin, I am the Bond-slave of sin: for whom I obey, his Servant I am. I am ashamed to speak of it, no I shame not at all: for I have forgot to blush, I have given over to weep. And truly I obey, I obey I say mine own Concupiscences, namely in eating, in drinking,

Deut. 32.

2 Tim. 2.

Anno 1555. drinking, in jangling and idleneſs, I will not ſpeak of vain-glory, envy, diſdain, hypocriſie, deſire of eſtimation, ſelf-love, and who can tell all? Is this the reward thou rendereſt to God, O Bradford? It is true, yea too true, thou knoweſt it, O Lord for thy mercies ſake pardon me. In your Letters you touch me home, how that there is no mans heart, but that conſidering the ingratitude of this World, this belly-cheer (wherein you even take me by the Noſe) &c. his eyes would tumble out great guſhes of Tears. The Lord be praiſed which worketh ſo in you, for it is with me as with them of whom you complain. Indeed it may be ſo again, but oh it is very unlikely: for mine enemies are become old (and are made by cuſtom more than familiar, for they are as it were converted into nature in me. Yet I am not grieved therefore, although I cannot perſwade my ſelf that God will help me. O Lord be merciful unto me for thy Chriſts ſake. This day I received the Lords Supper, but how I have welcomed him, this night (which I have ſpent in laſciviouſneſs, in wantonneſs, and prodigality, obeying my fleſh and belly) doth ſo declare, that what to ſay, or write any more, I know not, ſleep doth aggravate mine eyes, and to pray I am altogether unapt. All this is come through the occaſion of making this bringer a Supper in my Chamber, the Lord pardon me, I truſt no more to be ſo far overſeen. But this I write, not that the anger of God, which I have deſerved, ſo feareth me, thou knoweſt it O Lord. But of this perchance too much.

For Gods ſake pray for me, good Father Traves, and write unto me as you may by your weakneſs, your Letters to me good. By this which I have now written, you may conſider more, touch me therefore home in your Letters, and the Lord, I truſt, ſhall and will reward you. If God lend me Life, of which I am moſt unworthy, I will more trouble you with my Letters than I have done; but bear with me, I do it not out of any evil will, the Lord I take to judge, there is none whoſe company and talk I more deſire than yours, I ſpeak it before God. Prove my Mothers mind how ſhe can bear it, if when I ſhall come down, I ſhall ſhew my ſelf another man outwardly, but alas fainedly, than before I have done. Marry, when my coming will be I know not. Indeed two things move me ſore, the one for my Mothers Cauſe, concerning her better inſtruction, if the Lord would thereto uſe me his Inſtrument, the other is to talk with you, and eftſoons to trouble you, as I have hitherto ever done, but alwayes to my profit. For Gods ſake pray for me, for I had never ſo much need. This Sunday at night, following S. Andrews day, at Pembroke Hall.

The moſt miſerable, hard-hearted, unthankful ſinner,
John Bradford.

Another Letter of John Bradford to Sir Thomas Hall, and Father Traves of Blackley.

THe grace of God our moſt merciful Father, keep Mind and Soul in Chriſt Jeſus, who alone is our full ſufficient Saviour, for in him we be compleat, being made through his death and one only oblation made and offered by himſelf upon the Croſs, the Children of God, and fellow heirs with him of the Celeſtial Kingdom, which is the free gift of God, and cometh not of Merits, but of the meer grace of God, given to none that putteth any manner of hope or truſt in any other thing viſible or inviſible, than in that oblation of ſweet ſavour which Chriſt himſelf did offer upon good Friday (as we call it) which oblation is alway recent and new in the ſight of God the Father, and maketh interceſſion for us: us I mean, which think that only Sacrifice then offered, to be ſufficient, as it is, hath been, and ever ſhall be for all the faithful, by the which Sacrifice (if we believe) we have free pardon of all our ſins. To him therefore which was both the offerer, and the offering, be all honour and praiſe, with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, bleſſed for ever, Amen.

Sir Thomas, the occaſion of this my long ſilence, mine old friend John Traves, ſhall declare unto you, upon the knowledg whereof I doubt not of your pardon. I have ſent unto you an Engliſh and Latin Teſtament, both in one print and volume, the which, though it be not ſo beautiful without as I could have ſent you, yet no leſs beautiful within, and more I think for your profit, and better for your Eyes, your Eyes I mean of the Body. For undoubtedly it giveth light unto the Soul, if ſhe be not dead. Whereof take this for an Argument, and a true proof. If your Soul be not delighted in it, if your Soul do not hunger for it (I mean not the Book, but the Doctrine in the Book) ſurely your Soul is ſore ſick; for as the Body abhorring meat is not well, even ſo muſt the Soul be, for other meat hath ſhe none. Chriſt, whom you muſt believe afore all Men, affirmeth this to be true in the 4. of Matthew. Not only in Bread, but in every word of God the Soul doth live. Mark well, he ſaith not, one or two words, as an Epiſtle, or a Goſpel; but he ſaith, every word. Take heed, believe Chriſt better than any Man, be he never ſo holy. For he that is of God, (John 8.) heareth the word of God. Will you have a more plain badge, whether you are the elect Child of God or no, then this Text: Chriſt ſaith, He that is of God, heareth the word of God: but other word of God have we none, than in the Canon of the Bible: and all things written therein, are written for our learning (ſaith S. Paul) whereby he proveth, ſeeing that it is a learning, yea our learning that we muſt learn it. Therefore woe be to all them which either perwade Men, that there is other Doctrine of like Authority, or that diſſwade Men from imbracing this Word, this Word of God, or that think this Word, eſpecially the New Teſtament, is not above all other to be loved, to be read, to be chewed. This is the precious ſtone, which in the Goſpel Chriſt ſaith, when a Man hath found, he ſelleth all that ever he hath, and buyeth it. Mark now how neceſſary and precious Chriſt maketh that which great learned Men (nay the Devils but no Men) think not neceſſary, God help them. Chriſt bade his Diſciples ſell their Coats, and buy a Sword: which is none other thing then the Word of God: for ſo S. Paul calleth it, the Sword of the Spirit. Nay ſay our learned Men, (I lie, they have ſaid ſo, now they are aſhamed) fetch fire and burn it.

This I ſay, Sir Thomas, to the intent no ungodly Hypocriſie ſhould perſwade or diſſwade you from reading the Holy Word of God, the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt. Follow you Saint Pauls leſſon: Attend reading, and let the Word of God dwell in you. How much? Plentifully, ſaith he. And to what end? To feed the flock of Chriſt: even as much as in you is, ſaith Peter, not once a year or once a quarter as a Stawberry, but ſo much as in you is. This Word of God trieth all Doctrine: for we ought to have our Conſcience charged with nothing as touching Religion, except the Word of God in the Canon of the Bible ſet it out, I mean not only in allegories, but even in plain words. For no other Foundation can any Man lay, beſides that which is laid. S. Paul ſaith, the groundwork is laid already. Even ſo ſaith he to the Epheſians; We be his Workmanſhip to do good Works, which God hath created that we ſhould walk in them. He ſaith that they were not to be made, but they are made already. What ſhall we think then of ſuch works as Mans Wit hath founded, which yet ſeem moſt holy? Let Gods Word be Judge. Read the ſame diligently and reverently with Prayer (I mean not Latin Service not underſtood, but with true hearty Prayer) and mark what the Law requireth, even that which we cannot give, the whole heart, and more if it were poſſible. But to this end, that we ſeeing our abominable uncleanneſs and inability, might deſpair in our ſelves, trembling at the juſtice of God, and his anger which we continually procure, and ſo amplect Chriſt, in whom God the Father is well pleaſed. Which Chriſt is the end of the Law to juſtifie all that believe, and continue not in their Popiſh ignorance, juſtifying themſelves; and treading Chriſts Blood under their feet, denying the Lord that bought them. All ſuch, be they never ſo well learned, never ſo holy, be nothing but Hypocrites, and plain Antichriſts, which may not abide the Sword of Gods Mouth. For the Trumpets of the Army (I mean ſtill Gods Word) when they blow, the high Walls of Jerico, the figure of Hypocriſie falleth down. Embrace therefore Gods holy Word, & be not only a reader, but a doer: for your calling requireth you to be apt to teach ſuch proud Hypocritical arrogant bablers, as I am now (which if I may uſe this term , defile Gods Word) God forgive me , and pray you for me, and give God thanks for me , that ſpareth me thus Lucifer-like, not of a true zeal, but of a fooliſh bragging,which prate of Gods Holy Word. I wote not what I do to confeſs it. So it is. I have ſent to you other Books which I pray you read. I have written your Name in them. The Holy Ghoſt keep you with your Brother George, his Wife, and Children , and with your Brother James, &c. Sir Laurence , &c. This 20. of March.

A very painted Hypocrite ,
John Bradford. Yours in Chriſt for ever.

Pray for me, pray for me, give God thanks for me, and take John Traves help to read this Letter written in haſt.

If any thing but good be chanced to John Traves (which God forbid) I pray you burn my Letters out of hand.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford , to Father Traves.

Gratia,miſericordia, & pax à Deo Patre noſtro, & Domino Jeſu Chriſto Domino noſtro.

IF mine Heart were not altogether adamantine, your kind Letters to me unkind miſer would cauſe me from the bottom of the ſame , to confeſs mine ingratitude towards you upon your behalf anempſt me ſo much deſerved: but as I am to do , ſo ſhew I my ſelf to write,and as I am unable in the one , ſo am I fooliſh in the other; In all thoſe unkindneſſes , rudeneſs , &c. whereof you accuſe your ſelf, I am inforced to acknowledge my ſelf, moſt juſtly condemned, not ſo feignedly by me confeſſed, as moſt truly by you experienced. In your Letters as in a glaſs I may learn , by you in dejecting your ſelf, to eſpy my nakedneſs, which tofore I thought cloathed Dupiici veſtitu , now only but with fig leaves hypocritiſhly guilded,of which dejection wrought in you by the Holy Ghoſt, be not proud: For what have you that you have not received? but be thankful to the Lord, not only therefore , but alſo for thoſe ſurges which you feel now through the cares accompanying marriage,now through education and bringing up of your Children, and Family, now through that Croſs of the common accuſtomed trade of living: for Per multas tribulationes oportet ingredi Regnum Dei : Through many tribulations we muſt enter into the Kingdom of Heaven,yea they be the cogniſances of Gods election,the Letter Thau,the Inſtruments which work ſuſpiria æternæ vitæ,and therefore to be imbraced. Believe me it this the moſt excellent gift of God,a Man to deject and humble himſelf,and to feel the Croſſes of Chriſt as Croſſes. But I moſt hypocritical wretch,not worthy that this earth ſhould bear me,am even a going to Bed with Jeſabel,and ſuch as commit fornication with her,which is affliction maxima. O Lord help me and deliver me for Jeſus ſake , anoint mine eyes with oyntment that I may ſee. O give me not over into a leud mind and reprobate ſenſe, but awake my ſleeping Soul that Chriſt may ſhine in me. You know the Croſs,the Fatherly Croſs,the living Lord hath laid upon me : but I am little or nothing moved therewith,I work therein(yet not I but Gods Spirit) not of a repentant Faithful mind,but I cannot tell how)of a ſloathful blind, wretchleſs intent.O Lord forgive me for ſaying ſo, (it is thy gift) forgive me mine unthankfulneſs for Jeſus ſake, and as herein I blaſphemed and diſhoneſted thy Holy Name, ſo do thou by thy Holy Spirit glorifie by me the ſame. So be it, So be it.

Sithence my coming to London , I was with M. Latimer, whoſe Counſel is as you ſhall hear, which I purpoſe by Gods Grace to obey (if it be thy will, O Lord, fiat.) He willed me (as I have done) to write to my Maſter who is in the Country,and to ſhew him, that if within a certain time which I appointed,14. days,he do not go about to make reſtitution , that I will ſubmit my ſelf to my Lord Protector, and the Kings Majeſties Councel to confeſs the fault, and ask pardon. This life is uncertain and frail , and when time is , it muſt be deferred. And what ſhould it profit me to win the whole World , and to loſe mine own Soul ? If, as I juſtly have deſerved, I be put to death for it , Gods will be done. As the leaſt ſlander , reproach , rebuke , loſs of Worldly friends , loſs of living , &c. ſhall enſue. What then? Lord thy will be done , thine Item ; if death come, welcom be it, if ſlander, &c. Even as thou wilt Lord, So be it. Only grant me a penitent loving obedient heart, and of meer love to go forwards herein, and not to ſhrink , to ſtand and not to fall: that thy name only be praiſed herein. Amen. Pray, pray for me, cry for me, and when you ſhall hear any thing, comfort my Mother, to whom for that this bringer hath not given me an hours warning of his departure , I have not only written nothing; but alſo have thus pratled to you, who (as no Man elſe would) I think will bear with me. For as God knoweth (to whoſe Grace I commit you and your Bed-fellow, with all your Children and Family) the ſhortneſs of time, and this ſaid bringers importance is only the let I neither ſend you ſpectacles,the price of the Paraphraſes , nor thanks for yonr cheeſe as by the next that cometh I will, God willing, ſend the premiſſes to you , and a godly Teſtament for Sir Thomas Hall , which is at the binding. But be not acknown that I have now written to you, for ſo I have prayed this bringer. God be with us, and pray for me,and abhor not my rude ſcribling , which if it were as well written as it is meant, would deſerve pardon. Thus make I an end, imputing to the haſtineſs of this bringer all blame, which you may lay unto me.

From the Temple this Sunday, immediately after M. Latimers famous Sermon,which this bringer, as he ſaith, did hear.

By your pooreſt friend,
John Bradford.

It ſhall not be long, God willing,but you ſhall both have and hear from me. Keep with you Melancthons Common places, for I have another.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

GRace,Mercy,and Peace fromGod the Father,through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, with increaſe of all manner of godly knowledge and living,be with you and all your houſhold, now, and ever, Amen:

To excuſe this my long ſilence, within five or ſix days after my (like fooliſh) Letters written to you by John Moſs ; it pleaſed God to ſend my Maſter hither to London (whom as I lately tofore had advertiſed by Letters) I moved (you know wherein) and prayed him to diſcharge the ſame,or elſe I would ſubmit my ſelf,&c.Whereunto he anſwered,that if the Books would declare it, he would ſatisfie,&c. The Books I ſhewed, whereupon he promiſed as much as I could ask. But being herein ſomething more moved then he had cauſe (God be praiſed therefore ,which of his meer good pleaſure wrought it) at times as I could, I deſired to know how and in what time he would diſcharge us both.He thinking me to be over curious herein, was not therewith contented , and hearing me to alledge the uncertainty of time,and the fear of Gods juſtice (which O gracious Lord grant me to feel indeed as much as thou knoweſt good for me) he anſwered me to be ſcrupulous, and of a ſuperſtitious Conſcience (for animalis homo non percipit ea quæ ſunt Dei:)and plainly ſaid further,that I ſhould not know,nor by theſe words have his head ſo under my girdle. And when I ſhewed him that (God witneſſed with me)I went about no ſuch thing: He ſaid, that there was no godly Conſcience,ſeeing he promiſed afore the face of God to diſcharge me, and to pay the thing, but it ought ſo to be quieted.And thus at divers and ſundry times,moving eſtſoons to know of him the way and time of diſcharging the debt,& having none other anſwers then tofore,I doubting Worldly wiſdom,which uſeth delays,to reign in him with this Mammon (the which O Merciful God eradicate out of his Heart,mind, and all others) I was ſomething more ſharp, and told him,non ego tamen,ſed gratia tua Domine, I would obey God more than Man : the which he lightly regarding, as ſeemed, I departed , and went to Maſter Latimer to have had him to have brought me to my

Anno 15[illegible] my Lord Protector (whoſe grace then was purpoſed ſhortly to take his journey to viſit the Ports) M. Latimer I ſay willed me to ſtay untill his return, which will not be long before Eaſter. In this mean time I bade my Bed-fellow my Maſters Son, whom my Maſter had uſed as his Inſtrument to move me carnally, for my Maſter diſcharged him of his exhibition, telling him that he could not be able to keep either Houſe or Child, for I purpoſed to undo both him and all his, (untruly thou knoweſt good Lord) and bade him to take that as a warning, that both he and his Brethren ſhould provide for themſelves as they could, I bade, I ſay, my ſaid Bed-fellow to ſhew my Maſter, as of himſelf, my further purpoſe, which thing when he knew, it ſo moved and feared him, that he began ſomething to relent, and then made fair promiſes, that look what I ſhould deviſe, that would he do. I deviſed, but my deviſes pleaſed him not. And thus, but not vainly I truſt (as I now do with you, but I know your gentleneſs which ever hath born with me) I ſpent the time in which I have been ſilent to write, nay babble to you. And he, departing out of London tofore I knew, did ſend me word by another of his ſaid Sons, not ſo given to the Goſpel, and a good Life according as my Bed-fellow, and therefore more to be ſuſpected (for though pietas non eſt ſuſpicioſa, as I ſhould think my ſelf rather impius; yet Chriſt bade us to be prudentes ſicut ſerpentus) this other Brother I ſay told me that my Mr. would do all things, only his Fame and Ability preſerved (& quid prodeſt totum mundum lucrari, animæ vero jacturam faceret) And with the ſaid Brother my Mr. ſent me a little billet alſo, wherein he confeſſed that he was contented within twelve Months to deliver to my hands the whole Money: which Bill I thinking not ſo good as it might have been, have deviſed another, and have ſent it down to him in the Country, with requeſt that he will Seal and Sign it. For thus M. Latimer thinketh ſufficient, but as yet I hear not of it, doubting worldly Wiſdom, which was the whore that overcame Sampſon, that moved David to ſlay Urias, that brought wiſe Salomon to Idolatry, that crucified Chriſt, the which moved me to perpetrate hoc facinus, the which worketh in my Maſters Heart, having higher place there then Timor Domini. What ſay I there? yea, yea, with me, it ſitteth in the holy place (the Lord deliver us,) doubting I ſay, worldly Wiſdom, I remain in that ſame ſtate now for this matter (though in worſe for my Soul, which is more to be lamented, pray therefore I beſeech you, pray with me, and for me, that I may do ſo earneſtly) that I was in at my laſt writing unto you. And as I then was purpoſed, ſo I doubt not (grant it Lord) but that I ſhall perſevere, if in the mean ſeaſon I ſhall not hear from my Maſter accordingly. Thus I have (like my ſelf) fooliſhly but truly declared unto you in many babling words, which wit (if I had it) would have ſhortly and briefly comprehended. Arrogant, nay Gods working unthankful wretch, my working in this matter, which is, and was the only cauſe (as I now do) I troubled you not afore, to the intent I might advertiſe you ſome certainty in this thing. And though ſilence had been much better then this fooliſh prating, yet your Fatherly kindneſs ever towards me in expecting from you a correction, as I have herein given cauſe, may though not to you, yet to me be profitable. In hope whereof, I proceed in requiring you to continue your remembrance of me a moſt unkind wretch to God and you, in your Prayers with the Almighty merciful Lord, that I may more regard his will and pleaſure herein, then all honour or ſhame in this life. But I muſt confeſs unto you that my working in this matter is not of love, as I ſhould do, nor of fear of Gods juſtice (mine unthankfulneſs, mine unthankfulneſs, if nothing elſe were, hath not only deſerved it, but doth deſerve more then everlaſting Damnation, O Lord be merciful unto me) I do not ſo repent it as I ſhould do. Why ſay I ſo? as though this ſo were any thing: Oh hypocritical wretch that I am! Alas Father Traves, let me ſo call you, I am hard-hearted, there was never any ſo obſtinate, ſo unkind, againſt ſo loving, ſo merciful, ſo gracious, ſo good, ſo beneficial a Lord, yea a Father, as I wretch, and moſt miſerable Sinner am. This I ſpeak, but not of humility, but of Hypocriſie, yet I ſpeak truly. I pray the good Father for Chriſts ſake, I may think it truly, as I write it even of arrogancy, ſo it is. Therefore pray and cry for me. Here be ſuch goodly, godly, and learned Sermons, which theſe uncircumciſed ears of mine hear at the leaſt thrice a week, which were able (the great loving mercy of God offered to me in them, I mean) to burſt any Mans heart, to relent, to repent; to believe, to love, and to fear that omnipotent gracious Lord: but my adamantine, obſtinate, moſt unkind, ingrate, unthankful heart, hearing my Lord, which is the Lord over all Lords, ſo graciouſly, ſo lovingly, vouchſafe by ſo many his Inſtruments to ſpeak, to call, to cry unto me, now by his law, now by his threats, now by his Goſpel, now by his promiſes, now by all his creatures, to come, to come even to himſelf, I hide me with Adam in the Garden, I play not only Samuel running to Hely, but I play Jonas running to the Sea, and there I ſleep upon the hatches tumbling in Jeſabels Bed, quod eſt afflictio maxima, until it pleaſe God to anoint mine eyes collyrio, until it pleaſe him to raiſe up a tempeſt, to turn and look upon me, as Luke ſaith he did on Peter. For O Lord it is thy gift, and cometh of thee, and of thy meer grace, it cometh not of Man, it cometh not of works, to repent, to believe, to fear, and to love. Work thou therefore in me for Jeſus Chriſts ſake, which am thy Creature and moſt unthankful hypocritical ſervant, not when I will, nor as I will but when thou wilt, even that which may be moſt to the glory of thy Name, Amen. What ſhould I write? nay, why do I not pluck theſe ſame words and paper in pieces? for I write altogether of hypocriſie and arrogant preſumption, I will confeſs it (thou wicked ſpirit the Lord judge thee:) I will confeſs it, it is moſt true, John Traves, I but only write it, for it is not I, it is hypocriſie. Scientia (if I had it) inflaret, O Lord grant me thy grace, and leave me not to mine own judgment and reaſon. Hypocriſie, arrogancy, and obſtinate ſecurity environ me (yet I feel them not) the Lord deliver me. Pray, pray for me. Give God thanks for me: O Lord, even tua fiat voluntas: Unlock this mine Heart, thou which haſt the Key of David, which openeſt only, that I may deſire to have the deſire of the glory of thy name, of repentance, faith, &c. Pray for me, and be thankful for me, O Father Traves, and write to me. Your Letters I deſire more to ſee, then any mans living. Let me have them therefore as you may, but your Prayers at all times, that God would open mine heart to feed and taſte of theſe comfortable places of Scripture (which to me are locked) memento Jeſum Chriſtum reſurrexiſſe ex mortuis. This Text as a Text of moſt comfort (as it is indeed, and when God will, I ſhall feed on it) did Paul ſend to Timothy to be his comfort in all places. For our Salvation (this day of Reſurrection) is nearer now then when we believed. Therefore, qui perſeveraverit ſalvus erit. For conſummabitur prævaricatio, ſaith Daniel, finem accipiet peccatum, delebitur iniquitas, & adducetur juſtitia ſempiterna. Deus enim ipſe veniet & ſalvabit nos. Veniens veniet, & non tardabit; & quandocunque manifeſtatus fuerit vita noſtra Chriſtus, tunc & nos manifeſtabimur cum illo in gloria. Semel enim oblatus eſt ut multorum peccata tolleret, rurſus abſque peccato conſpicietur iis qui illum expectant in ſalutem. Sic Semper eum Domino erimus: proinde conſolemini vos invicem mutuo ſermonibus hiis. O Lord open mine eyes which ſee nothing of the great comforts in theſe thy moſt rich words: Open mine eyes, good Lord, ne nunquam obdormiam in morte. Pray for me, and commend me to your good Bedfellow, & omnibus in Chriſto fratribus oſculo ſancto. Thus I make an end (for it is time you may ſay) and I pray you ſtill water Sir Thomas Hall, unto whom I have ſent a fair Teſtament both in Engliſh and Latin, if this bringer will carry it. And I have herewith ſent you a Letter, which firſt peruſe and read, and when you have ſo done, abhor not me, but my wickedneſs, and pray for me. And as you can ſee a meet time, ſeal it, and deliver it to Sir Nicholas Wolfoncros, by ſuch policy as you can think by Gods grace through Prayer. I confeſs unto you, God is my witneſs, to my knowledg, I never in my being in the Country this Winter at any time called it to remembrance, the Lord forgive me. I would by ſome occaſion, if any could be had, afore the delivery of the Letter, by ſome ſtory or communication, that he did know that abomination to be ſin, for I fear me he thinketh it to be no ſin. The Lord open our eyes, & forgive us, Amen. The peace of God be with you, Amen.

Yours in Christ moſt bounden,
John Bradford

I have ſent you three pair of good Spectacles I trow, and other ſuch Books as have your Name written in them, which take in good worth, and pray for me, and give thanks for me.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

Gratia, miſericordia, & pax, &c.

MY chance is not by this bringer to have any warning in manner of his farewell, ſo that I am conſtrained, time coarcting me, to write not ſo much of things (which I will omit) as my deſire was. Concerning the great matter you know of, it hath pleaſed God to bring it to this end, that I have a Bill of my Maſters hand, wherein he is bound to pay the ſum afore Candlemas next coming. This thinks Mr. Latimer to be ſufficient. Therefore I pray you to give that gracious Lord thanks, and thanks, and thanks upon it, for me a moſt wretched ingrate Sinner, which have alſo in other things no leſs cauſe to praiſe Gods Name. As for that I have and ſuſtain my Maſters ſore diſpleaſure, the which hath brought me (God I ſhould ſay through it) unto a more contempt of Worldly things, through the ſequeſtration of ſuch his buſineſs, as to fore I had ado withal, I call it a contempt, well, take the word even as it is Hypocritically and vainglorioufly ſpoken: for the which fault amongſt my others innumerable, I truſt you remember in your Prayers, whereof I, have (would I knew how much) need. There is yet another thing, whereof I will advertiſe you even to this end, that you might pray if it be Gods will, that as I truſt ſhortly to begin, ſo he may vouchſafe to confirm that he hath begun, as (if I be not deceived) I believe it is his working. If the thing ſeem by Gods Spirit in you that I preſume, then for the Lords ſake advertiſe me: for I am much given to that diſeaſe, the Lord deliver me. I have moved my M. therein already by Letters, to ſee if I ſhall have any living of him as hitherto I have had, but I have thereof no anſwer, nor as our Natural ſpeech is, any likelihood of any grant. Yet that I have already, I truſt, will ſuffice me for three years: you look what my purpoſe meaneth, I am ſo long afore I come to it. Therefore I do it, becauſe my long babling ſhould be leſs tedious. Now ſhall you have it. If Gods will be (whereunto pray I may be obedient) I am minded afore Midſummer to leave London to go to my Book at Cambridge, and if God ſhall give me Grace, to be a Miniſter of his Word. Thus you have of a flye an Elephant. Well, take it in good part though you ſee my etiam non, and not etiam, etiam A tumbling block gathereth no Moſs: ſo therefore pray for me. Perchance I do fooliſhly to forſake ſo good a living as I have. I will ſay no more hereof, but pray for me. I truſt as I ſaid, for three years ſtudy I have ſufficient, if my Maſter take all from me: and when this is ſpent, God will ſend more. I do not write this that you ſhould think me to be in need of Worldly help, and therefore as Friers were wont, ſecretly to beg. No, in the Lords Name I require you not to take it ſo: for I had rather never ſend Letter, afore I ſhould be herein a croſs to you, for ſufficit ſua diei afflictio, we are more ſet by then many Sparrows. But if my Mother, or Sir Thomas Hall murmure at it, or be offended with me, as you can, remedy it with your counſel. Howbeit, as yet I will not write to them of it, untill ſuch time as I be going. I am ſomething fickle minded and unconſtant, therefore pray for me, that my hand being put to the Plough (preſumptuouſly ſpoken) I look not back. You may gather by my words in this Letter the Heroical heart which lyeth in me,

I have ſent you a book of Bucer againſt Winchester in Engliſh lately tranſlated, which I never read, therefore I cannot praiſe it. And as I call to remembrance, I did ſend you with the other Books more then you received, at the leaſt one of them I remember, which is called, The Common places, or the Declaration of the Faith by Urbanus Rhegius. Ask for it, or ſend me word in whom the default is, you have it not. Hereafter, and that ſhortly by Gods Grace I will ſend you Primitiæ laborum meorum, a work or two which I have Tranſlated into Engliſh, ſo ſoon as they be Printed, which will be afore Whitſuntide. Pray for me, good Father Traves, and God ſend you health of Soul and Body, as I would mine own or any Mans living. But yet to warn you of that you know not, in writing your Letters to me, you hit me home, and give me that I look for. You are deceived, and ſo is all that know me, I never came to any point of mortification, therefore a little tickling ſets me aſtote, God help me, and give God thanks for me, as all Men be moſt bounden. Thus when I once begin to write to you, I run as the Prieſt ſaith Mattins, for I think I may be bold on you. The Holy Ghoſt preſerve you, your Wife and Family, and perſevere his grace in you unto the end. I pray you pray for me, a moſt (what ſhould I call me) miſerable and blaſphemous ſinner. The peace of God be with us. From the Temple this twelfth of May, 1548.

Sir Thomas Hall hath deceived me, but himſelf moſt. I deſire to ſpeak with him, as this Winter it may chance, if I diſcharge not my ſelf of mine Office, to ſee him. Pray for him, and for me.

A very Hypocrite,

John Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford To Father Traves.

THE perſeverance of Gods grace, with the knowledge of his good will, increaſe with you unto the end. To declare my ſelf, as I am a Carnal Man, which underſtandeth not the things that be of the Spirit. Theſe my Letters, though I counterfeit and meddle amongſt them the ſpiritual words, as the Devil did in his temptations to Chriſt will declare no leſs. For I begin with carnal things in effect, and no marvel if I ſo end: for how can a Man gather figs of briars? Theſe words as they ſeem, ſo they are ſpoken for a Cloak to make you think otherwiſe: but, Father Traves, you cannot think ſo evil of me as I am: But to the matter. This preſent day by Gods grace I take my journey towards Cambridge, where I pray God, and ſo earneſtly I pray you to pray for me, that I may circumſpectly redeem this time which God hath appointed (to me unknown) to lend me: for alas, I have ſpent moſt wickedly the time paſt, for the which I muſt account even for every hair breadeth as they ſay: for God hath not given here time to ſin. But if I conſidered this (as I do nothing leſs, cuſtom of ſin and pleaſing my ſelf hath ſo hardened my heart) I ſhould then come to the feeling of my ſelf, then ſhould I hate ſin which I now love, then ſhould I fear Gods wrath, which I now contemn, then ſhould I cry out and weep, and continually pray, whereas now I am as dry as a Stone, as dumb as a Nail, as far from praying, as he that never knew any taſte of it. Which thing once I felt, (thanks to the Lord) but now for mine unthankfulneſs I am almoſt (but moſt worthily) deprived. I fear me, God will take his grace from me, I am ſo unthankful. Alas, why do I lye in ſaying I fear me? Nay, God grant I may do ſo, for then ſhould I pray and pray: but ſeeing I cannot, ſpeak you for me, pray for me, that the Lord would remember his old compaſſions towards me, for his mercies ſake draw me, yea compel me to ſerve, to fear and to love him. Thus may you ſee how I preſume: for my intent was to have been a Miniſter of Gods Word, to have been his Inſtrument to call from as I have called to ſin, but you ſee how that God puniſheth mine arrogancy. Alas, what ſhall I do? I am an unprofitable and an idle Member, I thought I ſhould have been therein profitable, but Medice cura teipſum. How ſhould I, or what ſhould I do? I cannot labour with my hands. Well, I truſt God will give me grace and knowledge to tranſlate: nothing I fear me, yea I diſtruſt me, that I ſhall never be Miniſter of Gods Word: yea, if arrogancy were not in me, how ſhould I, of all wretches the greateſt, think me to look to the higheſt room and vocation that is upon Earth? Therefore eftſoons I deſire you to pray for me, that Gods will may be done in me whether I live or dye, ſo that

Anno 15[illegible] that his name be honoured. My Maſter which was, hath denied me all his beneficence, but I have for this Life more than enough, thanks be to God. As this Winter I intend by Gods favour to declare more unto you. This Book which I have ſent, take it in good part, it is the firſt, I truſt it ſhall not be the laſt, God hath appointed me to tranſlate. The print is very falſe, I am ſorry for it. I pray you be not offended at my babling in the Prologues, &c.

John Bradford.

I will lye, God willing, this Summer at Katherines Hall in Cambridge: write to me.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford, to Father Traves.

THe loving kindneſs and abundant mercy of God the Father, poured plentifully upon all the Faithful, in the Blood of that meek Lamb Jeſus Chriſt our only ſatisfaction and Mediator, through the working of the moſt Holy Spirit, be encreaſed, and perceived in you daily more and more, to the glory of God, &c.

Becauſe I ſtand both in doubt of the reading and delivery of ſuch Letters as I write and ſend unto you (dearly beloved Father Traves*) I am conſtrained to leave off ſuch griefs, and ſpiritual wants, as, thanks unto the Lord, I unwillingly feel: for the fleſh, as you know, loveth nothing ſo much as ſecurity, of all enemies moſt perillous, and not a little familiar with me: from the which, with vain-glory, hypocriſie, &c. and Worldlineſs, the Lord deliver me. I had not thought to have written thus much, but theſe I cannot keep, but commit them to your Prayers. And to the intent I would you ſhould not think any ingratitude in me; as alſo that I might give you occaſion to write to me again, as heretofore I have done, even ſo do I interturb and trouble you with my babling, but yet having this commodity, that I babble not ſo much as I wont to do. The cauſe I have declared, which had almoſt been the cauſe I had not written at all. I did write unto you from* London when I came hither: ſend me word what Letters you have received, for from you I have received but two, and both by John Moſs, and in the latter I perceived that the Lord had viſited you with ſickneſs, his Fatherly Rod, whereby he declareth his love upon you, and that he careth for you, Ut in tempore ſupremo exultes nunc ad breve tempus afflictus, quo exploratio fidei multo pretioſior auro quod perit, & tamen probatur, &c. Siquidem in hoc vocatus es, ut cum Chriſto patiaris, nam & cum illo glorificaberis. Certus enim ſermo eſt, ſi ſufferimus & con-regnabimus. You know that Chriſt, etſi filius Dei erat, tamen ex his quæ paſſus eſt didicit obedientiam. Patientia opus perfectum habeat ut ſitis perfecti & integri, nullaque in parte diminuti: and doth not patientia come of probatio, the one then you had, ſo that you were going a School to learn the other, which learned what want you. The end of all Gods proving, is as Paul ſaith, Ut impertiat nobis ſanctimoniam: igitur gratias age Deo Patri qui idoneum te fecit ad participationem ſortis ſanctorum in lumine, &c. Nam qui parumper afflixit, idem inſtauret te, fulciat, roboret, ſtabiliat. And that the Lord knoweth how eripere pios è tribulatione, and that in tempore opportuno, even ſhortly: for haud tardat qui promiſit: nam modicum tempus, & videbis me; veniens enim veniet, & non tardabit. Itaque qui conſortes eſtis crucis Chriſti, gaudete, ſaith Peter, ut in revelatione quoque gloriæ ejus gaudeatis exultantes. Oh how doth my will over-run my wit. Why Bradford; whom writeſt thou unto? thou ſheweſt thy ſelf. Thus Father Traves, you may ſee my raſhneſs to rabble out the Scripture without purpoſe, rime, or reaſon. I will not blot it out as I thought to have done: for that hereby you ſhall ſee my need of your Prayer. Well, I look for a watch-word from you. Write for Gods ſake, and pray for me that I may be in ſomething profitable to the Lords Congregation, that I may be no ſtumbling block, ut confundantur in me qui illum expectant. Send me ſuch counſel as the Lords Spirit ſhall move you how to ſtudy. My deſire is in ſomething to be profitable, if it were the Lords will, for to be Miniſter verbi. Alas I am unmeet, and my time, my time, yea the Lords time, I have hitherto evil, yea moſt wickedly miſ-ſpent it, &c. This will I end. The Lord be with you and your Bed-fellow, to whom have me heartily commended, and to all your Children and Family, the which I beſeech the Lord to lighten his countenance over, and grant you his peace: pray for me. I long for Winter to ſpeak with you. Reſcribe oro. Pray for me. This Aſſumption-day in Katherines Hall in Cambridge.

Yours with all I have and can,
John Bradford

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

THe plentiful grace of God the Father, through our only Maſter and Lord Jeſus Chriſt, increaſe in us daily to the glory of his Name. Amen.

Foraſmuch as I have often written unto you, good Father Traves, and yet have not once heard from you ſithence Pentecoſt, I cannot now be ſo bold either in writing much or often as I would have been: Howbeit this I ſay, that I much marvel that I hear not from you: but not ſo, for I am ſo wretched a Sinner, that the Lords Spirit I am certain doth not move you to write to me, yet for Gods ſake pray for me, and in the Lords Name I deſire you to give thanks to God for me. And when it may pleaſe God to move you, write to me, though it be but two words, and counſel me how to ſtudy the Word of life, the miniſtry whereof I deſire, if it be the Lords pleaſure, to profeſs, and that I may do it both in living and learning, pray for me. Herus meus omnibus rebus ſuis me abdicavit, & quæ prius conceſſerat, jam ſolvere renuit, & mihi prorſus factus eſt inimicus. I know not when I ſhall ſee you in Body, therefore let me hear from you. I write not this that you ſhould think me in egeſtate aut anguſtiis eſſe. No Father, the Lord giveth me omnia affatim, and will do. I truſt I ſhall ſhortly here have a fellowſhip, I am ſo promiſed, and therefore I have taken the degree of Maſter of Art, which elſe I could not have attained. If I get a fellowſhip, I ſhall not need de craſtino ſolicitus eſſe, as hereafter I ſhall more write to you by Gods grace. I pray you write again, and often pray for me. In haſt as appeareth, the twenty two of October. Ne ſciat mater mea quod herus meus adeo duriter mecum egit, &c.

Miſerrimus peccator,
J. Bradford

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

THe peace and plenteous Mercy of God our Heavenly Father, in his Chriſt our only Lord and Saviour, be ever increaſed in you by the Holy Spirit, qui efficit omnia in omnibus, Amen

Father Traves, though I might think my ſelf more happy, if you would often write unto me, yet becauſe I ought to have reſpect to your pains, which now that old Man cannot ſo well ſuſtain as it might, I had rather loſe my happineſs in that behalf, then will your grief, for as much as it can be no happineſs unto me which turneth to your pain: yet becauſe pain is not painful when it is joyned with gain, I therefore deſire you for Gods ſake to pray often for me: for if I ſhall not be worthy of your Prayer, as the Lord who knoweth all things doth right well ſee it, and ſo my Conſcience witneſſeth, your good Prayer ſhall return into your own Boſom. And know this, that whoſo converteth a Sinner by Prayer, whether it be by Prayer, preaching, or writing Letters, &c. the ſame hath ſaved a Soul. Uſe therefore, for Gods ſake I ask it, that pains whereunto is joyned profit, I mean Prayer to God for me, a miſerable and moſt wretched Sinner: and as for the gainleſs pain in writing to me, uſe it yet as you may, and ſurely God for whoſe ſake you do it, in that he will reward a Cup of cold Water, will in ſome thing requite you. And I know certainly, that if you did ſee what ſpiritual profit I receive by your Letters, I am certain you would not think all your labour loſt. For Chriſts ſake therefore begin again to write unto me, and reprove me ſharply for my horrible unthankfulneſs to God. You know how that God hath exonerated my loden

Conſcience

Conſcience of the great weighty burthen, for ſo I did write to you, yea the Lord hath in a manner unburdned me of the leſſer burthen alſo: for I have an aſſurance of the payment of the ſame by Candlemas. Lo thus you ſee what a good God the Lord is unto me. O Father Traves give thanks for me, and pray God to forgive me my unthankfulneſs. But what ſhould I rehearſe the benefits of God towards me? Alas I cannot. I am too little for all his mercies, yea, I am not only unthankful, but I am too far contumelious againſt God. For where you know the Sun, the Moon, and the ſeven Stars did forſake me, and would not ſhine upon me, you know what I mean per herum & heriles amicos, yet the Lord hath given me here in the Univerſity as good a living as I would have wiſhed. For I am now a Fellow of Pembroke Hall: for the which neither I nor any other for me did ever make any ſute: yea there was a contention betwixt the M. of Katherins Hall and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who is Maſter of Pembroke Hall, whether ſhould have me, ſit hoc tibi dictum. Thus you may ſee the Lords carefulneſs for me. My Fellowſhip here is worth ſeven pound a year, for I have allowed me 18. pence a week, and as good as thirty three ſhillings four pence a year in money, beſides my Chamber, Launder, Barber, &c. and I am bound to nothing but once or twice a year to keep a Probleme. Thus you ſee what a good Lord God is to me. But I pray you what do I now to God for all this? I will not ſpeak of the great mercies he ſheweth unto my Soul. Surely, Father Traves, I have clean forgotten God, I am all ſecure, idle, proud, heard-hearted, utterly void of Brotherly love, I am envious, and diſdain others, I am a very ſtark Hypocrite, not only in my words and works, but even in theſe my Letters to you. I am all ſenſual without the true fear of God, another manner of Man then I have been ſince my calling. Alas Father Traves, I write this to put my ſelf in remembrance, but I am without all ſenſe, I do but only write it. For Gods ſake pray for me, which am only in name a Chriſtian, in very deed a very Worldling, and to ſay to you the very truth, the moſt Worldling of all other. I pray you exhort my Mother now and then, with my Siſter Margaret to fear the Lord, and if my Mother had not ſold the Fox fur which was in my Fathers Gown, I would ſhe would ſend it me, ſhe muſt have your councel in a piece of Cloath.

Yours for ever,
John Bradford.

Another Letter of Maſter Bradford to Father Traves.

THe ſelf ſame mercy, grace, and peace, which heretofore I have felt plenteouſly, though now, through mine unthankfulneſs and wilful obedience to the pleaſure of this outward Man, I neither feel, neither can be perſwaded that I poſſeſs, yea if I ſhall truly write, I in manner paſs not upon the ſame, ſo far am I faln, the Lord help me, the ſame mercy, &c. I ſay, I wiſh unto you as I can, with all increaſe of godlineſs. Hypocritically with my Pen and Mouth, beſeeching you in your earneſt Prayers to God, to be an earneſt ſuter unto God for me which am faln into ſuch a ſecurity, and even an hardneſs of heart, that neither I ſorrow my ſtate, neither with any grief or fear of Gods abjection do write this: before the Lord which knoweth the Hearts of all Men I lye not. Conſider for Chriſts ſake therefore, good Father Traves, my neceſſity though I my ſelf do it not, and pray for me, that God caſt me not off as I deſerve moſt juſtly. For where I ought to have well proceeded in Gods School, by reaſon of the time, I confeſs it to my ſhame I am ſo far gone back, as alas if ſhame were in me I might be aſhamed to write it, but much more to write it, and think it not, ſuch is the reward of unthankfulneſs. For where God wrought the reſtitution of the great thing you know of, the which benefit ſhould bind me to all obedience: Alas Father Traves I am too unthankfull, I find no will in Heart (though by my writing it will be hard to perſwade you) either to be thankful, either to begin a new life in all things to mortifie this outward Man, and heartily to be well content to ſerve the Lord in Spirit and verity, and withſtand mine affections, and eſpecially my beaſtly ſenſuality in meat and drink, wherewith I was troubled at my being with you, but now through my licencious obeying that affect, I am faln ſo, that a whole legion ſpirituum malorum, poſſeſſeth me. The Lord whom I only with mouth (my Heart ſtill abiding both in hardneſs and wilfulneſs) call upon, deliver me and help me. And for Gods ſake give you hearty thanks for the great benefit of reſtitution, pray to the Lord that at the length I may once return to the obedience of his good will, Amen. I thank you for your cheeſe, and ſo doth Father Latimer as unknown: for I did give it him, and he ſaith he did never eat better Cheeſe, and ſo I dare ſay he did not. I thank him I am as familiar with him, as with you: yea God ſo moveth him towards me, that his deſire is to have me come and dwell with him whenſoever I will, and welcom. This do I write yet once more to occaſion you to be thankful for me to the Lord, which by all means ſheweth nothing but moſt high love to me: And I again a very obſtinate Rebellion. Pray therefore for me in haſt.

The ſinful.
John Bradford.

William Minge.

THe next day after Maſter Bradford and John Leaf did ſuffer in Smithfield, Will. Minge Prieſt died in Priſon at Maidſtone being there in Bonds for Religion, and like to have ſuffered alſo, if he had continued the fury of his adverſaries, whoſe nature was to ſpare and favour none that favoured Chriſts pure Goſpel: which W. Minge with as great conſtancy and boldneſs yielded up his life in Priſon, as if it had pleaſed God to have called him to ſuffer by the fire, as the other good and godly Men had done at the Stake, as he himſelf was ready alſo ſo to do, if it had pleaſed God to have called him thereunto.

Will. Minge died in Priſon.

James Treviſam buried in the fields.

UPon the third of July 1555. died one James Treviſam in the Pariſh of Saint Margaret in Lothbury upon a Sunday, who being impotent and lame kept his Bed: for he could not riſe out of it a long time. This Treviſam had a Servant, one John Smal, which read on the Bible, and as he was in reading, Berd the Promoter came to the Houſe, and would needs go up the Stairs, where he found four perſons beſides him and his Wife; to wit, the young Man that read, and two Men and a Woman. All which folks, the ſaid Berd the Promoter there being, apprehended and carried to the Counter, where they remained about a fortnight, for all the friends they could make. Moreover the ſaid Berd would have had alſo James the lame Man himſelf to Newgate in a Cart (and brought the Cart to the door) but for neighbours. Nevertheleſs, the poor Man was fain to put in two ſureties for his forthcoming; for he could not go out of his Bed, being not only impotent, but alſo very ſick the ſame time. So within a few days, the ſaid James lying in extremity, the Parſon of the Church named M. Farthing, came to him, and had communication with him, and agreed well, and ſo departed. It hapned after the Prieſt was come down into the ſtreet, there met him one Toller a Founder. Yea, ſaith he, be ye agreed? I will accuſe you, for he denieth the Sacrament of the Altar. Upon that the Parſon went to him again, and then the Prieſt and he could not agree. And ſo the Parſon went to the Biſhop of London and told him. The Biſhop anſwered, that he ſhould be burnt, and if he were dead, he ſhould be buried in a Ditch. And ſo when he died the Parſon was againſt his Wife as much as he could, neither would let her have the Coffin to put him in, nor any thing elſe, but was fain to bear him upon a Table to More-field, and there was he buried. The ſame night the Body was caſt up above the ground, and his ſheet taken from him, and he left naked. After this the owner of the field ſeeing him buried him again, and a fortnight after the Sumner came to his Grave, and ſummoned him to appear at Pauls before his Ordinary, to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be laid againſt him. But what more befell upon him, I have not certainly to ſay.

The ſtory of James Treviſam buried in the fields, and ſummoned after his death.

M. Farthing Parſon of S. Margarets in Lothbury accuſeth James.

The

A.D. 1555

July 12. John Bland, J. Frankeſh, Martyrs.

THE 12th day of July, John Bland, John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheſterden, and Humfrey Middleton, were all four burned at Canterbury together for one Cauſe: Of the which number, Frankeſh and Bland were Miniſters and Preachers of the Word of God; the one being Parſon of Adeſham, the other the Vicar of Rolvindon. This Mr. Bland was a man ſo little born for his own Commodity, that no part of his life was ſeparated from the common and publick utility of all men. For his firſt doings were there imployed to the bringing up of Children in learning and vertue. Under whom were trained divers towardly young men, which even at this preſent do handſomly flouriſh. In the number of whom is Dr. Sands, a man of ſingular learning and worthineſs, as may well beſeem a Scholar meet for ſuch a Schoolmaſter, whom I gladly here name for his ſingular gifts of vertue and erudition.

Mr. Bland Schoolmaſter to Dr. Sands, ſometimes Bp. of Worceſter, now Archbiſhop of York.

After this, he coming to the Miniſtery in the Church of GOD, or rather being called thereto, was inflamed with incredible deſire to profit the Congregation, which may appear by this, that whereas he was caſt into Canterbury Priſon for the preaching of the Goſpel, and delivered once or twice from thence at the ſuit of his Friends, yet would he needs preach the Goſpel again as ſoon as he was delivered. Whereupon he being the third time apprehended, when his Friends yet once again would have found the means to have delivered him if he would have promiſed to abſtain from preaching; he ſtood in it earneſtly, that he would admit no ſuch Condition, notably well expreſſing unto us the manner and example which we read in the Apoſtle Paul; Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? Tribulation, or anguiſh, or hunger, or nakedneſs, or danger, or perſecution, or the ſword, &c. But to expreſs the whole life and doings of this godly Martyr, ſeeing we have his own teſtimony concerning the ſame, it ſhall be beſt to refer the Reader to his own report, writing to his Father of the whole Diſcourſe of his troubles, from the beginning almoſt to the later end, in order and manner as ye ſhall hear.

Mr. Bland offered by his friends to be delivered, refuſeth.

A Diſcourſe of the whole proceſs and doings of Mr. Bland, written and reported by himſelf to his Father in his own Letter, as followeth.

DEarely beloved Father in Chriſt Jeſu, I thank you for your gentle Letters. And to ſatisfie your mind, as concerning the troubles whereof you have heard, theſe ſhall both declare unto you all my vexations, that have chanced me ſince ye were with me, and alſo ſince I received your laſt Letters. God keep you ever.

Your Son, John Bland.

Declaration of the troubles of Mr. Bland, how and by whom he was apprehended, and brought to his condemnation.

FIrſt, the 3d of Septemb. being Sunday, after Service ended, e're I had put off my Surplice, John Auſten came to the Table (commonly called the Lords Table) and laid both his hands upon it, ſaying, Who ſet this here again? Now they ſay they took the Table down the Sunday before, which I knew not, neither do I know who ſet it up again. The Clerk anſwered, that he knew not. Then Auſten ſaid, he is a Knave that ſet it here. I was then going down the Church, marvelling what he meant, and ſaid, Goodman Auſten, the Queens Highneſs hath ſet forth a Proclamation, that ye may move no Sedition. And e're I could ſpeak any more, he ſaid, thou art a Knave: And I ſaid, well goodman Auſten, that I have ſaid, I have ſaid. By Gods Soul (quoth he) thou art a very Knave. Then my Clerk ſpake to him, but what I am not ſure. But he ſaid, ye are both Heretick Knaves, and have deceived us with this faſhion too long, and if he ſay any Service here again, I will lay the Table on his face; and in that rage he with other took up the Table, and laid it on a Cheſt in the Chancel, and ſet the Treſſels by it. Whereſore I rode by and by to Mr. Iſaac, and ſhewed him the cauſe, both how ſeditiouſly he had ſpoken, and performed it with a like deed. Mr. Iſaac directed a Warrant to the Conſtable or Boſholder, which was incontinently ſerved, ſo that he was brought before him the ſame night, and was bound by Recognizance, with Sureties, to appear if he were called. But we agreed ſo well then, that it was never called for, the Table was brought down, and was permitted, as before.

John Auſten perſecutor.

John Auſten offended with the Communion Table.

Note the uncharitable ſpirit of this Papiſt, and ſo commonly of them all.

Mr. Iſaac a good Juſtice. The Communion Table ſet up again.

The 26th of Novemb. being Sunday, Richard Auſten and his brother Thomas came to the foreſaid Table after the Communion was done, and as I was going by them, Richard ſaid unto me, Mr. Parſon, we have to ſpeak to you. And I ſaid, what is your will? And he ſaid, you know that you took down the Tabernacle or Seeing wherein the Rood did hang, and ſuch other things: we would know what recompence you will make us. For the Queens proceedings are (as you know) that ſuch muſt up again.

Quoth I, I know no ſuch proceedings as yet; and as for that I did, I did it by Commandment.

No, ſaid Thomas Auſten, ye will not know the Queens proceedings.

Yes, ſaid I, I refuſe not to know them.

Tho. Auſten and Richard Auſten pick matter againſt Mr. Bland.

Then ſaid Richard, Ye are againſt the Queens proceedings; for you ſay there are abominable uſes and deviliſhneſs in the Maſs.

Goodman Auſten, ſaid I, if I ſo ſaid, I will ſay it again, and God willing, ſtand to the proof of it.

Maſters all, quoth Richard Auſten, bear record of theſe words, and went his way.

Mr. Bland charged for ſpeaking againſt the Maſs.

Quoth Thomas Auſten, thou wilt as ſoon eat this Book as ſtand to them. No quoth I, not ſo ſoon. Tell us, quoth he, what deviliſhneſs is, that is in the Maſs.

I often preached it unto you, ſaid I, and ye have not believed it, nor born it away, nor will now neither, though I ſhould tell you.

Thou (quoth he) haſt told us always, like an Heretick as thou art. Now ye lye, goodman Auſten, quoth I, by your leave. Marry, quoth he, thou lieſt. And I ſaid, and you lye, for I have taught you Chriſt and his Truth.

Quoth he, thou art an Heretick, and haſt taught us nothing but Hereſie: for thou canſt ſay nothing that is true.

Yes, goodman Auſten, I can ſay that God is in Heaven, and ye will ſay (I trow) that it is true, and ſo have I taught you truly.

Falſe accuſation.

Quoth he, thou haſt taught us like an Heretick, and haſt ſaid, that there is no Devil in Hell.

Well, ſaid I, lye on; me-think you can ſay little truth. Many other taunts he gave, too long to write. And at the laſt he ſaid, ye pulled down the Altar; will ye build it again? No (quoth I) except I be commanded; for I was commanded to do that I did.

Well, if you will not, ſaid he, then will I. For I am Churchwarden.

Tho. Auſten threatneth to bring in a Popiſh Prieſt againſt Mr. Bland.

I charge you, ſaid I, that you do not, except you have Authority. I will, ſaid he, not let for your charge. For we will have a Maſs here on Sunday, and a Preacher, that ſhall prove thee an Heretick, if thou dare abide his coming.

Yes, quoth I, God willing, I will abide and hear him; for ſure I am, that he cannot diſprove any Doctrine that I have preached.

Yes, quoth he, and that thou ſhalt hear, if thou run not away e're then.

No, goodman Auſten, I will not run away.

Marry, quoth he, I cannot tell; thou art as like yea, as nay: with many other words we came out of the Church door, and ſo departed.

Falſe ſlander againſt Mr. Bland.

When the Sunday came, I looked for our Preacher, and at the time of Morning Prayer I ſaid to the Clerk, why do ye not ring? ye forget that we ſhall have a Sermon to-day. No, quoth he, M. Miles's Servant hath been here this morning, and ſaid, his Maſter hath Letters from my L. Chancellor, that he muſt go to London, and cannot come. That day I did preach to them a Sermon in his ſted. Now have they ſlandered me, that I had prepared a company from divers places to have troubled him; but they agreed not in their lye. For ſome ſaid, I had them at Adeſham, and that Richard Auſten had knowledge, and ſent for the Kings Conſtable to ſee the Peace kept, which is found a lye. Other ſaid, I had them lying in wait for him between Canterbury and Adeſham. Other ſaid, I had them in both places, that if the one miſt, the other ſhould not. God forgive them all. Now upon theſe two matters they crack, that they ſent two Bills of Complaint to the Councel. Wherefore by the counſel of Friends, I made this Teſtimony, and ſent it up by Mr. Wiſeman.

The behaviour of John Bland Parſon of Adeſham, in the County of Kent, the Sunday, the third day of December laſt paſt, containing the words which he there ſpake unto the people.

Mr. Bland Parſon of Adeſham, cleareth himſelf of falſe ſlander.

WHereas upon certain Communication had between the ſaid Parſon and Richard Auſten, and Thomas Auſten in the preſence of all the Pariſh of Adeſham, the Sunday before S. Andrews day laſt, the ſaid Auſten then declared, That the ſaid Parſon had taught there in times paſt great Hereſies, which to confound, they would prepare a Preacher againſt the next Sunday following, if ſo be the ſaid Parſon would abide, and not run away: Upon which rumour, divers and ſundry perſons reſorted out of the Country, unto the ſaid Pariſh Church, at the ſaid ſame day appointed, there to hear the Preacher; and at the time in which the Sermon ought to be made, no man appeared there to preach. But it was reported unto the Parſon, that the Preacher appointed, had urgent buſineſs, and could not come. So that the multitude being now come together, the ſame Parſon perceiving that the peoples expectation was defrauded, ſaid, Foraſmuch as you are come willingly to hear ſome good advertiſement of the Preacher, which cannot be now preſent, I think it not convenient to permit you to depart without ſome Exhortation for your edifying. And ſo further declaring that he had no Licence to preach, ſaid, That he would not meddle with any matter in Controverſie: And then he began the Epiſtle of the day, deſiring the Audience to mark three or four places in the ſame Epiſtle, which touched quietneſs and love one to another: and there briefly reading the Epiſtle, he noted the ſame places, and ſo making an end thereof, deſired all men to depart quietly and in peace, as they did, without any manner of diſturbance, or token of evil.

Mr. Bland exhorting the people to love and quietneſs.

Witneſſes they undernamed, with divers others.

Edmund Mores, Richard Randal, John Hills. } William Forſtall. Thomas Gooding.

Another matter of trouble wrought againſt John Bland, as appeareth by his own Narration.

The third matter againſt Mr. Bland. A Popiſh Maſs-Prieſt brought to ſay Maſs at Adeſham.

UPon the Innocents day, being the 28th day of December, they had procured the Prieſt of Stodmarſh to ſay them Maſs; he had nigh made an end of Mattins e're I came; and when he had made an end of Mattins, he ſaid to me, Mr. Parſon, your Neighbour hath deſired me to ſay Mattins and Maſs; I truſt ye will not be againſt the Queens proceedings. No (quoth I) I will offend none of the Queens Majeſties Laws, God willing. What ſay ye, quoth he, and made as he had not heard? And I ſpake the ſame words to him again, with an higher voice; but he would not hear, though all the Chancel heard: So I cried the third time (that all the Church heard) that I would not offend the Queens Laws, and then he went to Maſs; and when he was reading the Epiſtle, I called the Clerk unto me, with the beckning of my finger, and ſaid unto him, I pray you deſire the Prieſt when the Goſpel is done, to tarry a little, I have ſomething to ſay to the people; and the Clerk did ſo.

Mr. Bland again exhorteth the people in his Pariſh Church.

And the Prieſt came down into the Stall where he ſate; and I ſtood up in the Chancel door, and ſpake to the people of the great goodneſs of God, always ſhewed unto his people, unto the time of Chriſts coming; and in him and his coming, what benefit they paſt, we preſent, and our Succeſſors have; and among other benefits, I ſpake of the great and comfortable Sacrament of his Body and Blood. And after I had declared briefly the inſtitution, the promiſe of life to the good, and damnation to the wicked, I ſpake of the Bread and Wine, affirming them to be Bread and Wine after the Conſecration, as yonder Maſs-Book, ſaying, Panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ, & Calicem ſalutis perpetuæ, &c. Holy Bread of Eternal Life, and the Cup of perpetual Salvation. So that like as our bodily mouths eat the Sacramental Bread and Wine, ſo doth the mouth of our Souls (which is our faith) eat Chriſts Fleſh and Blood. And when I had made an end of that, I ſpake of the miſſe of the Sacrament in the Maſs; ſo that I judged it in that uſe no Sacrament, and ſhewed how Chriſt bade us all eat and drink; and one only in the Maſs eateth and drinketh, and the reſt kneel, knock, and worſhip: and after theſe things ended, as briefly as I could, I ſpake of the Benefactors of the Maſs, and began to declare what men made the Maſs, and recited every mans name, and the patch that he put to the Maſs; and e're I had rehearſed them all, the Churchwarden and the Borſholder, his Son in law, violently came upon me, and took my Book from me, and pulled me down, and thruſt me into the Chancel, with an exceeding roar and cry. Some cried, Thou Heretick; ſome, thou Traitor; ſome, Thou Rebel; and when every man had ſaid his pleaſure, and the rage was ſomething paſt; be quiet good Neighbours, ſaid I, and let me ſpeak to you quietly. If I have offended any Law, I will make anſwer before them that are in Authority to correct me. But they would not hear me, and pulled, one on this ſide, and another on that, and began again. Then Richard Auſten ſaid, Peace, Maſters, no more till Maſs be done, and they ceaſed. Then ſaid I to the Churchwarden and the Borſholder, either holding me by the arm: Maſters, let me go into the Church yard till your Maſs be done. No, quoth the Churchwarden, thou ſhalt tarry here till Maſs be done. I will not, quoth I, but againſt my will. And they ſaid, Thou ſhall tarry, for if thou go out, thou wilt run away. Then ſaid I to the Borſholder, Lay me in the Stocks, and then ye ſhall be ſure of me, and turned my back to the Altar. By that time Richard Auſten had deviſed what to do with me, and called to the Borſholder and the Churchwarden, and bade them put me into a ſide Chappel, and ſhut the door to me, and there they made me tarry till Maſs was ended. When the Maſs was ended, they came into the Chappel to me, and ſearched what I had about me; and found a Dagger, and took it from me. Then ſaid Tho. Auſten, Churchwarden, after many brablings that they made with me, Thou keepeſt a Wife here amongſt us, againſt Gods Law and the Queens. Ye lye, goodman Auſten, ſaid I, it is not againſt Gods Law, nor, as I ſuppoſe, againſt the Queens. Thus they brought me out of the Church, and without the door they railed on me, without pity or mercy: but anon the Prieſt came out of the Church, and Ramſey that of late was Clerk, ſaid unto him, Sir, where dwell you? And therefore Thomas Auſten took him by the arm, and ſaid, Come on Sirra, you are of his Opinion, and took his Dagger from him, and ſaid, he ſhould go with him. I am content, ſaid he, and a little mocked them in their envious talk. By this time there came in at the Church Style, one John Gray of Wingham, Servant to John Smith, and ſeeing them hold Ramſey by the arms, ſaid to him, How now Ramſey, have you offended the Queens Laws? No, quoth he. Then there is no Tranſgreſſion. Therewith Thomas Auſten took him, and ſaid, Ye are one of their Opinion, ye ſhall go with them for Company, and took his Dagger from him, and then demanded what he did there? But after (I think) for very ſhame they let him go again. But they carried me and Ramſey to Canterbury, with eighteen perſons weaponed: A ſheet of paper will not hold the talk that we had that night with Mr. Hardes Juſtice, Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Spilman, and Mr. Tutſam.

The next day they made a Bill againſt me, but it ſerved not their purpoſe, which was, that they would have had me to Priſon. But James Chapman, and Bartholomew Joyes, were bound in Twenty pounds either of them, for my appearance at the next General Seſſions, or in the mean time to appear, if I were ſent for before the Queens Majeſties Councel, or any other Commiſſioners ſent by the Queens Authority. And Ramſey was bound to the Peace, and to be of good Behaviour till the next Seſſions. His Sureties were Thomas Hogeking and Simon Barrat.

Anno 1555.

NOw the 23. or 24. of February Sir Thomas Finch, Knight, and Maſter Hardes, ſent for me and my Sureties to Maſter Finches place, and took me from my Sureties, and ſent me to the Caſtle of Canterbury, by Sir Thomas Moyles commandment (they ſaid,) where I lay ten weeks, and then was bayled, and bound to appear at the next Seſſions holden at Canterbury: but after, they changed it to be at Aſhford on the Thurſday in Whitſun-week, being the Nineteenth of May: but in the mean time the matter was exhibited to the Spiritual Court.

Mr. Bland taken from his Sureties.

Sir T. Moyles commandeth Mr. Bland to Canterbury Caſtle.

The firſt Examination of Mr. John Bland in the Spiritual Court, before Dr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Mr. Collins Commiſſary.

THe 18 day of May, Mr. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury, made the Maiors Serjeant to bring me before him and Mr. Collins Commiſſary, into Chriſts Church, and they went with me into a Chamber, in the Suffragan of Dovers Houſe. Then the Archdeacon ſaid, Art thou a Prieſt? And I ſaid, I was one. And he ſaid, Art thou any Graduate of any Univerſity? And I ſaid, Yea. What degree (ſaid he) haſt thou taken? The degree (quoth I) of a Maſter of Art. The more pity (quoth he) that thou ſhouldeſt behave thy ſelf as thou haſt done. Thou haſt been a common Preacher licenſed, haſt thou not? And I ſaid, I have been ſo. Marry (quoth he) ſo I underſtand.

Mr. Bland brought before Mr. Harpsfield & Mr. Collins.

Mr. Bland Maſter of Art of Cambridge.

What haſt thou preached?

And I ſaid, Gods Word, to the edifying (I truſt) of his people.

No, no, quoth he, to the deſtroying of their Souls and thine both, except the mercy of God be all the greater. I pray thee, what haſt thou preached? tell me.

I told you, quoth I, what I have preached.

Nay, but tell me, quoth he, what one matter haſt thou preached to the edifying of the people, as thou ſayeſt? I will tell you no particular matter; for I perceive you would have ſome matter againſt me.

No, by my faith, quoth he, but that only I would win thee from Hereſies that thou art bewrapt in, and haſt infected others withal. For thou haſt preached, as I am informed, that the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is not the very Body and Blood of Jeſus Chriſt after the Conſecration. Tell me, haſt thou not thus preached? and is not this thine opinion?

Note how theſe Papiſts ſeek for matter, to ſuck the blood of poor men.

Sir, quoth I, I perceive (as I ſaid) that ye ſeek matter againſt me. But ſeeing that I am bound in the Seſſions to my good behaviour for preaching, which may be broken with words, and well I know not with what words; and alſo both mine authority to preach, and my living are taken from me, I think I am not bound to make you an anſwer.

Collins. Mr. Bland, do you not remember, that S. Peter biddeth you make anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the faith that is in you?

A man not bound to anſwer ſuch as ask of purpoſe to bring him into trouble.

Bland. I know that, and am content ſo to anſwer as that Text biddeth: but I know that Mr. Archdeacon doth not ask me after that manner, but rather to bring me into trouble. Then they ſaid, No, ye ſhall not be troubled for any thing that ye ſay here.

Mr. Bland upon promiſe talketh with them of the Sacrament.

Bland. I am content for knowledge ſake to commune with you in any matter, but not otherwiſe. And ſo they fell in reaſoning more than the ſpace of an hour, of the Sacrament, both againſt me. At the laſt Mr. Collins ſaid, Mr. Bland, will ye come and take in hand to anſwer ſuch matter on Monday next, as ſhall be laid to you?

Bland. Sir, ye ſaid I ſhould not be troubled for any thing that ſhould be ſaid here for Learnings ſake. And they ſaid, ye ſhall not, but it is for other matters.

Mark what fidelity is in the promiſe of theſe men.

Bland. Sir, I am bound to appear, as ſome tell me, on Thurſday next at Aſhford, I am in doubt whether I can or no: yet I have purpoſed to be there, and ſo to go to London to Mr. Wiſeman, for an Obligation that he hath, whereby I ſhould receive certain money to pay my Debts withal. Then ſaid Mr. Archdeacon, I will write to Mr. Wiſeman, that ye ſhall ſuſtain no loſs.

Bland. That ſhall not need: for I can ſuſtain no great loſs, if I go not. But I pray you to let me have a longer day. No, quoth he.

Mr. Bland warned to appear again before them.

Bland. Sir, I cannot well come on Monday.

Harpſ. Wilt thou not come, when he ſo gently ſpeaketh to thee, where he may command thee?

Bland. I do not deny to come, but I deſire a longer day.

* Note here the extream dealing of the pretenſed Catholicks.

Harpſ. * Thou ſhalt have no other day; I charge thee to come on Monday.

Bland. Sir, I perceive it ſhall be for this or like matters: will it pleaſe you or Mr. Collins, for Gods ſake, to confer Scriptures privately with me in this matter, ſeeing ye ſay ye would ſo gladly win me?

Harpſ. With all my heart will I take the pains, and I will alſo borrow my Lord of Dovers Library, to have what Books thou wilt: and thus they departed. Now the 17 of May at Aſhford I could not be releaſed, although I was called to the Spiritual Court for the ſame matter, but was bound to appear at the Seſſions holden at Cramb'roke, the third of July.

Another Appearance of Mr. Bland before the Archdeacon and his Fellows.

THe 21 day of May I appeared in the Chapter-houſe, where was a great multitude of people, unlooked for of me; and Mr. Archdeacon ſaid thus to me; Ye are come here according as ye were appointed: and the cauſe is, that it hath pleaſed the Queens Highneſs here to place me, to ſee Gods holy Word ſet forth, and to reform thoſe that are here fallen into great and heinous Errors, to the great diſpleaſure of God, and the decay of Chriſts Sacraments, and contrary to the faith of the Catholick Church, whereof thou art notably known to be one that is ſore poyſoned with the ſame, and haſt infected and deceived many with thy evil Preaching, which if thou wilt renounce, and come home again to the Catholick Church, both I and many other more would be very glad; and I for my part ſhall be right glad to ſhew you the favour that lieth in me, as I ſaid unto you when you were appointed hither, becauſe ye then refuſed to ſatisfie again the people that ye had deceived. And whereas it is feigned by you, that I ſhould openly diſpute the matter with you this day; although I did neither ſo intend nor appoint, yet I am content to diſpute the matter with thee, if thou wilt not without diſputation help to heal the Souls that are brought to Hell-ward by thee? What ſayeſt thou?

The ſecond appearance of Mr. Bland. Mr. Harpſfields words to Mr. Bland.

False ſurmiſes pretended againſt Mr. Bland.

Bland. I do proteſt before God and you all, that neither is my Conſcienee guilty of any Errour or Hereſie, neither that I ever taught any Errour or Hereſie willingly. And where your Maſterſhip ſaith, That I have feigned an open Diſputation with you, it is not true, as I can thus approve: Upon Saturday I was at Ugdens and there Mr. Bingham laid it to my charge, that ſuch an open Diſputation, as ye have here offered, ſhould be this day between you and me: Whereat I much marvelled, and ſaid to him, That before that preſent I never heard any ſuch word; neither would I anſwer nor diſpute: and to this can Mr. Vaughan, Mr. Oxenden, Mr. Beth of Overland, and Mr. Ugden witneſs; and further I ſaid to them, that I never ſpake to you of any Diſputation, nor you to me. Now if your Maſterſhip have any thing to ſay to me by the Law, I will make anſwer to it.

The anſwer of Mr. Bland to M. Harpſfields words.

Mr. Bland cleareth himſelf of the falſe report of Mr. Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Hear ye what he ſaith? His Conſcience is clear. I pray thee whereon groundeſt thou thy Conſcience? let me hear what thy faith is?

Bland. I know not why ye ſhould more ask me a reaſon of my faith, than any other man in this open Audience?

Harpſ. Why thou Heretick, art thou aſhamed of thy faith? if it were a Chriſtian belief, thou needeſt not to be aſhamed of it.

Bland. I am not aſhamed of my faith. For I believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, &c. with all the other Articles of the Creed; and I do believe all the holy Scriptures of God to be moſt certain and true.

To believe the Articles of our Chriſtian Faith never ſo well, it will not ſuffice the Papiſts.

Harpſ. Wilt thou declare no more than this?

Bland. No.

The Popiſh Faith of Dr. Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Well, I will tell thee whereon I ground my faith: I do believe and ground my faith and conſcience upon all the Articles of the Creed, and upon all the holy Scriptures, Sacraments, and holy Doctors of the Church, and upon all the general Councels that ever were ſince the Apoſtles time. Lo, hereupon ground I my faith; with many words more, which I well remember not. And when he could get no other anſwer of me, than I had ſaid before, he called for a Scribe to make an act againſt me. And after much communication, I ſaid, By what Law and Authority will ye proceed againſt me. Mr. Collins ſaid, By the Canon Law.

M. Bland requireth to have his Counſeller.

Bland. I doubt whether it be in ſtrength or no. Yet I pray you let me have a Counſeller in the Law, and I will make anſwer according to the Law.

Harpſ. Why thou Heretick, thou wilt not confeſs thy faith to me, that have Authority to demand it of thee, and yet I have confeſſed my faith to thee before all this Audience. As concerning the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, thou haſt taught, that after the Conſecration it is Bread and Wine, and not the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. How ſaiſt thou, haſt thou not thus taught?

Bland. Sir, as concerning this matter of the Sacrament, when I was with you and Mr. Collins, ye ſaid then it was for other matters that I ſhould come hither: and further, that ye would be content at my deſire, to confer Scriptures with me, to ſee if ye could win me; and ye ſaid, ye would borrow my Lord of Dovers Library, that I ſhould have what Book I would; and now ye require me thus to anſwer, contrary to your promiſe, e're any Conference be had, and ſeek rather to bring me into trouble, than to win me.

The Papiſts ever falſe of promiſe.

Harpſ. I will, as God ſhall help me, do the beſt to thee that I can, if thou wilt be any thing conformable; and I truſt to diſſolve all thy doubts, if thou be willing to hear. And I alſo will deſire theſe two worſhipful men, my Lord of Dover, and Mr. Collins, to hear us.

Bland. No, ye ſhall pardon me of that: there ſhall be no ſuch witneſs. But when we agree, ſet to our hands. Hereat made the people a noiſe againſt me, for refuſing the witneſs: and here had we many more words, then I can rehearſe. But at the laſt I ſaid, Sir, will ye give me leave to ask you one queſtion? And he ſaid, yea, with all my heart. For in that thou askeſt any thing, there is ſome hope that thou maiſt be won.

Mr. Bland's queſtion to D. Harpſfield.

Bland. Sir, when it pleaſed Almighty God to ſend his Angel unto the Virgin Mary to ſalute her, and ſaid, Hail full of Grace, &c. came any ſubſtance from God our Father into the Virgins womb to become man? whereat as well Mr. Archdeacon, as my Lord of Dover, and Mr. Collins ſtaid. But my Lord ſpake the firſt, and ſaid, The Holy Ghoſt came to her; and e're he had brought out his ſentence, Mr. Syriac Peters ſaid, Vertus altiſſimi obumbravit. Truth, ſaid Mr. Archdeacon, it was the power of God, ſent by the Holy Ghoſt. They had forgotten, that genitus fuit ex ſubſtantia patris; Or elſe they perceived whereunto this queſtion tended: and ſo both I and they left it; by what words I cannot tell. But I ſaid, Sir, ſhall I ask one other? And he ſaid, Yea.

Another queſtion of Mr. Bland to D. Harpſfield.

Is there in the Sacrament, after the Conſecration, Chriſts natural Body, with all the qualities of a natural Body, or no?

The anſwer of Dr. Harpſfield to the queſtion.

Harpſ. Hark, ſaid Mr. Archdeacon; hear ye this Heretick? He thinks it an abſurdity to grant all the quantities of Chriſts natural Body to be in the Sacrament. But it is no abſurdity: For even that natural Body that was born of the Virgin Mary is glorified, and that ſame Body is in the Sacrament after the Conſecration. But perceive ye not the arrogancy of this Heretick, that will put me to anſwer him, and he will not anſwer me? he thought to put me to a pinch with his queſtion; for I tell you it is a learned queſtion.

Bland. So if ye be ſo much diſcontented with me, I will ſay no more; yet I would all men heard, that ye ſay the glorified Body of Chriſt is in the Sacrament, after the Conſecration.

Harpſ. I may call thee groſs ignorant. Thou groſs ignorant, is not the ſame body glorified, that was born of the Virgin Mary? is it then any abſurdity to grant that to be in the Sacrament? And whiles he ſpake many other words, I ſaid to Mr. Petit, That the Sacrament was inſtituted, delivered, and received of his Apoſtles, before Chriſts Body was crucified; and it was crucified before it was glorified; whereby Mr. Petit partly recited to Mr. Archdeacon.

Anno 1555.

How can the glorified body be in the Sacrament, when the Sacrament was given before the body was crucified, and it was crucified before it was glorified? The body unglorified was given in the Sacrament, in a glorified act, quoth Harpſfield.

Harpſ. Thou art without all learning. Was not Chriſts Body given to his Apoſtles, as in a glorified act? and yet no inconvenience, although his natural Body was not crucified; for when he was born of the Virgin Mary without pain, was not that the act of a glorified Body? And when he walked on the water, and when he came into the houſe to his Apoſtles, the doors being ſhut faſt, were not theſe acts of a glorified Body?

Dover. Then my Lord of Dover helped him to a better place, and ſaid, When Chriſt was in Mount Thabor, he was there glorified in his Apoſtles ſight.

Harpſ. Ye ſay truth, my Lord, he was glorified in the ſight of three of his Apoſtles.

Bland. This me think is new Doctrine.

Harpſ. Well, ſeeing he will by no other way be reformed, let the people come in and prove theſe matters againſt him. And therewith the Archdeacon brought forth a Copy of the Bill of Complaint that was put againſt me at Chriſtmas, and about that we talked a little. And then Mr. Archdeacon roſe up, and ſaid, See ye good people that know this matter, that ye come in, and prove it againſt him. Whereunto anſwered Thomas Auſten, I pray you, ſaid he, let us be no more troubled with him. And then ſpake John Auſten, and Heath with one eye, and began to accuſe me; but no anſwer they could have of me, but do to me what ye can by Law, and I will anſwer it. Then ſaid Thomas Auſten, Bland, ye were once abjured.

D. Harpſfield reciteth the Bill of Complaint plainly againſt Mr. Bland.

Tho. Auſten chargeth Mr. Bland with another untruth.

Bland. Ye ſay not truly, goodman Auſten, I was never abjured. Either, ſaid he, ye were abjured, or elſe ye had the Kings pardon. Neither of both; ye ſpeak this of malice; with many other brabling words more. Then Mr. Archdeacon departed, and left Mr. Collins to command me to appear the next day. Howbeit, for certain other urgent buſineſs that I had, I did not appear, but wrote a Letter to Mr. Commiſſary, deſiring him to reſpite the matter till my coming home again; and if he would not, I would be content to ſubmit my ſelf to the Law when I came home.

Now about the 28 day of June I came to Mr. Commiſſary to ſhew him of my return, and offered my ſelf to ſatisfie the Law, if it were proceeded againſt me, before Mr. Cocks of Surrey, and Marks the Apparitor; but Mr. Commiſſary ſaid gently, he had done nothing againſt me. And ſo appointed me to appear before him the Friday ſeven-night after. Now in the mean time was the Seſſions holden at Crambroke, where I was bound to appear; and carrying Surety with me to be bound again, for I looked for none other, did appear the third day of July.

Mr. Bland appearing at Seſſions in Crambroke.

And Sir John Baker ſaid, Bland, ye are, as we hear ſay, a Scot; where were ye born and brought up? And I ſaid I was born in England. And he ſaid, where? And I ſaid, in Sedber, and brought up by one Dr. Lupton, Proveſt of Eaton Colledge. Well, ſaid he, I know him well. Remain to your Bond till Afternoon.

Sir J. Baker talk with Mr. Bland. Mr. Bland brought up by D. Lupton, Proveſt of Eaton Colledge.

Then ſaid Sir Thomas Moyle, Ah Bland, thou art a ſtiff-necked Fellow. Thou wilt not obey the Law, nor anſwer when thou art called. Nor will, quoth Sir John Baker? Mr. Sheriff, take him to your Ward: and the Bailiff ſet me in the Stocks, with other, and would not hear me ſpeak one word; and ſo we remained in the Goal of Maidſtone, till a fortnight before Michaelmas, or thereabout; and then we were carried to Rocheſter, to the Aſſize holden there, where we were among the Priſoners two days: and when we were called, and the Judges of Aſſize asked our cauſes, when my cauſe was rehearſed, Mr. Barrow, Clerk of the Peace, ſaid, That I was an excommunicate perſon.

Sir T. Moyle his words.

Mr. Bland laid in Maidſtone Goal.

Mr. Bland carried to the Aſſize at Rocheſter.

Then Mr. Koper of Linſted talked with the Judges, but what I am not able to ſay. But the Judges of Aſſize ſaid, Take them to Maidſtone again, and bring them to the Seſſions that ſhall be holden next at the Town of Maldin: Howbeit, the Sheriff did not ſend for us, ſo that we tarried at Maidſtone till the Seſſions holden at

Mr. Bland carried again to Maidſtone Caſtle.

Green-

Anno 1555.

Mr. Bland appeareth at Seſſions in Greenwich.

Greenwich the 18 and 19 of February. I and other being within the Bar amongſt the Felons, and Irons upon our Arms, were called out the later day by the Jaylor and Bailiffs, and eaſed of our Irons, and carried by them into the Town to Sir John Baker, Mr. Petit, Mr. Webb, and two other whom I know not.

Another Examination of Mr. Bland before Sir John Baker.

Baker. Bland, wherefore were ye caſt into Priſon?

Bland. I cannot well tell. Your Maſterſhip caſt me in.

Baker. Yea, but wherefore were you in before that time?

Bland. For an unjuſt Complaint put upon me.

Baker. What was the Complaint?

Bland. I told him as truly and briefly as I could?

Baker. Let me ſee thy Book; and I took him a Latine Teſtament.

Baker. Will ye go to the Church, and obey and follow the Queens proceedings, and do as an honeſt man ſhould do.

Bland. I truſt in God to do no otherwiſe but as an honeſt man ſhould do.

Baker. Will ye do as I ſaid?

A queſtion propounded to Sir John Baker.

Bland. Will it pleaſe your Maſterſhip to give me leave to aſk you a queſtion?

Baker. Yea.

Bland. Sir, may a man do any thing that his Conſcience is not ſatisfied in to be good?

Baker. Away, away, and threw down the Book, and ſaid, It is no Teſtament. And I ſaid, Yes. And Mr. Web took it up, and ſaid unto me marvellous gently; Mr. Bland, I knew you when ye were out of this Opinion. I would to God ye would reform your ſelf; with better words then I will write. And I ſaid; If ye have known me of another Opinion then I am of now, it was for lack of knowledge.

Haſty Judgment of a Juſtice.

Baker. Yea, ſaiſt thou ſo? by St. Mary, and thou hold thee there, I will give ſix Fagots to burn thee withal, e're thou ſhouldeſt be unburned: hence Knave, hence. And ſo were we reprieved into our place again within the Bar. And at night, when Judgment of Felons and all was done, we were called, and the Judge ſaid to the Jaylor, Take them with you, and deliver them to the Ordinary, and if they will not be reformed, let them be delivered to us again, and they ſhall have Judgment and Execution. And one of our Company ſaid, My Lord, if we be killed at your hands for Chriſts ſake, we ſhall live with him for ever.

Mr. Bland and his Fellows ſent to the Ordinary by Sir John Baker.

Another Appearance of Mr. Bland in the Spiritual Court.

Mr. Bland brought again to the Caſtle of Canterbury.

THen came we to the Caſtle of Canterbury, and there we remained till the ſecond day of March, at which day we were brought into the Chapter-Houſe of Creechurch, where were ſet the Suffragane of Canterbury, Mr. Collins, Mr. Mills, with other; and then went to them Mr. Oxenden, Mr Petit, Mr. Web and Mr. Hardes, Juſtices. And when I was called, Mr. Web ſaid, Here we preſent this man unto you, as one vehemently ſuſpected of Hereſie.

The Biſhop of Dover, Mr. Collins, Mr. Mills, with others.

Bland. And I ſaid; Mr. Web, ye have no cauſe to ſuſpect me of Hereſie. I have been a Priſoner this whole year, and no matter proved againſt me. I pray you, wherefore have I been ſo long kept in Priſon?

Web. Leave your arrogant asking of queſtions, and anſwer to that that is laid to your charge.

The anſwers of Mr. Bland firſt to the Juſtices.

Bland. I do ſo; for I ſay you have no cauſe to ſuſpect me of Hereſie.

Web. Yes; ye denied to Sir John Baker, to be conformable to the Queens proceedings.

Bland. Is it a juſt cauſe to ſuſpect me of Hereſie, for asking a queſtion with leave? Sir, we had more words there then I well remember.

Then ſtood up Maſter Petit, and ſaid, Ye were caſt into Priſon, becauſe ye fled away from your Ordinary.

Bland. Then have I had wrong. For I never fled, nor diſobeyed mine Ordinary, nor did any thing contrary to the Law. Let them now ſay if I did: but they ſaid nothing. And when I ſaw they held their peace, I ſaid, Mr. Commiſſary, have you been the cauſe of this mine impriſonment? No, quoth he; ye know that when ye went from me, ye were appointed to appear the Friday after the Seſſions. Here I was ſuffered to ſpeak no more, but ſhut up in a corner till my Companions were likewiſe preſented, and then we were ſent to Weſtgate into Priſon, and were put in ſeveral cloſe Holds, that never one of us could ſpeak to another, nor any man was permitted to come to us. We were four times at this appearance: but one they diſpatched, by what means I cannot tell: whoſe name was Cornwall, a Tanner.

Cornwall a Tanner, diſpatched in ſecret Priſon.

And thus hitherto paſſed the talk between Bland and the Juſtices, and certain Gentlemen of the Shire. Now followeth the order of the reaſoning between him and the Clergy-men, before whom he was examined. But foraſmuch as the chiefeſt doer and Judge againſt him was the Biſhop of Dover or Suffragan of Canterbury, called Doctor Richard Thornton, to the intent it may appear what little truth or conſtancy is in theſe Catholick Perſecutors, I thought here to exhibit by the way a certain Popiſh Letter, written of a Papiſt unto him. Wherein is declared what a Goſpeller the ſaid Richard Thornton was in King Edwards time, which now turning with the world, ſheweth himſelf ſuch a bitter Perſecutor againſt Gods Servants in Queen Maries time. The Copy of this Letter here followeth.

A Copy of a Popiſh Letter written to the Biſhop of Dover, by one Thomas Goldwell a Prieſt, declaring what a Profeſſor he was in King Edwards time.

RIght Reverend, and my good Lord, after my hearty thanks for your good chear at my laſt being with your Lordſhip, this ſhall be to certifie you, that as ſoon as I arrived with my Lords Grace, I gave him your Letters, but I had much work to obtain any thing of him for you. For there hath been given very evil informations of you, and it hath been ſaid, that you have concurred with all manner of evil proceedings, the which hath theſe years paſt been in England, as well againſt the holy Sacrament of the Altar, and againſt the Supream Authority of Chriſts Vicar in Earth, as with the uſe of the abominable late Communion, and with the Marriage of Prieſts, as well Religious as Secular; and that you have given Orders to (I cannot tell how many) baſe, unlearned, and evil diſpoſed people, by reaſon of the which they have taken upon them to preach, and to do much hurt in Kent. So that men think that yet if any new mutation, the which God forbid, ſhould chance, you would be as ready to change as any other. And indeed it maketh me to fear the ſame, by reaſon that notwithſtanding it hath pleaſed Almighty God to provide, that your Abſolution was ſent unto you (not looking, I dare ſay, for any ſuch thing) of all manner of matters paſt, yet your Lordſhip (more regarding the vanity of the World, then the offence of God, the which he only knoweth how much it grieves me, for the due love I bear unto you) preſumed to ſing Maſs in Pontificalibus, the holy days immediately following, and alſo to miniſtrate to Children the Sacrament of Confirmation, becauſe that one (being a Member of the Devil) did ſomewhat comfort you ſo to do.

He meaneth of the arrival of Cardinal Pool.

Thornton Bp. of Dover, a great doer againſt the Pope and Sacrament of the Altar, in K. Edwards time.

Oh my Lord, what honour ſhould it have been both to God and your ſelf, and alſo edification to all good people, (though all worldly men and Hereticks would therefore have laugh'd you to ſcorn) if you conſidering your great offences toward God, and his goodneſs again toward you, would like as you have offended in the face of the world, to the damnation of many, likewiſe have ſhewed your ſelf penitent in the face of the world, to the edification of many, and not only to have celebrate for vanity Pontificaliter; but alſo for a time to have abſtained for reverence totaliter from the Altar, according to the old cuſtom of the Church. The which I have alſo ſeen obſerved of ſome honeſt men, not being thereto injoyn'd of any man. But that which is paſt cannot be called again. And I thought it not my part to leave your Lordſhip mine old Friend and Maſter in the mire. Wherefore I ceaſed not to ſolicite your cauſe with my Lords Grace, till at the laſt I obtained of his Grace for your Lordſhip all the faculties of the which I ſend you a Copy here incloſed, partly for your own conſolation, and partly for other, deſiring your Lordſhip to uſe them to the honour of God, that there come to me thereof no rebuke: not publiſhing them to any perſon, but to ſuch that you know will gladly receive them. For hitherto there is never a Biſhop in England, who hath granted him ſo great authority concerning thoſe which be under his Cure. Only Mr. Archdeacon hath the like, and in one thing more great then be theſe your Lordſhips. Wherefore your Lordſhip ſhall do well to remit unto him all ſuch Prieſts as have Cure of Soul, whether they be Beneficed men, or Pariſh Prieſts. For he hath not only authority to abſolve them, as you have, but alſo to give them authority to abſolve ſuch as he underneath their Cures. And thus I commit your Lordſhip to the protection of Almighty God. Written at Bruſſel the 16. of June, 1554.

Power to give Abſolution granted to the Biſhop of Dover from the Cardinal.

Your Lordſhips Beadman,

Thomas Goldwell.

And thus much concerning the Biſhop of Dover, by way of digreſſion. Now to return again to the examinations of Mr. Bland, let us hear his own Report of his Anſwers, as followeth.

Here followeth mine Anſwer, as nigh as I can call to remembrance, every word, and ſentence; yet if any that was preſent can help to perfect it, I would be glad. But yet this dare I ſay, that there is never one ſentence, but it was openly ſpoken the ninth of March in the Chapter-houſe of Creechurch, in the preſence of as many as they had choſen, the Maior of the City being called to be aſſiſtant, and all other ſhut out.

The Anſwer of Mr. Bland in his Appearance before the Commiſſary, and other in the Spiritual Court.

MAſter Collins ſaid; Mr. Bland, ye know that ye are preſented unto us as one ſuſpected of Hereſie. How ſay ye, be ye contented to reform your ſelf to the Laws of this Realm, and of the holy Church?

The anſwers of Mr. Bland to the Clergy-men. Mr. Bland unjuſtly ſuſpected of Hereſie, and more unjuſtly puniſhed.

Bland. I deny that I am ſuſpected juſtly of Hereſie, and that ye heard when I was preſented, that I denied the Suſpicion to be juſt, but to defend the unjuſt puniſhment that I have ſuffered: neither can ye prove that any occaſion hath been given by me, whereby any man ſhould ſuſpect me therein. But if you have any Law or Authority to proceed againſt me for any thing done for a whole year ago and more, I will anſwer to it.

Collins. Ye were convented before Mr. Archdeacon and me, and matter of Hereſie laid to your charge.

Bland. That matter was done and ſaid a whole year ago, and for that I have been in Priſon this year and more. If ye have any thing againſt me by any Law, I deſire you to let me know the Law and the Matter, and I will anſwer according to the Law.

Then ſaid my Lord Suffragan; but that I am one of the Judges, I would riſe, and ſtand by thee, and accuſe thee to be a Sacramentary, and bring witneſs to prove it; yea, and further, that thou haſt called the Maſs an abominable Idol.

The Biſhop of Dover once abhorred the Maſs.

Bland. You, my Lord, never heard me ſay ſo: But I heard you once ſay, That in your Conſcience ye had abhorred the Maſs three years. Thou lyeſt, quoth he, I never ſaid ſo.

Collins the Commiſſary profeſſed before the true Doctrine of free Juſtification by Chriſt.

Bland. My Lord, if they might be heard, I can bring witneſs to approve it, with the day, time, and place; and I once did hear Mr. Collins at a Viſitation in Wingham ſay, That Chriſt was a full Satisfaction for all ſin preſent, paſt, and to come, contrary to that he ſaith now.

And here we had more words of this matter, which I let paſs for lack of good remembrance.

Mr. Collins ſaid, this is but a drift. You were better anſwer now; for elſe you ſhall to Priſon again, and be called on Monday, and have Articles laid to you, and if ye then anſwer not directly, ye ſhall be condemned pro confeſſo, and that will be worſe for you.

Bland. Sir, I do not now, nor will not then deny to anſwer to any thing that ye can lay to my charge by the Law; wherefore I truſt ye will let me have the benefit of the Law. Anno 1555.

Collins. This is the Law, that if ye be required of the Ordinary, Reddere rationem fidei, then may ye not deny it. And that we do now.

Mr. Bland confeſſeth all the Articles of his Creed. If the faith of the Sacrament be in the Scripture, and ſo neceſſary a thing, why did not the Apoſtles then put it in the Creed, and make thirteen Articles? If it be not in the Scripture, nor yet put in the Creed, why then doth the Pope ſo extreamly bind us unto it?

Bland. To that then will I anſwer. For I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, and in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord, with all the other Articles of the ſame Creed: And I believe all the Articles contained both in the Creed called the Maſs Creed, and in the Creed of Athanaſius: And I do believe, that all the holy Scriptures, and all things therein contained, are moſt true.

Collins. This will not ſerve you: ye muſt anſwer to all ſuch Articles in all theſe as ſhall be laid to you, or asked of you.

Bland. Let me know the Law that it is in that force (without any juſt cauſe of ſuſpicion proved againſt me) and I will anſwer.

Collins. How ſay ye, will ye anſwer?

Bland. Sir, I have anſwered you. Have him away, ſaid my Lord of Dover; he had better have anſwered.

Bland. My Lord, I am ready to anſwer, if ye have any thing againſt me by the Law.

B. Dover. Ye have preached many Hereſies in Adeſham, where I am Parſon now; and therefore ye muſt make anſwer to them.

Bland. Lay them to my charge by the Law, and I will anſwer them, if ye can approve that I am bound to anſwer to that was done a year or more ago; for if ye may do that, ye may alſo lay to my charge, and compel me to anſwer to all things done in all my life, I trow.

Collins. It is not a year ago ſince you were before Mr. Archdeacon and me.

Mr. Bland appeared at five Seſſions, and could not have his cauſe cried.

Bland. It is truth, it is a year and ten weeks ſince the words were ſpoken; and I have been a Priſoner ever ſince, and have been at five Seſſions, and never could have my cauſe tried. Me think your Charities ſhould think it puniſhment enough, if I had been guilty.

Collins. All this will not ſerve you; you muſt needs anſwer, and it will be better for you to anſwer now, then another time. Will ye reform your ſelf, and go to the Church, and worſhip Chriſt in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar; and be obedient unto all the Queens Laws?

Mr. Bland called before the Spiritual Judges, not for any matter they had, but that they would have againſt him.

Bland. I pray you wherefore am I brought hither?

Collins. To anſwer to ſuch things as are demanded of you.

Bland. Sir, I thought ye had ſome matters againſt me by the Law.

Collins. Well, on Monday at 9. of the Clock ye ſhall ſee the Law, and have Articles laid unto you.

Then they had ſpied Mr. Cox the Lawyer, and called him in, and ſaid; Here is a Lawyer can tell you are bound by the Law to anſwer: and he ſaid, as they had ſaid.

Collins. Do ye not believe, that after the Conſecration of the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, there remaineth no ſubſtance of Bread, but the ſubſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, both God and Man?

Mr. Bland deniegh the reallity of Chriſts Preſence in the Sacrament. The Capernaites took Chriſt to ſpeak literally of his Body, and ſo do the Papiſts, and not the Proteſtants.

Bland. Maſter Commiſſary, I know not by any Law why ye ſhould ask me that queſtion more then any other man here. And after a little talk, my Lord of Dover asked me this queſtion; Doeſt not thou believe, after the Conſecration, that it is the Body of Chriſt? And I ſaid, No, I do not ſo believe: for the Scriptures do not teach me, that there ſhould remain the Fleſh of Chriſt, to eat as a man ſhould eat mans Fleſh.

Then Mr. Glaſier ſaid, That was the Opinion of the Capernaites: there is no man here of that Opinion, and ſpake long of cutting of Chriſts Body, as men cut Fleſh in the Shambles.

Then Mr. Doctor Faucet ſaid; Maſter Bland, foraſmuch as you and I were brought up both in one Houſe, and born both in one Pariſh, I would be as glad as any man alive to do you good: but ye may not thus ſtand againſt the Church. For Chriſt ſaith; Ye muſt humble your ſelf, and take up his Croſs, and follow him. And to humble your ſelf in this place, is to be content, and not ſtick to your

Anno 1555.

your own Judgment, but to humble your ſelf to the Holy Church, which hath determined, that after the Conſecration there remaineth no Bread, but the Natural Body and Blood of Chriſt.

Determination of the Church is to be followed ſo far as the Church determineth by the Scriptures.

Bland. Maſter Doctor, if ye take humbling of our ſelves in that place, to admit the Determination of the Church, then muſt we know by the Scriptures, that the ſame Church determined nothing but according to the Scriptures, as this is not: and therefore I do not believe any ſuch Tranſubſtantiation; nor never will, God willing. Then (quoth he) I have done with you: I will no more pray for you then for a dog.

Then ſaid Maſter Glaſier; How think ye? Did Paul when he ſaid; Is not the Bread that we break a partaking of the Body of Chriſt? Did he mean Bakers Bread?

Bland. Though he did not mean Bakers Bread, that doth not prove that he brake Natural and Real Fleſh.

Argument. Ergo The glorified Body of Chriſt was not Crucified.

Glaſier. No, by Saint Mary, we ſay not ſo, but we ſay it is the Natural Body glorified, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Bland. Then the Apoſtles had it not as we have; or elſe his glorified Body was Crucified for us.

The Apoſtles did eat the Body Crucified: Ergo, the Apoſtles did not eat the glorified Body of Chriſt.

Glaſier. Tuſh, ye do not underſtand the Scriptures. For Chriſts Body was ever glorified, in that it was ſo marvellouſly united to the Godhead: yea, and he ſhewed his Body divers times glorified, as in the Mount Thabor. And when he walked on the Water, we ſee he was light, and had no weight in him. Was not that then a glorified Body?

Bland. Then belike Peters Body was glorified, if walking on the Water was the deed of a glorified Body: and the Iron that Elizeus made to ſwim upon the Water.

Dover. Tuſh, quoth my Lord of Dover, that was done by Prayer. But they made ſuch a noiſe with laughing, that I heard no more what my Lord ſaid.

It availeth not to reaſon with the Papiſts in time of their King-dom.

Bland. Maſters, I know that it availeth us nothing to reaſon with you, no more then it booted you in the time of the Goſpel. For then neither the reaſon of Eckius, Cochlæus, nor yet of detection of the Devils Sophiſtry of my Lord Chancellors doing, could take any place. And it is known to ſome that be here, that ſomething I can ſay in them.

Dover. No, you know Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, and ſuch other.

Bland. Indeed, my Lord, I have ſeen part of their doings.

Dover. That is ſeen by thee to day.

Glaſier. I was glad, when I heard you ſay ye believed the Catholick Church; and now go you from it?

Bland. No that I do not.

The Church viſible.

Glaſier. Ye know that Chriſt ſaith; If thy Brother have offended thee, go and reconcile him between thee and him. If he hear thee not, take two or three with thee, that in the Mouth of two or three witneſſes all things may be eſtabliſhed. If he hear not them, Dic Eccleſiæ; If he hear not the Church, take him as an heathen. I pray you where could ye have found this Church of yours fifty years ago?

Bland. Ye know that the true Church did not at all times flouriſh, but was wonderfully perſecuted.

Bland commanded away.

Dover. Then my Lord cryed; No more, I command you to hold your peace. Have him away and bring in Another.

Collins. Ye ſhall come again on Monday, at nine of the Clock, and in the mean time ye ſhall have whom ye will to confer withal: your friend D. Faucet, or Mr. Glaſier, if ye deſire them.

Bland. I will refuſe to talk with no Man: as for any conference of your part, it is but weak Laws, eſtabliſhed as they are. But when there was no Law, I did deſire conference. And ſo for that time I departed.

The Monday after we were brought forth to the ſame place again; and then Maſter Collins began to ſpeak to me, but after what manner, it is clean out of my mind: but the end was, that I would reform my ſelf. But as I did before, I demanded what they had to lay to my charge, and to ſee the Law, which they ſaid before I ſhould ſee.

Dover. What needs that? we have enough againſt you. * For ye denied to me Tranſubſtantiation in the Sacrament.

* Yea but why then did you Preſent him a whole year before?

Bland. I did refuſe to anſwer, till ye promiſed that I ſhould ſee the Law, whereby ye may compel me to anſwer.

Dover. My Lord took the Scribes Book, and read the anſwer that I made to Doctor Faucets reaſon, which I knew not that they had written.

The Popes Key.

Bland. My Lord, I made you no ſuch anſwer when ye asked me. I take M. Collins and M. Glaſier to witneſs. Then they brought forth a Decretal, a Book of the Biſhop of Romes Law, to bind me to anſwer, which my Heart abhorred to look upon. The effect was, that the Ordinary had authority to examine, and that they ſo examined muſt needs anſwer. But I ſaid, that it meaned of ſuch as were juſtly ſuſpect, as I was not. And here we had much Communication. For I charged them with unjuſt Impriſonment, which they could not avoid.

M. Oxenden helpeth the Catholicks.

But Mr. Oxenden would have helped them, and ſaid, the Juſtices put me in Priſon for a Sermon ſeditiouſly ſpoken, and for troubling a Prieſt at Maſs.

Bland. That is not true. For after I had been ten weeks in priſon, I was bayled, till I was caſt in again, and (as the Juſtice ſaid) for the diſobeying mine Ordinary, which I never did.

Collins. Will ye be content to confer with ſome? It will be better for you; now we offer it you, becauſe ye would not deſire it.

M. Bland, was Tutor to Doctor Faucet.

Bland. As I did not refuſe before, no more will I now. But I did not perceive before, but that one thing might have come, without any leav-asking, to confer the Scriptures: and therefore I looked that Doctor Faucet would have come to me without deſiring, if any commodity to me had been in conference; for though I was never able to do him good; yet once I was his Tutor.

Collins. Are ye content to come to his Chamber at afternooon?

These three belike were Bland, Sherterden, and Middleton. Miller a Clothier excommunicate, and let go.

Bland. Sir, I am a Priſoner, and therefore it is meet that I obey, and come whither you will, and ſo departed. At this time we were three. But they took another to appear before them the Tueſday ſeven-night after. And when he came, I knew not what was done, but that I hear they excommunicated him, and let him go. His name was Miller a Clothier.

Here followeth a certain confutation of Maſter Bland againſt falſe and manifeſt abſurdities, granted by Mr. Milles, Prieſt of Chriſts Church in Canterbury.

The Popiſh Faith of the Sacrament.

Milles. We ſay, that Chriſt is in or under the Sacrament really and corporally, which are the forms of Bread and Wine, and that there is his Body contained inviſibly, and the qualities which we do ſee, as whiteneſs and roundneſs, be there without ſubſtance by Gods power, as quantity and weight be there alſo by inviſible meaſure.

* 1. The matter of the Sacrament is Bread and Wine.

Bland. This is your own Divinity, to make accidents the Sacrament, and Chriſts real Body inviſibly contained in them, and ſo to deſtroy the Sacrament. And yet the Doctors ſay; * Materia Sacramenti eſt panis & vinum. And God by his power worketh no miracles with Hoc eſt corpus meum, ſo to change the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine into his Body and Blood, in that he maketh accidents to be without their ſubſtance by inviſible meaſure. I am aſhamed to ſee you ſo deſtroy Chriſts Sacrament, contrary to your own Doctors, and triſle with Gods Work.

If Chriſt be able to be where he liſt, and occupy no place: why then is not he able to be as well under the ſubſtance of Bread, as under the accidents of Bread, ſeeing he is omnipotent? Chriſt may be where he liſt: Ergo, Chriſt is really in the Sacrament, without occupying of place. The antecedent is true, and the conſequence falſe.

Milles. To Chriſt is given all power in Heaven and in Earth, ſo that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be, and is where he liſteth; and is in the Sacrament really and corporally without occupying of place; for a glorified Body occupieth no place.

Bland. Mark your own Reaſon. All power is given to Chriſt both in Heaven and Earth; by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he liſt: Ergo, he is in the Sacrament really and corporally, without occupying of place.

I deny your Argument; for it followeth neither of your Major nor Minor. And firſt I would learn of you, how you know that Chriſt liſteth to be preſent at every

Prieſts

Prieſt liſt. For if the Prieſt liſt not to ſay your Maſs, then Chriſt liſteth not to be there, Again, ye ſay, all power is given unto Chriſt both in Heaven and in Earth, ſo that that is the cauſe by your reaſon, that by the omnipotent power of his Godhead he may be where he liſt: and by that reaſon he had no power of his Godhead, till he had his humane Body, and then he was not equal with the Father in Divinity: for all power was not given to Chriſt, before the humanity and the Godhead were knit together, neither was he Filius. Here is more danger then ye are ware of; if ye would ſtand to it with juſt Judges.

Mills. We eat Chriſts Fleſh and Blood ſpiritually when we receive it with Faith and Charity. And we alſo do eat it corporally in the Sacrament; and the Body that we ſo receive hath Life. For the Godhead is annexed thereto: which although it be received with the Body of Chriſt, yet it is not viſible after a groſs ſort, and the Fleſh of Chriſt that we receive is lively; for it hath the Spirit of God joyned to it. And if a Man be drunken, it is not by receiving of the Blood of Chriſt: for it is contrary to the nature of Chriſts Blood. If he be drunken, it is by the qualities and (a) quantities, without ſubſtance of Blood.

a Caſe being put that the Prieſt taking a great quantity in the Chalice, be made drunk, which of theſe three is it that maketh him drunk? the nature of Blood: the accidents only of Wine? or elſe the true ſubſtance of Wine? let any reaſonable Man judge, Argument. b Chriſts Blood hath not that quality to make a Man drunk; receiving of that in the chalice can make a Man drunk: Ergo. that in the chalice cannot be the Blood of Chriſt. Fantaſtical abſurdities in the Popes Doctrine to be noted.

f Bland. I am glad that you are ſo much againſt all Men, to ſay that Chriſts Body is alive in the Sacrament; it may fortune to bring you to the truth in time to come. Me think it is evil to keep Chriſts Body alive in the Pix, or elſe muſt ye grant, that he is alive in receiving, and dead in the Pix. And ye ſay truth, that it is (b) not the natural receiving of Chriſts Blood that maketh a Man drunken; for it is the nature of Wine that doth that, which ye deny not.

And a more truth ye confeſs then ye did think, when ye ſaid; If a Man be drunken, it is by the qualities and quantities, without the ſubſtance of Blood; for indeed Blood hath no ſuch qualities with it: by which it is evident that there is no Natural Blood.

If a Man be drunken with Wine Conſecrated, it muſt be a miracle, as I think you will have it, that the ſaid accidents ſhould be without their Natural Subſtance, and work all the operations of both Subſtance and Accidents: and ſo it followeth, that a Man may be drunken by miracle. The Body that ye receive, ye ſay, is alive, becauſe it is annexed to the Godhead, and the Fleſh that ye receive is lively, becauſe it hath the Spirit of God joyned to it.

This diviſion is of your New Inventions, to divide the Body and the Fleſh, the one alive by the Godhead, the other lively by Gods Spirit, and both one Sacrament: ye make of it a thing ſo fantaſtical, that ye imagine a Body without Fleſh, and Fleſh without a Body, as ye do qualities and quantities without ſubſtance, and a living Body without qualities and quantities.

Mills. If caſe ſo require, and there be a godly intent in the Miniſter to Conſecrate, after the Conſecration thereof, there is preſent the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and no other ſubſtance, but accidents without ſubſtance to a true believer.

c Three inconveniences granted by the Papiſts.

1. That a Tun of Wine being Conſecrated, nothing remaineth but accidents: which is falſe by the operation thereof.

2. Where he ſaith, that the Word of God doth not Conſecrate without the intent of the Prieſt; which is againſt their own Doctrine, ſaying, that the wickedneſs of the Prieſt miniſteth not the Sacrament.

3. Where he ſaith, that to the unbeliever it is not the Sacrament as the Papiſts ſay, that the wicked receive the Body.

Bland. Ye grant three abſurdities, c that in a Tun of Wine Conſecrated is nothing but accidents: and to increaſe it withal, ye have brought in two Inconveniences; Firſt, that it is not the Word of God that doth conſecrate, but the intent of the Prieſt muſt help it; and if that lack, ye ſeem to grant no Conſecration, though the Prieſt ſpeak the Word; and yet your Doctors ſay, that the wickedneſs of the Prieſt miniſtheth not the Sacrament.

And to an unbeliever ye ſeem to ſay, that it is not the ſame, that it is to the true believer; and then muſt the believer have ſomething to do in the Conſecration. Incidit in ſcyllam qui vult vitare charibdim.

Mills. The ſubſtance of Chriſts Body doth not fill the Mouſes Belly. For although he doth receive the outward forms of Bread and Wine, yet he doth not receive the ſubſtance inwardly, but without violation. And a Mouſe doth not eat the Body of Chriſt, to ſpeak properly; for it doth not feed him ſpiritually or corporally, as it doth Man, becauſe he doth not receive it to any inducement of immortality to the Fleſh.

Anno 1555.

Bland. Ye make not your Doctrine plain to be underſtood: we muſt know how a Mouſe can receive the ſubſtance inwardly and outwardly. Ye ſay, he doth not receive the ſubſtance d inwardly, but without violation: Ergo, with violation he receiveth the ſubſtance inwardly. Ye ſay that the Mouſe cannot violate Chriſts Body; but he violateth the ſubſtance that he eateth. And this your proper ſpeech doth import as much, as that the Mouſe ſhould eat the Sacrament to as great effect, and the ſame thing, as doth the unworthy receiver. For if that be the cauſe that ſhe properly eateth not the Body of Chriſt, becauſe ſhe doth not feed upon it ſpiritually nor corporally, nor receiveth it to any inducement of immortality, as ye ſay; then it followeth, that the unbeliever and the e Mouſe receive both one thing. And yet it cannot be denied, but the f Mouſe will live with conſecrated Bread, and then ye muſt grant this abſurdity, that a ſubſtance is nouriſhed and fed only with accidents.

Argument
A contrario ſenſu.
d The Mouſe receiveth not the Body inwardly, but without violation.
Ergo, With violation he receiveth the Body inwardly.
Argument.
The Mouſe violateth not the Body of Chriſt.
The Mouſe violateth the ſubſtance which he eateth.
Ergo, The Mouſe eateth no ſubſtance of Chriſts Body.
e The Mouſe and the unbeliever receive the Body of Chriſt both alike, by the Papiſts Doctrine.
f Argument.
No Mouſe can live with accidents only without ſubſtance.
A Mouſe may live with conſecrated hoſts.
Ergo, conſecrated hoſts have not only accidents, but the Subſtance of Bread.

Mills. Mens Bodies be fed with Chriſts Body, as with immortal meat, by reaſon of the Godhead annexed, to eternal life; but mens Bodies be corporally nouriſhed with qualities and forms of Bread and Wine: and we deny that by the Sacramental eating any groſs humour turned into Blood, is made miraculouſly in the Body.

Bland. Where it cannot be denied that a Man may live, and naturally be nouriſhed in his Natural Body with the Sacramental Bread and Wine conſecrated; ye cannot avoid that: but then ye turn to the ſpiritual nouriſhing of Mans Body, by Chriſts Body and Godhead annexed, which is nothing to put away the abſurdity, that either a Mans Natural Body ſhould be fed naturally with accidents, or elſe to have them changed into groſs humours. But ye ſay, Mens Bodies be corporally nouriſhed with qualities and forms of Bread and Wine; and then muſt ye needs grant, that qualities and quantities muſt be made ſubſtance in Man. For ex eiſdem ſunt & nutriuntur mixta, or elſe is all that is the nutriment in Man accidents and no ſubſtance.

Another abſurdity, that Mens Bodies be nouriſhed naturally with accidents and qualities.

Mills. If the forms of Bread and Wine be burned, or Worms ingendred, it is no derogation to the Body of Chriſt, becauſe the preſence of his Body ceaſeth to be there, and no ſubſtance cometh again.

Bland. Ye grant here, that a ſubſtance may be made of accidents, as aſhes or worms: but I think you will have it by your miracles, and this I count a more abſurdity then the other, that Chriſts Body ſhould ceaſe to be there, and no ſubſtance to come again; for no word in all the whole Bible ſeems to ſerve you for the ceaſing of his preſence, though we granted you, which we do not, that it were there. God Almighty open your Heart, if it be his Will and Pleaſure, to ſee the truth. And if I thought not my death to be at hand, I would anſwer you to all the reſt, in theſe and all other my doings.

Another abſurdity, that ſubſtance is made of accidents, when aſhes or worms be made of the forms of Bread and Wine.

I ſubmit my ſelf to our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and his holy Word, deſiring you in the Bowels of Chriſt to do the ſame.

Your Orator in the Lord,
John Bland.

The laſt appearonce and examination of Maſter Bland.

HItherto you have heard the troubleſom handling of this Faithful and Bleſſed Servant of God, John Bland, toſt to and fro, from Priſon to Priſon, from Seſſion to Seſſion. At laſt he was brought before the Biſhop of Dover, the Commiſſary, and the Archdeacon, at Canterbury, the 13. day of June. The name of this Biſhop was Richard Thornton. The Commiſſary was Robert Collins, whom the Cardinal by his Letters Patents had ſubſtitute to his factor, before his coming over to England. The Archdeacon was Nicholas Harpsfield. Under theſe a great ſort of innocent Lambs of Chriſt were cruelly intreated and ſlain at Canterbury, amongſt whom this foreſaid Richard Thornton the Bloody Biſhop of Dover.

Maſter

Anno 1555.

Maſter Bland was one of the firſt; who, as it is ſaid, being brought before the ſaid Biſhop, and Colleagues which were John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, Thomas Thacker, Hunfrey Middleton, William Cocker, was examined of Articles. To whom it was objected by the Commiſſary, whether he believed that Chriſt is really in the Sacrament, or no, &c. To this he anſwered and ſaid, that he believed that Chriſt is in the Sacrament, as he is in all other good Bodies; ſo that he judged not Chriſt to be really in the Sacrament.

The words of M. Bland at his examination.

Whereupon the day being on Monday, he was bid to appear again upon Wedneſday next, and from thence he was deferred again to Monday following, being the twentieth of June, in the ſame Chapterhouſe, then to hear further what ſhould be done, in caſe he would not relent to their mind. The which day and place he, appearing as before, was required to ſay his mind plainly and fully to the foreſaid Articles, being again repeated to him. Which Articles, commonly and in courſe they uſe to object to their Examinates which be brought before them, as here now followeth, and need not much hereafter, ſpecially for that Country of Kent, to be repeated.

Another appearance.

The laſt appearance of M. Bland before the Biſhop of Dover, and others.

Articles Miniſtred by Richard Biſhop of Dover, to Mr. Bland, and likewiſe to the reſt following after him.

Articles of courſe miniſtred againſt M. Bland.

1. FIrſt, that thou art of the Dioceſs of Canterbury, and ſo ſubject to the juriſdiction of the Archbiſhop there.

2. Item, that thou art a Chriſtian Man, and doſt profeſs the Laws of God, and Faith of Chriſts Catholick Church, and the determination of the ſame.

3. Item, That all Parſons which teach, preach, believe, affirm, hold, maintain, or ſay within the Dioceſs of Canterbury, otherwiſe then our Holy Mother the Church doth, are Excommunicate Perſons, and Heretick, and as Excommunicate and Hereticks ought to be named, reputed, and taken.

4. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of our Mother Holy Church, within the Dioceſs of Canterbury, haſt openly ſpoken, maintained, holden, affirmed, and believed, and yet doſt hold, maintain, affirm, and believe, that in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine; there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in ſubſtance, but only a token, ſign, and remembrance thereof, and that the very Body and Blood of Chriſt is only in Heaven, and no where elſe.

5. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of our Mother Holy Church, haſt within this Dioceſs of Canterbury openly ſpoken, ſaid, maintained, holden, affirmed, and believed, and yet doſt hold, maintain, affirm and believe, that it is againſt Gods Word, that the Sacrament of Chriſts Church ſhould be Miniſtred in an unknown Tongue; and that no Man ſafely and with a ſafe Conſcience, or without peril of ſin, receiveth any Sacrament Miniſtred in any Tonguc that he underſtandeth not.

6. Item, that thou, contrary to the Catholick Faith of our Mother Holy Church, haſt, and yet doſt hold opinion, and ſay, that it is againſt Gods Word, that the Sacrament of the Altar ſhould be Miniſtred in one kind; and that no Man may with a ſafe Conſcience ſo receive it.

7. Item, that the premiſſes be true, and that there is a common fame upon them within the Dioceſs of Canterbury.

The Anſwers of Maſter Bland to the foreſaid Articles

Anſwer to the firſt Article out of the Regiſter.

1. TO theſe Articles Mr. Bland, anſwering again in order as they were objected to him, ſaith to the firſt, granting the ſame, that he was a Prieſt, and of the Dioceſs of Canterbury.

The Catholick Church of Chriſt.

2. To the ſecond alſo he anſwereth affirmatively.

The Catholick Church of Antichriſt.

3. Item, to the third he anſwereth, that the Article is true, meaning the Catholick Church to be Chriſts Church.

4. Item, in the fourth Article; as touching the firſt part of the Article, he doth confeſs, that he hath preached and taught it, as it is contained in the ſame. And as touching the ſecond part of the Article, he doth confeſs, that he doth now alſo hold and ſay, as he preached and taught before.

5. Item, to the fifth Article he granteth:

6. To the ſixth he preached, held, and doth hold, as it is contained in the Article.

7. Item, to the laſt Article he granteth the ſame, &c.

This done, and his Anſwers and Confeſſion taken, reſpite was given him yet a few days to deliberate with himſelf. So the 25. day of the ſaid Month of June he making his appearance again in the ſaid Chapter-houſe, there openly and boldly withſtood the authority of the Pope, whereupon his Sentence was read, and ſo he condemned and committed to the ſecular power. Touching the form and tenor of the ſentence, becauſe all their ſentences of courſe agree in one, read before in the Hiſtory of M. Rogers.

M. Bland denieth the Pope. M. Bland condemned.

The Prayer of Mr. Bland before his death.

A Prayer of M. Bland.

THe Lord Jeſus, for whoſe love I do willingly leave this Life, and deſire rather the bitter death of his Croſs, with the loſs of all Earthly things, then to abide the Blaſphemy of thy holy Name, or elſe to obey Man in breaking of the Commandments: thou ſeeſt, O Lord, that whereas I might live in Worldly Wealth to worſhip falſe Gods, and honour thy enemy, I chooſe rather the torments of this Body, and loſs of this my Life, and have counted all things but vile duſt and dung, that I might win thee: Which death is more dear unto me, then thouſands of Gold and Silver. Such love, O Lord, haſt thou laid up in my breaſt, that I hunger for thee, as the Dear that is wounded deſireth the ſoil. Send thy holy comfort, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and ſtrengthen this weak piece of Earth, which is void of all ſtrength of it ſelf. Thou remembreſt, O Lord, that I am but duſt, and not able to do any thing that is good. Therefore, O Lord, as thou of thy accuſtomed goodneſs haſt bidden me to this banquet, and counted me worthy to drink of thine own Cup amongſt thine elect; give me ſtrength againſt this Element, that as it is to my ſight moſt irkſom and terrible, ſo to my mind it may be at thy commandment, as an obedient ſervant, ſweet and pleaſant; and through the ſtrength of thy Holy Spirit, I may paſs through the ſtrength of this fire into thy Boſom, according unto thy promiſe, and for this mortality to receive immortality, and for this corruptible to put on incorruptible. Accept this burnt offering & Sacrifice, O Lord, not for the Sacrifice it ſelf, but for thy dear Sons ſake my Saviour; for whoſe teſtimony I offer this freewill offering with all my heart and with all my Soul. O Heavenly Father, forgive me my Sins, as I forgive the whole World. O ſweet Saviour, ſpread thy wings over me. O God, grant me thy Holy Ghoſt, through whoſe merciful inſpiration I am come hither. Conduct me unto everlaſting Life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit; Lord Jeſus receive my Soul. So be it.

The Hiſtory of John Frankeſh, Humfrey Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden.

July 12. John Frankeſh, Humf. et Middleton, Nicholas Sheterden, Martyrs.

HAving now paſſed over the Examinations of Mr. Bland, let us further proceed to the reſt of his fellows concaptives, being joyned the ſame time with him in the like cauſe and like affliction. The names of whom were John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, Thacker, and Cocker, of whom Thacker only gave back. The reſt conſtantly ſtanding to the truth, were altogether condemned by the Suffragan of Canterbury, the 25. day of June, the year above expreſſed. Touching whoſe Examinations I ſhall not need long to ſtand, forſomuch as the Articles miniſtred againſt them were all one; ſo in their anſwers they little or nothing diſagreed, as hereafter (by the Lords help) you ſhall hear. In the mean time, becauſe Nicholas Sheterden in his Examinations had a little more large talk with the Archdeacon and the Commiſſary, I will firſt begin with the ſame.

The

The firſt Examination or reaſoning of Nicholas Sheterden with M. Harpsfield Archdeacon, and M. Collins the Commiſſary, for the which they ſent him to Priſon.

The talk of Nicholas Sheterden with the Archdeacon and Commiſſary about the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt.

FIrſt, the Archdeacon and Commiſſary affirmed, that the very words of Chriſt, when he ſaid, This is my Body, did change the ſubſtance, without any other interpretation or ſpiritual meaning of the words.

Shet. Then belike when Chriſt ſaid, This Cup is my Blood, the ſubſtance of the Cup was changed into his Blood, without any other meaning, and ſo the Cup was changed, and not the Wine.

The Romiſh Catholicks cannot deny a figurative ſpeech in the Cup and yet will not grant the ſame in the Bread.

Arch. Not ſo; for when Chriſt ſaid; This Cup is my Blood, he meant not the Cup, but the Wine in the Cup.

Shet. If Chriſt ſpake one thing, and meant another, then the bare words did not change the ſubſtance; but there muſt be a meaning ſought as well of the Bread, as of the Cup.

Arch. There muſt be a meaning ſought of the Cup otherwiſe then the words ſtand. But of the Bread it muſt be underſtood only as it ſtandeth, without any other meaning.

Shet. Then do ye make one half of Chriſts inſtitution a figure, or borrowed ſpeech, and the other half a plain ſpeech, and ſo ye divide Chriſts Supper.

Arch. Chriſt meant the Wine, and not the Cup, though he ſaid, This Cup is my Blood.

Shet. Then ſhew me whether the words, which the Prieſt do ſpeak over the Cup, do change the ſubſtance, or whether the mind of the Prieſt doth it?

Arch. The mind of the Prieſt doth it, and not the words.

Shet. If the mind of the Prieſt doth it, and not the words, if the Prieſt then do mind his harlot, or any other vain thing, that thing ſo minded was there made, and ſo the People do worſhip the Prieſts harlot in ſtead of Chriſts Blood: and again, none of the People can tell when it is Chriſts Blood, or when it is not, ſeeing the matter ſtandeth in the mind of the Prieſt. For no Man can tell what the Prieſt meaneth, but himſelf; and ſo are they ever in danger of committing Idolatry.

If the mind, and not the words of the Prieſt doth it; how then is it that Duns and his fellows ſay, that the words be the form and formal cauſe only that maketh the Sacrament? Collins the Commiſſary taketh the Martyr in hand.

Then was the Archdeacon ſomewhat moved, and ſate him down, and ſaid to the Commiſſary; I pray you Mr. Commiſſary ſpeak you to him another while; for they are unreaſonable and perverſe anſwers, as ever I heard of. Then ſtood up the Commiſſary, and ſaid:

Com. Your Argument is much againſt your ſelf, for ye grant that the Bread is a figure of Chriſts Body; but the Cup can be no figure of his Blood nor yet his very Blood; and therefore Chriſt did not mean the Cup, but the Wine in the Cup.

Shet. My Argument is not againſt me at all; for I do not ſpeak it to prove that the Cup is his Blood, nor the figure of his Blood, but to prove that the bare words being ſpoken of the Prieſt do not change the ſubſtance no more of the Bread, then they do change the Cup into Blood.

Commiſ. It could not be ſpoken of the Cup, when he ſaid, This Cup is my Blood; but he meant the Wine in the Cup.

Shet. Then it remaineth for you to anſwer my queſtion to the Archdeacon, that is, whether the mind of the Prieſt when he ſpeaketh over the Cup, doth change it into Blood, or the bare words?

Commiſ. Both together doth it, the words and the mind of the Prieſt together; yea the intent and the words together doth it.

The Commiſſary brought to an abſurdity.

Shet. If the words and intents together do change the ſubſtance, yet muſt the Cup be his Blood, and not the Wine, foraſmuch as the words are, This Cup is my Blood, and the intent ye ſay, was the Wine; or elſe the words take none effect, but the intent only.

After, the Commiſſary in his Chamber, ſaid, it was the intent of the Prieſt before he went to Maſs, without the words; for the Prieſt did intend to do as holy Church had ordained, then the intent made the Sacrament to take effect.

The intent of the Prieſt maketh not the Sacrament.

Shet. If the Sacraments take effect of the intent of the Prieſt, and not of Gods Word, then many Pariſhes having a Prieſt that intendeth not well, are utterly deceived, both in Baptizing, and alſo worſhipping that thing to be God, which is but Bread, becauſe for lack of the Prieſts intent, the words do take none effect in it; ſo that by this it is ever doubtful, whether they worſhip Chriſt, or Bread, becauſe it is doubtful what the Prieſts do intend.

Anno 1555.

Chriſts Body, whether it may be in two places at once.

Commiſ. Then the Commiſſary would prove to me, that Chriſts Manhood was in two places at one time, by theſe words of Chriſt in John the third Chapter, where he ſaith; No Man aſcendeth up to Heaven, but he that came down from Heaven, that is to ſay, the Son of Man which is in Heaven. By this he would prove, that Chriſt was then in Heaven, and in Earth alſo, naturally and Bodily.

Shet. This place and other muſt needs be underſtood for the unity of the perſon, in that Chriſt was God and Man, and yet the matter muſt be referred to the Godhead, or elſe ye muſt fall into great errour.

Commiſ. That is not ſo. for it was ſpoken of the manhood of Chriſt, foraſmuch as he ſaith, the Son of Man which is in Heaven.

The Commiſſary brought to another inconvenience.

Shet. If ye will needs underſtand it to be ſpoken of Chriſts manhood, then muſt ye fall into the errour of the Anabaptiſts, which deny that Chriſt took Fleſh of the Virgin Mary; for if there be no Body aſcended up, but that which came down, where is then his incarnation? For then he brought his Body down with him.

Commiſ. Lo how you ſeek an errour in me, and yet ſee not how ye err your ſelf. For it cannot be ſpoken of the Godhead, except ye grant that God is paſſible, for God cannot come down, becauſe he is not paſſible.

If God cannot come down, then Chriſt were not God, for Chriſt came from Heaven.

Shet. If that were a good Argument, that God could not come down, becauſe he is not paſſible; then it might be ſaid by the like Argument, that God could not ſit, and then Heaven is not his ſeat, and then ſay as ſome do, that God hath no right hand for Chriſt to ſit at.

Com. Then the Commiſſary affirmed plainly, that it was true, God hath no right hand indeed.

Shet. Oh what a ſpoil of Chriſts Religion will this be, that becauſe we cannot tell how God came down, therefore we ſhall ſay, that he came not down at all, and becauſe we cannot tell what manner of hand he hath, to ſay that he hath no hand at all; and then he cannot reach the utmoſt part of the Sea. O miſery! at length it will come to paſs, that God cannot ſit, and then how can Heaven be his Seat; and if Heaven be not his Seat, then there is no Heaven, and then at length I doubt ye will ſay there is no God, or elſe no other God, but ſuch as the Heathen Gods are, which cannot go nor feel.

Gods hand is ſpiritual.

Commiſ. Why, doth not the Scripture ſay, that God is a Spirit? and what hand can a Spirit have?

Shet. Truth it is, God is a Spirit, and therefore is worſhipped in Spirit and Truth; and as he is a Spirit, ſo hath he a Spiritual Power, ſo he hath a Spiritual Seat, a Spiritual Hand, and a Spiritual Sword; which we ſhall feel, if we go this way to work, as we begin. Becauſe we know not what God hath, therefore if we ſay he hath none, then it may as well be ſaid, there is no Chriſt.

Then the Commiſſary ſaid, he would talk no more with me, and ſo departed; and alſo the Commiſſary was compelled to grant, that Chriſts Teſtament was broken, and his inſtitution was changed from that he left it: but he ſaid they had power ſo to do.

My firſt anſwering, after their Law was eſtabliſhed.

Declaration of the firſt Examination of Sheterden, after the Law was eſtabliſhed.

BEcauſe I know ye will deſire to hear from me ſome certainty of my eſtate, I was called before the Suffragan, and ſeven or eight of the chief Prieſts, and examined of certain Articles and then I required to ſee their Commiſſion.

Sheterden requireth to ſee the Commiſſion.

They ſhewed it to me, and ſaid, there it is, and the King and Queens Letters alſo. Then I deſired to have it read: and ſo in reading I perceived, that on ſome notable ſuſpicion he might examine upon two Articles; whether Chriſts real preſence were in the Sacrament; and whether the Church of England be Chriſts Catholick Church.

Sheterden three quarters of a year in Priſon before the Law took place.

To that I anſwered, that I had been a Priſoner three quarters of a year, and as I thought wrongfully: reaſon would therefore that I ſhould anſwer to thoſe things wherefore I was Priſoner.

Anno 1555.

Suff. The ſuffragan ſaid, his Commiſſion was, I muſt anſwer directly, yea or no.

Shet. This Commiſſion, ſaid I, was not general to examine whom he will, but on juſt ſuſpicion.

Suff. He ſaid, I was ſuſpected, and preſented to him.

Shet. Then I required that the accuſation might be ſhewed.

Suff. He ſaid, he was not bound to ſhew it, but he commanded me in the King and Queens Name to anſwer directly.

Shet. And I as a Subject do require of you Juſtice: for that I have done I ask no favour.

Suff. He ſaid I was ſuſpected.

Shet. I bade him prove that ſuſpicion, or what cauſe he had to ſuſpect.

The proceedings of the Papiſts were againſt the Law.

Suff. Thou waſt caſt into Priſon for that cauſe.

Shet. That was a pretty ſuſpicion, becauſe I had ſuffered Impriſonment contrary to Gods Law and the Realm, that therefore I muſt now for amends be examined of ſuſpicion without cauſe, to hide all the wrong done to me before. For when I was caſt into Priſon, there was no Law but I might ſpeak as I did: therefore in that point I could be no more ſuſpect, than you which Preached the ſame your ſelf not long before.

The Biſhop of Dover a proteſtant in King Edwards time.

Suff. That was no matter to thee what I Preached.

Shet. Well, yet in the King and Queens Name I muſt anſwer directly: and therefore I require as a Subject, that ye do not extend beyond your Commiſſion, but prove me ſuſpect, more than you your ſelf.

Mills. Then ſaid M. Mills, I had written to my Mother, and he did ſee the Letter, wherein I perſwaded my Mother to my opinions.

Shet. In that I did but my duty to certifie her, I was not in Priſon for any evil. And that was before the Law alſo, and therefore no more ſuſpicion was in me, than was in them which taught the like.

Mills. Well, ye are required here to anſwer directly, or no.

Shet. Firſt then I require of you to prove this ſuſpicion; and thus we toſſed it to and fro. At laſt the Biſhop ſaid he himſelf did ſuſpect me. I asked whereby?

Suff. Well, ſaid he, I my ſelf did ſuſpect thee, and it is no matter whereby.

Shet. But your Commiſſion doth not ſerve you ſo to do without cauſe of ſuſpicion.

Suff. Well, yet did I ſuſpect you.

Shet. It is not meet for you to be my accuſer, and my judge alſo, for that is too much for one Man. And thus many words were multiplied, and they were much grieved.

Mills. If you were a Chriſtian Man you would not be aſhamed of your faith being required.

Shet. I am not aſhamed indeed, I thank God, and if any Man did come to me, either to teach or learn, I would declare it; but foraſmuch as I perceive you come neither to teach nor to learn, I hold it beſt not to anſwer you.

Mills. If you will not, then will we certifie the Kings Councel.

Upon this it appeareth the Letters were written to the B. of Winchester by whom he was ſent for after and examined.

Shet. I am therewith content that you ſhould certifie that I had ſuffered three quarters Priſon wrongfully, and therefore I deſire to be juſtified or condemned, firſt for that I ſuffered ſuch Impriſonment; and then I will not refuſe to anſwer your Articles, though they were a buſhel of them. But to ſay that I would anſwer, whereby you ſhould heal all your wrong done to me againſt the Law of God and the Realm, I will not.

Sheterden refuſeth to anſwer before it be tried wherefore he was impriſoned.

Here much ado there was to prove that he had no wrong, and again, that it was not they that did it. But ſaid he, the Commiſſary was one of them. He anſwered, No, it was the Archdeacon. He ſaid, you ſate with him, and he asked your Counſel in it, and yet if it were he, it was your Church, except the Archdeacon, and you be divided one from another. Well ſaid they, Will ye now deny that ye ſaid then, and promiſe here to ſubmit your ſelf henceforth, and ye ſhall be delivered?

Sheterden refuſeth to ſubmit himſelf.

Shet. I am not ſo much bound to you to grant any ſuch promiſe: and again you ſhall well know that I would not promiſe to go croſs the Street for you: but if I did at any time offend your Law, let me have the puniſhment: I ask no favour.

Then ſaid they, that it was obſtinacy in him, that he would not anſwer, and a token that his faith was nought, ſeeing he was aſhamed to utter it.

Shet. Nay ſaid he, you ſhall well know I am not aſhamed of my Faith: but becauſe you do ſo greedily ſeek Blood, I will anſwer only to that you have againſt me.

Suff. Nay, you ſhall anſwer to the Articles, or elſe be Condemned upon Suſpicion.

Shet. I am content with that, yet all Men ſhall know that as ye ſuſpect and can prove no cauſe, ſo ſhall ye Condemn me without a matter, and then ſhall all Men know ye ſeek my Blood, and no juſtice.

Suff. No, we ſeek not thy Blood, but thy converſion.

Shet. That we ſhall ſee. For then ſhall you prove my perverſion firſt, before you condemn me on your ſuſpicion without proof of the ſame: and by that I ſhall know whether you ſeek Blood or no. Many other words were between them.

One Lovell a loveleſs Lawyer.

At laſt ſtept up one Lovels a Lawyer, which would prove his Impriſonment not to be wrong, but right, by old Statutes of Edward the fourth, and Henry, &c. but at laſt he was compelled to forſake thoſe Statutes from Michaelmas to Chriſtmas, and then he ſaid it was no wrong.

To this Nicholas ſaid, if he could prove that Men might wrongfully impriſon before a Law, and in the mean while make Laws, and then under that hide the firſt wrong, then he ſaid true, or elſe not.

Thus he kept the Bandogs at ſtaves end, not as thinking to eſcape them, but that I would ſee, ſaid he, the Foxes leap above the ground for my Blood if they can reach it (ſo it be the will of God) yet we ſhall ſee them gape, and leap for it. From Weſtgate in haſte.

By yours, Nicholas Sheterden.

Notes of Nicholas Sheterden, againſt the falſe worſhip and oblation of the Sacrament.

False worſhiping of the Sacrament.

THe Holy ſign in ſtead of the thing ſignified is ſervile ſervitude; as Saint Auguſtine termeth it, when the Bread in the Sacrament is by common and ſolemn error worſhipped in ſtead of the Fleſh aſſumpted of the Word of God.

There was no mention of worſhipping the Creatures at the feaſt or firſt ſupper that Chriſt did celebrate: therefore the ſaying of Chriſt concerning divorce, may well be applyed to them; it was not ſo from the beginning, nor ſhall be to the end.

Againſt Sacramental oblation.

The once made oblation of Chriſt is hereby derogate, when this Sacramental oblation and offering of thankſgiving is believed to be propitiatory, and that it purgeth the Soul as well of the living as of the dead, againſt this ſaying to the Hebrews, With one only oblation he hath made perfect for ever thoſe that are ſanctified. Again, Where is remiſſion, there is no more oblation for ſins, making us clean by him.

This word (by himſelf) hath a vehemency and pith, that driveth all Prieſts from authority to enterpriſe ſuch oblation, whereas what he himſelf doth by himſelf, he leaveth not for other to do. So ſeemeth our purgatory already paſt & done, not to come & remaining to be done

His Examination before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, then Lord Chancellor.

A note of the words or talk paſſed between Nicholas Sheterden, and the Biſhop of Winchester.

I Was called into a Chamber before the Lord Chancellor, the Suffragan, and other, Prieſts I think for the moſt part. He ſtandeth to the table, called me to him, and becauſe I ſaw the Cardinal was not there, I bowed my ſelf and ſtood near.

Then ſaid he, I have ſent for you, becauſe I hear you are indited of hereſie; and being called before the Commiſſioners, ye will not anſwer nor ſubmit your ſelf.

Unjuſt impriſonment of Sheterden.

I ſaid, If it like you, I did not refuſe to anſwer; but I did plainly anſwer, that I had been in Priſon long time, and reaſon it was that I ſhould be charged or diſcharged for that, and not to be examined of Articles to hide my wrong Impriſonment, neither did I know any Inditement againſt

againſt me. If there were any, it could not be juſt, for I was not abroad ſince the Law was made.

Winch. Well, yet if ſuch ſuſpicion be of you, if you be a Chriſtian, ye will declare that it is not true, and ſo purge your ſelf.

Shet. I thought it ſufficient to anſwer to mine offences, &c. truſting that they would lay no ſuch burthen upon me, whereby the wrong done to me might be covered, but I would be proved to have wrong or right.

Winchest. maketh a miracle that there was no Law in King Edward's time againſt the Sacrament of the Altar.

Winch. He ſaid, if thou wilt declare thy ſelf to the Church to be a Chriſtian, thou ſhalt go, and then have a writ of wrong Impriſonment, &c.

Shet. I ſaid I was not minded to ſue now, but require to have right juſtice; but to make a promiſe I will not: but if I offend the Law, then puniſh me accordingly. For it might be that my Conſcience was not perſwaded, nor wouldbe, in Priſon; ſeeing theſe things which I have learned, were by Gods Law openly taught and received by authority of the Realm. And he ſaid it was never received, that I might ſpeak againſt the Sacrament, I ſaid againſt ſome opinion of the Sacrament it was openly taught.

Winch. By no Law, and that was not able to conſider, that all that while God preſerved that, ſo that no Law could paſs againſt it.

Shet. I ſaid their Law did not only perſwade me, but this moſt; when they Preached unto us, they took pain to ſet out the Word of God in our Tongue, ſo that we may read and judge whether they ſay true or no, but now they take the light from us, and would have us believe it, becauſe they ſay ſo, which is to me a great perſwaſion.

The Catholicks ſtand upon the number.

Winch. It was not a few that could be your guide in underſtanding, but the Doctors and all the whole Church, now whom wouldeſt thou believe? either the few or the many?

Shet. I did not believe for the few, nor for the many, but only for that he bringeth the word, and ſheweth it to me to be ſo according to the proceſs thereof.

The faithful ſtand upon the word.

Winch. Well ſaid he, then if an Arrian come to thee with Scripture, thou wilt believe him, if he ſhew this Text, My Father is greater than I.

Shet. I anſwered no, my Lord, he muſt bring me alſo the contrary place, and prove them both true, where he ſaith, My Father and I am one.

Winch. Yea, ſaid he, that is by charity, as we be one with him.

Shet. I ſaid that gloſs would not ſtand with the reſt of the Scripture, where he ſaid; I am the very ſame, that I ſay to you; He ſaid the Truth, and the Truth was God, &c. with much ſuch like. And here he made many words (but very gently) of the Sacrament: Likewiſe Chriſt ſaid (quoth he) it was his Body; yea, (that is to ſay) a figure of his Body, and how Men did not conſider the Word was God, and God the Word, and ſo provoked me with ſuch temptation; but I let him alone, and ſaid nothing.

Wincheſter defendeth Images.

So after many words he came to the Churches faith and comely orders of Ceremonies and Images. And then I joyned to him again with the Commandments.

Winch. He ſaid, that was done that no falſe thing ſhould be made, as the Heathen would worſhip a Cat, becauſe ſhe killed Mice.

Shet. I ſaid that it was plain that the Law forbade not only ſuch, but even to make an Image of God to any manner of likeneſs.

No Image of God to be made.

Winch. Where find ye that?

Shet. Forſooth in the Law where God gave them the Commandments: for he ſaid, Ye ſaw no ſhape, but heard a voice only: and added a reaſon why? leſt they ſhould after make Images, and marr themſelves: So that God would not ſhew his ſhape, becauſe they ſhould have no Image of him which was the true God, &c.

Winch. He ſaid, I made a goodly interpretation.

Shet. I ſaid no, it was the Text.

Then was the Bible called for, and when it came, He bade me find it, and I ſhould ſtrait be confounded with mine own words; ſo that if there were any grace with me, I would truſt mine own wit no more; and when I looked, it was Latin.

Winch. Why, ſaid he, can ye read no Latin?

Shet. No. Then was the Engliſh Bible brought. He bade me find it; and ſo I read it aloud, and then he ſaid; lo here thou mayſt ſee; this is no more to forbid the Image of God, than of any other Beaſt, Fowl or Fiſh (the place was Deut. 4.) I ſaid it did plainly forbid to make any of theſe as an Image of God, becauſe no Man might know what ſhape he was of. Therefore might no Man ſay of any Image, this is an Image of God. Ann. 1555. Deut. 4.

Winch. Well, yet by your leave, ſo much as was ſeen we may, that is, of Chriſt, of the Holy Ghoſt; and the Father appeared to Daniel, like an old (a) Man &c.

(a) But the Commandment ſaith: Deut. 4. Thou ſhalt make no Image of God either man or woman, &c.

Shet. That is no proof that we may make Images contrary to the Commandment: for though the Holy Ghoſt appeared like a Dove, yet was he not like in ſhape, but in certain qualities, and therefore when I ſaw the Dove, which is Gods Creature, indeed I might remember the Spirit to be ſimple and loving, &c. and with that he was ſomewhat moved, and ſaid, I had learned my Leſſon, and asked who taught me, with many words; and he ſaid he would prove how good and profitable Images were to teach the unlearned, &c.

The Holy Ghoſt like a Dove in ſome qualities but not in ſhape. The qualities of this ſeemed here to want in Wincheſter.

Shet. At the laſt I ſaid, my Lord, although I were able to make never ſo good a gloſs upon the Commandments, yet obedience is better than all our good intents, and much ado we had: at laſt he ſaw, he ſaid, what I was, and how he had ſent for me for charity ſake to talk with me, but now he would not meddle, and ſaid my wrong Impriſonment could not excuſe me, but I muſt clear my ſelf.

Shet. I ſaid that was eaſie for me to do, For I had not offended.

Winch. He ſaid I could not eſcape ſo, there I was deceived.

Shet. Well, then I am under the Law, &c.

How the Catholicks falſly ſlander the faithful innocent.

Arch. The Archdeacon was there called in for me, and he laid to me, that with ſuch arrogancy and ſtoutneſs, as never was heard, I behaved my ſelf before him, whereas he was minded with ſuch mercy towards me, &c. and many lies he laid to me, that I was ſent home till another time; and I would not be contented, but went out of the Church with ſuch an cut-cry as was notable.

Shet. I declare, that he falſly herein reported me, and brought in the Laws then in the Realm, and the Queens Proclamation that none of her ſubjects ſhould be compelled till the Law were to compel, and that I rehearſed the ſame in the Court for me, and I did uſe him then (ſaid I) as I uſe your grace now, and no otherwiſe.

Winch. He ſaid that I did not uſe my ſelf very well now.

Shet. I ſaid, I had offered my ſelf to be bailed, and to confer with them, when and where they would.

Winch. He ſaid, I ſhould not confer, but be obedient. I ſaid, let me go, and I will not deſire to confer neither: and when I offended, let them puniſh me, and ſo departed.

By your Brother, Nicholas Sheterden,

The laſt Examination with the Condemnation of Maſter Bland, John Frankeſh, Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton.

The final Condemnation of the 4. godly Martyrs. Ex Regiſt. Cant.

AND thus much touching the particular, and ſeveral Examinations of Nicholas Sheterden, and of Mr. Bland. Now to touch ſomething alſo of the other Martyrs, which the ſame time were examined, and ſuffered with them together, to wit, Humfrey Middleton of Aſhford and John Frankeſh, Vicar of Rolvynden, in the Dioceſs of Kent above mentioned, here firſt would be declared the Articles which publickly in their laſt examinations were joyntly and ſeverally miniſtred unto them by the foreſaid Thornton Biſhop of Dover. But foraſmuch as theſe Articles, being ordinary and of courſe, are already expreſſed in the Story of M. Bland, as may appear before; It ſhall not therefore be needful to make any new rehearſal thereof.

To theſe ſeven Articles then being propounded to the five perſons above named, to wit, John Frankeſh, John Bland, Nicholas Sheterden, Humfrey Middleton, and one Thacker, firſt anſwered John Frankeſh ſomewhat doubtfully, deſiring further reſpite to be given him of fourteen days to deliberate with himſelf. Which was granted: Mr. Bland anſwered flatly and roundly, as before ye heard. Nicholas Sheterden, and Humfrey Middleton anſwered to the firſt and ſecond Articles affirmatively. To the third concerning the Catholick Church after a ſort they granted. To the fourth, and fifth, and ſixth, touching the Real preſence, and the Sacrament to be miniſtred in the Latin Tongue, and in one kind, they refuſed utterly to anſwer. Sheterden ſaid, he would not anſwer thereto before the cauſe were determined why he was impriſoned, and ſo ſtill remained Priſoner, before the Laws of Parliament received, &c. Middleton added moreover and confeſſed, that he believed in his own God, ſaying, My living God, and no dead God, &c. Thacker only relented, and was content to take Penance. Thus the aforeſaid four upon theſe Anſwers were condemned by the Biſhop of Dover, the 25 day of June, An. 1555.

Thacker recanted.

The burning of four Martyrs.

The Martyrdom of John Bland, Joh. Frankeſh, Miniſters: Alſo of Nicholas Sheterden and Humfrey Middleton, burned at two ſeveral Stakes in Canterbury, Anno 1555. July 12.

And ſo being given to the Secular Power, they were burned at Canterbury the 12 of July, at two ſeveral Stakes, but all in one Fire together, where they in the ſight of God and of his Angels, and before Men, like true Souldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, gave a conſtant teſtimony to the truth of his holy Goſpel.

The Prayer of Nicholas Sheterden before his death.

A Chriſtian Prayer of Nicholas Sheterden before his death.

O Lord my God and Saviour, which art Lord in Heaven and Earth, maker of all things viſible and inviſible, I am the Creature and work of thy hands; Lord God look upon me, and other thy People, which at this time are oppreſſed of the worldly minded for thy Laws ſake: yea Lord, thy Law it ſelf is now trodden under foot, and mens inventions exalted above it, and for that cauſe do I, and many thy Creatures, refuſe the glory, praiſe and commodity of this life, and do chuſe to ſuffer adverſity, and to be baniſhed; yea to be burnt with the Books of thy Word, for the hopes ſake that is laid up in ſtore. For Lord thou knoweſt, if we would but ſeem to pleaſe men in things contrary to thy Word, we might by their permiſſion enjoy theſe commodities that others do, as Wife, Children, Goods and Friends, which all I knowledge to be thy gifts, given to the end I ſhould ſerve thee. And now Lord, that the World will not ſuffer me to enjoy them, except I offend thy Laws, behold I give unto thee my whole Spirit, Soul and Body, and lo, I leave here all the pleaſures of this life, and do now leave the uſe of them for the hopes ſake of eternal life purchaſed in Chriſts Blood, and promiſed to all them that fight on his ſide, and are content to ſuffer with him for his Truth, whenſoever the World and the Devil ſhall perſecute the ſame.

Sacrifice of obedience to God.

Sacrifice of thanks for redemption.

O Father, I do not preſume unto thee, in mine own righteouſneſs, no, but only in the merits of thy dear Son my Saviour. For the which excellent gift of ſalvation I cannot worthily praiſe thee, neither is my ſacrifice worthy, or to be accepted with thee, in compariſon of our Bodies mortified, and obedient unto thy will: and now Lord, whatſoever rebellion hath been, or is found in my Members, againſt thy will, yet do I here give unto thee my Body to the death, rather than I will uſe any ſtrange worſhipping, which I beſeech thee accept at my hand for a pure ſacrifice: let this torment be to me the laſt enemy deſtroyed, even Death, the end of miſery, and the beginning of all joy, peace and ſolace; and when the time of Reſurrection cometh, then let me enjoy again theſe members then glorified, which now be ſpoiled and conſumed by the fire. O Lord Jeſus receive my Spirit into thy hands. Amen.

Sacrifice of the Body.

Letters of Nicholas Sheterden; and firſt a Letter to his Mother.

A Letter of Nicholas Sheterden to his Mother.

After my humble and bounden duty remembred, well-beloved Mother, this ſhall be to wiſh you increaſe of grace and godly wiſdom, that ye may ſee and perceive the crafty bewitching of Satan our mortal Enemy, which, as I have divers times declared unto you, doth not openly ſhew himſelf in his own likeneſs, but under colour of devotion deceiveth them that keep not a diligent eye upon him; but having confidence in mens traditions and cuſtoms of the World, leaving the Commandments of God, and Teſtament of his Son Chriſt Jeſus our Lord, do grow more into ſuperſtition and hypocriſie, than into wiſdom and true holineſs. For this is moſt true, that Satan, the enemy of Souls, doth by his Miniſters make many believe, that thoſe things, which they compel us unto for their Bellies ſake, have many godly ſignifications, although they be moſt contrary to Gods will, as doubtleſs they be, even as did the Serpent in Paradiſe to our firſt Mother Eve. What (ſaid he) hath God commanded ye ſhall not eat of all the Trees in the Garden? The Woman ſaid, of the fruits of the Trees in the Garden we may eat: but of the Tree in the midſt of the Garden, ſaid God, ſee ye eat not leſt ye die. Even ſo our Miniſters now-

Satan tranſformeth himſelf in to an Angel of light.

As the Serpent ſeduced Eve by an Apple, ſo Prieſts ſeduce the People by Images.

now-adays, ſay, Hath God commanded ye ſhall not make you any Image or likeneſs of any thing? Yea forſooth. Tuſh, ſay they, what harm can they do? May we not remember God the better when we ſee his Image or Picture? For they are good Books for the Lay-men; but indeed they be better for the Prieſts, becauſe they receive the offerings.

Images more profitable Books for Prieſts than for Lay-men.

And look how truly the promiſe of the Serpent was kept with Eve, ſo is the perſwaſion of our Prieſts found true to us. For as Adam and Eve did become like God in knowing good and evil, ſo are we in remembring God by his Image. For Adams eyes were ſo open, that he loſt both innocency and righteouſneſs, and was become moſt miſerable of all Creatures: and even ſo we remember Chriſt ſo well by Images, that we forget his Commandments, and count his Teſtament, confirmed in his Blood, for ſtark madneſs or hereſie; ſo miſerably have we remembred him, that of all People we are moſt blind: and this doth follow upon our preſumption, when we remember God by breaking of his Law: and therefore ſurely except we repent, ſhortly God will remember us in his wrath, and reward us with his plagues, as ſure as there is a God it will come to paſs.

Sheterden propheſieth of Gods Plagues.

But I know the craftineſs of them herein (I thank God) which will ſay; Where went he to School? Is he wiſer than our great Doctors that ſtudied all their life? And lo, they ſay that it is good Hay; although we ſmell it muſty our ſelves, yet muſt we believe it is ſweet, and then pay them well for their ſo ſaying, and all is ſafe. But I might ſay again, What Sir, be ye wiſer than Chriſt, and God his Father, or the Holy Ghoſt? What, wiſer than the Prophets, and the holy Apoſtles, and all the holy Martyrs? I pray you Sir, where had you your high Learning? Is it higher than God (being in Heaven) is able to reach, or have ye ſet it lower in Hell than ever Chriſt durſt to venture? For it is ſome ſtrange Learning belike, that Chriſt and his Apoſtles could never attain to the knowledge of it. But vain men are never without ſome ſhift: for peradventure they will not be aſhamed to ſay, that Chriſt coming on his Fathers meſſage, did forget half his Errand by the way. For I dare ſay, the greater half of their Ceremonies were never commanded by Chriſt: Yea, I doubt it would be hard to find one in the Church perfectly as he left it: ſo Romiſhly hath Antichriſt turned the Church upſide-down for lucres ſake.

Learning againſt or without Gods Word is vain, and to no purpoſe.

Antichriſt hath turned the Church clean upſide down.

Beloved Mother, as I have aſtentimes ſaid unto you, even ſo now I beſeech you from my very heart-root in Chriſt, to conſider your own Souls health is offered you, do not caſt it of: we have not long time here. Why ſhould we deceive our ſelves either for eaſe of our fleſh, or for the winning of this worlds Treaſure: I know that ſome will ſay to you, Why ſhould we condemn our Fathers that lived thus: God forbid that we ſhould condemn any that did according to their knowledge. But let us take heed that they condemn not us for if they had heard the Word as we have, and had been warned as we have, it is to be thought that they would more thankfuly have received it than we do: yea, they were more faithful in that they knew, than many now are. Therefore they ſhall be our condemnation, if we do not imbrace this grace offered us. And ſurely look how many of them God will accept and ſave, thoſe ſhall we never ſee, nor have any part among them: for our diſobedience is more great than their ignorance. Wherefore if we will meet our Fathers in bliſs and joy, let us not refuſe his mercy offered more largely to us than to them, even according to Chriſts promiſe, which ſaid, after ſuch great ignorance as to ſeek him from Country to Country, and find him not; Yet ſhall the Goſpel (ſaith he) be preached in all the world, and then ſhall the end come.

The Fathers that heard no better are not to be condemned, but rather will condemn us that hear and receive it not.

And now let us know the time of our viſitation, and not turn back again, ſeeing we are once delivered: for ſurely God will not bear it at our hands to turn backward. O remember Lots Wife. God muſt needs puniſh out of hand our ſhameful backſliding, either with induration and hardneſs of heart, ſo that they ſhall perſecute his Church and his true Servants, or elſe reward it with open vengeance and plagues. And therefore, good Mother, accept this my ſimple Letter as a fruit of my love and obedience to you. Would God we might be ſo knit in Faith and truſt in Gods Word and Promiſes here in this life, as we might together enjoy the bliſs and conſolation of eternal Life; which I deſire and ſeek above all worldly treaſure, as ye partly know. If I would ſeek the good will of Men contrary to my Conſcience, I could make ſome my Friends which now peradventure are jealous over me amiſs. But I thank God, let them weigh the matter between God and their Conſciences, and they have no juſt cauſe ſo to do: Nevertheleſs I would they would yet refram and put their matter and mine into the ballance of Gods moſt holy Word, there to be weighed by the mind of the holy Ghoſt, expreſſed unto us by the holy Patriarks, and Prophets, and by Jeſus Chriſt our only Saviour and Mediator, amd by his holy Apoſtles; and then I doubt not, but our matter ſhall be ended with peace, and joyfulneſs of heart; which God grant us for his mercy ſake. Amen.

Gods viſitation not to be refuſed.

Your own Child, Nicholas Sheterden, Priſoner for the Truth in Weſtgate, 1555.

Anno 1555.

Experience how Gods Martyrs ſeek not the World.

A Letter to his Brother, Walter Sheterden.

I Wiſh you health in Chriſt, true knowledge of his Word, and a faithful obedient heart unto the ſame. It is ſhewed me, my Brother, that ye willed me by a Letter made to a Friend of yours to perſwade with me, that I ſhould be ruled by mine Uncle, which ſaith, he will beſtow his goods very largely upon me, if I ſhould not ſtand too high in mine own conceit. But, my good Brother, I truſt ye do not judge ſo evil of me, that I ſhould have a Faith to ſell for money. For though he or you were able to give me the treaſure of the whole Country, yet I thank my Lord God, I do judge it but an heap of dung, in reſpect of the treaſure hid within; yet I do eſteem a Buckle of your ſhoo, if it come with good will. And for to be counſeld and ruled by him or you, or any other my Friends, I do not, neither have refuſed it, if they require no more of me than my power, and that which belongeth to mortal men. But if they require of me any thing which pertaineth to God duly, there is neither high nor low, Friend nor Foe, I truſt in God, ſhall get it of me, nor yet the Angels in heaven.

My Uncle hath been with me, and made great Promiſes and great threats alſo.

For though I be not learned (as the vain men of the world call Learning) yet, I thank my Lord God, I have learned out of Gods Book, to know God from his Creatures, and to know Chriſt from his Sacraments, and to put a difference between the merits of Chriſts Paſſion and his Supper, and a difference between the Water of Baptiſm, and the Holy Ghoſt, and not to mix and mingle all things confuſedly together: ſo that if one ask me a queſtion or a reaſon of my Faith, I muſt ſay thus; I believe as the holy Church beleiveth: if he ask me what is the order of that Faith, I ſhould be ſo ignorant that I could not diſcern God from his Creatures, nor Chriſt from his Sacraments; If I ſhould ſo monſtrouſly utter my Faith, that I were not able to judge between Chriſts birth and his burial, nor which were firſt, of his mortification, and his glorification, who would believe that my Faith were ſound?

No order nor reaſon in the Popes Doctrine.

For ſome affirm that Chriſt did not give to his Apoſtles a mortal and a paſſible Body, but an immortal and glorified Body, ſo that he ſhould have a glorified Body before his Death, and ſo his Glorification was before his Reſurrection; and that he was riſen before he was crucified, and crucified before his Baptiſm, and then they may as well ſay, he was baptiſed before his birth, and born before he was conceived, and conceived before he was promiſed, and that were even right Antichriſt to turn all things backward, and then ſay, Oh, ye muſt believe, for God is Almighty, he can do all things, &c. Truth it is, that God is almighty indeed, and yet I may not belive things contrary to his Word, that Chriſts Body was glorified before he died: for Gods Omnipotency doth not ſtand in things contrary to his will, but in performing his will at his pleaſure in time, Neither doth he require of us to judge or believe of his Almighty power, that he hath made the end of the world to come before the beginning, or yet the fruit to come before the bloſſom, and yet is he nevertheleſs Almighty.

So ſhould we have two Bodies at once, one glorified, and another mortal.

We are bound to believe what God hath expreſly willed, not what he is able to do.

But if peradventure you ſhall think with your ſelf, Why, they are Learned; it were marvel but they ſhould know what is the truth, as well as other which never kept any ſuch Study, &c. To that I anſwer, that if thy had ſtudied

Gods

Anno 1555.

Gods word, the Author of Truth, as they have done Logick, and Duns, with the Legend of Lies, they ſhould have been as expert in the Truth, as they be now in bald Reaſons. But thus hath God fulfilled his promiſe, that ſuch ſhould be deluded with Lies, which would not believe nor walk in his Truth.

He ſpeaketh not againſt the true uſe of Logick.

And again; this is a good cauſe to make us think ſurely, that this was the cauſe that God gave them over at the firſt to error, after the Apoſtles time by little and little, as they grew in ſin. For ſeeing we had his Truth now among us a few years, becauſe we did not obey unto it, we ſee what a ſudden change God hath brought upon us for our ſins ſake. And why ſhould not we think that this and ſuch like diſobedience was the cauſe that God took his word from all Chriſtendom at the firſt, and caſt a darkneſs upon them that would not walk in his light? For it is evident enough to ſee how unlike their doings be to Chriſts and his Apoſtles: and that ſeen, either we muſt judge Chriſts doings very ſlender, and theirs good, or elſe that indeed they be the very Antichriſts, which ſhould come and turn all things out of frame. Thus I have been bold to trouble you, which I truſt ſhall not be altogether in vain. Pray for me as I do for you.

Why God taketh his Word from Realms.

Another Letter to his Brother

Another Letter of Nicholas Sheterden to his Brother.

GOd, which is the giver of all goodneſs, and that freely for his love to us (not only without our deſerts, but contrary to the ſame) grant you my Brother, ſuch increaſe of godly knowledg and love unto the vertues thereunto belonging, as may give you ſuch a taſt in heavenly things, that all treaſures of earthly things may ſavour to you, as indeed they are, moſt vain and uncertain, ſo ſhall ye never take them for better than they be. Yea, whether God take them from us, or give them unto us, we ſhall know our ſelves neither richer nor poorer before God. But if we lay up in our hearts the treaſure of his Word, we ſhall not only enrich our ſelves againſt the time of need, but alſo arm our ſelves againſt the battle with weapons and harneſs, which is invincible, and cloath our ſelves againſt the marriage. For behold, the Lord hath called us of long time to the feaſt, and blown the Trumpet to prepare the battle. Let us know the time of our viſitation, leſt the Lord ſitting on his mount, bewail our deſtruction, which he deſireth not, but becauſe he is juſt to puniſh ſuch as continue in ſin, even as he is merciful to forgive the repentant that turn in time; for ſo is God that cannot deny himſelf.

Time of Gods viſitation to be received.

Let us therefore in this day, while it is called to day, hear his voyce, and not harden our hearts by reſiſtance of his will, leſt he ſwear in his wrath, that, we ſhall not enter into his reſt. Let us count it ſufficient, that we have ſpent the time paſt (as S. Peter ſaith) after the will of the Gentiles, in eating and drinking, chambering and wantonneſs, and in abominable Idolatry, &c. And now let us aſſay a new life, and trade our members in vertue another while, leſt peradventure we might run paſt any return in the contrary. But if we now return and lay hand of his word in deed and verity, as we have long time done in talk and liberty, then will God heap upon us ſuch certificate of Conſcience, as ſhall kindle our conſolation in him, ſo that all treaſure ſhall be dung to the excellent knowledge of our Saviour. Dear Brother, my hearts deſire and and Prayer to God is, that we may together enjoy the bliſs of eternal inheritance by one ſpiriritual regeneration and new birth, as we are joyned by nature. But alack the way and mean thereunto hath been much neglected of me (I will not ſay of you) for I had rather ye ſhould accuſe your ſelf: for no doubt the beſt of us both hath not ſought for wiſdom in Gods Word, as ſome in the world whom we know have ſought for mony: therefore they ſhall be our Judges, if we do not learn by them: yea the very Emmet, as Solomon ſaith, doth teach us to provide for the time to come; for ſhe provideth in Summer againſt Winter.

Certificate of Conſcience.

3 Eſd. 4.

This is the beſt token I have for you now, which though it be ſimple, yet ſhall it declare partly my hearts deſire to you ward, which is even as to mine own Soul. Let nothing diſmay you for my cauſe: but be ye ſure I ſhall have victory in the Truth, which Truth is ſtronger than Kings, Wine, or Women. For as Zorobabel ſaith; Wine is unrighteous, the King is unrighteous, Women are unrighteous, yea all the Children of men are unrighteous, but the Truth endureth, and is always ſtrong, and conquereth for ever without end: Therefore this is to deſire you and all other my Friends that wiſh me good, to pray that God will always keep me in his Truth, as he hath begun, which prayer, if it be of ſuch a mind as laboureth to depart from evil, ſhall be to me the greateſt pleaſure under Heaven. For I deſire nothing in compariſon of Gods Truth, I thank him of his mercy, which ſo hath wrought: for I take it as a ſure ſeal of the endleſs Joy which ſhall hereafter follow; which God bring us unto, when his will and pleaſure is, Amen. To his Mother another Letter written the day before his death.

OMy good Mother, whom I love with reverence in the Lord, and according to my duty, I deſire your favorable bleſſing and forgiveneſs of all my miſdeeds towards you. Oh my good Mother, in few words, I wiſh you the ſame ſalvation, which I hope my ſelf to feel, and partly taſt of before this come to you to read; and in the reſurrection, I verily believe to have it more perfectly in Body and ſoul joyned together for ever: and in that day God grant you to ſee my face with joy: but, dear Mother, then beware of that great Idolatry, and blaſphemous Maſs. Oh let not that be your God, which mice and worms can devour. Behold I call Heaven and Earth to record, that it is no God, yea the fire that conſumeth it, and the moiſtneſs that cauſeth it to mould, and I take Chriſts Teſtament to witneſs, that it is none of his ordinances, but a meer invention of men, and a ſnare to catch innocents Blood; and now that God hath ſhewed it unto you, be warned in time. Oh give over old cuſtoms, and become new in the Truth. What ſtate ſoever your Father be in, leave that to God; and let us follow the councel of his Word. Dear Mother, imbrace it with hearty affection, read it with obedience, let it be your paſtime; but yet caſt of all carnal affections, and Love of worldly things: ſo ſhall we meet in Joy at the laſt day, or elſe I bid you farewel for ever more: O farewel my Friends and lovers all, God grant me to ſee your faces in Joy. Amen.

Teſtimony and warning againſt the Idol of the Altar.

I Wrote unto you as one that longed more to hear of your health, than of all worldly treaſure, willing you to intreat Eſau the elder Brother by nature gently, giving to him his own, yea, and offer him one of the droves, and ſay they be Jacobs, and are ſent for a preſent to my Lord Eſau, *but he will not take it, &c. Now my Beloved ye know the bleſſing of our Father is, that the elder ſhall ſerve the younger, and wiſdom our Mother hath taught us the ſame, and I know ye do complain of your * ſervant the fleſh, that he is rebellious, diſobedient, and untoward; unruly and crookedly ye think he doth his ſervice: but yet behold, how ſhall ye plead your cauſe before an indifferent Judge? For if it be true that his ſervice be not according to his duty, as it is many times found in Servants; yet, I ſay, can you ſhew your cauſe to no indifferent Judge, but he ſhall object againſt you that he is not kept like a ſervant, but he lacketh both meat and drink, and other neceſſaries meet and due for a ſervant: ſo ſhall ye take more ſhame of your own complaint, than remedy or vantage againſt your ſervant, and it ſhall be a cloak for him to hide all his rebellion and untoward ſervice, becauſe ye have miſuſed him.*

* By this Servant belike he meant her own body, which ſhe pinched too much with penury or faſting more than needed.

And therefore my ſentence is, that ye patiently bear with him in ſmall faults, and amend your own great faults, as Oppreſſion, Cruelty, and Coveteouſneſs, requiring more than a Servant can do, ſpecially being tyred with labour, famined with hunger, and lamed with ſtripes. And theſe things amended, if he do his ſervice negligently

Though he be but a ſtranger in the life that is in God; yet be good to ſtrangers for we are all ſtrangers in darkneſs, and Captives in ſin, as well ſoul and ſpirit, being in Egypt, as now the fleſh is yet unbaptized with the terrible Red Sea of death, and remember that one law abideth for the ſtranger, I mean one reward abideth both for Body and ſoul in the land of everlaſting reſt. And (†) therefore intreat him gently, and deal with him juſtly now: for the time will come that the yoke of Bondage ſhall be taken from his neck, and he ſhall be a fellow heir with your younger Brother.*

† The Body of man is redeemed as well as the Soul.

Circumciſe him therefore, but do not miſuſe him, nor keep him from his own, but deal mercifully with the ſtranger, that he may ſay, Oh of what underſtanding heart is this people: Who hath God? Or where is God ſo nigh as to theſe? God make you wiſe and politick in heart, victorious in the field of this world, to rule the Nations with a rod: but kill not the Gibeonites, with whom peace is taken; but let them draw Water, and hew wood, but give them their meat and drink due for Labourers, and be glad becauſe your diſeaſe is ſo remedied: for it is better and eaſier for a thirſty labouring man to drink, then for a drunken man to tell a ſober tale. Yea, it is a token that ye have earneſtly followed your labour, and not kept company with drunkards and belly-gods: and therefore be glad I ſay, yea, and glad again; for great is your reward in heaven; yea bleſſed ſhall they be, that in this your zeal ſhall meet you, and withdraw your hand from revenging your ſelf upon that churliſh Nabal: which thing I hope to doe now with theſe ſweet Raiſons, and frails of Figs, I being of one houſe with your ſervant Nabal, *I dare ſay to you that churliſhneſs is his name: but revenge not, for the Lord ſhall do it in his due time. The next day after the condemnation of theſe foreſaid, which was the 26. day of July, were alſo condemned for the ſame Articles, W. Coker, W. Hopper of Cambrook, Henry Laurence, Richard Wright of Aſhford, W. Stere of Aſhford. But becauſe the execution of theſe Martyrs pertaineth not to this month, more ſhall be ſaid, the Lord willing, of them, when we come to the month following of Auguſt.

Nicholas Hall, and Chriſtopher Waid, Martyrs.

July 19. Nich. Hall and Chriſtopher Waid, Martyrs.

THe ſame month of July next after the ſuffering of the Kentiſhmen above named followed the death and Martyrdom of Nicholas Hall Bricklayer. and Chriſtopher Waid of Dartford, which both were condemned by Maurice, Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the laſt day of the month of June. The ſix Articles miniſtred to them were of the ſame ordinary courſe and effect with the Articles of the other Martyrs before ſpecified, the brief ſum whereof were theſe.

* A breif ſum of their Articles.

Articles objected againſt Nich. Hall and Chriſtopher Waid.

1. FIrſt, that they were Chriſtian men and profeſſed the Catholick determinations of our Mother holy Church.

2. That they which maintain or hold otherwiſe then our holy Mother the Catholick Church doth, are Hereticks.

3. That they hold and maintain, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, is not the very Body and Blood of Chriſt. And that the ſaid very Body of Chriſt is verily in heaven only, and not in the Sacrament.

4. Item, that they have and do hold and maintain, that the Maſs, as it is now uſed in the Catholick Church, is naught and abominable.

5. Item, that they have been and be amongſt the people of that Juriſdiction vehemently ſuſpected upon the premiſſes, and thereupon Indicted, &c.

Their Anſwers.

Their Anſwers.

TO theſe Articles they anſwered, as commonly others uſed to do, which ſtand with Chriſt and his truth againſt theſe pretended Catholicks, and their ſiniſter Doctrine. Firſt granting themſelves Chriſtian men, and acknowledging the determinations of the holy Church, that is, of the Congregation or Body of Chriſt; Save that Hall denied to call the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church his Mother, becauſe he found not this word, Mother, in the Scripture.

This word Mother Church is not found in the Scripture.

To the ſecond they granted. To the third Article as touching the very Body and Blood of Chriſt to be under the forms of Bread and Wine in ſubſtance they would not grant, only affirming the very Body of him to be in Heaven, and the Sacrament to be a token or remembrance of Chriſts death; Nicholas Hall adding moreover, and ſaying, That whereas before he held the Sacrament to be but only a token or remembrance of Chriſts death, now he ſaid, that there is neither token nor remembrance, becauſe it is now miſuſed and clean turned from Chriſts inſtitution, &c. And concerning the Maſs in the fourth Article, to be abominable, Chriſtopher Waid with the other anſwered, that as they had confeſſed before, ſo would they now not go from that they had ſaid. To the fifth Article, for the peoples ſuſpicion they made no great accompt nor ſticking to grant to the ſame.

Anſwer of Nich. Hall.

Anſwer of Chr. Waid.

And thus much concerning the Articles and Anſwers of theſe good men. Which being received, immediately ſentence of Condemnation was pronounced by the ſaid Maurice the Biſhop againſt them, the copy of which ſentence as it runneth much what after the common courſe in condemning all other like Servants of Chriſt, ſo the ſame being exemplified before in the ſtory of Maſter Rogers, ſhall not greatly need here again to be repeated, but rather may be referred over to the place above noted. Nicholas Hall was burned at Rocheſter about the 19. day of July.

Condemnation of Nich. Hall and Chriſtopher Waid, Martyrs.

Furthermore, with the foreſad Hall and Waid, in the ſame month of July, three other more were condemned by Maurice, Biſhop aforenamed, whoſe names were Joan Beach Widow, John Harpol of Rocheſter, and Margery Polley. Of which Margery Polley, touching her examination and condemnation here followeth in ſtory.

Ex Regiſtro.

The Condemnation and Martyrdom of Margery Polley.

Ex Regiſtro Margery Polley, Widow and Martyr.

MArgery Polley widow, Wife ſome time of Richard Polley of Pepingbery, was accuſed and brought before the ſaid Maurice, Biſhop of Rocheſter, about the beginning of the month of June. Which Biſhop according to the Pontifical ſolemnity of that Church, riſing up out of the Chair of his Majeſty, in the high ſwelling ſtile after his ordinary faſhion to daſh the ſilly pror Woman, beginning in theſe words.

We Maurice, by the ſufferance of God, Biſhop of Rocheſter, proceeding of our meer office in a cauſe of Hereſie, againſt thee Margery Polley, of the pariſh of Pepingbery, of our Dioceſs and Juriſdiction of Rocheſter, do lay and object againſt thee all and ſingular theſe Articles enſuing. To the which, and to every parcel of them, we require of thee a true, full, and plain anſwer, by vertue of thine Oath thereupon to be given, &c.

Thus the Oath firſt being miniſtred, and the Articles commenced againſt her, which Articles were the ſame that were miniſtred to Nicholas Hall and Waid before, ſhe ſo framed her Anſwers again, eſpecially anſwering to the third and fourth Article, that ſhe neither allowed the Deity of their Sacrament, nor the abſurdity of their Maſs. For the which, Sentence was read againſt her about the begin-begining of June, and ſhe condemned for the ſame. But becauſe her death followed not upon the ſame, we will therefore deferr the tractation thereof to the due place and time, firſt ſetting down in order of hiſtory the execution of Chriſtopher Wade above mentioned.

The Execution and Martyrdom of Chriſtopher Waid.

Chriſtopher Waid of Darford, in the County of Kent, Linnen-Weaver, was condemned by Maurice, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and appointed to be burned at Darford aforeſaid. At the day appointed for his execution, which was in the month of July, there was betimes in the morning carried out of the Town, in a Cart, a Stake, and therewith many bundles of reeds, to a place a quarter of a mile out of the Town, called the Brimth, into a gravel pit thereby, the common place of the execution of Felons. Thither alſo was brought a load of Broom-faggots, with other Faggots and Tall-wood. Unto which place reſorted the people of the Country in great number, and there tarried his coming. Inſomuch as thither came divers Fruiterers with horſ-loads of Cherries, and ſold them. About ten of the Clock cometh riding the Sheriff, with a great many of other Gentlemen, and Retinue, appointed to aſſiſt him therein, and with them Waid, riding pinioned by him one Margery Polley of Tunbridge, both ſinging of a Pſalm; which Margery, as ſoon as ſhe eſpied afar off the multitude gathered about the place where he ſhould ſuffer, waiting his coming, ſhe ſaid unto him very loud and cheerfully; You may rejoyce Waid to ſee ſuch a company gathered to celebrate your marriage this day.

And ſo paſſing by the place, which joyned hard to the high-way, they were carried ſtraight down to the town, where ſhe was kept until the Sheriff returned from Waids execution. And Waid being made ready, and ſtripped out of his clothes in an Inn, had brought unto him a fair long white ſhirt from his wife, which being put on, and he pinoned, was led up on foot again to the foreſaid place. And coming ſtraight to the ſtake, he took it in his arms, embracing it, and kiſſed it, ſetting his back unto it, and ſtanding in a Pitchbarrel, wich was taken from the Beacon, being hard by; then a Smith brought a hoop of Iron, and with two ſtaples, made him faſt to the ſtake under his arms.

As ſoon as he was thus ſetled, he ſpake, with his hands and eyes lifted up to Heaven, with a cheerful and loud voyce, the laſt verſe of the lxxxvi. Pſalm; Shew ſome good token upon me, O Lord, that they which hate me, may ſee it, and be aſhamed; becauſe thou Lord haſt helped me, and comforted me. Near unto the ſtake was a little hill, upon the top whereof were pitched up four ſtayes, quadrangle wiſe, with a covering round about like a Pulpit: into the which place, as Waid was thus praying at the ſtake, entered a Frier with a Book in his hand; whom when Waid eſpied, he cried earneſtly unto the people, to take heed of the doctrine of the whore of Babylon, exhorting them to embrace the Doctrine of the Goſpel preached in King Edwards days. whom the Sheriff thus ſpeaking to the people, often interrupted, ſaying, Be quiet Waid, and die patiently. I am (ſaid he) I thank God, quiet, Maſter Sheriff, and ſo truſt to die. All this while the Frier ſtood ſtill looking over the Coverlet, as though he would have uttered ſomewhat: but Waid very mightily admoniſhed the people to beware of that Doctrine; which when the Frier perceived, whether he were amazed, or could have no audience of the people, withdrew himſelf out of the place immediatly, without ſpeaking any word, and went away down to the Town. Then the Reeds being ſet about him, he pulled them, and imbraced them in his arms, always with his hands making a hole againſt his face, that his voyce might be heard, which they perceiving that were his Tormentors, alway caſt faggots at the ſame hole, which, notwithſtanding, he ſtill, as he could, put off, his face being hurt with the end of a Faggot caſt thereat. Then fire being put unto him, he cried unto God often, Lord Jeſus receive my ſoul; without any token or ſign of impatiency in the fire, till at length, after the fire was once thorowly kindled, he was heard by no man to ſpeak, ſtill holding his hands up over his head together towards heaven, even when he was dead and altogether roſted, as though they had bin ſtaied up with a prop ſtanding under them.

This ſign did God ſhew upon him, whereby his very Enemies might perceive, that God had according to his prayer ſhewed ſuch a token upon him, even to their ſhame and confuſion. And this was the order of this godly Martyrs execution, this was his end. Whereby God ſeemed to confound and ſtrike with the ſpirit of dumbneſs the Frier that Locuſt which was riſen up to have ſpoken againſt him; and alſo no leſs wonderfully ſuſtaining thoſe hands which he lifted up to him for comfort in his torment.

The apprehenſion, examination, condemnation, and burning of Dirick Carver and John Launder, who ſuffered Martyrdom for the teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

THe 22. day of this month of July, was burned at Lewes, within the County of Suſſex, one Dirick Carver, late of the pariſh of Brighthamſted in the ſame County. And the next day (being the 23 day of the ſame month) was alſo burned at Stening, another named John Launder, late of Godſtone in the County of Surry. Which two men were (with others) about the end of the month of October, Anno 1554. apprehended by Edward Gage, Gentleman, as they were at prayer within the dwelling-houſe of the ſaid Dirick; and by him were ſent up unto the Queens Councel. Who, after examination, ſent them as priſoners to Newgate, there to attend the leiſure of Boner Biſhop of London. From whence (upon the Biſhops receipt of a Letter from the Lord Marqueſs of Wincheſter now Lord Treaſurer) they were brought by the Keeper of the Priſon the 8. of June next after, into the Biſhops Chamber at his houſe in London; and there (being examined upon divers points of Religion) they made their ſeveral confeſſions, ſubſcribing and ſigning them with their own hands. Which being read, the Biſhop objected unto them certain other Articles, cauſing them to ſwear truly and directly to anſwer thereunto; which Articles they confeſſed to be true, referring themſelves chiefly to their former Confeſſions.

July 22. and 23. Dirick Carver, and John Launder, Martyrs. Edw. Gage, Gentleman, Perſecutor.

Carver and Launder appearing before Biſhop Boner.

This done, after long perſwaſions and fair exhortations, they were demanded whether they would ſtand to their Anſwers. To whom Launder ſaid, I will never go from theſe Anſwers ſo long as I live. The other alſo confirmed the ſame, and therefore they were commanded to appear again before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, the tenth day of the ſame month next following. Which Articles and Confeſſion, with the aforementioned Letter do here enſue.

A Letter from the Marqueſs of Wincheſter, Lord Treaſurer, unto Boner Biſhop of London, touching the examination of the ſaid Priſoners.

Dirick Carver his Confeſſion.

DIrick Carver Beer-Brewer of Brighthamſted, in the County of Suſſex, where he hath dwelled by the ſpace of 8 or 9 years, born in the Village of Dilſon by Stockom in the Land of Luke, 40 years of Age, or thereabout, and now Priſoner in Newgate, where he hath remained and continued at the Councils commandment, ſince Alhalown day laſt paſt, being examined concerning his faith and belief in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaith, that he hath, and doth believe, that the very ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of Chriſt is not in the ſaid Sacrament, and that there is no other ſubſtance remaining in the ſaid Sacrament after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, but only the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine.

The materiall ſubſtance of the Sacrament denied to be the Body of Chriſt really.

Item, Being examined concerning the Maſs in Latin now uſed in the Church of England, he believeth that there is no Sacrifice in the ſaid Maſs, and that there is in it no ſalvation for a Chriſtian man, except it ſhould be ſaid in the Mother Tongue, that he might underſtand it; and concerning the Ceremonies of the Church, he ſaith and believeth, that they be not profitable to a Chriſtian man.

The uſe and ſacrifice of the Latine Maſs denied.

Auricular Confeſſion and Abſolution of the Prieſt rejected.

Item, Being examined concerning auricular Confeſſion, he anſwereth, That he hath and doth believe, that it is neceſſary to go to a good Prieſt for good counſel; but the abſolution of the Prieſt, laying his hand upon any mans head, as is now uſed, is nothing profitable to a Chriſtian mans ſalvation. And further he ſaith, that he hath not been confeſſed, nor received the Sacrament of the Altar, ſince the Coronation of the Queen that now is.

The Faith of the Church of England in Q. Maries time reproved.

Item, Concerning the Faith and Religion now taught, ſet forth and believed in the Church of England, he anſwereth and believeth, that the Faith and Doctrine now taught, ſet forth, and uſed in the ſaid Church of England, is not agreeable to Gods Word. And furthermore he ſaith, that Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their Opinion, which were of late burned, were good Chriſtian men, and did preach the true Doctrine of Chriſt, as he believeth; and ſaith that they did ſhed their Blood in the ſame Doctrine, which was by the power of God, as he ſaith and believeth.

And further being examined, he ſaith, That ſince the Queens Coronation, he hath had the Bible and Pſalter in Engliſh, read in his houſe at Brighthamſted divers times, and likewiſe ſince his coming into Newgate: but the Keeper hearing thereof, did take them away; and ſaith alſo, that about a Twelve-month now paſt, he had the Engliſh Proceſſion ſaid in his Houſe, with other Engliſh Prayers. And further ſaith, that Thomas Iveſon, John Launder, and William Veſie being Priſoners with him in Newgate, were taken with this Examinate in his Houſe at Brighthamſted, as they were hearing of the Goſpel, then read in Engliſh, a little before Alhalown day laſt paſt, and brought into the Court: and being examined thereupon by the Council, were committed by them to Priſon in Newgate.

The Confeſſion of John Launder, before Boner Biſhop of London.

John Launder his Confeſſion.

JOhn Launder Husbandman of the Pariſh of Godſtone, in the County of Surrey, of the Age of 25 years, born at Godſtone aforeſaid, being examined, doth confeſs and ſay, that about two days next before Alhalowntide laſt paſt, this Examinate and one Dirick Carver, Thomas Iveſon, William Veſie, with divers other Perſons to the number of twelve, (being altogether in their Prayers, ſaying the Service in Engliſh, ſet forth in the time of King Edward the Sixth, in the Houſe of the ſaid Dirick, ſcituate at Brighthamſted in Suſſex) were apprehended by one M. Edw. Gage, and by him ſent up hither to London, to the King and Queens Council, and by them (upon his examination) committed to Newgate, where he with his ſaid other Fellows, hath ever ſince remained in Priſon. Anno 1555.

The cauſe of the apprehenſion of John Launder.

And further being examined, he doth confeſs and ſay, that the occaſion of his coming to the ſaid Brighthamſted was upon certain buſineſs there to be ſped for his Father: and ſo being there, and hearing that the ſaid Dirick was a man that did much favour the Goſpel, this Examinate did reſort to his houſe and company, whom before that time he did never ſee or know, and by reaſon of that his reſort, he was apprehended as before: And further doth confeſs and believe, that there is here in Earth one whole and Univerſal Catholick Church, whereof the Members be diſperſed through the World, and doth believe alſo, that the ſame Church doth ſet forth and teach only two Sacraments, Videlicet, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord. And whoſoever doth teach or uſe any more Sacraments; or yet any Ceremonies, he doth not believe that they be of the Catholick Church, but doth abhor them from the bottom of his heart: And doth further ſay and believe that all the Service, Sacrifices and Ceremonies, now uſed in this Realm of England (yea and in all other parts of the world, which hath been uſed after the ſame manner) be erroneous and naught and contrary to Chriſts inſtitution, and the determination of Chriſts Catholick Church whereof he believeth that he himſelf is a member.

Two Sacraments only.

Ceremonies abhorred.

The real preſence of Chriſts Body under the forms of Bread and Wine denied.

Alſo he doth confeſs and believe, that in the Sacrament now called the Sacrament of the Altar there is not really, and truly contained, under the forms of Bread and Wine, the very natural Body and Blood of Chriſt in ſubſtance: but his belief and faith therein is as followeth, videlicet, that when he doth receive the material Bread and Wine he doth receive the ſame in a remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſo receiving it, he doth eat and drink Chriſts Body and Blood by faith and none other ways as he believeth.

The Maſs abominable.

And moreover he doth confeſs, ſay, and believe, that the Maſs now uſed in the Realm of England, or elſewhere in all Chriſtendom, is naught and abominable, and directly againſt Gods Word, and his Catholick Church; and that there is nothing ſaid or uſed in it good and profitable. For he ſaith, that albeit the Gloria in excelſis, the Creed, Sanctus Paternoſter, Agnus, and other parts of the Maſs be of themſelves good and profitable, yet the ſame being uſed amongſt other things that be naught and ſuperfluous in the Maſs, the ſame good things do become naught alſo, as he believeth.

Auricular Confeſſion not neceſſary.

Alſo he doth believe and confeſs that auricular Confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made to any Prieſt, or to any other creature, but every perſon ought to acknowledge and Confeſs his ſins only to God; and alſo that no perſon hath any authority to abſolve any man from his ſins and alſo believeth that the right and true way (according to the Scripture) after a man hath ſain from grace to ſin, to ariſe to Chriſt again, is to be ſorry for his offences, and to do the ſame or the like no more; and not to make any auricular Confeſſion of them to the Prieſt, either to take abſolution for them at the Prieſts hands. All which his ſaid Opinions he hath believed by the ſpace of theſe ſeven or eight years paſt, and in that time hath divers and many times openly argued and defended the ſame, as he ſaith, &c.

Articles objected by Boner Biſhop of London againſt Dirick Carver and John Launder Articles laid to Dirick Carver and John Launder.

1. FIrſt, I do object againſt you, and every of you, that ye and every of you, being within the ſaid priſon of Newgate, and within this ſaid City of London are of my Juriſdiction (being Biſhop of London) and ſubject unto the ſame, offending and treſpaſſing within the ſaid priſon and City in matters of Religion, and concerning the Catholick faith and belief of the Church in any wiſe.

Sacraments of Penance, and the Altar.

2. Item, I do object againſt you, and every of you, that ye and every of you, ſince your firſt coming and entring into the ſaid priſon, and during your abode there, both there and in ſundry places within this City and Diocеſs of London, have holden, maintained, and defended ſundry opinions againſt the Sacraments of the Church, eſpecially eſpecially againſt the Sacrament of Penance, and alſo againſt the Sacrament of the Altar.

Anno 1555.

Real Preſence.

3. Item, I do likewiſe object that ye, and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have (as concerning the Sacrament of the Altar) holden, maintained and defended, to the beſt of your power, that in the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very ſubſtance of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Chriſt, but that in the Sacrament there is only the ſubſtance of natural Bread and Wine, and no other ſubſtance.

The Latine Maſs.

4. Item, I do likewiſe object that you, and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have, concerning the Maſs in Latin now uſed in the Church, and the ſacrifice of the ſame, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended, that the ſaid Maſs is not good or profitable, and that there is no ſacrifice in the ſame.

5. Item, I do likewiſe object, that you and every of you, in all or ſome of the places, have concerning the ceremonies of the Church, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended, that the ſaid ceremonies are not profitable to a Chriſtian man, but hurtful and evil.

Auricular confeſſion.

6. Item, I do likwiſe object, that you and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, have concerning the Sacrament of Penance, holden, maintained, and likewiſe defended, that auricular Confeſſion (being a part thereof) albeit it may be made unto a good Prieſt for councel, yet the abſolution of the Prieſt, laying his hand upon any mans head, and doing as is now uſually done in the Church, is nothing profitable to any mans ſalvation, and that therefore ye neither have been confeſſed to the Prieſt after the uſual manner of the Church, nor yet received the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar ſince the coronation of the Queens Majeſty, which is more then the ſpace of one whole year and a half.

The Faith and doctrine of the Church of England.

7. Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, in all or ſome of the ſaid places, concerning the Faith and Religion now taught, ſet forth, uſed and believed in the Church of this Realm of England, and the Doctrine of the ſame, have holden, believed and ſaid, that it is not agreeable to Gods Word, but clean contrary to the ſame.

Defending of Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, &c.

8. Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, in all, or ſome of the ſaid places, have believed, ſpoken, and ſaid, and to your power upholden maintained, and ſaid, that Biſhop Hooper, Cardmaker, Rogers, and others of their Opinion, which of late within this Realm were burnt for Hereſie, were good Chriſtian men, in ſpeaking and holding againſt the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar and that they did preach nothing but the true Doctrine of Chriſt, ſhedding their Blood for the maintenance of the ſaid Doctrine.

Engliſh Service defending the Religion uſed in King Edwards time.

9. Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you, have earneſtly laboured and travelled, to the beſt and uttermoſt of your power, to have up again the Engliſh Service, and the Communion in all points, as was uſed in the later days of K. Edward the Sixth, here in this Realm of England.

10. Item, I do likewiſe object, that ye and every of you have thought and do think firmly and ſtedfaſtly, and ſo have and do believe, that the Faith, Religion, and Doctrine, ſet forth in the ſaid time of the fore ſaid King Edward, was in all points good and godly, containing in it the true Faith and Religion of Chriſt, in every part.

Abſence from Popiſh ſervice.

11. Item, Ido likewiſe object and ſay, that ye, and every of you (for your misbelief, offence, tranſgeſſion, and miſbehaviour in the premiſſes, and for that alſo that you would not come to your ſeveral Pariſh Churches, and hear your divine Service there, as other Chriſtian people did and do; but abſent your ſelves from the ſame, and have your private Service in your houſes, eſpecially in the houſe of Dirick Carver) were ſent up unto the King and Queens Majeſties privy Councel, and by them or ſome of them ſent afterward into the Priſon of Newgate aforeſaid, having there by their Authority remained as Priſoners, during all the time ye have been there.

If their putting to death were lawful by God, why do ye excuſe it? If it were not lawful, why do ye ſo at mans commandment?

12. Item, I do likewiſe object and ſay, that I the ſaid Biſhop of London was commanded by the Authority of the ſaid Councel, to make proceſs againſt you, and every of you, ſo that it was not my procuring or ſearching that ye ſhould be commanded or called before me in this matter of Hereſie, but partly by your demerits, and partly the commandment enforced me to call and ſend for you, to make anſwer herein, and hereof to ſhew you the ſaid Letters.

Their Anſwers to the Articles:

Their Anſwers.

UPon Monday, being the tenth day of June, theſe two perſons (with other,) were brought by the Keeper unto the Biſhops Conſiſtory (as it was before commanded) at one of the Clock in the Afternoon, where the Biſhop firſt beginning with the ſaid Dirick Carver, cauſed his Confeſſion with the Articles and Anſwers to be openly read unto him (which order he kept at the condemnation of every Priſoner) asking him whether he would ſtand to the ſame. To whom the ſaid Dirick anſwered, that he would: for your Doctrine, quoth he, is poyſon and ſorcery. If Chriſt were here you would put him to a worſe death then he was put to before:

The words of Dirick Carver to Boner.

You ſay that you can make a god; ye can make a pudding as well. Your Ceremonies in the Church be beggary and poyſon. And further I ſay, that auricular Confeſſion is contrary to Gods Word, and very poyſon: with divers other ſuch words.

The Biſhop ſeeing his conſtancy, and that neither his accuſtomed flatteries, nor yet his cruel threatnings could once move this good man to incline to their Idolatry, pronounced his uſual and general bleſſing, (as well towards this Dirick as alſo upon the ſaid John Launder) although ſeverally:) who (after the like manner of proceſs uſed with him) remained in the ſame conſtancy, as did the other, and therefore were both delivered unto the Sheriffs, who were there preſent, but afterwards were conveyed to the places above named, and there moſt joyfully gave their bodies to be burned in the fire, and their ſouls into the hands of Almighty God, by Jeſus Chriſt, who hath aſſured them to a better hope of life.

Dirick Carver and John Launder, ſent down into the Country to be burned.

This Dirick was a man whom the Lord had bleſſed as well with temporal riches, as with his ſpiritual treaſures; which riches yet were no clog or let unto his true profeſſing of Chriſt, (the Lord by his grace ſo working in him; of the which, there was ſuch havock made, by the greedy raveners of that time, that his poor wife and Children had little or none thereof. During his impriſonment, although he was well ſtricken in years (and as it were, paſt the time of learning) yet he ſo ſpent his time, that being at his firſt apprehenſion utterly ignorant of any letter of the Book, he could before his death read perfectly any Printed Engliſh. Whoſe diligence and zeal is worthy no ſmall commendation, and therefore I thought it good not to paſs it over in ſilence, for the good encouragement and example of others.

The cruel ſpoil of Dirick's goods.

Dirick learned to read in the Priſon

Moreover, at his coming into the Town of Lewes to be burned, the people called upon him, beſeeching God to ſtrengthen him in the Faith of Jeſus Chriſt. He thanked them, and prayed unto God, that of his mercy he would ſtrengthen them in the like Faith. And when he came to the ſign of the Starr, the people drew neer unto him, where the Sheriff ſaid, that he had found him a faithful man in all his Anſwers. And as he came to the ſtake, he kneeled down and made his prayers, and the Sheriff made haſt.

Dirick burned at Lewes.

Then his Book was thrown into the Barrel, and when he had ſtript himſelf (as a joyful member of God) he went into the Barrel himſelf. And as ſoon as ever he came in, he took up the Book and threw it among the people, and then the Sheriff commanded in the King and Queens name, on pain of death, to throw in the Book again. And immdiately, that faithful Member ſpake with a joyful voyce, ſaying:

Dirick's Book commanded in the Queens name to be thrown again into the Fire.

Dear Brethren and Siſters, witneſs to you all, that I am come to ſeal with my blood Chriſts Goſpel, becauſe I know that it is true: it is not unknown unto all you, but that it hath been truly preached here in Lewes, and in all places of England, and now it is not. And becauſe that I will not deny here Gods Goſpel, and be obedient to mans Laws, I am condemned to dye. Dear Brethren and Siſters, as many of you as do believe upon the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, unto everlaſting life, ſee you do the works appertaining to the ſame. And as many of you as do believe upon the Pope of Rome, or any of his Laws, which he ſets forth in theſe days, you do belive to your utter condemnation, and except the great mercy of God, you ſhall burn in Hell perpetually.

The teſtimony of Dirick at the ſtake.

The exhortation of Dirick to the People.

Imme-

Where find you that in the Creed, to believe on the Pope.

Immediately the Sheriff ſpake unto him, and ſaid, If thou doſt not believe on the Pope thou art damned Body and Soul. And further the Sheriff ſaid unto him, Speak to thy God, that he may deliver thee now, or elſe to ſtrike me down to the example of this People; but this faithful Member ſaid, The Lord forgive you your ſayings: Anno 1555.

The Martyrdom of Dirick Carver at Lewes, Anno 1555. July. 22.

Horrible provoking of Gods Judgment.

And then ſpake he again to all the People there preſent, with a loud voice, ſaying, Dear Brethren, and all you whom I have offended in words or in deed, I ask you for the Lords ſake to forgive me, and I heartily forgive all you, which have offended me in thought, word, or deed. And he ſaid further in his Prayer, Oh Lord my God, thou haſt written, He that will not forſake Wife, Children, Houſe, and all that ever he hath, and take up thy Croſs and follow thee, is not worthy of thee. But thou Lord knoweſt, that I have forſaken all, to come unto thee: Lord have mercy upon me, for unto thee I commend my Spirit; and my Soul doth rejoyce in thee. Theſe were the laſt words of that faithful Member of Chriſt, before the fire was put to him. And after that the fire came to him, he cried, Oh Lord, have mercy upon me, and ſprung up in the fire, calling upon the Name of Jeſus, and ſo he ended.

Dirick's Prayer at his death.

Thomas Iveſon, Martyr.

Tho. Iveſon, or Everſon, apprehended with Dwick and others, and ſuffered at Chicheſter.

AT Chicheſter, about the ſame Month was burned one Thomas Iveſon of Godſtone in the County of Surrey, Carpenter; whoſe apprehenſion, examination and condemnation (for as much as it was at one time, and in one form with Dirick Carver, and John Launder) I do here omit, referring the Reader to their Hiſtory and Proceſs before-mentioned, ſaving only this his ſeveral Confeſſion and private Anſwers made before Biſhop Boner at his laſt examination in the Conſiſtory, I thought not to pretermit, who being examined upon the foreſaid Articles, anſwered as followeth.

The Anſwers of Thomas Iveſon to the Objections of Biſhop Boner of London, in a Chamber at his Houſe, in the Month of July.

Anſwers of Tho. Iveſon.

1. FIrſt, That I believed, that there is but one Catholick, Univerſal, and whole Church of Chriſt thorow the whole World, which hath and holdeth the true Faith, and all the neceſſary Articles of Chriſtian belief, and all the Sacraments of Chriſt, with the true uſe and adminiſtration of the ſame.

2. Item, That he is neceſſarily bounden to believe and give credit, in all the ſaid Faith, Articles of the Belief, Religion, and the Sacraments of Chriſt, and the adminiſtration of the ſame.

3. Item, That that Faith, Religion, and adminiſtration of Sacraments, which now is believed, uſed, taught, and ſet forth in this our Church of England, is not agreeing with the Truth and Faith of Chriſt, nor with the Faith of the ſaid Catholick and Univerſal Church of Chriſt.

4. Item, Concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, he believeth, that it is a very Idol, and deteſtable before God as it is now miniſtred.

5. Item, That the Maſs is naught, and not of the inſtitution of Chriſt, but that it is of Mans invention: and being demanded whether any thing uſed in the Maſs be good, he ſaid that he would anſwer no further.

6. Item, That he had not received the Sacrament of the Altar, ſince it had been miniſtred as now it is in England, neither was confeſſed at any time within theſe ſeven years; nor he hath not heard Maſs by the ſame ſpace.

7. Item, That auricular Confeſſion is not neceſſary to be made to a Prieſt; for that he cannot forgive, nor abſolve him from ſins.

8. Item, Concerning the Sacrament of Baptiſm, that it it is a ſign and token of Chriſt, as Circumciſion was, and none otherwiſe, and he believeth that his ſins are not waſhed away thereby, but his Body only waſhed: for his ſins be waſhed away only by Chriſts Blood.

He meaneth not by the meer virtue of the Element.

9. Item, That there be in the Catholick Church of Chriſt only two Sacraments, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Supper of the Lord, and no more, which are not rightly uſed at this preſent time in England, and therefore be unprofitable.

Two Sacraments.

10. Item, He believeth, that all the Ceremonies now uſed in the Church of England, are vain, ſuperfluous, ſuperſtitious and naught.

Againſt Ceremonies.

Furthermore, The ſaid Iveſon being earneſtly travelled withal to recant, ſaid in this wiſe, I would not recant and forſake my opinion and belief for all the goods in London: I do appeal to Gods mercy, and will be none of your Church, nor ſubmit my ſelf to the ſame: and that I have ſaid, I will ſay again. And if there came an Angel from Heaven, to teach me any other Doctrine then than that which I am now in, I would not believe him. Which anſwer thus made, he was condemned as an Heretick, and with the ſame Perſons was committed to the Secular Power (as they term it) and at the place abovementioned was burned; perſevering ſtill in his conſtant Faith unto the end.

John Aleworth.

John Aleworth died in Priſon.

IN the latter end of this Month of July, John Aleworth died in Priſon, at the Town of Reading, being there in bonds for the cauſe and teſtimony of the truth of the Lords Goſpel. Whom although the Catholick Prelates (according to their uſual ſolemnity) did exclude out of there Catholick burial, yet we ſee no cauſe why to exclude him out of the number of Chriſts holy Martyrs, and heirs of his holy Kingdom.

James Abbes, a Martyr of bleſſed memory, ſuffering for the true cauſe of Chriſts Goſpel.

Auguſt.

James Abbes Martyr.

AMong many that travelled in theſe troubleſom days to keep a good Conſcience, there was one James Abbes, a young man, which through compulſion of the tyranny then uſed, was enforced to have his part with his Brethren in wandring, and going from place to place, to avoid the peril of apprehending. But when time came, that the Lord had another work to do for him, he was caught by the hands of wicked men, and brought before the Biſhop of Norwich, D. Hopton. Who examining him of his Religion, and charging him therewith very ſore, both with threats and fair ſpeech, at the laſt the ſaid poor James, did yield and relented to their naughty perſwaſions, although his Conſcience conſented not thereto.

James Abbes relented.

Now when he was diſmiſſed, and ſhould go from the Biſhop, the Biſhop calling him again, gave him a piece of Money, either lx. d. or xx. d. whether I know not; which when the ſaid James had received, and was gone from the Biſhop, his Conſcience began to throb, and inwardly to accuſe his fact, how he had diſpleaſed the Lord by conſenting to their beaſtly Illuſions: In which combat with himſelf (being pitiouſly vexed) he went immediatly to the Biſhop again, and there threw him his ſaid Money, which he had received at his hand, and ſaid, it repented him that he ever gave his conſent to their wicked perſwaſions, and that he gave his conſent in taking of his Money.

Mony given to James Abbes by the Biſhop.

A notable example of ſting of Conſcience.

James Abbes throweth to the Biſhop his Mony again.

Now this being done, the Biſhop with his Chaplains did labour afreſh to win him again, but in vain: for the ſaid James Abbes would not yield for any of them all, although he had played Peter before through infirmity, but ſtood manfully in his Maſters quarrel to the end, and abode the force of the fire, in the conſuming of his Body into aſhes, which tyranny of burning was done in Bury, the ſecond day of Auguſt, Anno 1555.

James Abbes made ſtrong by his infirmity.

A diſcourſe of the Apprehenſion, Examination, and Condemnation of John Denley, Gentleman, John Newman, and Patrick Packingham, martyred for the Teſtimony of Chriſts Goſpel.

John Denley Gentleman, I. Newman, Patrick Packingham, Martyrs. Edm. Tyrell, Eſquire, Promoter.

IN the midſt of this tempeſtuous rage of malignant Adverſaries, perſecuting and deſtroying the poor flock of Chriſt, many there were, which though they were not Spiritual men, yet thought to help forward, for their parts, and as one would ſay, to heap up mo Coals to this furious flame of Perſecution, whether of a blind zeal or a paraſitical flattery, I know not. Amongſt which, one was Edmund Tyrel Eſquire, and at that time a Juſtice of Peace within the County of Eſſex, an Aſſiſter (as it ſeemeth) to cruel murtherers of Gods Saints. Who as he came from the burning and death of certain godly Martyrs, met with John Denley, Gentleman, and one John Newman (both of Maidſtone in Kent) travelling upon the way, and going to viſit ſuch their godly Friends, as then they had in the ſaid County of Eſſex. And upon the ſight of them, as he yet braggeth, firſt upon ſuſpicion apprehended, and ſearched them; and at laſt, finding the confeſſions of their Faith in writing about them, ſent them up unto the Queens Commiſſioners, directing alſo unto one of the ſame Commiſſioners, theſe his favourable Letters in their behalf. The Copy whereof here may appear as followeth.

A Letter of detection written by M. Edmund Tyrell to a Commiſſioner, whom I gheſs to be Sir Richard Southwel.

SIR, with moſt hearty Commendations unto you, theſe ſhall be to advertize you, that I have received a Letter from Sir Nicholas Hare and you, and other of the King and Queens Majeſties Commiſſioners, by a Servant of the King and Queens, called John Failes, for certain buſineſs about S. Oſythes, the which I could not immediatly go about, for that I had received a Letter from

from the Council, to aſſiſt the Sheriff for the execution of the Hereticks, the one at Raleigh, and the other at Rochford, the which was done on Tueſday laſt.

M. Denley and John Newman by the way met and apprehended by M. Edmund Tyrel.

And as I came homeward, I met with two men: Even as I ſaw them I ſuſpected them, and then I did examine them, and ſearch them, and I did find about them certain Letters which I have ſent you, and alſo a certain writing in Paper, what their Faith was. And they confeſſed to me, that they had forſaken and fled out of their Country for Religions ſake; and ſince they have been in many Countries, by their confeſſion, which I have ſent you: for the which I thought it good (for that they came from London, and that there might be more had of them than I yet have underſtood) to ſend them to you, whereby you and others of the King and Queens Commiſſioners there might try them ſo that their lewdneſs might be thorowly known; for I think theſe have cauſed many to trouble their Conſciences. So this hath been ſome let to me, wherefore I could not go about thoſe matters expreſſed in your Letters: but to morrow at Noon I intend by Gods grace to accompliſh your Letters, with as much diligence as I may. And thus the holy Trinity have you ever in his keeping. I beſeech you to be ſo good (Maſter) to diſcharge theſe poor men that bring theſe Priſoners up, as ſoon as may be. And thus moſt heartily farewel. From Raimeſdon Park the 12. of June 1555.

By your aſſured to command,
Edmund Tyrel.

Forſomuch as in this Letter mention is made of a certain Writing in paper found about them of their Faith; what this Writing was, and what were the contents of it, the Copy thereof here enſueth.

Certain Notes collected and gathered out of the Scriptures by John Denley Gentleman, with a Confeſſion of his Faith, touching the Sacrament of Chriſts Body and Blood, found about him ready written, at his Apprehenſion.

Chriſt is in the Sacrament, as he is where two or three are gathered together in his Name.

M. Denleys notes touching matter of the Sacrament.

THe difference of Doctrine between the Faithful and the Papiſts concerning the Sacrament is, that the Papiſts ſay, that Chriſt is corporally under or in the forms of Bread and Wine; but the Faithful ſay, that Chriſt is not there, neither corporally nor ſpiritually; but in them that worthily eat and drink the Bread and Wine, he is ſpiritually, but not corporally.

Figuratively, Spiritually, Really.

For figuratively he is in the Bread and Wine, and ſpiritually he is in them that worthily eat and drink the Bread and Wine; but really, carnally, and corporally he is only in Heaven, from whence he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead.

My belief in the Sacrament of the bleſſed Body and Blood of my Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

The belief of M. Denley of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord. How Bread repreſenteth the Body of Chriſt.

AS concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, my belief is this, that the Bread and Wine is appointed unto a Sacrament; and that after thanks be given to God the Father, then it doth repreſent unto me the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; not that the Bread is the Body, or the Wine the Blood, but that I in Faith do ſee that bleſſed Body of our Saviour broken on the Croſs, and his precious Blood plenteouſly ſhed for the redemption of my ſins. Alſo in faith I hear him call us unto him, ſaying, Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, and I will refreſh you, Eſay. 55. a. b. Matth. 11, &c. In Faith I come unto him, and I am refreſhed, ſo that I believe that all that do come unto the Table of the Lord in this faith, fear, and love, being ſorry for their offences, intending earneſtly to lead a godly converſation in this vale of miſery, do receive the fruit of the death of Chriſt, which fruit is our ſalvation.

The fruit of Chriſts death, what it is, and how it is received in the Sacrament.

How Chriſt is received ſpiritually in the Sacrament.

I do underſtand (Spiritually) that as the outward man doth eat the material Bread which comforteth the Body, ſo doth the inward man (through Faith) eat the Body of Chriſt, believing that as the Bread is broken, ſo was Chriſts Body broken on the Croſs for our ſins; which comforteth our Souls unto live everlaſting, and ſignifying thereby, that even as that Bread was divided among them, ſo ſhould his Body and fruit of his Paſſion be diſtributed unto as many as believed his words. But the Bread broken and eaten in the Supper, moniſheth and putteth us in remembrance of his death, and ſo exciteth us to thankſgiving, to laud and praiſe God for the benefits of our Redemption. Anno 1555.

And thus we there have Chriſt preſent; in the inward eye and ſight of our Faith we eat his Body, and drink his Blood; that is, we believe ſurely that his Body was crucified for our ſins, and his Blood ſhed for our ſalvation.

The groſs errour of the Papiſts in the real being of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

Chriſts Body and Blood is not contained in the Sacramental Bread and Wine, as the Papiſts have ſaid, and as ſome yet do ſay, as ye read in theſe Scriptures following: Firſt read in S. Matth. 9. Luke 5. Matth. 24, and 26. Mark. 16. Luke 24. John 13. Luke 23. in the end, John 14, 15, 16, 17. Acts 1. 3. 7. 9. Rom. 8. Pſal. 8. 1 Corin. 10, 11. Exod. 12. Coloſſ. 1. Epheſ. 1. 4. Phil. 2. 1. 1 Theſ. 1. 4. Hebr. 1. 5. 8, 9, 10. 12. 1 Pet. 3. Pſal. 11. 47. 103. 10.

Chriſts material Body is not in all places, as theſe Scriptures do teſtifie hereafter.

Chriſts Body not in all places at once.

Firſt, read St. Matthew the laſt, Mark the laſt, Luke the laſt, John 11. 20, 21. Theſe places of the Scriptures do plainly declare, that his Body, that was born of the Virgin Mary, cannot be in more places than one, and that is in Heaven, on the right hand of God, and not in the Sacrament, nor in all places, as the Papiſts have affirmed, and yet do affirm.

Idolatry to the creatures of Bread and Wine.

Therefore whoſoever they be that do worſhip the Creatures of Bread and Wine, do commit Idolatry, and make abominable Idols of them, and take the glory from God, and give it to his Creatures, which is contrary to the mind of God, as theſe Scriptures hereafter do teſtifie, firſt in Exod. 20. 22, 23, 24. Lev. 19. Deut. 4. 6. 32. Pſal. 80. Eſay 45. Mal. 2. Mat. 4. Luke 4. Acts 14. Revel. 14. Pſal. 98. 1 Cor. 1. Epheſ. 4. 1 Tim. 2. 1 John 5. Revel. 19. 22.

John Denley.

M. Denley and his fellow Priſoners ſent to Biſhop Boner.

Now to return to the Commiſſiones again: they receiving theſe Priſoners afore-mentioned, after they ſaw they could little prevail with their own perſwaſions, ſent them unto Biſhop Boner to be handled after his fatherly and charitable diſcretion. Which how diſcreet and favourable it was, as well the hiſtory of others, as alſo the ſequel of this doth manifeſtly declare. For the 28. of June then next following, he cauſed the ſaid Denley and Newman, with one Patrick Packingham, to be brought into his Chamber within his houſe or palace, there examining them upon their Confeſſions (which Tyrel had found about them) objecting alſo unto them certain other Articles of his own. To the which they all anſwered in effect one thing, although Denley anſwered more largely than the others, and therefore I thought it enough only to manifeſt his, as ſufficient, and in no part differing from the others, except that Packingham had one Article of no great force objected to him, which the reſt had not.

M. Denley Newman, and Packingham, had in examination before the Biſhop of London.

This done, the Biſhop uſed with them his accuſtomed perwaſions, to the which Maſter Denley ſaid; God ſave me from your counſel, and keep me in the mind that I am in, for that you count hereſie, I take to be the Truth: and thereupon they were commanded to appear in the Biſhops Conſiſtory the fifth of July then next coming, in the afternoon, where theſe Articles were objected againſt them.

The words of M. Denley to Biſhop Boner.

The Articles objected by Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, againſt John Denley, John Newman, and Patrick Packingham, joyntly and ſeverally the 28. of June, 1555.

Articles objected.

FIrſt that the ſaid N. now is of the Dioceſs of London, and the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of London.

Slander of untruth.

Secondly, That the ſaid N. hath not believed, nor doth doth believe, that there is any Catholick Church of Christ here in earth.

Anno 1555.

Catholick Church.

Thirdly, That the said N. hath not believed, nor doth believe, that this Church of England is any part or member of the said Catholick Church.

Mass.

Fourthly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth believe, that the Mass now used in this Realm of England is naught, and full of Idolatry and evil, and plain against Gods Word, and therefore he the said N. hath not heard it, nor will hear it.

Auricular Confession.

Fifthly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth so believe, that auricular Confession used now in this Realm of England, is not good, but contrary to Gods Word.

Popish Absolution.

Sixthly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth so believe, that Absolution, given by the Priest hearing Confession, is not good, nor allowable by Gods Word, but contrary to the same.

Mattins, Evensong, Aneling, with other rites of the Popes Church.

Seventhly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth so believe, that Christning of Children, as it is now used in the Church of England, is not good, nor allowable by Gods Word, but against it: likewise confirming of Children, giving of Orders, saying of Mattins and Evensong, anointing or aneling of sick Persons, making of holy Bread, and holy Water, with the rest of the Church.

Two Sacraments.

Eighthly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth so believe, that there are but two Sacraments in Christs Catholick Church, that is to say, the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of the Altar.

Ninthly, That the said N. hath believed, and doth so believe, that forasmuch as Christ is ascended up into heaven, therefore the very Body of Christ is not in the Sacrament of the Altar.

This Article was only objected against Patrick Packingham.

Tenthly, That thou Patrick Packingham now being of the age of 21 at the least, being within the house of the Bishop of London at Pauls, and by him brought to the great Chappel to hear Mass there, the said 23 day of June, the year of our Lord 1555. didst unreverendly stand in the said Chappel, having thy Cap on thy head all the Mass while; and didst also refuse to receive holy Water, and holy Bread at the Priests hands, there contemning and despising both the Mass, and the said holy Water and holy Bread.

The Answer of John Denley and the rest, to the Articles objected.

Their Answers. The true Catholick Church not denied.

TO the first Article I answer, it is very true.

To the second Article I answer, that it is not true: for I believe the holy Catholick Church which is builded upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Christ being the head, which holy Church is the Congregation of the faithful People, dispersed thorow the whole World, the which Church doth preach Gods holy Word truly, and doth also minister the two Sacraments, that is to say, Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, according to his blessed Word.

A notice of the true Church.

The Church of England now no member of the true Catholick Church, and the reason why.

To the third Article I answer, that I do believe, that this Church of England, using the Faith and Religion which is now used, is no part or member of the aforesaid Catholick Church, but is the Church of Antichrist, the Bishop of Rome being the head thereof: for it is plain, that they have altered the Testament of God, and set up a Testament of their own devising, full of blasphemy and lies: for Christs Testament is, that he would have all things done to the edifying of the People, as it appeareth when he taught them to pray, Matth. 6. and also it appeareth by St. Paul, 1 Cor. 14. for he saith, That he that prophesieth, speaketh unto men for their edifying, for their exhortation, and for their comfort; he that speaketh with the tongue, profiteth himself; he that prophesieth, edifieth the Congregation.

1 Cor. 14.

Also he saith, Even so likewise when ye speak with Tongues, except ye speak words that have signification, how shall it be understood what is spoken? for ye shall but speak in the Air; that is as much to say, in vain. Also he saith, Thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified. I thank my God, I speak with Tongues more than ye all: yet I had rather in the Congregation to speak five words with understanding, to the information of other, than ten thousand words with the Tongue. Also he saith, Let all things be done to edification.

The Popes Service in a Tongue which edifieth not the People.

Also it is written in the Psalm 46. For God is King of all the Earth: O sing praises unto him with understanding, &c. So it doth appear, that this Church of England, now used, is not builded upon Christ, if S. Pauls words be true, and also the Psalms; therefore this Church is not builded upon the Prophets, Apostles, nor Christ, as I have declared before.

To this fourth Article I answer, and I do believe (as I have afore-said) that the Mass, now used in this Realm of England, is naught, and abominable Idolatry and Blasphemy against Gods holy Word; for Christ in his holy Supper instituted the Sacraments of Bread and Wine, to be eaten together in remembrance of his death till he come, and not to have them worshipped, and make an Idol of them: for God will not be worshipped in his Creatures, but we ought to give him praise for his Creatures, which he hath created for us. For he saith in the second Commandment, Thou shalt not make to thy self any graven Image, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them. So it appeareth by this Commandment, that we ought not to worship the Sacrament of Bread and Wine, for it is plain Idolatry; for he saith, No similitude, therefore, Thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them. I pray you what do you call kneeling down, holding up the hands, knocking of the breast, putting off the Cap, and making curtesie, with other like Superstition? you would make men to be so blind, that this is no worshipping.

The Mass abominable and Idolatrous.

The Mass against Gods Commandment.

Peradventure you will object and say, You do not worship the Bread and the Wine, but Christs Body which was born of the Virgin Mary, contained under the forms of Bread and Wine. But that is a very lye; for Christs Body that was born of the Virgin Mary is in heaven, if S. Pauls words be true, as undoubtedly they are: for he saith in the 10*th* of the Hebrews, But this man, after he hath offered one sacrifice for sins, is set down for ever on the right hand of God, and from henceforth tarrieth till his foes be made his foot-stool.

Objection of the Papists removed.

Heb 10.

Also in the 9*th* Chapter he saith, For Christ is not entred into holy Places that are made with hands, which are similitudes of true things, but is entred into very heaven, to appear now in the sight of God for us, &c. Also Phil. 3. But our conversation is in heaven, from whence we look for the Saviour, even the Lord Jesus Christ, &c. 1 Thes. 1. For they themselves shew of you, what manner of entring in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from Images, to serve the living God, and to look for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from death, even Jesus which delivered us from the wrath to come, &c. Also John 16. I went out from the Father, and came into the world. Again, I leave the world, and go to the Father, &c. John 17. Now I am not in the world, and they are in the world, and I come to thee. All these places of the Scripture, with other more, prove plainly to them that have ears to hear, that Christs Body that was born of the Virgin Mary is in heaven, and not in the Sacramental Bread and Wine; and therefore it is Idolatry to worship them, &c.

John 17.

To this fifth Article I answer, that I do believe as I have afore-said, that auricular Confession is not good, as it is now used. Touching my sins, wherein I have offended God, I must seek to him for remission thereof, for our Saviour Christ saith in the 11. of S. Matthew, Come unto me all ye that labour and are laden, I will ease you, &c. The riotous Son, Luke 15. saith, I will arise and go to my Father, and I will say to him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven and before thee, and I am no more worthy to be called thy Son, &c. Psalm 31. I said I will knowledge mine offences, and accuse my self unto the Lord, and so thou forgavest me the wickedness of my sin, &c. Job 13. But I will reprove mine own ways in his sight: He shall make me whole, and there may no hypocrite come before him. Syrach 34. saith, Who can be cleansed of the unclean? And there was but one of the ten Lepers that were cleansed, that came to Christ to give him thanks. He asked for the other nine. But if I have offended my Neighbour, I must reconcile my self to my Neighbour: and if I be a notorious Sinner, after the 1*st* and 2*d* admonition, it ought to be declared to the Congregation, and the Minister of the Congregation hath power by the the Word to excommunicate me, and I am to be taken as an Heathen perſon, not for a day, or 40. days, but unto ſuch time as I do openly in the Congregation knowledge my fault, then the Miniſter hath power by the Word to preach to me or them the remiſſion of our ſins in the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt, as it is written in the 13. of the Acts of the Apoſtles, and Mat. 18. Other confeſſion I know none.

To this ſixth Article, I the ſaid John Denley have anſwered in the fifth.

To the ſeventh Article I anſwer, that as touching the Sacrament of Baptiſm, which is the Chriſtening of Children, it is altered and changed; for S. John uſed nothing but the preaching of the Word and the Water, as it doth appear, when Chriſt required to be baptized of him, and others alſo which came to John to be baptized, as it appeareth, Matth. 3. Mark 1. Luke 3. and Acts 8. the Chamberlain ſaid; See here is Water, what letteth me to be Baptized? It appeareth here that Philip had preached unto him; for he ſaid Here is Water. We do not read that he asked for any Cream, nor Oyl, not for Spittle, nor conjured Water, nor conjured Wax, nor yet Croyſom, nor Salt, for it ſeemeth that Philip had preached no ſuch things to him; for he would as well have asked for them as for Water: and the Water was not Conjured, but even as it was afore. Alſo Act. 10. Then anſwered Peter Can any man forbid Water that theſe ſhould not be Baptized? &c. Acts 16. And Paul and Silas preached unto him the Word of the Lord, and to all that were in his houſe: and he took them the ſame hour of the night, and waſhed their wounds, and ſo was he Baptized, and all they of his houſhold ſtraightway, Where ye ſee nothing but preaching the Word and the Water. The like alſo is to be ſaid of the reſt of the Ceremonies of your Church.

Acts 10.

Acts 16.

The Rainbow as good a Sacrament as ſome of the Popiſh Sacraments.

To the eighth Article I anſwer ſhortly, that there be Sacraments no more but two; Baptiſm, and the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, except ye will make the Rain-bow a Sacrament: for there is no Sacrament but hath a promiſe annexed unto it.

To the ninth Article I do anſwer you, that ye have my mind written already. For it was found about me when I was taken, and alſo ye know my mind in the fourth Article, plainly expreſſed concerning the Bodily preſence: For Chriſts body is in heaven, and will not be contained in ſo ſmall a piece of Bread. And as the words which Chriſt ſpake are true indeed, ſo muſt they alſo be underſtood by other of the Scriptures which Chriſt ſpake himſelf, and alſo the Apoſtles after him. And thus I make an end, &c.

By me John Denley.

The firſt day of the month of July, the ſaid three priſoners were brought into the Conſiſtory in Pauls Church, where he proceeded againſt them after the uſual form and manner of Law, reading firſt their Confeſſions, Articles, and Anſwers, and then tempting them, ſomtime with fair promiſes, otherwhiles with threatnings, which were alwayes his chiefeſt arguments and reaſons to perſwade withal. In the end, ſeeing their unmovable conſtancy, upon the fifth of July he condemned them as Hereticks, and gave them unto the Sheriffs of London, as to his common executioners, who kept them until they were commanded by Writ to ſend them to their ſeveral places of ſuffering; which was for Mr. Denley, Uxbridge: where the 8. day of Auguſt he was burned. And being ſet in the fire with the burning flame about him, he ſung in it a Pſalm.

The ungentle dealing of D. Story againſt M. Denley.

Then cruel Dr. Story being there preſent, commanded one of the tormentors to hurl a Faggot at him, whereupon being hurt therewith upon the face that he bled again, he left his ſinging, and clapt both his hands on his face. Truly, quoth Dr. Story to him that hurled the Faggot, thou haſt mar'd a good old Song.

The ſaid John Denley being yet ſtill in the flame of the fire, put his hands abroad, and ſung again, yeelding at the laſt his ſpirit into the hands of God through his Son Jeſus Chriſt.

The Martyrdom of Patrick Packingham at Uxbridge, Anno 1555. Aug. 28.

After the Martyrdom of Mr Denley at Uxbridge, which was the 8 of Auguſt, ſuffered alſo not long after Patrick Packingham at the ſame Town of Uxbridge, about the 28 of the ſaid Month. This Packingham was charged of Boner (as ye hard in the tenth Article before) for his behaviour ſhewed in the Biſhops Chappel, who at the Maſs time there ſtanding, would not put of his Cap, which was taken for a heinous offence. The ſaid Packingham alſo being much laboured by Boner to recant, proteſted in theſe words to the Biſhop, that the Church which he believed was no Catholick Church, but was the Church of Satan, and therefore he would never turn to it, &c.

Anno 1555.

Furthermore, as touching the other, which was John Newman Pewterer, dwelling at Maidſtone in Kent, he was burned the laſt of Auguſt, at Saffron Walden in the County of Eſſex, whoſe examination and confeſſion of his Faith and Belief, for the which he was cruelly burnt and perſecuted, hereunder followeth.

The Martyrdom of John Newman at Saffron Walden, An. 1555. Aug. 31.

The Examination of John Newman, Martyr.

John Newman firſt was apprehended in Kent dwelling in the Town of Maidſtone, and there was examined before Dr. Thorneton Suffragan, and others, at Tenterden. From thence he was brought to Boner, and there condemned with Mr. Denley amd Packingham, and burned at Saffron Walden, as is before ſtoried. But becauſe his Examination and Anſwers before the Suffragan came not then to my hands I thought here in this place to beſtow them, rather than they ſhould utterly be ſuppreſſed. And firſt what his anſwer was by writing to the ſaid Suffragan, after his apprehenſion, you ſhall hear by the tenor of his own words, as follow.

The Copy of J. Newmans writing to Doctor Thornton.

IT may pleaſe you to underſtand, that for the ſpace of all the time of King Edward's raign, we were diligently inſtructed with continual Sermons, made by ſuch men, whoſe faith, wiſdom, learning, and vertuous living, was commended unto all men under the Kings Hand and Seal and under the hands of the whole Councel. Theſe men taught diligently a long time, perſwading us by the alle, gations of Gods Word, that there was no Tranſubſtantiation, nor Corporal preſence in the Sacrament. Their Doctrine was not believed of us ſuddenly, but by their continual preaching, and alſo by our continual prayer unto God, that we might never be deceived; but if it were true, that God would incline our hearts unto it: and if it were not true, that we might never believe it. We weighed that they laboured with Gods Word, and we asked the advice of our friends, neither could we find that they preached falſe Doctrine. We conſidered alſo, as we did learn, that the Kings Grace and his Council, and the moſt part of the whole Realm believed as they taught, becauſe no man preached the contrary. Alſo wee know that the Preachers were commanded by the King and Laws of the Realm, to preach unto us ſuch Doctrine, as was to the authority of Gods Word agreeable, and no other, and by their diligent ſetting forth of it by the Kings commandment, and the whole conſent of the whole Council, and by the authority of the Parliament, we imbraced it, and received it as a very infallible Truth, taught unto us for the ſpace of ſeven years. Wherefore, until ſuch time as our Conſciences are otherwiſe taught and inſtructed by Gods Word, we cannot with ſafeguard of our Conſciences take it, as many ſuppoſe at this time. And we truſt in God that the Queens merciful highneſs, neither yet her moſt honourable counſel will in a matter of Faith uſe compulſion nor violence, becauſe Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man, neither of mans Laws, neither at ſuch time as men require it, but at ſuch time as God giveth it.

The Examination and Anſwers of John Newman Martyr before Dr. Thornton, and others.

The Examination and Anſwers of J. Newman.

FIrſt, one of the Doctors, or one of the Bench, either the Archdeacon or Faucet, or ſome other, whoſe name John Newman doth not expreſs, beginneth, asking in this wiſe.

Doctor. How ſay you to this: This is my Body which is given for you.

Newman. It is a figurative ſpeech, one thing ſpoken, and another meant, as Chriſt ſaith; I am a Vine, I am a Dore I am a Stone, &c. Is he therefore a material Stone, a Vine, or a Dore?

Doct.

Anno 1555.

Doct. This is no figurative ſpeech. For he ſaith; This is my Body which is given for you, and ſo ſaith he not of the ſtone, Vine, or Door; but that is a figurative ſpeech.

This Cup is the new Teſtament, is a figurative ſpeech.

New. Chriſt ſaith, This Cup is the New Teſtament in my Blood: If ye will have it ſo meant, then let them take and eat the Cup.

Doct. Nay, that is not ſo meant; for it is a common phraſe of ſpeech among our ſelves: We ſay to our friend drink a Cup of Drink, and yet we meant he ſhould Drink the Drink in the Cup.

New. Why, if ye will have the one ſo underſtood, ye muſt ſo underſtand the other.

Doct. Nay, it is a common uſe of ſpeech, to ſay; Drink a Cup of Ale or Beer. And therefore it is no figurative ſpeech.

What is a figurative ſpeech.

New. The often uſing of a thing doth not make that thing otherwiſe than it is; but wherſoever one thing is ſpoken, and another meant, it is a figurative ſpeech.

Doc. Well, we will not ſtand hereabout. How ſay ye of the real preſence? Is not Chriſts natural Body there that was born of the Virgin Mary?

New. No, I do not ſo believe, neither can I ſo believe; for the Soul of man doth not feed upon natural things as the Body doth.

Doct. Why, how then doth it feed?

New. I think the Soul of man doth feed as the Angels in Heaven, whoſe feeding is only the pleaſure, joy, felicity, and delectation that they have of God: and ſo the Soul of man doth feed and eat, through Faith, the Body of Chriſt.

Collins reaſoneth with Newman.

Collins. Yea, but if the Body do not feed upon natural things, the Soul cannot continue with the Body: therefore the Body muſt needs feed upon natural things, that both may live together.

New. I grant it to be true; but yet the Soul doth live otherwiſe than the Body which doth periſh: therfore natural things do but feed the Body only. I pray you what did Judas receive at the Supper?

Col. Marry, Judas did receive the very Body of Chriſt, but it was to his damnation.

New. Why? was the Devil entred into him before? Then he had not the Devil and Chriſt in him at one time.

Whether Judas received the Body of Chriſt, or no?

Col. Nay, the Devil did enter into him afterward.

New. Yea, and before too: what do ye think? Had he but one Devil? Nay, I think he had rather a legion of Devils at the latter end.

Col. Well, put caſe it be ſo: what ſay you to that?

New. Marry, if Chriſt and the Devil were both in Judas at once, I pray you how did they two agree together?

Col. We grant that they were both in Judas at that time: for Chriſt may be where the Devil is, if he will; but the Devil cannot be where Chriſt is, except it pleaſe Chriſt.

New. Chriſt will not be in an unclean perſon that hath the Devil.

D. Thornton reaſoneth with John Newman.

Thornton. Why, will ye not believe that Chriſt was in Hell? and ye will grant that the Devil is there; and ſo might he be in Judas, if it pleaſed him.

New. Chriſt would not ſuffer Mary Magdalen to touch him which ſought him at his grave, and did love him intirely; much leſs he will ſuffer an ungodly man to recive him into his unclean Body.

Thorn. Yes, ſeeing God may do all things, he may do what he liſt, and be where he will. And doth not the Pſalm ſay; He is in Hell, and in all places? Why ſhould we then doubt of his being there?

New. Though his Godhead be in all places, yet that is not ſufficient to prove that his Humanity is in all places.

Thorn. No, do you not believe that God is Omnipotent, and may do all things?

New. I do believe that God is Almighty, and may do all that he will do.

The Omnipotency of Chriſt doth not prove him to be really in the Sacrament.

Thorn. Nay, but if he be Omnipotent, he may do all things, and there is nothing unpoſſible for him to do.

New. I know God is almighty, and can do all that he will: but he cannot make his Son a lyar, he cannot deny himſelf, nor can he reſtore Virginity once violated and defiled.

Thorn. What is that to your purpoſe? God doth not defile Virginity; we ſpeak but of things that God doth.

New. Why, will ye have the Humanity of Chriſt in all places as the Deity is?

Thorn. Yea, he is in all places as the Deity is, if it pleaſe him.

Abſurdity in the Popes Doctrine.

New. I will promiſe you that ſeemeth to me a very great Hereſie, for Heaven and Earth are not able to contain the Divine Power of God, for it is in all places, as here and in every place: and yet ye ſay, that whereſoever the Deity is, there is alſo the Humanity, and ſo ye will make him no Body, but a fantaſtical Body, and not a Body indeed.

Thorn. Nay, we do not ſay he is in all places as the Deity is, but if it pleaſe him he may be in all places with the Deity.

The Humanity of Chriſt may not be in all places.

New. I promiſe you, that ſeemeth to me as great an Hereſie as ever I heard in my life, and I dare not grant it, leſt I ſhould deny Chriſt to be a very Man, and that were againſt all the Scriptures.

Thorn. Tuſh, what ſhall we ſtand reaſoning with him? I dare ſay he doth not believe that Chriſt came out of his Mother, not opening the matrice. Do you believe that Chriſt roſe from death, and came thorow the ſtone?

New. I do believe that Chriſt roſe from death; but I do not believe that he came thorow the ſtone, neither doth the Scripture ſo ſay.

Note the groſs Ignorance of this Suffragan.

Thorn. Lo, how ſay you? he doth not believe that Chriſt came through the ſtone; and if he doth not believe this, how ſhall he believe the other? If he could believe this, it were eaſie for him to believe the other.

New. The Scripture doth not ſay he went thorow the ſtone, but it ſaith the Apoſtle of God came down, and rolled away the ſtone, and for fear of him the Keepers became even as dead men.

Thorn. Ah fool, fool, that was becauſe the woman ſhould ſee that he was riſen again from death.

New. Well, the Scripture maketh as much for me, as it doth for you, and more too.

Thorn. Well let us not ſtand any longer about this. Back again to the real Preſence. How ſay ye, is the Body of Chriſt really in the Sacrament, or no?

New. I have anſwered you already.

Thorn. Well, do ye not believe that it is there really?

New. No, I believe it not.

Thorn. Well, will ye ſtand to it?

New. I muſt needs ſtand to it, till I be perſwaded by a further Truth.

Thorn. Nay, ye will not be perſwaded, but ſtand to your own Opinion.

New. Nay, I ſtand not to mine own Opinion, God I take to witneſs, but only to the Scriptures of God, and that can all thoſe that ſtand here witneſs with me, and nothing but the Scriptures: and I take God to witneſs, that I do nothing of preſumption, but that that I do, is only my Conſcience, and if there be a further Truth than I ſee, except it appear a Truth to me, I cannot receive it as a Truth. And ſeeing Faith is the gift of God, and cometh not of man; for it is not you that can give me Faith, nor no man elſe: therefore I truſt ye will bear the more with me, ſeeing it muſt be wrought by God, and when it ſhall pleaſe God to open a further Truth to me, I ſhall receive it with all my heart, and imbrace it.

Thornton had many other queſtions which I did not bear away; but as I do underſtand, theſe are the chiefeſt: as for Taunts, fooliſh and unlearned, he lacked none. Praiſe God for his gifts, ond God increaſe in us ſtrength.

The Arguments of John Newman.

Argument in the ſecond figure.

If the Body of Chriſt were really and bodily in the Sacrament, then whoſoever received the Sacrament, received alſo the Body.

The wicked receiving the Sacrament, receive not the Body of Chriſt.

Ergo, the Body of Chriſt is not really in the Sacrament.

Argument.

Ca- They which eat the Fleſh, and drink the Blood of Chriſt, dwell in him, and he in them.
meſ- The wicked dwell not in Chriſt, nor he in them.
tres. Ergo, the wicked eat not the Fleſh, nor drink the Blood of Chriſt.

Argument.

Ca- They that have Chriſt dwelling in them, bring forth much fruit, John 15. He that dwelleth in me, and, I in him bringeth forth much fruit.
meſ- The wicked bring forth no fruit of goodneſs.
tres. Ergo, they have not Chriſts Body dwelling in them.

Argument

Argument in the third figure.

Da- Where remembrance is of a thing, there is imported the abſence thereof.
ti- Remembrance of Chriſts Body is in the Sacrament, Do this in remembrance of me, &c.
ſi- Ergo, Chriſts Body there is imported to be abſent.

Marry they will ſay, we ſee him not with our outward eyes, but he is commended under the forms of Bread and Wine, and that we ſee is nothing but a quality or an accident. But let them ſhew me a quality or an accident without a ſubſtance, and I will believe them. And thus much concerning Newmans Examinations and Arguments.

Abac. 2. Heb. 10. The Lord is the Protector of my life. The juſt ſhall live by Faith, and if he withdraw himſelf, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him.

MY. Faith is, that there is one God, which is without beginning, and without ending. This God Gen. 1. 2. created all things viſible and inviſible. And after that he had made both Heaven and Earth, with all other Creatures, he made Man, and ſet him in the place which he had prepared for him, which place he called Eden: he gave to Adam his commandments and Precepts, and ſaid, Whenſoever thou doſt the thing which I forbid, thou ſhalt ſurely die the death; yet did Man for all this diſobey God his Creator, and after his ſin, he fled from God, and himſelf, and was in a miſerable deſperate caſe. But God ſeeing man in his miſerable eſtate, becauſe he and all poſterity ſhould not continue in death, promiſed Gen. 3. Adam that the womans Seed ſhould break the Serpents head, whereby is meant, that the Son of God ſhould become man, and deſtroy the devil, which by his ſubtile perſwaſions had deceived Adam. Then did Adam, by Faith, take hold of Gods promiſe, and became the ſervant of righteouſneſs, through the Faith which he had in the promiſe of the Womans Seed. So did Abel, Seth, Henoch, and Noah, with Faithful Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and the reſt of the faithful until Chriſts time, as St. Paul ſaith; They did eat all of one ſpiritual meat, and did all drink 1 Cor. 10. of one ſpiritual drink, they did drink of that ſpiritual rock that followed them, which rock was Chriſt that ſaveth us. And when the time was full come, God ſent his Son, made of a woman, that is, he took fleſh of the virgin Mary, and became man; not the ſhadow of a man, nor a Gal. 4. fantaſtical man, as ſome falſly feign, but a very natural man in all points, ſin only excepted, which God and man is Chriſt the promiſed Womans Seed. This Chriſt was here converſant among men for the ſpace of 30 years & more, and when the time was come that he ſhould go to his Father, he gave unto us the myſtery of our Luke 22. 1 Cor. 11. Redemption, that we through Faith ſhould eat his Body, and drink his Blood, that we might feed on him through Faith to the end of the world. After this Chriſt offered up his Body on the Croſs to pacifie his Father, and to deliver us from the thraldom of the Devil, in the which we were through ſin original and actual. And with Heb. 10. that one ſacrifice of his Body once offered on the Croſs, he hath made perfect for ever all them that are ſanctified. He deſcended into hell, the third day he roſe again from death, and was converſant at certain times with his Diſciples for the ſpace of 40 days after he roſe from death Then in the ſight of all his Diſciples he aſcended into Acts 1. Heaven: and as his Diſciples ſtood looking upward, and beholding him how he went into Heaven, two men ſtood by them in white apparel, which alſo ſaid; Ye men of Galilee, why ſtand ye gazing up into Heaven? This Jeſus which is taken up from you into Heaven, ſhall ſo Acts 1. come even as ye have ſeen him go into Heaven. St. Peter alſo ſaith, that the Heavens muſt receive him, until the time that all things which God hath ſpoken by the mouth of all his Prophets ſince the world began, be reſtored again, which is the latter day, when he ſhall come to judge the quick and the dead. I do Believe in the Holy Ghoſt, which is the Spirit of God, proceeding from the Father and the Son, which Holy Spirit is one God with them. I believe that there is an Holy Church, which is the company of the faithful and elect People of God, diſperſed abroad throughout the whole world, which Holy Church or Congregation doth not look for Chriſt here, Mat nor Chriſt there, neither in the deſert, nor in the ſecret places whereof Chriſt warneth us, but as St. Paul ſaith, in Heaven; where he ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father; they ſet their affections on things that are a- Coloſſ. 3. bove, and not on things that are on earth. For they are dead concerning the things of this world, and their life is hid with Chriſt in God: and when Chriſt, which is their life ſhall ſhew him ſelf, then ſhall they alſo appear with him in glory. I believe that there is a communion of Saints, even the fellowſhip of the Faithful People which are diſperſed abroad throwout all the whole world, and are of one mind: they follow Chriſt their Head, they love one another as Chriſt loved them, and are knit together in one, even in Chriſt; which Church or Congregation hath forgiveneſs of Sins through Chriſt, and ſhall enter without ſpot before the face of God into his glory. For as Chriſt, being their Head, hath entered pure and clean, ſo they entring by him, ſhall be like him in glory. And I am certain and ſure, that all they which do die, ſhall riſe again and receive their Bodies. In them ſhall they ſee Chriſt come in his glory, to judge the quick and the dead. At whoſe coming all men ſhall appear and give a reckoning of their doings: he ſhall ſeparate the good from the bad, he ſhall ſay to them which are his elect; Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the beginning; but to the other that have always reſiſted his will, he ſhall ſay: Depart from me ye curſed into everlaſting fire which is prepared for the Devil and his Angels.

Thus have I briefly declared my Faith, which were no Faith at all if I were in doubt of it. This Faith therefore I deſire God to increaſe in me. Praiſe God for his gifts.

And thus have ye the Martyrdom with the Confeſſion of the bleſſed man, and witneſs of the Lords Truth, who for that gave his life, as is before declared.

The Examinations, Anſwers, and condemnation of William Coker, Willam Hooper, Henry Laurence, Richard Colliar, Richard Wright, William Stere, before the Biſhop of Dover, and Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury.

MEntion was made a little before in the ſtory of M. Bland and Nicholas Sheterden, of certain other Kentiſh-men, who being the ſame time with them called forth and examined by Thornton Biſhop of Dover, Nich. Harpsfield, Rich. Faucet, and Robert Collins: yet notwithſtanding, becauſe the condemnation and execution of them was deferred a little longer, till the later end of the month of Auguſt; coming therfore now to the time of ſuffering, we will breifly touch ſome part of their Examinations and Anſwers as we find them in the Regiſter

Six Martyrs in Kent. Thornton, Harpsfield, Rich. Faucet, Rob. Collins. Perſecutors.

Anno 1555.

Anno 1555. Regiſters. The Names of theſe were William Coker, Wil. Hopper, Henry Laurence, Rich. Colliar, Rich. Wright, Wil. Stere. What the Articles objected to Maſter Bland and them were, ye heard before. To the which Articles they anſwered for themſelves ſeverally, in effect as followeth.

The burning of Six Godly Martyrs in one fire.

The Martyrdom of 6 Martyrs. M. Coker W. Hopper, Hen. Laurence Rich. Colliar Rich. Wright, Wil. Stere, at Canterbury, An. 1555. Aug.

Wil. Coker condemned.

FIrſt William Coker ſaid, he would anſwer no otherwiſe then he had already anſwered; and being offered to have longer reſpite of ſix days after, he refuſed to take it, and ſo upon the ſame, ſentence of condemnation was read againſt him, the eleventh of July.

Wil. Hopper. condemned.

William Hopper firſt ſeemed to grant to the faith and determination of the Catholick Church, after calling himſelf better to mind, conſtantly ſticking to the truth, he was condemned the next week after, the 16. of July.

The words of Hen. Laurence.

Henry Laurence examined the ſaid 16 of July, and partly deferred to the 2 of Auguſt, anſwered to the Articles objected againſt him; firſt denying auricular confeſſion, and that he neither had nor would receive the Sacrament, becauſe, ſaith he, the order of the Holy Scriptures is changed in the order of the Sacrament,

Mr Regiſt. putting off his cap at the mention of the Sacrament.

Moreover, the ſaid Laurence was charged for not putting off his cap, when the Suffragan made mention of the Sacrament, and did reverence to the ſame: the ſaid Laurence anſwering in theſe words, What? ſaid he, ye ſhall not need to put off your cap: for it is not ſo holy that you need to put off your cap thereunto.

Chriſt gave his Body, as he ſaid he was a Door.

Further, being oppoſed concerning the verity of the Sacrament given to Chriſts Diſciples, he affirmed, that even as Chriſt gave his very Body to his Diſciples, and confeſſed it to be the ſame; ſo likewiſe Chriſt himſelf ſaid, he was a Door, &c. adding moreover, that as he had ſaid before ſo he ſaith ſtill, that the Sacrament of the Altar is an Idol, and no remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, and contrary he knoweth not. At laſt required to put to his hand in ſubſcribing to his anſwers, he wrote theſe words under the bill of their examinations, Ye are all of Antichriſt, and him ye fol. And here is hand was ſtayed to write any further: belike he would have written out (follow), &c. And ſo upon the ſame, ſentence was given againſt him the ſecond of Auguſt.

The ſubſcription of Henry Laurence.

Richard Colliar of Aſhford.

Rich. Colliar.

Richard Colliar above mentioned, having the 16 of Auguſt to appear, examined of the Sacrament of the Popiſh Altar, anſwered and ſaid, that he did not believe, that after the Conſecration there is the reall and ſubſtantial Body of Chriſt, but onely Bread and Wine, and that it is moſt abominable, moſt deteſtable, and moſt wicked to believe otherwiſe, &c. Upon this the ſentence was read againſt him, and he condemned the 16 of Auguſt. After his condemnation he ſang a Pſalm. Wherefore the Prieſts and their Officers railed at him, ſaying, he was out of his wits.

The words of Rich. Colliar. Onely in the ſubſtance he meaneth.

Richard Wright.

Rich. Wright.

Richard Wright the ſame place and day, being the 16 of Auguſt, appearing, and required of the Judge what he believed of the reall preſence in the Sacrament, anſwered again, that as touching the Sacrament of the Altar and the Maſs, he was aſhamed to ſpeak of it, or to name it, and that he allowed it not, as it was uſed in the Church. Againſt whom the ſentence was alſo read the day and place aforeſaid.

Rich. Wright. aſhamed to ſpeak of the Sacrament of the Altar.

William Stere.

William Stere Martyr.

William Stere of the aforeſaid Pariſh of Aſhford, likewiſe detected and accuſed, was brought to appear the ſaid 16 day of Auguſt, where he in the ſaid Chapterhouſe of Canterbury, being required to make anſwer to the poſitions laid unto him by the Judge, made anſwer again, that he ſhould command his dogg, and not him: and further declared, that Dick of Dover had no Authority to ſit againſt him in judgement, and asked where his Authority was? Who then ſhewed him certain Buls and Writings from Rome, as he ſaid. William Stere denying that to be of ſufficient force, the ſaid Dick ſaid alſo he had Authority from the Queen. Then the Martyr alleadging that the Biſhop of Canterbury (who then was in priſon) was his Dioceſan, urged him to ſhew his Authority from the Archbiſhop, or elſe he denied his Authority to be ſufficient. And as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, he found it not (he ſaid) in the Scripture; and therefore he would not anſwer thereunto.

Dick of Dover, ſo they tearmed then Richard Thornton Biſhop of Dover

He meaneth D. Cranmer impriſoned at Oxford

And moreover, the Judge ſpeaking of the Sacrament of the Altar, with reverence thereof, and putting off his cap, he ſaid, That he needed not to reverence that matter ſo highly. And thus (ſaying to the Judge, that he was a Bloody man, &c.) the ſentence was pronounced againſt him; after which ſentence being read, he ſaid, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the moſt blaſphemous Idol that ever was, &c.

Sentence againſt William Sitre.

And thus theſe ſix heavenly Martyrs and Witneſs-bearers to the truth, being condemned by the bloody Suffragan and Archdeacon of Canterbury, Maſter Collins, and Maſter Faucet, were burned all together in the ſame Town of Canterbury, at three ſtakes and one fire, about the later end of Auguſt.

The copy of their ſentence condemnatory, you may find above in the ſtory of John Rogers; for the Papiſts in their condemnations follow one manner of ſentence of courſe commonly againſt all that be condemned through their unmerciful Tyranny.

The perſecution of ten Martyrs together, ſent by certain of the Councel to Boner to be examined.

Ten Martyrs, ſent up together to Biſhop Boner.

AFter the burning of theſe ſix above named, next followeth the perſecution of ten other true Servants and Saints of the Lord, not ſuch Saints as the Pope maketh, or which are mentioned in Legenda Sanctorum, or in Vitis Patrum, or in the fabulous book De vita Sanctorum Wallenſium, &c. but ſuch as are ſpoken of in the Holy Apocalyps, of whom it is written, Hij ſunt qui ſequuntur Agnum quocunque jerit, quique lavarunt ſtolas ſuas in ſanguine Agni. i. Theſe be they that follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth, and which have waſhed their ſtoles in the Blood of the Lamb, &c. Thus theſe Saints be not of the Popes making, or rather, to ſay the truth, they are of the Popes making; of the Popes making (I ſay) in this reſpect, not that the Saints of God are made by the Pope, but that the Saints of God are tried and declared by the Pope: ſo, as by afflictions of Satan Job's patience was proved, by Pharaoh Gods power declared, and by Salinator Tarentum was won (as Tully writeth,) for except he had loſt it before, Q. Fabius could not have recovered it; ſo in like manner, unleſs by Antichriſt good men had been deſtroyed, otherwiſe they had not been true Martyrs of Chriſt. The names of theſe were.

The Hiſtory of Elizabeth Warne Widow, burnt at Stratford Bow.

NOw ſeverally to proſecute the ſtories of theſe ten Martyrs aforenamed: firſt we will begin with the hiſtory of Elizabeth Warne, who in this Month of Auguſt was burnt at Stratford Bow, nigh unto London, Widow, late the Wife of John Warne Upholſter, and Martyr, who alſo was burned in the end of the Month of May laſt paſt, as before in his ſtorie is recorded. This Elizabeth had been apprehended amongſt others, the firſt day of January, in a houſe in Bow Churchyard in London, as they were gathered together in prayer, and at that preſent was carried to the Counter (as is alſo above ſpecified) where ſhe lay as priſoner untill the 11. day of June. At which time ſhe was brought into Newgate, and remained there in the like caſe unto the ſecond day of July. Then ſhe was ſent by the King and Queens Commiſſioners unto Boner Biſhop of London, who the ſixth day of the ſame month cauſed her with divers others (as Robert Smith, George Tankerfield, &c.) to be brought before him into his Palace, and there examined her upon ſundry articles, ſuch as of common order be miniſtred unto the poor Saints and Martyrs of God, as you may more plainly perceive by other more large and ample proceſſes, as well before, as hereafter mentioned.

Elizabeth Warne Martyr.

Eliza. Warne brought to examination.

The chiefeſt objection that he uſed either towards her, or the moſt of thoſe, was touching the reall and corporall preſence of the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, as the chiefeſt ground and profitableſt foundation for their Catholick dignitie. Many other matters he objected againſt them, as for not coming to the Church, for ſpeaking againſt the Maſs, for deſpiſing their ceremonies and new found Sacraments, with divers other fond and triffling toyes, not worthy any mentioning.

In the end, when ſhe had been divers times brought before him and other his adherents, and there earneſtly exhorted to recant, ſhe ſaid; Do what ye will. For if Chriſt were in an errour, then am I in an errour. Upon which anſwer, ſhe was the 12. day of the ſame month of July adjudged and condemned as an Heretick, and ſo delivered unto the ſecular power, as they term it, to be by them (yet at the Clergies appointment) put to death, which thing was accompliſhed in her the ſame month above mentioned.

The words of Eliza. Warne at her examination.

The chiefe procurer of this her death was Doctor Story, being (as it is thought) of ſome alliance either to her the ſaid Elizabeth, or elſe to her late Husband. Who, though he was at the firſt apprehenſion of his ſaid kinſwoman, a very earneſt ſuter for her deliverance to Doctor Martin, then one of the King and Queens Commiſſioners in matters of Religion (himſelf being as yet not made Commiſſioner) and had by his ſute obtained her deliverance for that preſent, as Doctor Martin himſelf (the author hereof) hath reported, yet afterwards, upon what occaſion God onely knoweth, except upon ſome burning charity, the ſaid D. Story obtaining now the room of one of the Commiſſioners, cauſed not onely the ſaid John Warne, but alſo his Wife, and afterwards his daughter to be again apprehended, never leaving them until he had brought them all to aſhes. Such was the rage of that devout Catholick, and white Child of the Mother Church, that neither kindred nor any other conſideration could prevail with him, although it did (at his requeſt) with others, who in reſpect of him were but ſtrangers unto them. The Lord, if it be his will, turn his heart, or elſe rid his poor Church from ſuch an Hydra, as thanked be the Lord, now he hath.

George Tankerfield, a faithful Martyr and Witneſs of the Goſpel, conſtantly ſuffering for the teſtimony of the ſame.

The ſtory of George Tankerfield, Martyr.

GEorge Tankerfield of London, Cook, born in the City of York, about the age of 27. or 28. years was in King Edwards dayes a very Papiſt, till the time Queen Mary came in, and then, perceiving the great cruelty uſed of the Popes ſide, was brought into a miſdoubt of their doings, and began (as he ſaid) in his heart to abhor them. And as concerning the Maſs, whereof he had but a doubtful opinion before, and much ſtriving with

Anno 1555.

Tankerfield how he was firſt called to the knowledge of the Goſpel.

with himſelf in that caſe; at length he fell to prayer, deſiring God in mercy to open to him the truth, that he might be thorowly perſwaded therein, whether it were of God, or no: If not, that he might utterly hate it in his heart, and abhor it: which according to his prayer the Lord mercifully heard, working daily more and more in him to deteſt and abhor the ſame: and ſo he was moved to read the Teſtament, whereby (as is ſaid) the Lord lightned his mind with the knowledge of the truth, working lively Faith in him to believe the ſame, and utterly to deteſt all Papiſtry, and ſo he came no more to their doings: And not only that, but alſo this lively Faith, ſaith he, kindled ſuch a flame in him, as would not be kept in, but utter it ſelf by confeſſion thereof, reproving his own former doings to his Friends, exhorting them likewiſe to convert and turn to the truth with him, and thus he began to be ſmelled out among them, till at the laſt he was ſent for, as followeth.

The order and manner how Tankerfield was firſt apprehended by Beard.

It pleaſed God to ſtrike him with ſickneſs, whereby he lay long ſick; and on a certain day to take the ayr abroad, he roſe up, and went and walked into the Temple fields to ſee the ſhooters. In the mean ſeaſon came Beard home to his Houſe, and inquired for him, pretending to his Wife, that he came onely to have him to come and dreſs a Banquet at the Lord Pagets. The Wife, becauſe of his apparel (which was very brave) took him to be ſome honeſt Gentleman, and with all ſpeed prepared her ſelf to fetch her Husband, having a good hope he ſhould now earn ſome Money: and leſt this Gentleman ſhould be noyed with tarrying, ſhe fetcht him a cuſhion to ſet him ſoft, and laid a fair napkin before him, and ſet bread thereon, and came to her Husband; who when he heard it, ſaid; A Banquet Woman? Indeed it is ſuch a Banquet as will not be very pleaſant to the fleſh, but Gods will be done. And when he came home he ſaw who it was, and called him by his name, which when his Wife perceived, and wherefore he came, like a tall Woman would play Peters part, and inſtead of a Sword, took a Spit, and had run him thorow, had not the Conſtable, which Beard had ſent for by his man, come in withal, who reſcued him; yet ſhe ſent a Brickbat after him, and hit him on the back. And ſo Tankerfield was delivered to the Conſtable, and brought to Newgate about the laſt day of February, Anno 1555. by the ſayd Beard Yeoman of the Guard, and Simon Ponder Pewterer, Conſtable of Saint Dunſtans in the Weſt, ſent in by Roger Chomley Knight, and by Doctor Martin.

A falſe Judas part of Beard.

Tankerfield thus being brought to priſon by his Adverſaries, at length with the other above named was brought to his examination before Boner. Who, after his accuſtomed manner, ordered his Articles and poſitions unto him; the copie and tenor of which his ordinary Articles ye may read above expreſſed.

Articles ordinary.

To theſe Articles, as above rehearſed, he anſwered again, conſtantly declaring his mind both touching Auricular confeſſion, and alſo the Sacrament of the Popiſh Altar, and likewiſe of the Maſs, &c. Firſt, that he was not confeſſed to any Prieſt five years paſt, nor to any other but onely to God: and further denying that he would hereafter be confeſſed to any Prieſt, for that he found it not in Chriſts book, and took it only to be a Counſel.

Auricular confeſſion.

Sacrament of the Altar.

And concerning the Sacrament, commonly called here in England of the Altar, he confeſſed that he neither had nor did believe, that in the ſaid Sacrament there is the Reall Body and Blood of Chriſt, becauſe that the Body is aſcended into Heaven, and there doth ſit at the Right Hand of God the Father.

The Maſs abominable.

Two Sacraments.

And moreover he ſaid, that the Maſs now uſed in the Church of England was naught, and full of Idolatry and Abomination, and againſt the Word of God; affirming alſo, that there are but two Sacraments in the Church of Chriſt, Baptiſm and the Supper of the Lord, &c. And to theſe Aſſertions, he ſaid, he would ſtand: and ſo he did to the end.

The words of Tankerfield to Boner.

And when at laſt the Biſhop began to read the ſentence, exhorting him before with many words to revoke his profeſſed opinion (which they called Damnable and Heretical) he notwithſtanding reſiſted all contrary perſwaſions, anſwering the Biſhop again in this form of words; I will not, ſaid he, forſake mine opinions, except you (my Lord) can refell them by Scriptures; and I care not for your Divinity: for you condemn all men, and prove nothing againſt them. And after many fair words of exhortation, which Boner then uſed (after his ordinary manner) to convert, or rather pervert him, he anſwered boldly again, ſaying moreover; That the Church, whereof the Pope is ſupreme head, is no part of Chriſts Catholick Church: and adding thereunto, and pointing to the Biſhop, ſpake to the People ſaying, good People beware of him, and ſuch as he is, for theſe be the People that deceive you, &c.

Theſe with other words moe he ſpake; whereupon the Biſhop, reading the ſentence of his Popiſh condemnation, gave him to the ſecular power.

The Martyrdom of George Tankerfield at S. Albans an. 1555. Aug. 26.

And ſo this bleſſed Servant of God was had to St. Albans, and there with much patience and conſtancy ended his life, the 26. day of Auguſt, for the defence of the truth, which at length will have the Victorie.

Certain notes concerning George Tankerfield, after he came to ſuffer Martyrdom at Saint Albans.

IN primis, he was brought unto St. Albans by the high Sheriff of Hertfordſhire, Maſter Edward Brocket Eſquire, and one Pulter of Hitchen, which was under Sheriff.

Item their Inn was the croſs-keyes, whereas there was great concourſe of People to ſee and hear the priſoner: among the which Multitude ſome were ſory to ſee ſo godly a man brought to be burned, others praiſed God for his conſtancie and preſeverance in the truth. Contrariwiſe, ſome there were which ſaid, it was pity he did ſtand in ſuch opinions: and others, both old Women and Men cried againſt him; one called him Heretick, and ſaid it was pity that he lived. But George Tankerfield did ſpeak unto them ſo effectually out of the Word of God, lamenting of their ignorance, and proteſting unto them his unſpotted Conſcience, that God did mollifie their hardned hearts, inſomuch that ſome of them departed out of the Chamber with weeping eyes,

Item, there came unto him a certain School-maſter (which retained unto Sir Thomas Pope Knight,) this man had a certain communication with George Tankerfield the day before he was coming towards St. Albans, as touching their Sacrament of the Altar, and other points of Papiſtical Religion: but as he urged Tankerfield with the Authority of the Doctors, wreſting them after his own will; ſo on the other ſide Tankerfield anſwered him mightily by the Scriptures, not wreſted after the mind of any man, but being interpreted after the will of the Lord Jeſus, &c. So that as he would not allow ſuch allegations as Tankerfield brought out of the Scriptures without the opinions of the Doctors; ſo again Tankerfield would not credit his Doctrine to be true, except he could confirm it by the Scriptures. In the end Tankerfield prayed him that he would not trouble him in ſuch matters, for his Conſcience was eſtabliſhed, &c. and ſo he departed from him, wiſhing him well, and proteſting that he meant him no more hurt than his own Soul.

Item, when the hour drew on apace that he ſhould ſuffer, he deſired the wine-drawer, that he might have a pint of Malmſey and a loaf, that he might eat and drink that in remembrance of Chriſts Death and Paſſion becauſe he could not have it miniſtred unto him by others in ſuch manner as Chriſt commanded, and then he kneeled down, making his confeſſion unto the Lord with all which were in the chamber with him; and after that he had prayed earneſtly unto the Lord, and had read the inſtitution of the Holy Supper by the Lord Jeſus out of the Evangeliſts, and out of St. Paul, he ſaid; O Lord, thou knoweſt it, I do not this to derogate Authority from any man, or in contempt of thoſe which are thy Miniſters, but only becauſe I cannot have it miniſtred according to thy word, &c. and when he had ſpoken theſe and ſuch like words, he received it with giving of thanks.

Item, when ſome of his Friends willed him to eat ſome meat, he ſaid he would not eat that which ſhould do others good that had more need, and that had longer time to live than he.

Item, he prayed his Hoſt to let him have a good fire in the chamber; he had ſo, and then he ſitting on a form before the fire, put off his ſhoos and hoſe, and ſtretched out his legg to the flame, and when it had touched his foot, he quickly withdrew his legg, ſhewing how the fleſh did perſwade him one way, and the Spirit another way. The fleſh ſaid, O thou fool, wilt thou burn and needeſt not? The Spirit ſaid, Be not afraid, for this is nothing in reſpect of fire eternal. The fleſh ſaid, Do not leave the company of thy Friends and acquaintance which love thee, and will let thee lack nothing. The Spirit ſaid, The company of Jeſus Chriſt and his glorious preſence doth exceed all fleſhly Friends. The fleſh ſaid, Do not ſhorten thy time, for thou mayeſt live if thou wilt much longer. The Spirit ſaid, This life is nothing unto the life in heaven which laſteth for ever, &c. And all this time the Sheriffs were at a certain Gentlemans houſe at dinner, not farr from the Town, whither alſo reſorted Knights and many Gentlemen out of the Country, becauſe his Son was married that day, and until they returned from dinner the priſoner was left with his Hoſt to be kept and looked unto. And George Tankerfield all that time was kindly and lovingly intreated of his Hoſt; and conſidering that his time was ſhort, his ſaying was, That although the day was never ſo long, yet at the laſt it ringeth to evening ſong.

Item, about two of the Clock, when the Sheriffs were returned from dinner, they brought George Tankerfield out of his Inn unto the place where he ſhould ſuffer, which is called Romeland, being a green place night unto the weſt end of the Abby Church: unto the which when he was come, he kneeled down by the ſtake that was ſet up for him, and after he had ended his prayers he aroſe, and with a joyful Faith he ſaid, that although he had a ſharp dinner, yet he hoped to have a joyful Supper in Heaven.

Item, while the Fagots were ſet about him, there came a Prieſt unto him, and perſwaded him to believe on the Sacrament of the Altar, and he ſhould be ſaved. But George Tankerfield cried out vehemently, and ſaid; I defie the Whore of Babylon, I defie the Whore of Babylon: Fie of that abominable Idol: Good People do not believe him, good People do not believe him. And then the Maior of the Town commanded to ſet fire to the Heretick, and ſaid, If he had but one load of Fagots in the whole World, he would give them to burn him. There was a certain Knight by, who went unto Tankerfield, and took him by the hand, and ſaid, Good Brother, be ſtrong in Chriſt, this he ſpake ſoftly; and Tankerfield ſaid, O Sir, I thank you, I am ſo, I thank God. Then fire was ſet unto him, and he deſired the Sheriff and all the People that they would pray for him; the moſt part did ſo. And ſo imbracing the fire, he bathed himſelf in it, and calling on the name of the Lord Jeſus he was quickly out of pain, &c.

After the Martyrdom was ended, and that he was fallen aſleep in the Lord, there were ſome ſuperſtitious old Women who did blaſphemouſly ſay, that the Devil was ſo ſtrong with him and all ſuch Hereticks as he was, that they could not feel any pain almoſt, nor yet be ſorry for their ſins.

The Hiſtory and Examinations of Robert Smith, conſtantly maintaining the truth of Gods Word, and ſuffering for the ſame in the Month of Auguſt:

Robert Smith of London, Martyr.

Robert Smith was brought unto Newgate the fifth of November, in the firſt and ſecond year of the King and Queen, by John Matthew Yeoman of the Guard of the Queens ſide, by the commandment of the Councel. This Smith firſt gave himſelf unto Service in the houſe of Sir Thomas Smith Knight, being then Provoſt of Eaton: from thence he was preferred to Windſor, having there in the Colledge a Clerkſhip of ten pound a year. Of ſtature he was tall and ſlender, active about many things, but chiefly delighting in the Art of painting, which many times, rather for his minds ſake than for any living or lucre, he did practiſe and exerciſe. In Religion he was fervent, after he had once taſted the truth; wherein he was much confirmed by the preachings and readings of one Maſter Turner of Windſor, and others. Whereupon at the coming of Queen Mary he was deprived of his Clerkſhip by her Viſitors, and not long after he was apprehended, and brought to examination before Boner, as here followeth, written and teſtified with his own hand.

Robert Smith active in the Art of painting.

Anno 1555.

The firſt Examination of Robert Smith before Biſhop Boner.

The firſt examination of Robert Smith before Biſhop Boner.

ABout 9. of the Clock in the Morning, I was among the reſt of my Brethren brought to the Biſhops houſe; and I firſt of all was brought before him into his chamber, to whom the Biſhop ſaid as followeth, after he had asked my name.

Boner. How long is it ago ſince the time that ye were confeſſed to any Prieſt?

Confeſſion not needful.

Smith. Never ſince I had years of diſcretion. For I never ſaw it needful, neither commanded of God to come to ſhew my faults to any of that ſinful number, whom ye call Prieſts.

Boner. Thou ſheweſt thy ſelf even at the firſt chop to be a rank Heretick, which being weary of painting, art entred into Divinity, and ſo fallen, through thy departing from thy Vocation, into Hereſie.

Smith. Although I have underſtanding in the ſaid occupation, yet (I praiſe God) I have had little need all my life hitherto to live by the ſame, but have lived without the ſame in mine owne houſe as honeſtly in my Vocation, as ye have lived in yours, and yet uſed the ſame better than ever you uſed the Pulpit.

Rejecto criminis ingeniosa & divina.

Boner. How long is it ago ſince ye received the Sacrament of the Altar, and what is your opinion in the ſame?

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Smith. I never received the ſame ſince I had years of diſcretion, nor never will, by Gods grace; neither do eſteem the ſame in any point, becauſe it hath not Gods ordinance, neither in name, nor in other uſage, but rather is ſet up and erected to mock God withall.

Bon. Do ye not believe that it is the very Body of Chriſt that was born of the Virgin Mary, naturally, ſubſtantially, and really, after the words of Conſecration?

Smith. I ſhewed you before it was none of Gods ordinances, as ye uſe it; then much leſs to be God, or any part of his ſubſtance, but only Bread and Wine erected to the uſe aforeſaid: yet nevertheleſs, if ye can approve it to be the Body that ye ſpake of by the Word, I will believe it; if not, I will, as I do, account it a deteſtable Idol; not God, but contrary to God and his truth.

Boneri argumentum to prove the Sacrament.

Bon. Then after many raging words and vain objections, he ſaid, there was no remedy but I muſt be burned.

Smith. Ye ſhall do no more unto me, then ye have done to better men than either of us both. But think not thereby to quench the Spirit of God, neither thereby to make your matter good. For your ſore is too well ſeen to be healed ſo privily with Blood. For even the very Children have all your deeds in deriſion; ſo that although ye patch up one place with Authority, yet ſhall it break out in forty to your ſhame.

Bon. Then after much ado, and many railing ſentences, he ſaid, throwing away the paper of mine examination; Well, even now, by my troth, even in good earneſt, if thou wilt go and be ſhriven, I will tear this paper in pieces.

Smith. To which I anſwered; it would be too much to his ſhame to ſhew it to men of diſcretion.

After which Anſwer, I was carried down to the garden with my Jayler, and there remained untill my Brother Harwood was examined; and then being again brought up before the ſaid Boner, he demanded if I agreed with Harwood in his confeſſion, upon theſe Articles following.

St. Harwood examined before the Biſhop.

Bon. What ſay you to the Catholick Church? Do ye not confeſs there is one in Earth?

Smith examined by the Biſhop.

Smith. Yes verily, I believe that there is one Catholick Church, or faithful congregation, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, is builded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, Chriſt Jeſus being the head cornerſtone? which Church in all her words and works maintaineth the word, and bringeth the ſame for her Authority, and without it doth nothing, nor ought to do, of which I am aſſured I am by grace made a member.

Bon.

Anno 1555.

Bon. Ye ſhall underſtand, that I am bound when my Brother offendeth, and will not be reconciled, to bring him before the congregation: now if your Church be the ſame, where may a man find it, to bring his Brother before the ſame?

Where was the viſible Church amongſt the Proteſtants? Where was the viſible Church amongſt the Apoſtles?

Smith. It is written in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that when the Tyrannie of the Biſhops was ſo great againſt the Church in Jury, they were fain to congregate in houſes and privie places, as they now do; and yet were they nevertheleſs the Church of God: and ſeeing they had their matters redreſſed being ſhut up in a corner, may not we do the like now adays?

Here he would not anſwer me to the Church of Jury but flyeth to the Church of the Corint.

Bon. Yea, their Church was known full well. For S. Paul writ to the Corinthians, to have the man puniſhed and excommunicate, that had committed evil with his Fathers Wife. Whereby we may well perceive it was a known Church; but yours is not known.

Smith. Then could you not perſecute it as ye do: but as ye ſay the Church of God at Corinth was manifeſt both to God, and Paul; even ſo is this Church of God in England, whom ye perſecute, both known to God, and alſo even to the very wicked, although they know not, nor will not know their truth nor converſation; yea, and your ſinful number have profeſſed their veritie, and maintained the ſame a long ſeaſon.

Bon. Well, thou ſayeſt that the Church of God was only at Corinth, when Paul writ unto them, and ſo will I put in writing, ſhall I?

How Boner layeth ſnares to catch the innocent.

Smith. I do marvel greatly, my Lord, that ye are not aſhamed to lay ſnares for your Brethren on this manner. This is now the third ſnare you have layed for me. Firſt, to make me confeſs that the Church of England is not the Church of Chriſt. Secondly, to ſay, it is not known. Thirdly, to ſay the Church of God is not univerſal, but particular: and this is not the office of a Biſhop. For if an innocent had come in your way, you would have done your beſt, I ſee, to have intangled him.

Harpſ. Well Friend, quoth one of my Lords Chaplains, you are no innocent, as it appeareth.

Smith. By the grace of God, I am that I am; and this grace in me, I hope, is not in vain.

Bon. Well, quoth my Lord, laughing; tell me, how ſayeſt thou of the Church?

The Church of Chriſt is not univerſally in one particular place.

Smith. I told you whereupon the true Church is builded, and I affirm in England to be the Congregation of God, and alſo in omnem terram, as it is written; Their ſound is gone forth into all lands, and that this is the afflicted and perſecuted Church, which ye ceaſe not to impriſon, ſlay, and kill. And in Corinth was not all the Congregation of God, but a number of thoſe holy and elect People of God. For neither Paul nor Peter were preſent at Corinth when they wrote, and yet were they of the Church of GOD as many thouſands moe, which alſo communicate in that Holy Spirit.

Bon. What call ye Catholick, and what call you Church?

Smith. Catholick is univerſal, and Church is a Congregation knit together in unity.

Then after much like vain talk, it was laid to my charge, that my fellow and I ſpake one thing. Whereof I praiſed God and was ſent again to a garden. Where after a while as my Brother Harwood and I had been together, cometh one of my Lords Chaplains, that much deſired to commune with me, demanding firſt if I were a priſoner.

Talk between Robert Smith and the Biſhops Chaplains.

Smith. I am in this fleſh a priſoner, and ſubject to my Maſter and yours; but I hope yet the Lords free man through Chriſt Jeſus.

Doct. I do much deſire to talk with you lovingly, becauſe ye are a man that I much lament, with many other ſweet words.

Abſurdity granted by the Catholicks, that the Body of Chriſt goeth into the belly, and ſo into the draught.

To which I anſwered; Sub melle latet venenum. And after much ado about his god, I compelled him to ſay, that it muſt needs enter into the belly, and ſo fall into the draught. To which he anſwered.

Doct. What Derogation was it to Chriſt, when the Jewes ſpit in his face?

Compariſon between the Jewes that ſpit in Chriſts face, and Papiſts which let him fall into the draught.

Smith. If the Jewes, being his enemies, did ſpit in his face, and we being his Friends throw him into the draught, which of us have deſerved the greateſt damnation? Then by your argument, he that doth injury to Chriſt, ſhall have a moſt plenteous Salvation.

Note this Catholick Doctrine, which reſembleth the Body of Chriſt, to the incomprehenſible Soul of man.

Doct. Then ſtart he away, and would have his humanity incomprehenſible, making a compariſon between our Soul and the Body of Chriſt, bringing in to ſerve his turn, which way Chriſt came in among his Diſciples, the Doors being ſhut?

The queſtion is not what Chriſt is able to do in the Sacrament, but what he doth therein.

Smith. Although it be ſaid, that when he came the Doors were ſhut, yet have I as much to prove, that the Doors opened at his coming, as ye have to prove he came through the Door: For that mighty GOD that brought the Diſciples out of priſon, which yet when ſearch came, were found ſhut, was able to let Chriſt in at the Door although it were ſhut: and yet it maketh not for your purpoſe; for they ſaw him, heard him, and felt him, and ſo can we not ſay ye do, neither is he in more then in one place at once. At which anſwer when he had made many ſcoffings, he departed away from me, and we were carried unto my Lords hall, where we were baited of my Lords band, almoſt all the day, until our Keeper ſeeing their miſorder, ſhut us up all in a fair chamber, while my Lord went into his Synagogue to condemn Maſter Denly and John Newman.

Robert Smith brought again before the Biſhop and the Lord Maior.

Then brought they up my Lord Mayor to hear our matter above in the chamber, and I firſt of all was called into the chamber, where my Lord intended to Sup. Where my Lord Mayor being ſet with the Biſhop and one of the Sheriffs, wine was walking on every ſide: I ſtanding before them as an out-caſt, which made me remember how Pilat and Herod were made Friends, but no man was ſory for Joſephs hurt. But after my Lord had well drunk, my Articles were ſent for and read, and he demanded whether I ſaid not, as was written?

Smith. That I have ſaid, I have ſaid, and what I have ſaid, I do mean utterly.

B. Boner excuſeth himſelf of Bloodineſs.

Boner. Well, my Lord Mayor, your Lordſhip hath heard ſomewhat, what a ſtout Heretick this is, and that his Articles have deſerved Death: Yet nevertheleſs forſomuch as they report me to ſeek Blood, and call me Bloody Boner, whereas God knoweth, I never ſought any mans Blood in all my life, I have ſtayed him from the Conſiſtory this day, whither I might have brought him juſtly: and yet here before your Lordſhip I deſire him to turn, and I will with all ſpeed diſpatch him out of trouble; and this I profeſs before your Lordſhip and all this audience.

B. Boner proved to be cruel and Bloody.

Smith. Why, my Lord, do ye put on this fair viſor before my Lord Mayor, to make him believe that ye ſeek not my Blood, to cloak your Murthers through my ſtoutneſs, as ye call it? Have ye not had my Brother Tomkins before you, whoſe hand when you had burned moſt cruelly, ye burnt alſo his Body, and not only of him but of a great many of the members of Chriſt, men that feared God, and lived vertuouſly, and alſo the Queens Majeſties moſt true Subjects, as their goods and Bodies have made manifeſt? and ſeeing in theſe Saints ye have ſhewed ſo little mercy, ſhall it ſeem to my Lord and this audience, that ye ſhew me more favour? No, no, my Lord. But if ye mean as ye ſay, why then examin ye me of that I am not bound to anſwer you unto?

Boner. Well, what ſaiſt thou by the Sacrament of the Altar? is it not the very Body of Chriſt, fleſh, Blood, and bone, as it was born of the Virgin?

By this queſtion it may appear whether the Biſhop ſought Blood or no.

Smith. I have anſwered, that it is none of Gods order, neither any Sacrament, but mans own vain invention, and ſhewed him the Lords inſtitution. But when he was ſo earneſt before the audience, declaring that we knew nothing, bringing out his Hoc eſt corpus meum, to lay in my diſh, I proved before the audience, that it was a dead god, declaring the deſtinction appointed between the two creatures of Bread and Wine, and that a Body without Blood hath no life. At which Harpsfield found himſelf much offended, and took the tale out of my Lords mouth ſaying,

The Papiſts dead god, having Body without Blood.

Harpſ. I will approve by the Scriptures, that ye blaſpheme God in ſo ſaying: for it is given in two parts, becauſe there is two things ſhewed, that is to ſay, his Body and his paſſion, as ſaith Saint Paul: and therefore is the Bread his Body, and the Wine the repreſentation of his Death and Bloodſhedding.

Smith.

Anno 1555.

Smith. Ye falſifie the Word, and rack it to ſerve your purpoſe. For the wine was not onely the ſhewing of his paſſion, but the bread alſo: for our Saviour ſaith, So oft as ye do this, do it in remembrance of me. And Saint Paul ſaith, So oft as ye eat of this bread, and drink of this cup, ye ſhall ſhew the Lords death till he come. And here is as much reverence given to the one, as to the other.

Even as the bread is the Body, ſo is the cup the Blood.

Wherefore if the bread be his Body, the cup muſt be his Blood, and as well ye make his Body in the cup, as his Blood in the bread. Then up roſe my Lord, and went to the Table, where my Lord Mayor deſired me to ſave my Soul. To whom I anſwered, I hope it was aved through Chriſt Jeſus, deſiring him to have pity on his own Soul, and remember whoſe ſword he carried.

Robert Smith commanded of Boner into Limbo.

At which I was carried into the garden, and there abode until the reſt of my Friends were examined, and ſo were we ſent away with many foul farewels to Newgate again, my Lord Biſhop giving the Keeper a charge to lay me in Limbo.

Another examination of Robert Simth before the ſaid Biſhop.

Another examination of R: Smith.

UPon Saturday at eight of the Clock, I was brought to his chamber again, and there by him examined, as followeth.

Boner begineth with an untruth:

Bon. Thou Robert Smith, &c. ſaiſt that there is no Catholick Church here on earth.

Smith. Ye have heard me both ſpeak the contrary, and ye have written as a witneſs of the ſame.

Bon. Yea, but I muſt ask thee this queſtion: how ſaiſt thou?

Smith. Muſt ye of neceſſity begin with a lie? it maketh manifeſt that ye determine to end with the ſame. But there ſhall no liars enter into the Kingdom of God. Nevertheleſs, if ye will be anſwered, ask mine Articles that were written yeſterday, and they ſhall tell you that I have confeſſed a Church of God, as well in earth as in Heaven, and yet all one Church, and one mans members, even Chriſt Jeſus.

The Church.

Bon. Well, what ſaiſt thou to auricular confeſſion? is it not neceſſary to be uſed in Chriſts Church, and wilt thou not be ſhriven of the Prieſt?

Auricular confeſſion is but a pick-purſe matter

Smith. It is not needful to be uſed in Chriſts Church, as I anſwered yeſterday. But if it be needful for your Church, it is to pick mens purſes. And ſuch pick-purſe matters is all the whole rabble of your ceremonies: for all is but money matters that ye maintain.

Boner. Why, how art thou able to prove that confeſſion is a pick-purſe matter? Art thou not aſhamed ſo to ſay?

The inconveniences of Auricular confeſſion:

Smith. I ſpeak by experience. For I have both heard and ſeen the fruits of the ſame. For firſt it hath been, we ſee, a bewrayer of Kings ſecrets, and the ſecrets of other mens conſciences; who being delivered, and glad to be diſcharged of their ſins, have given to Prieſts great ſums of money to abſolve them, and ſing Maſſes for their Souls health.

A falſe practice of a Prieſt under confeſſion.

And for enſample, I began to bring in a Pageant, that by report was played at Saint Thomas of Acres, and where I was ſometime a Child waiting on a Gentleman of Norfolk, which being bound in conſcience through the perſwaſion of the Prieſt, gave away a great ſum of his goods, and forgave unto Maſter Greſham a great ſum of money, and to another as much. The Prieſt had for his part a ſum, and the Houſe had an annuity to keep him, the which thing when his Brother heard, he came down to London, and after declaration made to the Councel, how by the ſubtilty of the Prieſt he had robbed his Wife and Children, recovered a great part again, to the value of two or three hundred pounds of Maſter Greſham and his other Friend; but what he gave to the Houſe, could not be recovered. This tale began I to tell. But when my Lord ſaw it favored not to his purpoſe, he began to revile me, and ſaid; By the Maſs, if the Queens Majeſty were of his mind, I ſhould not come to talk before any man, but ſhould be put into a ſack, and a dog tied unto the ſame, and ſo ſhould be thrown into the water.

Smith. To which I anſwered again, ſaying; I know you ſpeak by practice, as much as by ſpeculation: for both you and your predeceſſors have ſought all means poſſible to kill Chriſt ſecretly; record of Maſter Hunne, whom your predeceſſor cauſed to be thruſt in at the noſe with hot burning needles, and then to be hanged, and ſaid the ſame Hunne to have hanged himſelf: and alſo a good Brother of yours, a Biſhop of your profeſſion, having in his priſon an innocent man, whom becauſe he ſaw he was not able by the Scriptures to overcome, he made him privily to be ſnarled, and his fleſh to be torn and plucked away with a pair of pinſers, & bringing him before the People ſaid, the Rats had eaten him. Thus according to your Oath is all your dealing, and hath been; and as you, taking upon you the office, do not without Oaths open your mouth, no more do you without murder maintain your traditions.

Example of terrible cruelty ſhewed upon a poor innocent.

Boner. Ah, ye are a generation of lyars; there is not one true word that cometh out of your mouths.

Smith. Yes, my Lord, I have ſaid that Jeſus Chriſt is dead for my ſins, and riſen for my juſtification, and this is no lye.

Boner. Then made he his man to put in my tale of the Gentleman of Northfolk, and would have had me recite it again: which when I would not do, he made his man to put in ſuch ſums as he imagined. At the end of this cometh in Maſter Mordant Knight, and ſate dow to hear my examination. Then ſaid my Lord, how ſaiſt thou Smith to the ſeven Sacraments? Beleveſt thou not that they be Gods order, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of &c.

Sir John Mordant Knight.

Smith. I believe that in Gods Church are but two Sacraments, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of Regeneration, and the Sacrament of the Lords Supper: and as for the Sacrament of the Altar, and all your Sacraments, they may well ſerve your Church, but Gods Church hath nothing to do with them, neither have I any thing to do to anſwer them, nor you to examine me of them.

2: Sacraments.

Boner. Why, is Gods order changed in Baptiſm? In what point do we diſſent from the Word of God?

Baptiſm in what points it is abuſed by the Catholicks.

Smith. Firſt, in hallowing your water; in conjuring of the ſame; in Baptizing Children with anointing and ſpitting in their mouths, mingled with ſalt, and with many other lewd ceremonies, of which not one point is able to be proved in Gods order.

Boner. By the Maſs this is the moſt unſhamefac'd Heretick that ever I heard ſpeak.

Smith. Well ſworn my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner. Well, Mr. Controller, ye catch me at my words: but I will watch thee as well, I warrant thee.

Mordant. By my troth, my Lord, quoth Mr. Mordant, I never heard the like in all my life. But I pray you my Lord, mark well his anſwer for Baptiſm. He diſalloweth therein holy oyntment, ſalt, and ſuch other laudable ceremonies, which no chriſtian man will deny.

Smith. That is a ſhameful blaſphemy againſt Chriſt, ſo to uſe any mingle mangle in Baptizing young Infants.

Boner. I believe, I tell thee, that if they die before they be Baptized, they be damned.

Smith. Ye ſhall never be ſaved by that belief. But I pray you my Lord, ſhew me, are we ſaved by water, or by Chriſt?

Boner. By both.

This was ſpoken more to confound the opinion of water.

Smith. Then the water died for our ſins; and ſo muſt ye ſay, that the water hath life, and it being our Servant, and created for us, is our Saviour: this (my Lord) is a good Doctrine, is it not?

Then to ſee Children to have water.

Boner. Why, how underſtandeſt thou the Scriptures? Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

And again, Suffer (ſaith our Saviour) theſe Children to come unto me: and if thou wilt not ſuffer them to be Baptized after the laudable order, thou letteſt them to come unto Chriſt.

Smith. Where ye alledge Saint John, Except a man, &c. and will thereby prove the water to ſave, and ſo the deed or work to ſave and put away ſins, I will ſend you to Saint Paul, which aſketh of the Galathians, Whether they received the Spirit by the deeds of the Law or by the preaching of Faith? and there concludeth, that the Holy Ghoſt accompanieth the preaching of faith,

and

Anno 1555.

and with the word of faith entreth into the heart. So now if Baptiſm preach to me the waſhing in Chriſts Blood, ſo doth the Holy Ghoſt accompany it, and it is unto me as a Preacher, and not a Saviour. And where ye ſay, I let the Children to come unto Chriſt, it is manifeſt by our Saviours words, that ye let them to come, that will not ſuffer them to come to him without the neceſſitie of water. For he ſaith, Suffer them to come unto me, and not unto water, and therefore if ye condemn them, ye condemn both the merits and words of Chriſt. For our Saviour ſaith, Except ye turn and become as Children, ye cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. And ſo brought I out many other enſamples, to make manifeſt, that Chriſt hath cleanſed original ſin, bringing in enſamples out of Scriptures for the ſame.

The water of Baptiſm a Preacher and not a Saviour.

Boner. Then thou makeſt the water of none effect, and then put away water.

Smith. It is not (ſaith Saint Peter) the waſhing away of the filth of the fleſh, but in that a good conſcience conſenteth unto God. And to prove that water onely bringeth not the Holy Ghoſt, it is written in the 8 of the Acts, that Simon received water but would have received the Holy Ghoſt for money. Alſo that the Holy Ghoſt hath come before Baptiſm; it is written that John had the Holy Ghoſt in his Mothers womb. Cornelius, Paul, and the Queen of Candaces ſervant, with many others, received the Holy Ghoſt before Baptiſm. Yea, and although your generation have ſet at naught the Word of God, and like ſwine turned his Words upſide down, yet muſt his Church keep the ſame in that order which he left them, which his Church dare not break; and to judge Children damned that be not baptized, it is wicked.

The element of water in Baptiſm, bringeth not the Holy Ghoſt.

The Holy Ghoſt received of ſome before Baptiſm.

Mord. By our Lady, Sir, but I believe that if my child die without water, he is damned.

Boner. Yea, and ſo do I, and all Catholick men, good Maſter Mordant.

Smith. Well, my Lord, ſuch Catholick, ſuch ſalvation.

Boner. Well Sir, what ſay you to the Sacrament of Orders?

Smith. Ye may call it the Sacrament of miſorders: for all orders are appointed of God. But as for your ſhaving, annointing, greaſing, poling, and rounding, there are no ſuch things appointed in Gods Book, and therefore I have nothing to do to believe your orders. And as for you, my Lord, if ye had grace and intelligence, ye would not ſo disfigure your ſelf as ye do.

The Sacrament of Orders.

Boner. Saiſt thou ſo? now by my troth I will go ſhave my ſelf to anger thee withall: and ſo ſent for his Barber, which immediatly came. And before my face at the Door of the next chamber he ſhaved himſelf, deſiring me before he went, to anſwer to theſe Articles.

Boner ſhaveth himſelf in anger of Robert Smith

Boner. What ſay you to Holy Bread and Holy Water, to the Sacrament of annointing, and to all the reſt of ſuch ceremonies of the Church?

Holy Bread. Holy water. Annointing.

Smith. I ſay, they be bables for fools to play withal, and not for the Children of God to exerciſe themſeves in; and therefore they may go among the refuſe. Then went away Maſter Mordant, and my Lord went to ſhaving, leaving there certain Doctors, as he called them, to aſſay what they could do, of whom I was baited for half an hour: of whom I alſo asked this queſtion, Where were all you in the days of King Edward, that ye ſpake not that which ye ſpeak now?

Doct. We were in England.

Smith. Yea, but then ye had the faces of men, but now ye have put on Lions faces again, as ſaith S. John, Ye ſhew your ſelves as full of malice as ye may be. For ye have for every time a vizor; yea, and if another King Edward ſhould ariſe, ye would then ſay, Down with the Pope, for he is Antichriſt, and ſo are all his Angels.

Talk between R. Smith and the Doctors.

Then was I all to reviled, and ſo ſent away, and brought in again to come before theſe men; and one of them that baited me before, asked me if I diſallowed confeſſion?

Smith. To whom I anſwered, Look in mine Articles, and they ſhall ſhew you what I allow.

Doct. Your Articles confeſs that you allow not auricular confeſſion.

Smith. I allow it not, becauſe the word alloweth is not, nor commandeth it.

Doct. Why, it is written, thou ſhalt not hide thy ſins and offences.

Smith. No more do I when I confeſs them to almighty God.

Doct. Why, ye cannot ſay that ye can hide them from God, and therefore you muſt underſtand the words are ſpoken to be uttered to them that do not know them.

Smith. Ye have made a good anſwer, then muſt the Prieſt confeſs himſelf to me, as I to him. For I know his faults and ſecrets no more then he knoweth mine. But if ye confeſs you to the Prieſt, and not unto God, ye ſhall have the reward that Judas had: for he confeſſed himſelf to the Prieſt, and yet went and hanged himſelf by and by; and ſo as many as do not acknowledge their faults to God, are ſaid to hide them.

Doct. What did they that came to John to be Baptiſed?

Againſt Auricular confeſſion.

Smith. They came and confeſſed their ſins unto almighty God.

Doct. And not unto John?

Smith. If it were unto John, as ye are not able to prove, yet was it to God, before John and the whole congregation.

Confeſſing unto John in the Wilderneſs, was not to him, but before him to God.

Doct. Why, John was alone in the Wilderneſs.

Smith. Why, and yet the Scriptures ſay he had many Diſciples, and that many Phariſees and Sadducees came to his Baptiſm. Here the Scriptures and you agree not. And if they confeſſed themſelves to John, as ye ſay, it was to all the Congregation, as Saint Paul doth to Timothy, and to all that read his Epiſtle, in opening to all the hearers, that he was not worthy to be called an Apoſtle, becauſe he had been a Tyrant. But as for ear-confeſſion, ye never heard it allowed by the Word. For the Prophet David maketh his confeſſion unto God, and ſaith, I will confeſs my ſins unto the Lord. Daniel maketh his confeſſion unto the Lord; Judith, Toby, Jeremy, Manaſſeh, with all the forefathers did even ſo. For the Lord hath ſaid, Call upon me in the time of trouble, and I will deliver thee. Knock, ask, ſeek, with ſuch like; and this is the Word of God; Now bring ſome what of the Word to help your ſelf withal. Then they raged, and called me dog, and ſaid I was damned.

Smith. Nay, ye are dogs, that becauſe holy things are offered, will ſlay your Friends. For I may ſay with Saint Paul, I have fought with beaſts in the likeneſs of men. For here I have been baited theſe two days, of my Lord and his great Bulls of Baſan, and in his Hall beneath have I been baited of the reſt of his band. With this came my Lord from ſhaving, and asked me how I liked him?

Smith. Forſooth, ye are even as wiſe as ye were before ye were ſhaven.

Boner. How ſtandeth it, Maſter Doctors, have ye done any good?

Doct. No by my troth, my Lord, we can do no good.

Smith. Then it is fulfilled which is written, How can an evill tree bring forth good fruit?

Boner. Nay, naughty fellow, I ſet theſe Gentlemen to bring thee home to Chriſt.

Smith. Such Gentlemen, ſuch Chriſts; and as truely as they have that name from Chriſt, ſo truly do they teach Chriſt.

Boner. Well, wilt thou neither hear them nor me?

Smith. Yes I am compelled to hear you; but ye cannot compel me to follow you.

Boner. Well thou ſhall be burnt at a ſtake in Smithfield if thou wilt not turn.

Smith. And ye ſhall burn in hell, if ye repent not: but my Lord, to put you out of doubt, becauſe I am weary, I will ſtrain courteſie with you: I perceive you will not with yours Doctors come unto me, and I am not determined to come unto you, by Gods grace. For I have hardned my face againſt you as hard as braſs. Then after many railing ſentences I was ſent away. And thus have I left the truth of mine anſwers in writing (gentle Reader) being compelled by my Friends to do it: that ye may ſee how the Lord hath according to his promiſe given me a mouth and wiſdom to anſwer in his cauſe, for which I am condemned; and my cauſe not heard.

The marvelous boldneſs of Robert Smith, given him of God againſt Chriſts enemies.

The laſt Examination of Robert Smith.

The laſt examination of R. Smith before B. Boner, with his condemnation in the Conſiſtory.

THe tweleth of July I was with my Brethren brought into the Conſiſtory, and mine Articles read before my Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs, with all the aſſiſtants; to which I anſwered, as followeth, Boner. By my Faith, my Lord Mayor, I have ſhewed him as much favour as any man living might do: but I perceive all is loſt, both in him and all his company.

Smith. At this word which he coupled with an Oath, came I in, and taking him with the manner, ſaid, My Lord, it is written, Ye muſt not Swear.

Boner. Ah Maſter controller, are ye come? Loe, my Lord Mayor, this is Maſter Speaker, pointing to my Brother Tankerfield, and this is Maſter Controller, pointing to me. And then beginning to read my Articles, he perſevered till he came at my Tale of the Gentleman of Northfolk, and then demanded of my Lord Mayor, if he heard of the ſame before. To which he anſwered, no. To whom I anſwered:

Smith. My Lord Mayor, will it pleaſe you to hear me recite it, as I heard it, and I told it, and then ſhall you hear the truth. For this tale that my Lord hath told, is untrue.

Boner. How ſay you good Maſter Mordant, ſpake he not this is here, as it is written? were ye not by?

Sir John Mordant came in after this ſtory was told.

Mord. Yes, my Lord, that it is: I heard him ſay it.

Smith. How heard you me ſay it, and were not preſent when I ſpake it? ſhould ſuch a man make a lie? it is manifeſtly proved that the Prophet ſaith; Even as the King ſaith, ſo ſaith the Judge, that he may do him a pleaſure again. And ſo was brought out my goaler for trial thereof, who there openly profeſſed, that neither Mr. Mordant nor the Doctors before mentioned were preſent when I ſpake it. At which Maſter Mordant with bluſhing cheeks, ſaid, he heard them read, and heard me affirm the ſame, which was alſo not true. Then proceeded my Lord with the reſt of mine Articles, demanding of me, if I ſaid not as was written. To which I anſwered, No: and turning to my Lord Mayor, I ſaid, I require you, my Lord Mayor, in Gods behalf, unto whom pertaineth your ſword and juſtice, that I may here before your preſence anſwer to theſe objections that are laid againſt me, and have the probation of the ſame; and if any thing that I have ſaid or will ſay, to be proved (as my L. ſaith) Hereſie, I ſhall not onely with all my heart forſake the ſame, and cleave to the truth, but alſo recant whereſoever ye ſhall aſſign me, and all this audience ſhall be witneſs to the ſame.

The words of Rob. Smith to the Lord Mayor.

Mayor. Why Smith, thou canſt not deny, but this thou ſaidſt.

Smith. Yes my Lord, I deny that which he hath written, becauſe he hath both added to, and diminiſhed from the ſame: But what I have ſpoken, I will never deny.

Mayor. Why, thou ſpakeſt againſt the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar,

Here my Brother Tankerfield recited the ſtory of my L. Biſhops Cook.

Smith. I denied it to be any Sacrament, and I do ſtand here to make probation of the ſame; and if my Lord here or any of his Doctors be able to approve either the name or uſage of the ſame, I will recant mine errour. Then ſpake my Brother Tankerfield, and defended the probation of things, which they called Hereſie: to the which the Biſhop anſwered.

Bon. By my troth, Maſter Speaker, ye ſhall preach at a ſtake.

Smith. Well ſworn, my Lord, ye keep a good watch.

Boner no Saint.

Boner. Well, Maſter Controller, I am no Saint.

Smith. No, my Lord, nor yet good Biſhop. For a Biſhop, ſaith S. Paul, ſhould be faultleſs, and a dedicate veſſell unto God; and are ye not aſhamed to ſit in judgment, and be a blaſphemer, condemning Innocents?

Bon. Well, Maſter Controller, ye are faultleſs.

This Mayor Sir John Lyon.

Smith. My Lord Mayor, I require you in Gods Name, that I may have Juſtice. We be here to day a great many of Innocents that are wrongfully accuſed of Hereſie. And I require you, if you will not ſeem to be partial, let me have no more favor at your hands, then the Apoſtle had at the hands of Feſtus and Agrippa, which being Heathen and Infidels, gave him leave not onely to ſpeak for himſelf, but alſo heard the probation of his cauſe. This require I at your hands, which being a Chriſtian Judge, I hope will not deny me that right, which the Heathen have ſuffered: if ye do, then ſhall all this audience, yea, and the Heathen ſpeak ſhame of your fact. For a City (ſaith our Saviour) that is builded on a hill cannot be hid: if they therefore have the truth, let it come to light. For all that well do, come to the light, and they that do evil hate the light.

Anno 1555.

Here my Brother Tankerfield pulled out of his boſom a Teſtament, requiring judgement by the ſame, but it would not be heard

Then my Lord Mayor hanging down his head, ſaid nothing, but the Biſhop told me, I ſhould preach at a Stake, and ſo the Sheriff cryed, with the Biſhop, away with me.

This Sheriff was Maſter Woodroſe.

Thus came I in before them four times, deſiring Juſtice, but could have none: and at length my Friends requiring with one voyce the ſame, and could not have it, we had ſentence, and then being carried out, were brought in again, and had it every man ſeverally given. But before the Biſhop gave me ſentence, he told me in deriſion of my Brother Tankerfield, a tale between a Gentleman and his Cook. To which I anſwered, My Lord, ye fill the Peoples eares with fantaſies and fooliſh tales, and make a laughing matter at Blood; but if ye were a true Biſhop, ye ſhould leave theſe railing ſentences, and ſpeak the words of God.

Juſtice required in the Biſhops conſiſtory but could not be had.

Boner. Well, I have offered to that naughty fellow, M. Speaker, your companion the Cook, that my Chancellor ſhould here inſtruct him, but he hath here with great diſdain forſaken it. How ſayeſt thou, wilt thou have him inſtruct thee, and lead thee in the right way?

Smith. My Lord, if your Chancellor ſhall do me any good, and take any pains, as ye ſay, let him take mine Articles in his hands, that ye have objected againſt me, and either prove one of them Hereſie, or any thing that you do to be good: and if he be able ſo to do, I ſtand here with all my heart to hear him; if not, I have no need, I praiſe God, of his Sermon: for I come to anſwer for my life, and not to hear a Sermon.

A lawful requeſt not heard.

Then began the ſentence, In Dei nomine. To which I anſwered, that he began in a wrong name, requiring of him, where he learned in Scriptures to give ſentence of death againſt any man for his conſcience ſake. To the which he made no anſwer, but went forward to the end, and immediately cried, Away with him. Then I turned me to the Mayor, and, ſaid, Is it not enough for you my Lord Mayor, and ye that are the Sheriffs, that ye have left the ſtraight way of the Lord, but that ye muſt condemn Chriſt cauſeleſs?

The Biſhops ſentence beginneth with a wrong name; Where find the Catholicks in the Scripture to put any to death for their conſcience ſake?

Boner. Well, Maſter Controller, now ye cannot ſay, but I have offered you fair, to have inſtruction. And now I pray thee, call me Bloody Biſhop, and ſay, I ſeek thy Blood.

Smith. Well, my Lord, although neither I, nor any of this congregation do report the truth of your fact, yet ſhall theſe ſtones cry it out, rather then it ſhall be hidden.

Boner. Away with him, away with him.

Woodroſe. Away with him, take him away.

Smith. Well, good Friends, ye have ſeen and heard the great wrong that we have received this day, and ye are all records that we have deſired the probation of our cauſe by Gods Book, and it hath not been granted: but we are condemned, and our cauſe not heard. Nevertheleſs, my Lord Mayor, for as much as here ye have excerciſed Gods ſword cauſeleſs, and will not hear the right of the poor. I commit my cauſe to Almighty God, that ſhall judge all men according unto right, before whom we ſhall both ſtand without Authority; and there will I ſtand in the right, and have true judgment, to your great confuſion, except ye repent, which the Lord grant you to do, if it be his will. And then was I with the reſt of my Brethren carried away to Newgate.

Robert Smith wrongfully condemned by the Biſhop. The words of Robert Smith again to the Lord Mayor.

Thus, gentle Reader, as near as I can, I have ſet out the truth of my examination, and the verity of mine unjuſt condemnation for the truth, requiring God that it may not be laid to the charge of thee, O England, requiring your hearty prayers unto God for his grace and and ſpirit of boldneſs; with hope even ſhortly to ſet to my Seal, at Uxbridge, the 8*th* of Auguſt, by Gods grace: pray that it may be his honour, my ſalvation, and your conſolation, I pray you.

Da gloriam Deo.

Robert Smith.

Thus haſt thou (good Reader) not only to note, but alſo to follow in this man a ſingular example of Chriſtian fortitude, which ſo manfully and valiantly did ſtand in the defence of his Maſters cauſe. And as thou ſeeſt him here boldly ſtand in examination before the Biſhop and Doctors; ſo was he no leſs comfortable alſo in the Priſon among his fellows. Which alſo is to be obſerved no leſs in his other Priſon fellows, who being there together caſt in an outward houſe within Newgate, had godly confererice with themſelves, with daily praying and publick reading, which they to their great comfort uſed in that houſe together; amongſt whom this foreſaid Smith was chief doer. Whoſe induſtry was always ſollicitous, not only for them of his own company, but alſo his diligence was careful for other Priſoners, whom he ceaſed not to dehort and diſſwade from their old accuſtomed iniquity; and many he converted unto his Religion. Divers Letters he wrote there in Priſon to ſundry his Friends, partly in metre, and partly in proſe. And firſt in metre as followeth.

The godly behaviour of Robert Smith and his Fellows in Priſon.

A Picture deſcribing the manner and place of them which were in bonds for the Teſtimony of the truth, conferring among themſelves.

O ye that love the Lord, ſee that ye hate the thing that is evil.

THe God that giveth life and light,
And leadeth into reſt:
That breaketh bonds aud bringeth out
The poor that are oppreſt.
And keepeth mercy for the meek,
His treaſure and his ſtore:
Increaſe thy life in perfect love,
Both now and evermore.
That as thou haſt begun to ground
In faith and fervent love:
Thou maiſt be made a mighty Mount,
That never may remove.
That thine enſample may be ſhewed
Among all thine increaſe:
That they may live and learn the like,
And paſs their time in peace.
Thy ſalutations that were ſent,
I heartily retain:
And ſend thee ſeventy times as much,
To thee and thine again.
And now becauſe I know the goal,
That thou doſt moſt deſire:
I ſend thee here a paper full,
Is fined in the fire:
In hope thou wilt accept it well,
Although it be but ſmall:
Becauſe I have no other good,
To make amends withal.
For all thy free and friendly facts,
Which thy good will hath wrought,
I ſend thee ſurely for a ſhift
The thing that coſt me nought.
Abſtain from all ungodlineſs,
In dread direct your days:
Poſſeſs not ſin in any wiſe,
Beware of wicked ways.
Hold faſt your Faith unfeignedly,
Build as you have begun:
And arm your ſelf in perfect Faith,
To do as ye have done.
Leſt that the wicked make a mock,
That ye have taken in hand,
In leaving of the perfect Rock,
To build upon the Sand.
Beware theſe filthy Phariſees,
Their building is in Blood:
Eat not with them in any wiſe,
Their Leaven is not good.
Their Salt is all unſavoury:
And under good intents
They maintain all their knavery,
And murder Innocents.
They ſeek to ſit in Chriſt his ſeat,
And put him out of place:
And make all means that may be made
His doings to deface.
They keep him down with bills and bats,
That made the blind to ſee:
They make a god for Mice and Rats,
And ſay the ſame is he.
They ſhew like Sheep, and ſweat like Wolves,
Their baits be all for blood:
They kill and ſlay the ſimple Souls,
And rob them of their good.

And

Anno 1555.

The dark illuſions of the Devil
Have dimmed ſo their eyes,
That they cannot abide the Truth,
To ſtir in any wiſe.
And if ye keep the perfect path,
(As I have hope you do)
Ye ſhall be ſure to have ſuch ſhame,
As they may put you to.
For, all that lead a godly life,
ſhall ſurely ſuffer loſs:
And eke the world will ſeek their ſhame,
And make them kiſs the Croſs.
Ye ſhall be killed all ſaith Chriſt,
Your ſorrows ſhall not ceaſe:
And yet in your afflictions,
I am your perfect peace.
For in the world ye ſhall have wo:
Becauſe ye are unknown:
And eke becauſe ye hate the world,
The world will love his own.
Be fervent therefore to the death,
Againſt all their decrees:
And God ſhall ſurely fight for thee
Againſt thine Enemies.
Commit your cauſe unto the Lord,
Revenge not any evil:
And thou ſhalt ſee the wicked want,
When thou ſhalt have thy will.
For all afflictions that may fall,
That they can ſay or do:
They are not ſure of the wealth,
That we attain unto.
For I have ſeen the Sinners ſpread
Their branches like a Bay:
And yet ere one could turn his head,
Were withered clean away.

Beware that mony make ye not
In riches to ariſe
Againſt the goodnoſs of the Lord,
Among the worldly wiſe.
For many miſchiefs it hath made,
That may not be expreſt:
And many evils it hath begun,
Which may not be redreſt.
For money maketh many a one,
In riches to rebel:
And he that maketh Gold a god,
He hath a Soul to ſell.
It maketh Kings to kill and ſlay,
And waſte their wits in war;
In leaving of the Wolf at home,
To hunt the Fox afar.
And where they ſhould ſee juſtice done,
And ſet their Realm in reſt:
By mony they be made a mean
To ſee the poor oppreſt.
It maketh Lords obey the Laws,
That they do ill and nought:
It maketh Biſhops ſuck the Blood,
That God hath dearly bought.
And where they ſhould be faithful friends,
And Fathers to their flock:
By money they do turn about,
Even like a Weather-cock.
The Prieſt doth make a mony mean,
To have again his whores,
To put away his wedded Wife,
And Children out of doors.
It holdeth back the husbandman,
Which may not be forborn:
And will not ſuffer him to ſow,
And caſt abroad his Corn.
In like caſe it doth let again,
When that the ſeed they ſow:
It choaketh up the Corn again,
So that it cannot grow.
The husband he would have a wife,
With Nobles new and old:
The wife would have the husband hang'd,
That ſhe might have his gold.
It maketh murtherers many a one,
And beareth much with blood:
The Child would ſee the Parents ſlain,
To ſeiſe upon their good.
And though it be a bleſſed thing,
Created in the kind:
It is a neceſſary evil,
Annexed to the mind.
For whoſo playeth with the Pitch,
His fingers are defiled:
And he that maketh Gold a god,
Shall ſarely be beguiled.
Be friendly to the fatherleſs,
And all that are oppreſt:
Aſſiſt them always out of hand,
And ſee them ſet at reſt.
In all your doings and your deeds
Let mercy ſtill remain:
For with the meaſure that ye mete,
Shall ye be met again.
Be always lowly in your life,
Let love enjoy her own:
The higheſt Trees are ſeldom ſure,
And ſooneſt overthrown.
The Lions lack and ſuffer ſore,
In hunger and in thirſt:
And they that do oppreſs the poor,
Continue ſtill accurſt.
The Bee is but a little beaſt
In body or in ſight:
And yet ſhe bringeth more increaſe,
Than either Crow or Kite.
Therefore beware in any wiſe,
Keep well your watch alway:
Be ſure of Oil within your lamp,
Let not your light decay.
For Death deſpiſeth them that lack,
And hateth them that have:
And treadeth down the rich and poor
Together in the grave.
Exhort your Children to be chaſt,
Rebuke them for their ill:
And let them not at any wiſe
Be wedded to their will.
Laugh not with them, but keep them low
Shew them no merry chear:
Leſt thou do weep with them alſo,
But bring them up in fear.
And let your light and living ſhine,
That ye be not ſuſpect;
To have the ſame within your ſelf,
For which they are correct.
Be meek and modeſt in a mean,
Let all your deeds be done:
That they which are without the Law,
May ſee how right ye run.
Keep well the member in your mouth,
Your Tongue ſee that ye tame:
For out of little ſparks of fire
Proceedeth out a flame.
And as the poyſon doth expreſs,
The natures of the Toad:
Even ſo the Tongue doth manifeſt
The heart that feareth God.
For therewith bleſs we God above,
And therewith curſe we men:
And thereby murders do ariſe,
Through women now and then.
And ſeeing God hath given a Tongue,
And put it under power:
The ſureſt way it is to ſet
A watch before the door.
For God hath ſet you in a ſeat,
Of double low degree:
Firſt unto God, and then to man,
A ſubject for to be.
I write not that I ſee in you
Theſe things to be ſuſpect:
But only ſet before your face,
How ſin ſhould be correct.
For fleſh and blood I know ye are,

Anno 1555.

As other women be:
And if ye dwell in fleſh and blood,
There is infirmity.
Receive a warning willingly,
That to thy teeth is told:
Accompt the gift of greater price
Than if he gave thee gold.
A wiſe man, ſaith Solomon,
A warning will imbrace:
A fool will ſooner (as ſaith he)
Be ſmitten on the face.
And as your members muſt be dead
From all things that are vain:
Even ſo by baptiſm ye are born
To live with Chriſt again.
Thus farewel free and faithful friend:
The Lord that is above
Increaſe in thee a perfect faith,
And lead thee in his love.
And as I pray with perfect love,
And pour out bitter tears
For you and all that are at large
Abroad among the briers:
Even ſo I pray thee to prefer
My perſon and my bands,
Unto the everlaſting God
That hath me in his hands.
That I may paſs out of this pond,
Wherein I am oppreſt:
Incloſed in a clod of clay,
That here can have no reſt.
That as he hath begun in me
His mercies many one,
I may attain to overtake,
My brethren that be gone.
That when the death ſhall do his worſt
Where he ſhall point a place,
I may be able like a man
To look him in the face.
For though he catch away my cloak,
My body into duſt:
Yet am I ſure to have a ſoul,
When death hath done his worſt.
And though I leave a little duſt
Diſſolved without blood:
I ſhall receive it ſafe again,
When God ſhall ſee it good.
For my Redeemer I am ſure
Doth live for evermore,
And ſitteth high upon the heavens,
For whom I hunger ſore.
Even as the Deer with deadly wounds
Eſcaped from the ſpoil,
Doth haſt by all the means he may
To ſeek unto the ſoyl.
Of whom I hope to have a crown,
That always ſhall remain:
And eke enjoy a perfect peace,
For all my wo and pain.
The God that giveth all increaſe,
And ſeeketh ſtill to ſave,
Abound in thee that perfect peace,
Which I do hope to have.
And I beſeech the living God
To hold thee in his hands:
And wiſh thee even with all my heart,
The bleſſing of my hands.
Which I eſteem of higher price
Than pearl or precious ſtone:
And ſhall endure for evermore,
When earthly things are gone.
For though the fire do conſume
Our treaſure and our ſtore:
Yet ſhall the goodneſs of the Lord
Endure for evermore.
And where thou art a friend to him
That is to me full dear,
That God of might make thee amends,
When all men ſhall appear.
That hath ſhewed mercy to the meek,
And rid them out of pain.
And thus the Lord poſſeſs thy ſpirit,
Till we do meet again.

If thou wilt have a recompence,
Abide ſtill in obedience.

The Exhortation of Robert Smith unto his Children, commonly ſet out in the name of Mr. Rogers.

Give ear my Children to my words, Prov. 5.
Whom God hath dearly bought:
Lay up my Law within your heart,
And print it in your thought.
For I your Father have foreſeen
The frail and filthy way,
Which fleſh and blood would follow fain
Even to their own decay.
For all and every living beaſt,
Their crib do know full well: Eſay 1.
But Adams heirs, above the reſt,
Are ready to rebel:
And all the creatures on the earth,
Full well can keep their way:
But man above all other beaſts,
Is apt to go aſtray. Sap. 2.
For earth and aſhes is his ſtrength,
His glory and his raign:
And unto aſhes at the length,
Shall he return again.
For fleſh doth flouriſh like a flower, Gen. 3.
And grow up like a graſs,
And is conſumed in an hour,
As it is brought to paſs.
In me the image of your years,
Your treaſure and your truſt:
Whom ye do ſee before your face,
Diſſolved into duſt.
For as you ſee your fathers fleſh
Converted into clay:
Even ſo ſhall ye my children dear,
Conſume and wear away. 2 Pet. 3.
The ſun and moon, and eke the ſtars,
That ſerve the day and night:
The earth and every earthly thing
Shall be conſumed quite.
And all the worſhip that is wrought Sap. 13.
That have been heard or ſeen,
Shall clean conſume and come to nought
As it had never been.
Therefore that ye may follow me,
Your faſher and your friend,
And enter into that ſame life, John 7.
Which never ſhall have end.
I leave you here a little book,
For you to look upon:
That you may ſee your fathers face,
When I am dead and gone.
Who for the hope of heavenly things, 1 Cor. 2.
While he did here remain,
Gave over all his golden years,
In priſon and in pain.
Where I among mine iron bands,
Incloſed in the dark,
Not many days before my death,
Did dedicate this work
To you mine heirs of earthly things
Which I have left behind:
That ye may read and underſtand,
And keep it in your mind.
That as you have been heirs of that
Which once ſhall wear away:
Even ſo ye may poſſeſs the part
Which never ſhall decay.
In following of your fathers foot,
In truth and eke in love: 1 Tob. 1.
That ye may alſo be his heirs
For evermore above.

And ye enjoy the land,
I do beſeech the living God
To hold you in his hand.
Farewel my children from the world
Where ye muſt yet remain:
The Lord of Hoſts be your defence,
Till we do meet again.
Farewel my love, and loving wife,
My children, and my friends:
I hope to God to have you all,
When all things have their ends.
And if you do abide in God,
As ye have now begun:
Your courſe I warrant will be ſhort,
Ye have not far to run.
God grant you ſo to end your years
As he ſhall think it beſt:
That ye may enter into heaven,
Where I do hope to reſt.

Written at the Requeſt of a Lady in her Book.

IF you will walk the way
That Chriſt hath you aſſign'd:
Then learn this little verſe,
Which I have left behind.
Be fervent in the truth,
Although it bear the blame:
And eke apply your youth,
To ſtick unto the ſame.
That when old age is come,
And death begins to call:
The truth may be your ſtaff,
To ſtay you up withal.
And though it bring rebuke,
And cauſe you kiſs the croſs:
Yet is it a reward,
To all that ſuffer loſs.
For here we do lay out
The things that be but vain:
But we are ſure to reap
The things that do remain.
For all that ye do loſe,
Is but a ſinful ſlime,
And like unto a roſe,
That tarrieth but a time.
But if ye carry Chriſt,
And walk the perfect way,
Ye ſhall poſſeſs the gold,
That never ſhall decay.
And all your fathers goods
Shall be your recompence:
If ye confeſs the word,
With double diligence.
Not only for to hear
His pure and perfect word,
But alſo to embrace
The fire and eke the ſword.
And if ye keep this path,
And do not run a crook,
Then ſhall ye meet the man
That writ this in your Book,
In that eternal joy,
That always ſhall remain:
Thus farewel faithful friend,
Till we do meet again.

TEach me, O Lord, to walk thy ways,
My living to amend,
And I ſhall keep it all my days,
Even to my lives end.
Give me a mind to underſtand,
So ſhall I never ſtart:
But I ſhall keep all thy precepts,
Even wholly with my heart.
Make me to go a perfect pace
In that I have begun:
For all my love and my delight,
Is in thy ways to run.
Encline my heart unto thy ways,
Set thou thereon my thought:
And let me not conſume my days,
To covet that is naught.
O quicken me in all thy ways,
The world now to deſpiſe:
And from all fond and fooliſh toyes,
Turn thou away mine eyes.
O plant in me thy perfect Word,
Which is to me ſo dear:
Lay up thy Laws within my heart,
To keep me ſtill in fear.
And rid me of that great rebuke
Which I do fear full ſore:
For all thy judgments and thy law
Endure for evermore.
Behold, O Lord, in thy precepts,
Is all my whole delight:
O quicken me in all thy ways,
That I may walk aright.

To his Brother.

AS Nature doth me bind,
Becauſe thou art my blood,
According to my kind
To give thee of my good.
That thou maiſt have in mind
How I have run my race,
Although thou bide behind
But for a little ſpace.
I give thee here a pearl,
The price of all my good,
For which I leave my life,
To buy it with my blood.
More worth then all the world,
Or ought that I can note,
Although it be yclad
In ſuch a ſimple coat.
For when I had obtained
This pearl of ſuch a price,
Then was I ſure I gained
The way for to be wiſe.
It taught me how to fight,
My fleſh for to deſpiſe,
To ſtick unto the light,
And eke to leave the lies.
In ſending out my ſeed
With bonds and bitter tears,
That I might reap with joy
In everlaſting years.
And have for all my loſs
My travail and my pain,
A thouſand times and more
Of better goods again.
And for becauſe the good
That hath been got and gained,
And that the Lords elect
Hath evermore obtained,
Is cloſed in this book
Which I do give to thee:
Wherein I have my part,
As thou thy ſelf maiſt ſee.
In which I hope thou haſt
A ſtock alſo in ſtore:
And will not ceaſe to ſail
Till God hath made it more.
I will thee to beware,
Be ſure thou keep it well:
For if thou do it loſe,
Thy part ſhall be in hell.
And here I teſtifie
Before the living God,
That I deteſt to do
The things that are forbod.
And as my judgment is,
My body to be brent,
My heart is ſtirely ſet
Therewith to be content.
And ſith it is his will,
To put in me his power,
Upon his holy hill
To fight againſt this whore,
Full well I am content,
If he allow it ſo,
To ſtand with all my might
The whore to overthrow.
Even with a willing mind,
The death I will outface:
And as I am aſſured,
The battel to embrace.
That they which hear the truth;
How I have paſt the pike,
May ſet aſide their youth,
And learn to do the like.

And though it be my lot, to let her ſuck my blood,
Yet am I well aſſured, it ſhall do her no good.
For ſhe is ſet to kill the things ſhe thinks accurſt,
And ſhall not have her fill of blood until ſhe burſt.
And when as thou ſhalt ſee, or hear of my deceaſe,
Pray to the living God, that I may paſs in peace.
And when I am at reſt, and rid out of my pain:
Then will I do the like for thee to God again.
And to my woful wife, and widow deſolate,
Whom I do leave behind, in ſuch a ſimple ſtate,
And compaſſed with tears, and mournings many one;
Be thou her ſtaying ſtaff when I am dead and gone.
My mouth may not expreſs the dolors of my mind:
Nor yet my heavineſs to leave her here behind.
But as thou art my bone, my brother and my blood,
So let her have thy heart if it may do her good.
I took her from the world, and made her like the croſs:
But if ſhe hold her own, ſhe ſhall not ſuffer loſs.
For where ſhe had before a man unto her make,
That by the force of fire was ſtrangled at a ſtake,
Now ſhall ſhe have a King to be her helping hand:
To whom pertain all things that are within the land.
And eke my daughter dear, whom I bequeath to thee,
To be brought up in fear, and learn the A B C.
That ſhe may grow in grace, and ruled by the rod:
To learn and lead her life within the fear of God.
And always have in mind, thy brother being dead,
That thou art left behind a father in my ſtead.
And thou my brother dear, and eke my mothers ſon,
Come forth out of all fear, and do as I have done,
And God ſhall be thy guide, and give thee ſuch increaſe,
That in the flames of fire thou ſhalt have perfect peace.
Into eternal joy, and paſs out of all pain:
Where we ſhall meet with mirth, and never part again.

If thou wilt do my daughter good,
Be mindful of thy brothers blood.

To all which love God unfeignedly, and intend to lead a godly life according to his Goſpel, and to perſevere in his Truth unto the end: grace and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

This Letter is thought of ſome to be Mr. Hooper's, partly for that in one Copy amongſt diverſ, it is intituled unto him: and alſo by the phraſe and manner of writing, it may be well conjectured ſo to be.

BE not afraid, moſt dearly beloved in our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, at theſe moſt perillous days, wherein by the ſufferance of God, the Prince of darkneſs is broken looſe, and rageth in his Members againſt the Elect of God with all cruelty, to ſet up again the Kingdom of Antichriſt: againſt whom, ſee that ye be ſtrong in faith to reſiſt his moſt devilliſh doctrine with the pure Goſpel of God, arming your ſelves with patience, to abide whatſoever ſhall be laid to your charge for the Truths ſake, knowing that thereunto ye be called, not only to believe in him, but alſo to ſuffer for him. Oh how happy are ye that in the ſight of God are counted worthy to ſuffer for the teſtimony of Chriſt? Quiet therefore your ſelves, O my loving Brethren, and rejoyce in him for whom ye ſuffer: for unto you do remain the unſpeakable joyes, which neither the eye hath ſeen, nor the ear hath heard, neither the heart of man is able to comprehend in

As he will not alter the ſubſtance of his fleſh into the ſubſtance of bread, no more will he alter the ſhape of his body into the form of bread. There cannot be a greater abſurdity againſt the truth, than to think that he would leave the ſhape that he took in the Virgins womb, being an accident unto his manhood, and joyn unto the ſame a Wafer-cake baken in an Oven, or between a pair of Irons. He that hath the Popes Curſe for the Truth, is ſure of Chriſts Bleſſing. Well then, my Brethren, what ſhall now let? but that ye go forward as ye have begun? Nay, rather run with the runners, that ye may obtain the appointed glory. Hold on the right way, look not back, have the eye of your heart fixed upon God, and ſo run, that ye may get hold of it. Gospel, where they be suffered to grow. They are burdens of the Flesh, which encumber the Soul. Exchange them therefore for advantage. Doth not he gain, that findeth heavenly and immortal treasure, for earthly and corruptible riches? Loseth that Man any thing, which of his carnal Father and Mother is forsaken, when therefore he is received of God the Father to be his Child and Heir in Christ? Heavenly for Earthly, for Mortal Immortal, for transitory things permanent, is great gains to a Christian Conscience.

Phil. 3. Luke 8. 14. Rom. 7. Ephes. 1. Gal. 4. Phil. 3.

Therefore, as I began, I exhort you in the Lord, not to be afraid. Shrink not my Brethren, mistrust not God, be of good comfort, rejoyce in the Lord, hold fast your faith, and continue to the end. Deny the World, and take up your Cross, and follow him which is your leadsman, and is gone before. If you suffer with him, you shall raign with him. What way can you glorifie the Name of your Heavenly Father better, than by suffering death for his Sons sake? What a spectacle shall it be to the World to behold so godly a fellowship as you servants of God, in so just a quarrel as the Gospel of Christ is, with so pure a Conscience, so strong a Faith, and so lively a hope, to offer your selves to suffer most cruel torments of the hands of Gods enemies, and so to end your days in peace, to receive in the resurrection of the Righteous, life everlasting?

Heb. 6. 2 Cor. 2.

Be strong therefore in your battel: The Lord God is on your side, and his truth is your cause; and against you be none, but the enemies of the Cross of Christ, as the Serpent and his seed, the Dragon with his Tail, the marked Men of the beast, the off-spring of the Pharisees, the congregation malignant, the generation of Vipers, Murderers, as their father the devil hath been from the beginning. To conclude, such are they as the Lord God hath always abhorred, and in all ages resisted and overthrown. God, from whom nothing is hid, knoweth what they are. He that searcheth the Hearts of Men, he hath found out them to be crafty, subtile, full of poyson, proud, disdainful, stiffnecked, devourers, raveners, and barkers against the truth, filthy and shameless: and therefore doth the Spirit of God, by the mouths of his holy Prophets and Apostles, call them by the names of Foxes, Serpents, Cockatrices, Lions, Leopards, Buls, Bears, Wolves, Dogs, Swine, Beasts, teaching us thereby to understand, that their natural inclination is: to deceive, Poison, and destroy (as much as in them lieth) the faithful and elect of God, But the Lord with his right Arm shall defend his little Flock against the whole rabblement of these Worldlings, which have conspired against him: he hath numbred all the hairs of his Childrens head, so that one of them shall not perish without his Fatherly Will. He keepeth the sparrows, much more will he preserve them whom he hath purchased with the Blood of the immaculate Lamb. He will keep them unto the hour appointed, wherein the Name of God shall be glorified in his Saints. In the mean time let them work their Wills, let them envy, let them malign, let them Blaspheme, let them curse, ban, betray, whip, scourge, hang, and burn: for by these means God will try his elect as Gold in the Furnace; and by these fruits, shall they also bring themselves to be known what they be, for all their sheeps skins. For as he that in suffering patiently for the Gospel of God, is thereby known to be of Christ; even so likewise is the persecutor of him known to be a member of Antichrist. Besides this, their extream cruelty shall be a mean the sooner to provoke God to take pity upon his servants, and to destroy them that so tyrannously entreat his People; as we may learn by the histories, as well in the bondage of Israel under Pharaoh in Egypt, as also in the miserable captivity of Judah in Babylon: Where, when the people of God were in most extream thraldom, then did the Lord stretch forth his mighty power to deliver his servants. Though God for a time suffer them to be exalted in their own pride, yet shall they not scape his vengeance. They are his rods, and when he hath worn them to the stumps, then will he cast them into the fire; this shall be their final reward. Our duty is the mean while patiently to abide the will of God, which worketh all things for the best.

Heb. 11. Phil 3. Matth. 3. John. 8. Psal. 34. Heb. 4. Jude 1. Psal. 76. Matth. 20. Luke 21. Matth. 10. 1 Pet. 2. Matth. 10. Sapien. 3. Psal. 7. Exod. 13. Esd. 3. 15. 2 Macch. 7. Jacob. 4. 1 Pet. 5. Apoc. 9. Heb. 12. Jacob. 2.

Thus dealeth he with us, partly for our trial, partly also for our sins, which we most grievously have committed to the great slander of his Gospel, whereby the Name of God was evil spoken of among his enemies: for the which he now punisheth us with his fatherly corrections in this World, that we should not be damned with the World. By this means seeketh he his sheep that were lost, to bring them home to the fold again. By this way seeketh he to reform us, that we may be like unto him after the Image of his Son Jesus Christ, in all holiness and righteousness before him. Finally, this way useth his Godly Wisdom, to make us thereby to know him, and our selves in him, that aforetime had in a manner forgotten him, praised be his Name therefore. And as for those Balaamites which now molest us, commit them to the hands of God, give him the vengeance, and he will reward them. Fall ye to prayer, and let these belly-gods prate. For he is in Heaven, and sleepeth not, that keepeth Israel. He is in Heaven that made the Seas calm, when the Disciples were afraid. Let us now faithfully call upon him, and he will hear us. Let us cry unto the Lord, for he is gracious and merciful. When we are in trouble he is with us, he will deliver us, and he will glorifie us. If we come unto him, we shall find him turned unto us. If we repent us of our wickedness done against him, then shall he take away the plague that he hath devised against us.

2 Cor. 12. Ezdras 3. 6. Rom. 1. 1 Cor. 11. Luke 15. Ephes. 4. Ose 13. Rom. 12. Phil. 2. Luke 8. Mark 4. Psal. 8. Psal. 4. Jeremy 12. Jeremy 18.

Let us therefore earnestly repent, and bring forth the worthy fruits of repentance. Let us study to be his, then shall we not need to fear what these hypocrites do against us, which with their pretensed holiness deceive the hearts of the simple, and abuse the authority of God in his Princes, causing them (by their procurement) to testifie their ambitious Prelacy, and to erect up their Idol again with the Romish Mass. God, in whose hands are the hearts of Kings, open the heart of the Queens Highness to espy them out what they be, and so to weed them out, that they no longer be suffered to trouble the Congregation of God, and to poyson the Realm with Pope-holy Doctrine. God almighty for his Son Jesus Christs sake deliver the Queens Highness and this her Church and Realm, from these proud Prelates, which are as profitable in the Church of Christ as a Polecat in the middest of a warren of Conies.

Matth. 12. Job. 12. Prov. 15. 22. Psal. 24. 36.

To conclude, my brethren, I commit you to God, and to the power of his word: which is able to establish you in all truth. His spirit be with you, and work alway that ye may be mindful of your duties towards him, whose ye are both Body and Soul. Whom see that ye love, serve, dread, and obey, above all worldly powers, and for nothing under the Heavens defile your Conscience before God. Dissemble not with his word; God will not be mocked, nay they that dissemble with him, deceive themselves. Such shall the Lord deny, and cast out at the last day: such, I say, as bear two faces in one hood, such as deny the known truth; such as obstinately rebel against him. All such with their partakers shall the Lord destroy. God defend you from all such, and make you perfect unto the end. Your sorrow shall be turned unto joy.

Another Letter sent to his Wife.

THe God and Father eternal, which brought again from death our Lord Jesus Christ, keep thee, dear Wife, now and ever, Amen, and all thy Parents and Friends. I praise God for his mercy, I am in the same state that ye left me in, rather better than worse, looking daily for the living God, before whom I hunger full sore to appear, and receive the glory, of which I trust thou art willing to be a partaker. I give God most hearty thanks therefore, desiring thee of all loves to stand in that faith which thou hast received, and let no Man take away the seed that Almighty God hath sown in thee, but lay hands of everlasting Life which shall ever abide, when both the earth and all earthly friends shall perish, desiring them also to receive thankfully our trouble which is momentany and light, and as S. Paul saith, not worthy of the things which shall be shewed on us; that we patiently carrying our Cross, may attain to the place where our Saviour Christ is gone before, to the which I beseech God of his mercy bring us speedily. I have been much troubled about your deliverance, fearing much the perſwaſions of worldlings, and have found a friend, which will (I truſt) find a mean for you if you be not already provided, deſiring you in any caſe to abide ſuch order, as thoſe my friends ſhall appoint in God. And bear well in mind the words which I ſpake at our departing, that as God hath found us, and alſo elected us worthy to ſuffer with him; we may endeavour our ſelves to follow uprightly in this our vocation, deſiring you to preſent my hearty Commendations to all our Friends, and eſpecially to your Parents, keeping your matter cloſe in any wiſe. Give moſt hearty thanks to my Friend, which only for our cauſe is come to Windſor. Continue in Prayer. Do well. Be faultleſs in all things. Beware of abominations. Keep you clean from ſin. Pray for me, as I do for you. I have ſent you a piece of Gold for a token, and moſt entirely deſire you to ſend me word if ye lack any thing. The Lord Jeſus preſerve you and yours, Amen. The martyrdom and comfortable death of Rob. Smith at Uxbridge, An. 1555. Aug. 8.

The foreſaid Robert Smith the valiant and conſtant Martyr of Chriſt, thus repleniſhed, as ye have heard with the fortitude of Gods Spirit, was condemned at London by Boner their Biſhop, the 12th day of July, and ſuffered at Uxbridge the 8th day of Auguſt, who as he had been a comfortable inſtrument of God before to all them that were in Priſon with him: ſo now alſo being at the Stake, he did no leſs comfort the people, there ſtanding about him, willing them to think well of his cauſe, and not to doubt but that his body dying in that quarrel, ſhould riſe again to life. And ſaid he, I doubt not but that God will ſhew you ſome token thereof. At length he being well-nigh half burnt, and all black with fire, cluſtered together as in a lump like a black coal, all men thinking him for dead, ſuddenly roſe upright before the people, lifting up the ſtumps of his arms, and clapping the ſame together, declaring a rejoycing heart unto them; and ſo bending down again, and hanging over the fire, ſlept in the Lord, and ended this mortal life.

A token of comfort and reſurrection given by R. Smith at his martyrdom.

Be always an enemy to the Devil and the World, but eſpecially to your own Fleſh.

In hearing of good things joyn the ears of your head and heart together.

Seek unity and quietneſs with all men, but ſpecially with your Conſcience; for he will not eaſily be intreated.

Love all men, but eſpecially your Enemies.

Hate the ſins that are paſt, but eſpecially thoſe to come.

Be good to thy enemy.

Be as ready to further your Enemy, as he is to hinder you, that ye may be the Child of God.

Defile not that which Chriſt hath cleanſed, leſt his blood be laid to your charge.

A double hedge to the tongue.

Remember that GOD hath hedged in your tongue with the teeth and lips, that it might ſpeak under correction.

Caſt out the mote in thine own eye firſt.

Be ready at all times to look to your brothers eye, but eſpecially in your own eye: For he that warneth other of that he himſelf is faulty, doth give his neighbour the clear wine, and keepeth the dregs to himſelf.

Covet not to be rich.

Beware of riches and worldly honour: for without underſtanding, prayer, and faſting, it is a ſnare, and alſo poverty, all which are like to conſuming fire, of which if a man take a little, it will warm him, but if he take too much, it will conſume him. For it is hard for a man to carry fire in his boſom, and not to be burnt.

Bleſſed be the merciful.

Shew mercy unto the Saints for Chriſts ſake, and Chriſt ſhall reward you for the Saints ſake. Among all other Priſoners viſit your own Soul: for it is incloſed in a perillous Priſon. Anno 1555.

If you will love God, hate evil, and ye ſhall obtain the reward of well doing.

Thus fare you well good Anne. Have me heartily commended to all that love the Lord unfeignedly. I beſeech you have me in your prayer while I am living, and I am aſſured the Lord will accept it. Bring up my Children and yours in the fear of God, and then ſhall I not fail but receive you together in the everlaſting Kingdom of God, which I go unto.

Your Husband, Robert Smith.

If ye will meet with me again,
Forſake not Chriſt for any pain.

THe Grace of Almighty God be always with you, and comfort, ſtrengthen, and ſtabliſh you in all things, that what his bleſſed will is, ye may follow faithfully, to his honour, my comfort, and your own ſalvation, and the good enſample to our Poſterity.

I have received your Letter, and, I praiſe God, without any danger: nevertheleſs, if Gods marvellous goodneſs had not brought it to my hands by Peter the Keeper, there might have riſen a great trouble upon the ſame. For well ye know George is a wicked man, utterly without all fear of God; and if he had gotten it, the Councel ſure had ſeen it. But Peter like an honeſt man never opened it. Wherefore I deſire you from henceforth let your Letters be delivered at Chancery-lane end, to my Siſter Tankerfield, and ſhe may deliver them ſafe into my hand. We are very ſtreightly kept, I praiſe God of his mercy. Nevertheleſs Almighty God is always with us. I have ſent you that ye wrote for. The two Nutmegs that ſhoold have gone by Nicholas to our Friends, I ſend now, and deſire them to accept them as a poor Priſoners gift, until God give more largely. Thomas Iveſon ſendeth you a Peny, I pray you give him thanks for the ſame, and Dirick alſo. I have ſent you of that little that I have two pieces of Spaniſh money. The Lord Jeſus have you in his cuſtody, and ſend you good ſpeed. In any caſe keep your ſelf cloſe, I doubt much of your walkings. Have my hearty Commendations to your Parents, and deſire them with you to have me in their Prayers. Be fervent in Prayer, pray, pray, pray, that God would of his mercy put up his Sword, and look on his People. Tell my Brother, with Commendations, that the next comer ſhall bring up the Epiſtle and Exhortation, I have written all this fortnight for my Lady, yea, and almoſt done nothing elſe. I would have ſent him the Articles of William Flower, and my talk with him, if I could have delivered it from the Priſon. The Holy Ghoſt keep you, I would ye could make a means, for your money, to ſend a Cheeſe to Peter, for I find much kindneſs at his hands. Ye ſhall always hear of me at Tankerfields houſe. All the Congregation ſalute you. Fare you moſt heartily well.

Commendation of Peter the Keeper.

I have not yet (tell my Brother) ſpoken with the perſon. There hath come ſo ſtreight a Commandment, that no man might come to us, becauſe Tooly curſed the Pope at the Gallows. They thought it to be our counſel.

Yours, and ever yours,
Robert Smith.

THe eternal God keep you in his fear. I have hearty commendations unto you and your husband, beſeeching Almighty God to preſerve you in well doing, and in perfect knowledge of his Chriſt, that ye may be found faultleſs in the day of the Lord. I have heard ſay, that my friend is given over to vanity; it breaketh my heart, not only to hear that he ſo doth, but alſo teacheth other, that it is unhurtful to go to all abomination, which now ſtand in the Idols Temples: Nevertheleſs, dear friend, be ye not moved to follow ſinners; for they have no inheritance with God and Chriſt. But look, that by going into the Idol Temple, ye defile not the Temple of God; for light hath no fellowſhip with darkneſs. But look what the Lord hath commanded, that do. For if not going to Church were without perſecution, they would not learn you that leſſon. But all things that is ſweet to the Fleſh, is allowed of the Fleſhly. The Lord ſhall reward every Man according to his works, and he that leadeth into captivity, ſhall go into captivity, and he that by the Fleſhly Man is led in the Fleſh, ſhall of the Fleſh reap corruption. The Lord Jeſus give thee his holy Spirit, Amen.

I have ſent thee an Epiſtle in metre, which is not to be laid up in my coffer, but in thy heart.

Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fuſt, Martyrs.

ABout this time dyed alſo by cruel fire theſe two Martyrs of God, that is to ſay, Stephen Harwood at Stratford, and Thomas Fuſt at Ware. Which both two, as they were about one time burned with the forementioned Robert Smith and George Tankerfield, although in ſundry places; ſo were they alſo examined and openly Condemned together with them. Their proceſs, becauſe it was joyned all in one with the proceſs of Robert Smith, and other of the ſame company above mentioned; I thought it ſuperfluous again to repeat the ſame; ſave that of Thomas Fuſt this is to be added, that whereas he in his laſt appearing the 12. of July, was moved by the Biſhop to revoke his opinion, thus he anſwered; No (ſaid he) my Lord, for there is no truth cometh out of your Mouth, but all lies. Ye condemn Men, and will not hear the Truth. Where can ye find any annointing or greaſing in Gods Book? I ſpeak nothing but the Truth, and I am certain that it is the Truth that I ſpeak. This anſwer of him only I find noted by the Regiſter; although how ſlenderly theſe Regiſters have dealt in uttering ſuch matters, that is, in omitting thoſe things which moſt worthy were to be known, by their doings it is eaſie to be ſeen. But to be ſhort, after their anſwers made, both he and Thomas Fuſt were for their faithful perſeverance Condemned together by the Biſhop in his accuſtomed pity, as Hereticks to be burned, and ſo (as before ye have heard) finiſhed they their Martyrdom, the one at Stratford, & the other at Ware, in the Month of Auguſt and year above ſaid.

George King, Thomas Leyes, John Wade, ſickned in Priſon, and were buried in the fields.

YE heard before of ten ſundry perſons ſent out of Newgate by Maſter Hare and other Commiſſioners, to be examined of Boner Biſhop of London. Of whom ſix already have been executed in ſeveral places, as hath been ſhewed; whoſe names were Elizabeth Warn, George Tankerfield, Robert Smith, Stephen Harwood, Thomas Fuſt, and William Hale. Other three, to wit, George King, Thomas Leyes, and John Wade ſickning in Lollards Tower, were ſo weak that they were removed into ſundry houſes within the City of London, and there departed, and were caſt out into the fields, and there buried by night of the faithful Brethren, when none in the day durſt do it, propter metum Judæorum. The laſt that remained of this foreſaid company was Joan Layſh or Layſhford, the daughter-in-law to John Warn and Elizabeth Warn, Martyrs: but becauſe ſhe was reprieved to a longer day, her ſtory and Martyrdom we will defer till the Month of January the next year following.

THe like Catholick charity was alſo ſhewed upon William Andrew of Horſley, in the County of Eſſex, Carpenter, who was brought to Newgate the firſt day of April, Anno 1555. by John Motham Conſtable of Mauldon in Eſſex. The firſt and principal promoter of him was the Lord Rich, who ſent him firſt to Priſon. Another great doer againſt him alſo ſeemeth to be Sir Richard Southwell Knight, by a Letter written by him to Boner, as by the Copy hereof appeareth.

PLeaſeth it your Lordſhip to underſtand, that the Lord Rich did about ſeven or eight weeks paſt, ſend up unto the Councel, one William Andrew of Thorp, within the County of Eſſex, an arrogant Heretick. Their pleaſure was to command me to commit him unto Newgate, where he remaineth; and as I am informed, hath infected a number in the Priſon with his hereſie. Your Lordſhip ſhall do very well, if it pleaſe you to convent him before you, and to take order with him, as his caſe doth require. I know the Councel meant to have writ herein unto your Lordſhip, but by occaſion of other buſineſs, the thing hath been omitted. Wherefore knowing their good pleaſure, I did adviſe the Keeper of Newgate to wait upon you with theſe few lines. And ſo referring the reſt to your vertuous conſideration, I remain your good Lordſhips to command, this 12. of June, 1555.

W. Andrew twice before B. Boner.

This William Andrew being twice brought before Boner to Examination, there manfully ſtood in the defence of his Religion. At length through ſtraight handling in the Priſon of Newgate, there he loſt his Life, which elſe his adverſaries would have taken away by fire: and ſo after the Popiſh manner he was caſt out into the field, and by night was privily buried by the hands of good Men and Faithful Brethren.

The Martyrdom of Robert Samuel, Preacher, ſuffering for the true defence of Chriſts Goſpel.

Mr. Foſter Juſtice perſecutor of Chriſts People.

MAſter Foſter, Juſtice, dwelling at Cobdock in the County of Suffolk, and a little from Ipſwich, being in continual hatred againſt the truth and the profeſſors of the ſame, did not only not ceaſe day nor night to ſtudy how to bring thoſe in thrall and captivity, that were honeſt and godly inclined to Religion; but alſo whatſoever they were that once came in his claws, they eaſily eſcaped not without clog of Conſcience, or elſe loſs of Life, ſo greedy was he of Blood. Among many whom he had troubled, there was one Samuel, in King Edwards days a very godly and right faithful Preacher of Gods Word, who for his valiant and conſtant behaviour in his Sermons, ſeemeth worthy of high admiration. He was Miniſter at Barfold in Suffolk, where he taught faithfully and fruitfully that flock which the Lord had committed to his charge, ſo long as the time would ſuffer him to do his duty.

Rob. Samuel in K. Edward days a godly Preacher.

At the laſt being removed from the Miniſtry, and put from his Benefice (as many other good Paſtors were beſide) when he could not avoid the raging violence of the time, yet would he not give over his care that he had for his Flock, but would teach them privily and by ſtealth, when he could not openly be ſuffered ſo to do. At what time order was taken by the Queen, to be publiſhed by the Commiſſioners, that all Prieſts which had married in King Edwards days, putting their wives from them, ſhould be compelled to return again to their chaſtity and ſingle life. This Decree would not Samuel ſtand unto, for that he knew it to be manifeſtly wicked and abominable; but determining with himſelf that Gods Laws were not to be broken for Mans traditions, kept his Wife ſtill at Ipſwich, and gave his diligence in the mean time to the inſtructing of other which were about him, as occaſion ſerved. At laſt Maſter Foſter having intelligence hereof, being a great doer in thoſe quarters, foreſlacked no time nor diligence, but eſtſoons ſendeth out his eſpials abroad, laying hard wait for Samuel, that if he came home to his Wife at any time, they might apprehend him, and carry him to Priſon.

Rob. Samuel removed from the Miniſtry.

Rob. Samuel would not conſent to the wicked decree of Q. Mary to put away his Wife.

In concluſion, when ſuch as ſhould betray him eſpied him at home with his Wife, they bringing word to the Officer, came immediately flocking about his houſe, and beſet it with a great company, and ſo took him in the night ſeaſon, becauſe they durſt not do it in the day time, for fear of trouble and tumult; although good Samuel did nothing withſtand them at all, but meekly yielded himſelf into their clutches of his own accord. When they had thus caught him, they put him into Ipſwich Jayl, where he paſſed his time meekly among his Godly Brethren, ſo long as he was permitted to continue there. Howbeit not long after, being taken from thence, he was carried (through the malice of the wicked ſort) to Norwich, where the ſaid Biſhop Doctor Hopton (whether he or Dr. Dunnings his Chancellor) full like unmerciful Prelates exerciſed great cruelty againſt him, as indeed they were Men in that time of perſecution, as had not their matches for ſtraitneſs and cruel tormenting the Bodies of the Saints among all the reſt beſide, and ſpecially through the procuring of Dunnings. For although the

the other were ſharp enough in their Generation; yet could they be ſatisfied with impriſonment and death, and could go no farther. Neither did I ever yet hear of any beſides theſe, which ſo far exceeded all bounds of pity and compaſſion in tormenting their poor Brethren, as this Biſhop did; in ſuch ſort, that many of them he perverted, and brought quite from the truth, and ſome from their wits alſo.

The cruel handling of Rob. Samuel in Priſon.

The Biſhop therefore, or elſe his Chancellor, thinking that he might as eaſily prevail with Samuel, as he had done with the other before, kept him in a very ſtreight Priſon at his firſt coming, where he was chained bolt-upright to a great Poſt, in ſuch ſort, that ſtanding only on tiptoe, he was fain to ſtay up the whole poiſe or weight of his body thereby. And to make amends for the cruelty or pain that he ſuffered, they added a far more grievous torment, keeping him without meat and drink, whereby he was unmercifully vexed through hunger and thirſt; ſaving that he had every day allowed two or three mouthfuls of bread, and three ſpoonfuls of water, to the end rather that he might be reſerved to farther torment, then that they would preſerve his life. O worthy conſtancy of the Martyr! O pitileſs hearts of Papiſts, worthy to be complained of, and to be accuſed before God and Nature! O the wonderful ſtrength of Chriſt in his Members! Whoſe ſtomack, though it had been made of Adamant ſtone, would not have relented at the intolerable vexations, and extream pains above Nature?

Rob. Samuel famiſhed in Priſon.

Rob. Samuel deſirous to drink his own water, and could not.

How oftentimes would he have drunken his own water? But his body was ſo dried up with his long emptineſs, that he was not able to make one drop of water.

Samuel brought to burning.

At the laſt, when he was brought forth to be burned, which was but a trifle in compariſon of thoſe pains that he had paſſed, certain there were that heard him declare what ſtrange things had happened unto him during the time of his impriſonment: to wit, that after he had been famiſhed or pined with hunger two or three days together, he then fell into a ſleep, as it were one half in a ſlumber, at which time one clad all in white ſeemed to ſtand before him, which miniſtred comfort unto him by theſe words; Samuel, Samuel, be of good chear, and take a good heart unto thee. For after this day ſhalt thou never be either hungry or thirſty. Which thing came even to paſs accordingly; for ſpeedily after he was burned, and from that time till he ſhould ſuffer, he felt neither hunger nor thirſt. And this declared he to the end, as he ſaid, that all men might behold the wonderful works of God. Many more like matters concerning the great comfort he had of Chriſt in his afflictions, he could utter, he ſaid, beſides this, but that ſhamefaſtneſs and modeſty would not ſuffer him to utter it. And yet if it had pleaſed God, I would he had been leſs modeſt in that behalf, that the love and care that Chriſt hath of his might have the more appeared thereby unto us by ſuch preſent Arguments, for the more plentiful comfort of the godly, though there be ſufficient teſtimonies of the ſame in the holy Scriptures already.

Strange viſions that happened to Samuel.

Great comforts miniſtred by the Lord to Samuel in his painful priſonment.

No leſs memorable it is, and worthy alſo to be noted, concerning the three Ladders which he told to divers he ſaw in his ſleep, ſet up toward Heaven; of the which there was one ſomewhat longer than the reſt, but yet at length they became one joyning (as it were) all three together. This was a forewarning revealed unto him, declaring undoubtedly the Martyrdom firſt of himſelf, and from the death of two honeſt women, which were brought forth, and ſuffered in the ſame Town anon after.

Another memorable viſion of Samuel in Priſon.

As this godly Martyr was going to the fire, there came a certain Maid to him, which took him about the neck and kiſſed him, who being marked by them that were preſent, was ſought for the next day after to be had to Priſon and burned, as the very party her ſelf informed me: Howbeit, as God of his goodneſs would have it, ſhe eſcaped their fiery hands, keeping her ſelf ſecret in the Town a good while after. But as this Maid, called Roſe Nottingham, was marvellouſly preſerved by the Providence of God; ſo there were other two honeſt women did fall into the rage and fury of that time. The

The martyrdom of Rob. Samuel at Ipſwich, Anno 1555. Auguſt 31.

Two godly women, the one a Brewers wife, the other a Shoomakers wife, apprehended.

one was a Brewers wife, the other was a Shoomakers wife, but both together now eſpouſed to a new Husband, Chriſt.

With theſe two was this Maid aforeſaid very familiar and well acquainted, who on a time giving counſel to the one of them, that ſhe ſhould convey her ſelf away while ſhe had time and ſpace, ſeeing ſhe could not away with the Queens unjuſt proceedings, had this anſwer at her hands again: I know well, ſaith ſhe, that it is lawful enough to fly away, which remedy you may uſe, if you liſt. But my caſe ſtandeth otherwiſe. I am tied to an Husband, and have beſide a ſort of young Children at home; and then I know not how my Husband, being a Carnal man, will take my departure from him; therefore I am minded, for the love of Chriſt and his Truth, to ſtand to the extremity of the matter.

This godly wife exhorted to fly, would not do ſo, having Husband and Children to ſtick to.

And

Anne Totten. Mr. Trunchfields wife.

And to the next day after Samuel ſuffered, theſe two godly Wives, the one called Anne Potten, the other called Jone Trunchfield, the Wife of Michael Trunchfield, Shoomaker of Ipſwich, were apprehended, and had both to Priſon together. Which as they were both by Sex and Nature ſomewhat tender; ſo were they at firſt leſs able to indure the ſtraitneſs of the Priſon, and eſpecially the Brewers Wife was caſt into marvellous great agonies and troubles of mind thereby. But Chriſt beholding the weak infirmity of his Servant, did not fail to help her when ſhe was in this neceſſity. So at the length they both ſuffered after Samuel, Anno 1556. Febr. 19. as ſhall be by the Lords grace declared hereafter. And theſe, no doubt, were thoſe two Ladders, which being joyned with the third, Samuel ſaw ſtretched up into Heaven. This bleſſed Samuel, the Servant of Chriſt, ſuffered the 31 of Auguſt, Anno 1555.

Letters of Robert Samuel, Preacher.

A Letter or Exhortation to the patient ſuffering of Afflictions for Chriſts Cauſe.

Eccleſ. 9. Eccleſ. 4.

A Man knoweth not his time, but as the fiſh is taken with the Angle, and as the birds are caught with the ſnare; even ſo are men caught and taken in the perillous time when it cometh upon them. The time cometh; the day draweth near, Ezekiel 7. Better it were to die (as the Preacher ſaith) then to live and ſee the miſerable works which are done under the Sun; ſuch ſudden and ſtrange mutation, ſuch woful, heinous, and lamentable diviſions ſo faſt approach, and none or very few thoroughly repent. Alas for this ſinful Nation, a People of great iniquity and ſeed of ungraciouſneſs, corrupting their ways. They have forſaken the Lord, they have provoked the holy One of Iſrael to anger, and are gone backward. Who now liveth not in ſuch ſecurity and reſt, as though all dangers were clean overpaſt? Who now blindeth and buffeteth not Chriſt, which ſeeth me, and ſeeth me not? Yea, who liveth not now in ſuch felicity, worldly pleaſures and joyes, wholly ſeeking the world, providing and craftily ſhifting for the earthly clod and all carnal appetites, as though ſin were clean forgotten, overthrown, and devoured? Like hoggiſh Gergeſites, now are we more affraid and aſhamed of Chriſt our Meſſias, fearing the loſs of our filthy Pigs, I mean our tranſitory Goods, and diſquieting of our ſinful and mortal Bodies in this ſhort, uncertain, and miſerable life, then of a Legion of Devils, ſeducing and driving us from hearing, reading, and believing Chriſt Gods eternal Son, and his holy Word, the power to ſave our Souls, unto vanities, lies, and fables, and to this bewitching world.

Iſai. 1. Complaint againſt England, and that not undeſerved. Matth. 8. Engliſh people rightly reſembled to the Gergeſites. Mark 5. Rom. 10.

Oh perillous abundance of goods, too much ſaturity of meats, wealth, and quietneſs, which deſtroyed with ſo many ſouls, thoſe goodly Cities, Sodom and Gomorrah! Jeroboam, ſo long as he was but a poor man, not yet advanced to his dignity, lived in the Laws of God without reprehenſion; but brought once to wealth and proſperous ſtate, he became a wicked and moſt ſhameful Idolater. And what made the covetous young man ſo loath to follow Chriſt, when he was bidden to forſake but worldly wealth which he then enjoyed? Wo be unto theſe falſe illuſions of the World, baits of Perdition, hooks of the Devil, which have ſo ſhamefully deceived and ſeduced full many from the right path unto the Lord, into the High-ways of Confuſion and Perpetual Perdition.

Abundance of Goods is a thing perillous. Gen. 19. Matth. 19.

We might now worthily (dear Chriſtians) lament and bewail our heavy ſtate, miſerable condition, and ſorrowful chance: yea, I ſay, we might well accuſe our ſelves, and with Job curſe theſe our troublous, wicked, and bloudy laſt days of this world, were it not that we both ſee and believe, and find in Gods ſacred Book, that a remnant God hath in all Ages reſerved, I mean the faithful, as many as have been from the beginning of the world, exerciſed, whetted, and poliſhed with divers afflictions, troubles, and toſſings, caſt and daſhed againſt all perils and dangers, as the very droſs and outcaſts of the Earth, and yet will in no wiſe halt between God and Baal; for God verily abhorreth two men in one: he cannot away with them that are between both, but caſteth them away as a filthy vomit. Chriſt will not part ſpoil with his mortal enemy the Devil; he will have all, or loſe all: he will not permit the Devil to have the ſervice of the body, and he to ſtand contented with the heart and mind: but he will be glorified both in your bodies and in your ſpirits, which are his, as S. Paul ſaith, 1 Cor. 6. For he hath made, bought all, and dearly paid for all, as S. Peter ſaith, With his own immaculate body hath he clean diſcharged your bodies from ſin, death, and hell, and with his moſt precious blood paid your ranſome and full price once for all and for ever.

Job 3. Iſai. 10. God hath always a remnant, whom he puniſheth with hard adverſities. 1 Cor. 4.

Two men in one, God abhorreth. Apoc. 3. 1 Pet. 1.

Now what harm, I pray you, or what loſs ſuſtain you by this? Why are you, O vain men, more affraid of Jeſus your gentle Saviour, and his Goſpel of Salvation, then of a Legion of cruel Devils, going about with falſe deluſions utterly to deſtroy you both bodies and ſouls? Think you to be more ſure then under your Captain, Chriſt? Do you promiſe your ſelves to be more quiet in Satans ſervice, then in Chriſts Religion? Eſteem you more theſe tranſitory and pernicious pleaſures, then God and all his heavenly treaſures? Oh palpable darkneſs, horrible madneſs, and wilful blindneſs, without compariſon, too much to be ſuffered any longer! We ſee and will not ſee; we know and will not know; yea, we ſmart and will not feel, and that our Conſcience well knoweth. Oh miſerable and brainleſs ſouls, which would for fooliſh pleaſures and ſlippery wealth loſe the Royal Kingdom and permanent joyes of God, with the everlaſting glory which he hath prepared for them that truly love him, and renounce the world. The Children of the world live in pleaſure and wealth; and the Devil, who is their God and Prince of this world, keepeth their wealth which is proper unto them, and letteth them enjoy it. But let us which be of Chriſt ſeek and inquire for heavenly things, which by Gods promiſe and mercy in Chriſt ſhall be peculiar unto us. Let, I ſay, the Cretians, Epicures, and ſuch other beaſtly Belials and Carnal People, paſs for things that be pleaſant for the body, and do appertain to this tranſitory life: Yet ſhall they once (as the Kingly Prophet ſaith) run about the City of God, to and fro howling like dogs, deſiring one ſcrap of the joyes of Gods Elect, but all too late, as the rich Glutton did.

No true quietneſs in Satans ſervice. The miſerable madneſs of worldly men lamented. 2 Cor. 4. John 12. Tranſitory pleaſures of this life not to be paſſed upon. Pfalm 58. Luke 16.

Let us therefore paſs for thoſe things that do pertain to the Spirit, and be Celeſtial. We muſt be here (ſaith Paul) not as inhabiters, and home dwellers, but as ſtrangers: not as ſtrangers only, but after the mind of Paul, as painful ſouldiers appointed of our Governour to fight againſt the Governour of darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual craftineſs in heavenly things. The time is come; we muſt to it; the judgment muſt begin firſt at the Houſe of God. Began they not firſt with the green and ſappy Tree? and what followed then on the dry branches? Jeremy ſpeaking in the Perſon of God, ſaith; In the City wherein my Name is invocate, will I begin to puniſh: but as for you (meaning the wicked) ſhall you be as innocents, and not once toucht. Nay, the dregs of Gods wrath, the bottom of all ſorrows, are reſerved unto them in the end: but Gods houſhold ſhall drink the flower of the Cup of his Mercy. And therefore let us ſay with Ezechias; Play the men, and ſhrink not: Let us comfort our ſelves, for the Lord is with us our helper, and fighteth for us. The Lord is (ſaith he) with you, when you be with him; and when you ſeek him, he will be found of you: And again, when you forſake him, he will forſake you.

Wherefore we ought not to be diſmayed, or diſcourage our ſelves, but rather to be of good comfort; not to be ſad but merry; not ſorrowful, but joyful, in that God of his goodneſs will vouchſafe to take us as his beloved Children, to ſubdue our ſinful luſts, our wretched fleſh and blood unto his glory, the promoting of his holy Word, and edifying of his Church. What if the earthly houſe of this our habitation (Paul meaning the body) be deſtroyed? We know aſſuredly we ſhall have a building of God not made with hands, but everlaſting in Heaven, with ſuch joyes as faith taketh not, hope toucheth not, and charity apprehendeth not. They paſs all deſires and wiſhes. Gotten they may be by Chriſt; eſteemed they cannot be. Wherefore the more affliction and perſecution the Word of God bringeth, the more felicity and greater joy abideth in Heaven. But the worldly peace, idle eaſe, wealthy pleaſure, and this preſent and pleaſant tranſitory life and felicity, which the ungodly fooliſhly imagine to procure unto themſelves by perſecuting, and thruſting away the Goſpel, ſhall turn unto their own trouble, and at laſt unto horrible deſtructions and mutations of Realms and Countries, and after this life, if they repent not, unto their perpetual infelicity, perdition, and damnation. For they had rather with Nabal, and his temporal pleaſures, deſcend to the Devil, than with poor Chriſt, and his bodily troubles, aſcend unto the Kingdom of God his Father. *But an unwiſe man (*ſaith the Pſalmiſt) comprehendeth them not, neither doth the fooliſh underſtand them: that is, theſe bloody Perſecutors grow up and flouriſh like the flower and graſs in the field. But unto this end do they ſo flouriſh, that they might be cut down and caſt into the fire for ever. For as Job ſaith, Their joy laſteth but the twinkling of an eye, and death ſhall lye gnawing upon them, as doth the flock upon the paſture; yea, the cruel worm, late repentance, (as S. Mark ſaith) ſhall lye gnawing, tormenting, and accuſing their wretched Conſcience for evermore.

Pſal. 40.

To what end the perſecutors do flouriſh in this World. Job 21. Mark 9.

Let us therefore (good Chriſtians) be conſtant in obeying God rather then men. For although they ſlay our ſinful bodies (yea, rather our deadly enemies) for Gods verity; yet they cannot do it, but by Gods ſufferance and good will, to his praiſe and honour, and to our eternal joy and felicity. For our blood ſhed for the Goſpel ſhall preach it with more fruit, and greater furtherance, then did our mouths, lives, and writings, as did the blood of Abel, Steven, with many other more. What though they laugh Chriſt and his Word to ſcorn, which ſit in the chair of perverſe peſtilent Scorners? To whom, as to the wiſe Gentiles of the world, the Goſpel of Chriſt is but fooliſhneſs, as it was to the Jews, a hinder and a ſtumbling ſtone, whereat they now being faln, have provoked the wrath and vengeance of God upon them.

The blood of Gods Martyrs preacheth with more fruit than did their mouths.

Theſe are the days of vengeance, ſaith Luke, that all things written may be fulfilled. And ſurely it ſhall be no leſs than a huge ſtorm of evils that ſhall come upon us, becauſe that a long and curſed obſtinate maliciouſneſs of us hath gone before, crying in the ears of the Lord God of Hoſts, who ſo many times and ſo many ways have been provoked with the unſpeakable riches of his goodneſs, his patience and long ſuffering, to amendment, and have nevertheleſs contemned the ſame, and proceeded forward to worſe and worſe, provoking and ſtirring the preſence of Gods Majeſty unto anger.

Luke 2. God long looketh for repentance, and we wax worſe and worſe.

Now therefore ſaith God by the mouth of his Prophet, I will come unto thee, and I will ſend my wrath upon thee: Upon thee (I ſay) O England, and puniſh thee according to thy ways, and reward thee after all thine abominations. Thou haſt kindled the fire of Gods wrath, and haſt ſtirred up the coals. For thou waſt once lightned, and hadſt taſted of the heavenly gift, and waſt become partaker of the Holy Ghoſt, and hadſt taſted of the good Word of God: Yea, it is yet in thy mouth, ſaith the Prophet. Alas, O England, thou kneweſt thy Lord and Maſters will, but didſt nothing thereafter; Thou muſt therefore, ſaith he, ſuffer many ſtripes, and many ſharp ſtrokes, and walk in the glittering and hot flame of thine own fire, and on the coals that thou haſt kindled. This cometh to thee from my hand, ſaith the Lord, namely, That thou ſhalt ſleep in ſorrow, yea, even ſo thou ſhalt. The plain truth telleth the tale, the immutable juſtice of the everliving God, and the ordinary courſe of his plagues from the beginning confirmeth the ſame. The joy of our heart, ſaith Jeremy, is gone, our glory is fallen away, our merry ſinging is turned into mourning, the garland of our head is fallen: Alas and weal away that ever we ſinned ſo ſore: Wo worth all abominations and wickedneſs; wo worth cloaked hypocriſie; wo worth our carnal liberty; wo worth our moſt curſed Idolatry. For, becauſe of theſe things, ſaith the Lord, ye ſhall periſh with ſword, hunger, and peſtilence.

Iſai. 3.

Wickedneſs of England declared. Iſai. 3.

Jerem. 5. He bewaileth the ſtate of England.

Wherefore, let all the wicked enemies of Chriſt, and all the unbelievers, look to be tormented and vexed with all helliſh Furies, and clean without hope of Gods accounting day, which know not God in Chriſt to be their very righteouſneſs, their life, their only ſalvation and alone Saviour, nor believe in him. They muſt, ſaith S. John, needs abide and periſh with their ſins in death and in eternal damnation. But we be the Children of Saints, as the elder Toby did anſwer, and look for another life, which God ſhall give to all them which change not their faith, nor ſhrink not from him. Rejoyce therefore ye Chriſtian afflicted brethren, for they cannot take our ſouls and bodies out of the hands of the Almighty, which be kept as in the boſom of our moſt ſweet and loving Father: and if we abide faſt in Chriſt, and turn not away like Weather-cocks, ſurely we ſhall live for ever. Chriſt affirmeth the ſame, ſaying, My ſheep hear my voice, I know them, they hearken unto me, and to no ſtrangers, and I give them everlaſting life; for they ſhall not be loſt, and no man ſhall pluck them out of my hands: no, nor yet this flattering world with all his vain pleaſures, nor any Tyrant with his great threats and ſtout brags can once move them out of the way of eternal life. What conſolation and comfort may we have more pleaſant and effectuous than this? God is on our ſide, and fighteth for us; he ſuffereth, he ſmarteth, and is afflicted with us. As the world can do nothing againſt his might, neither in taking away, or diminiſhing of his glory, nor putting him from his Celeſtial Throne; ſo can it nor harm nor hurt any one of his Children without his good will. For we are Members of his Body, out of his Fleſh, and of his Bones, and as dear to him as the Apple of his Eye.

Ephef. 5.

Let us therefore with an earneſt faith ſet faſt hold and ſure feeling upon the Promiſes of God in the Goſpel, and let us not be ſundred from the ſame by any temptation, tribulation, or perſecution. Let us conſider the verity of God to be invincible, inviolable, and immutable, promiſing and giving us his faithful Souldiers life eternal. It is he only that hath deſerved it for us: It is his only benefit, and of his only meer mercy, and unto him only muſt we render thanks. Let not therefore the vain fantaſies and dreams of men, and fooliſh gauds and toys of the world, nor the crafty deluſions of the Devil, drive and ſeparate us from our hope of the Crown of Righteouſneſs, that is laid up in ſtore for us againſt the laſt day. Oh that happy and merry laſt day, I mean to the faithful, when Chriſt by his Covenant ſhall grant and give unto them that overcome, and keep his words to the end, that they may aſcend and ſit in ſeat with him, as he hath aſcended and ſitteth on Throne with his Father. The ſame body and ſoul that is now with Chriſt afflicted, ſhall then be with Chriſt glorified: now in the Butchers hands, as ſheep appointed to dye; then ſitting at Gods Table with Chriſt in his Kingdom, as Gods honourable and dear Children; where we ſhall have for earthly poverty, heavenly riches; for hunger and thirſt, ſaturity of the pleaſant preſence of the glory of God; for ſorrows, troubles, and cold irons, celeſtial joyes, and the company of Angels; and for a bodily death, life eternal. Oh happy ſouls! Oh precious death and evermore bleſſed, right dear in the eyes of God; to you the ſpring of the Lord ſhall ever be flouriſhing. Then (as ſaith Iſaiah) The redeemed ſhall return and come again into Sion, praiſing the Lord, and eternal mercies ſhall be over their heads: they ſhall obtain mirth and ſolace; ſorrow and wo ſhall be utterly vanquiſhed. Yea, I am he, ſaith the Lord, that in all things giveth you everlaſting conſolation. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt, be glory and praiſe for ever, Amen.

Gods promiſe is immutable.

Fear

Fear not the curſe of men, be not afraid of their blaſphemies and revilings; for worms and moths ſhall eat them up like cloth and wool, but my righteouſneſs ſhall endure for ever, and my ſaving health from generation to generation, Iſai. 51.

2 Tim. 3. An other Letter of Rob. Samuel containing his faith. 1 Pet. 3.

COnſidering with my ſelf theſe perillous times, periſhing days, and the unconſtant and miſerable ſtate of man, the decay of our faith, the ſiniſter report and falſe ſlander of Gods moſt holy Word, theſe urgent cauſes in Conſcience do conſtrain me to confeſs and acknowledge my faith and meaning in Chriſts holy Religion, as S. Peter teacheth me, ſaying, Be ready always to give an anſwer to every man that asketh you a reaſon of the hope that is in you, and that with meekneß and fear, having a good conſcience, that when they backbite you as evil doers, they may be aſhamed, foraſmuch as they have falſly accuſed your good converſation in Chriſt.

As touching my Doctrine, for that little Talent that God hath given me, God I take to record, mine own Conſcience and mine Auditory knoweth, that I neither in doctrine nor manners willingly taught any other thing than I received of the holy Patriarchs, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. For it were not only ſin, but alſo the very part of a curſed Miſcreant, to deny, bely, or betray the innocency of that heavenly doctrine, or to be aſhamed to confeſs and ſtand to the defence of the ſame; ſeeing that Chriſt planted it with his moſt precious blood, and all good men have more eſteemed the true and infallible Word of God, then all this tranſitory World, or their own mortal lives. Mark 8. And I believe this Doctrine of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, to be ſufficient and abſolutely perfect to inſtruct and teach me, and all the holy Church, of our duties towards God, the Magiſtrates, and our Neighbours.

One God. Firſt and principally I do aſſuredly believe, without any doubting, that there is one Deity or Divine Eſſence, and Infinite Subſtance; which is both called, and is indeed God everlaſting, unbodily, unpartible, unmeaſurable in power, wiſdom, and goodneſs, the Maker and Preſerver of all things, as well viſible as inviſible; and yet there be three diſtinct Perſons, all of one Godhead or Divine Being, and all of one power, coequal, conſubſtantial, coeternal, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt. Three Perſons.

I believe in GOD the Father Almighty, &c. As touching God the Father of Heaven, I believe as much as holy Scripture teacheth me to believe. The Father is the firſt Perſon in the Trinity, firſt cauſe of our Salvation, which hath bleſſed us with all manner of bleſſings in heavenly things by Chriſt, which hath choſen us before the foundations of the world were laid, that we ſhould be holy and without blame before him; who hath predeſtinate us and ordained us to be his Children of Adoption, through Chriſt Jeſus; in him, as it is ſaid, we live, we move, and have our being; he nouriſheth, feedeth, and giveth meat to every Creature. Epheſ. 1. Acts 17. Pſal. 147.

And in Jeſus Chriſt his only Son our Lord. I believe that the Word, that is, the Son of God the ſecond Perſon in the Trinity, did take mans nature in the womb of the bleſſed Virgin Mary: So that there be in him two Natures, a Divine Nature, and an Humane Nature, in the unity of one Perſon inſeparable, conjoyned and knit in one Chriſt, truly God, and truly Man, the expreſs and perfect Image of the inviſible God, wherein the will of God the Father ſhineth apparently, and wherein man, as it were in a glaſs, may behold what he ought to do, that he may pleaſe God the Father. The ſecond Article. Heb. 1.

Born of the Virgin Mary; truly ſuffering his paſſion, crucified, dead, and buried, to the intent to bring us again into favour with God the Father Almighty, and to be a Sacrifice, Hoſte, and Oblation, not only for Original ſin, but alſo for all Actual ſins of the whole generation of mankind. For all the works, merits, deſervings, doings, and obedience of man towards God, although they be done by the Spirit of God, in the grace of God, yet being thus done, be of no validity, worthineſs, nor merit before God, except God for his mercy and grace account them worthy for the worthineſs and merits of Chriſt Jeſus. No merits of ſalvation but only in Chriſt. Iſai. 48. 43. Gen. 1. 22. Iſai. 53. Acts 10. Matth. 8.

The ſame Chriſt went down to the Hells, and truly roſe again the third day, and aſcended into the Heavens, that he might there ſtill reign and have dominion over all Creatures: And from thence ſhall come, &c. Anno 1555.

I believe in the Holy Ghoſt, coequal with God the Father and the Son, and proceeding from them both; by whoſe virtue, ſtrength, and operation, the true Catholick Church, which is the Communion and Society of Saints, is guided in all truth and verity, and kept from all errors and falſe doctrine, the Devil, and all power of ſin. Which Church is ſanctified and hallowed with the precious blood and ſpirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; which hath alſo her ſign and mark, that ſhe heareth and followeth the voice of her only and true Paſtor Chriſt, and no ſtrangers. This Church alſo is the Houſe of God, the Congregation of the living God, the Pillar of Truth, the lively Body of Chriſt, a Church both in name and in deed. The Catholick Church is the Communion of Saints. John 10. 8. Galat. 1. 1 Tim. 2.

I believe the remiſſion of ſins, by the only means and merits of Chriſts death and paſſion; who is made unto us of God, that only Sacrifice and Oblation offered once for all and for ever, for all them that be ſanctified. Remiſſion of ſins only by the merits of Chriſt apprehended by faith.

I believe the Reſurrection of the Body, whereby in the laſt day all men ſhall riſe again from death, the ſouls joyned again to the bodies, the good to everlaſting life, the wicked to everlaſting pain and puniſhment. And nothing may more certainly ſtabliſh and confirm our faith, that we ſhall riſe again immortal both in body and ſoul, then the Reſurrection of Chriſt our Saviour, and firſt fruits of the dead. Now that Chriſt our Head is riſen, we being his Body and Members muſt follow our Head. Death, Hell, and Sin cannot ſunder nor pluck us from him. For as the Son cannot be divided nor ſundred from the Father, nor the Holy Ghoſt from them both, no more may we, being the faithful Members of Chriſt, be ſeparated from Chriſt. And for a confirmation of our Reſurrection, Chriſt would be ſeen after his Reſurrection in his moſt glorious body, his wounds being handled and felt, ſpeaking and teaching, eating and drinking, &c. We look (ſaith S. Paul) for Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, which ſhall transfigure our vile bodies, and conform them to his glorious body by the ſame power and vertue, wherewith he is able to ſubdue all things: even like as the grain of Wheat ſown in the ground is firſt putrified and brought as into a thing of nought, yet after that it ſpringeth up freſhly with a more goodly colour, form, and beauty then it had before. The body is ſown in corruption, and riſeth in incorruption; it is ſown in diſhonour, and riſeth in honour. Confirmation of our Reſurrection. John 10. John 11. Phil. 4. John 12. 1 Cor. 15.

Thus I verily know, and aſſuredly believe the Reſurrection of our bodies, and to have life eternal by Chriſt, and for Chriſts ſake. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you (ſaith Chriſt) he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that ſent me, hath everlaſting life, and ſhall not come into damnation, but is eſcaped from death to life. It is Chriſt that died once for our ſins, and is riſen again never more to dye: It is he that ſwallowed up death, and hath caſt it under his feet for ever. What now can death do unto us? Verily nothing elſe, but for a little time ſeparate our precious ſouls from our wretched bodies, that divine ſubſtance from a maſs of ſin, that eternal life from a body of death, and ſo ſend our ſouls out of this miſerable, wretched, and ſorrowful life, cumbred with all calamities, unto that moſt bleſſed felicity and joyes eternal. John 5. Rom. 10. Oſea 13. The ſting of death pluckt out.

As concerning the holy and reverend Sacraments of Chriſts Church, which be in number two, the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord. I believe them to be as S. Paul calleth them, Confirmations or Seals of Gods Promiſes, which have added to them a promiſe of grace; and therefore they are called Viſible ſigns of inviſible Grace. His confeſſion touching the Sacraments. Sacraments are confirmations of Gods grace and acceptation.

The Sacrament of Baptiſm is a mark of Chriſts Church, a Seal and Confirmation of our acception into the Grace and Favour of God for Chriſts ſake. For his Innocency, his Righteouſneſs, his Holineſs, his Juſtice, is ours, given us of God, and our Sins and Unrighteouſneſs, by his obedience and abaſing of himſelf to the death of the Croſs, are his, whereof Baptiſm is the ſign, ſeal, and confirmation. The Sacrament of Baptiſm.

Bap-

Anno 1555.

Baptiſm is alſo a ſign of Repentance, to teſtifie that we be born to the waves of perils, and changes of life, to the intent that we ſhould dye continually, as long as we live, from ſin, and riſe again like new men unto righteouſneſs, Rom. 6.

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

The other Sacrament, which is the Supper and holy Maundy of our Saviour Chriſt, whereby the Church of Chriſt is known, I believe to be a remembrance of Chriſts Death and Paſſion, a ſeal and confirmation of his moſt precious body given unto death, even to the vile death of the Croſs, wherewith we are redeemed and delivered from ſin, death, hell, and damnation. It is a viſible Word, becauſe it worketh the ſame thing in the eyes, which the Word worketh in the ears: For like as the Word is a mean to the ears, whereby the Holy Ghoſt moveth the heart to believe, Rom. 10. ſo this Sacrament is a mean to the eyes, whereby the Holy Ghoſt moveth the heart to believe: it preacheth peace between God and man; it exhorteth to mutual love and all godly life, and teacheth to contemn the world for the life to come, when as Chriſt ſhall appear, which now is in Heaven, and no where elſe as concerning his Humane Body.

Gods Word to the ear, Gods Word the eye. Acts 2. 3.

Yet do I believe aſſuredly, that his very Body is preſent in his moſt holy Supper at the contemplation of our ſpiritual eyes, and ſo verily eaten with the mouth of our Faith. For aſſoon as I hear theſe moſt comfortable and heavenly words ſpoken and pronounced by the mouth of the Miniſter: This is my Body which is given for you? when I hear (I ſay) this heavenly harmony of Gods infallible Promiſes and Truth: I look not upon, neither do I behold bread and wine; for I take and believe the words ſimply and plainly, even as Chriſt ſpake them. For hearing theſe words, my ſenſes be wrapt and utterly excluded; for faith wholly taketh place, and not fleſh, nor the carnal imaginations of our groſs, fleſhly, and unreverent eating after the manner of our bodily food, which profiteth nothing at all, as Chriſt witneſſeth, John 6. but with a ſorrowful and wounded Conſcience, an hungry and thirſty Soul, a pure and faithful mind do fully embrace, behold, and feed, and look upon that moſt glorious Body of Chriſt in Heaven, at the right hand of God the Father, very God and very Man, which was crucified and ſlain, and his blood ſhed for our ſins, there now making interceſſion, offering and giving his holy body for me, for my body, for my ranſom, for my full price and ſatisfaction, who is my Chriſt, and all that ever he hath; and by this ſpiritual and faithful eating of this lively and heavenly bread, I feel the moſt ſweet ſap and taſte of the fruits, benefits, and unſpeakable joyes of Chriſts Death and Paſſion, fully digeſted into the bowels of my Soul. For my mind is quieted from all worldly adverſities, turmoilings, and troubles, my Conſcience is pacified from ſin, death, hell, and damnation; my ſoul is full, and hath even enough, and will no more; for all things are but loſs, vile dung, and droſs, vain vanity, for the excellent knowledge ſake of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord and Saviour.

Rom. 6.

Phil. 3.

Thus now is Chriſts fleſh my very meat indeed, and his blood my very drink indeed, and I am become fleſh of his fleſh, and bone of his bones. Now I live, yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me: yea, I dwell in him, and he in me; for through faith in Chriſt, and for Chriſts ſake we are one, that is, of one conſent, mind and fellowſhip with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, Joh. 17. Thus am I aſſured and fully perſwaded, and on this Rock have I builded, by Gods grace, my dwelling and reſting place for body and ſoul, life and death. And thus I commit my cauſe unto Chriſt the righteous and juſt Judge, who will another day judge theſe debates and controverſies; whom I humbly beſeech to caſt his tender and merciful eyes upon the afflicted and ruinous Churches, and ſhortly to reduce them into a godly and perpetual concord, Amen.

William Allen, Martyr.

Will. Allen Martyr.

NOw after the ſuffering of Robert Samuel, about the beginning of September, was burned William Allen in Walſingham, labouring man, ſervant ſometime to John Houghton of Somerton. He being brought before the Biſhop, and asked the cauſe why he was impriſoned; anſwered, That he was put in Priſon, becauſe he would not follow the Croſs, ſaying, that he would never go on Proceſſion.

Then being willed by the Biſhop to return again to the Catholick Church; he anſwered, that he would turn to the Catholick Church, but not to the Romiſh Church: and ſaid, That if he ſaw the King and Queen, and all other follow the Croſs, or kneel down to the Croſs, he would not. For the which, Sentence of Condemnation was given againſt him the 12. of Auguſt, and he burned at Walſingham about the beginning of September, who declared ſuch conſtancy at his Martyrdom, and had ſuch credit with the Juſtices, by reaſon of his upright and well tried converſation among them, that he was ſuffered to go untied to his ſuffering, and there being faſtened with a Chain, ſtood quietly without ſhrinking until he died.

The Martyrdom of Roger Coo of Melford in Suffolk; Sheerman, firſt examined before the Biſhop of Norwich, and by him condemned, Anno 1555. Auguſt 12.

Roger Coo Martyr.

ROger Coo brought before the Biſhop, firſt was asked why he was impriſoned.

Coo. At the Juſtices commandment.

Talk between Roger Coo and Hopton Bp. of Norwich.

Biſh. There was ſome cauſe why.

Coo. Here is my Accuſer, let him declare.

And his Accuſer ſaid, that he would not receive the Sacrament.

Biſh. Then the Biſhop ſaid, that he thought he had tranſgreſſed a Law.

Coo. But Coo anſwered that there was no law to tranſgreſs.

Biſh. The Biſhop then asked, what he ſaid to the law that then was?

Coo. He anſwered how he had been in Priſon a long time, and knew it not.

No, ſaid his Accuſer, nor will not. My Lord, ask him when he received the Sacrament.

Roger Coo to his Accuſer.

Coo. When Coo heard him ſay ſo, he ſaid, I pray you my Lord let him ſit down and examine me himſelf.

Biſh. But the Biſhop would not hear that, but ſaid, Coo, why? will ye not receive.

The Biſhop of Rome.

Coo. He anſwered him, That the Biſhop of Rome had changed Gods Ordinances, and given the people bread and wine in ſtead of the Goſpel, and the belief of the ſame.

Biſh. How prove you that?

The Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Coo. Our Saviour ſaid, My fleſh is meat in deed, and my blood is drink in deed. He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood abideth in me, and I in him, and the bread and wine doth not ſo.

Biſh. Well Coo, thou doſt ſlander our holy Fathers. Did not Chriſt take bread, give thanks, and brake it, and ſaid, This is my Body?

Coo. Yes, ſaid he; and ſo he went further with the Text, ſaying, Which ſhall be given for you: do this in remembrance of me.

Biſh. You have ſaid the truth.

Coo. Then Coo replied further, and ſaid, Chriſt willed to do this in remembrance of him, and not to ſay this in remembrance of him, neither did the Holy Ghoſt ſo lead the Apoſtles, but taught them to give thanks, and to break bread from houſe to houſe, and not to ſay as the Biſhop ſaid.

Biſh. How prove you that?

Coo. It is written in the ſecond of the Acts.

Then the Biſhops Chaplain ſaid it was true.

Biſh. The Biſhop asked him if he could ſay his Belief.

Coo. He anſwered yea, and ſo ſaid part of the Creed, and then after he ſaid, he believed more; for he believed the Ten Commandments, that it was meet for all ſuch as look to be ſaved, to be obedient unto them.

Biſh. Is not the holy Church to be believed alſo?

Coo. Yes, if it be builded upon the Word of God.

Biſh. The Biſhop ſaid to Coo, that he had charge of his ſoul.

Coo. Have ye ſo my Lord? Then if ye go to the Devil for your ſins, where ſhall I become?

Biſh. Do you not believe as your Father did? Was not he an honeſt man?

Daniel 9. Coo. It is written, that after Chriſt hath ſuffered, There ſhall come a People with the Prince that ſhall deſtroy both City and Sanctuary. I pray you ſhew me whether this deſtruction was in my fathers time, or now?

Biſh. The Biſhop not anſwering his queſtion, asked him whether he would not obey the Kings Laws.

Coo. As far as they agree with the Word of God, I will obey them.

* Well ſpoken, and like the Popes Clerk. Biſh. * Whether they agree with the Word of God or not, we be bound to obey them, if the King were an Infidel.

Coo. If Sydrach, Myſaac, and Abednago had ſo done. Nebuchodonoſor had not confeſſed the living God.

Biſh. Then the Biſhop told him, that theſe 22. years we have been governed with ſuch Kings.

Coo. My Lord, why were ye then dumb, and did not ſpeak or bark?

Biſh. I durſt not for fear of death: and thus they ended.

But after this done, it was reported that I railed; wherefore I called it to memory, and wrote this my railing, that light ſhould not be taken for darkneſs, nor ſin for holineſs, and the Devil for God, who ought to be feared and honoured both now and ever, Amen.

The Martyrdom of Roger Coo at Yexford, An. 1555. Sept. This Roger Coo, an aged Father, after his ſundry troubles and conflicts with his Adverſaries, at length was committed to the fire at Yexford in the County of Suffolk, where he moſt bleſſedly ended his aged years, Anno 1555. *Menſ. Thomas Cob of Haverhill, Butcher, Martyr. Anno 1555.

Thomas Cob of Haverhill in Norfolk, Martyr.

OVer and beſides this foreſaid Roger Coo, William Allen, James Abbes of Stokenneyland, Robert Samuel, and other more, in the ſame year, upon the 12. of Auguſt, was alſo with them condemned Thomas Cob of Haverhill, Butcher, executed in the Month of September aforeſaid. Who being brought and examined by Michael Dunnings the bloody Chancellor of Norwich; firſt, whether he believed that Chriſt is really and ſubſtantially in the Sacrament of the Altar; anſwered, That the Body of Chriſt, born of the bleſſed Virgin, was in Heaven, and otherwiſe (he ſaid) he would not anſwer, becauſe he had read it in the Scripture, that Chriſt did aſcend, and did never deſcend ſince; and therefore ſaid, that he had not learned in the Scripture, that Chriſt ſhould be in the Sacrament.

Examination of Thomas Cob.

The Real Preſence of Chriſt only in Heaven.

Furthermore, being demanded whether he would obey the Laws of the Realm of England, made for the unity of faith, or no: he anſwered, That his body ſhould be at the King and Queens commandment ſo far as the Law of God would ſuffer, &c. In fine, the ſaid Thomas Cob being condemned the ſame 12. day of Auguſt, with the other his Fellow-Martyrs, was burned in the Town of Thetford, Anno 1555. Menſ. Septemb.

The Martyrdom of Thomas Cob at Thetford, Anno 1555. Sept.

The Martyrdom of George Catmer, Robert Streater, Anthony Burward, George Brodbridge, and James Tutty.

NOw from Norfolk and Suffolk, to return again into the Dioceſs of Canterbury, we have to intreat of five worthy Martyrs, whoſe blood in the ſame year and month of September was ſpilt for the true teſtimony of Chriſt, and his Goſpels cauſe. The Names of the which five Martyrs, were theſe:

George Catmer of Hith.
Robert Streater of Hith.
Anthony Burward of Calete.
George Brodbridge of Bromfield.
James Tutty of Brenchley.

Examinations of theſe five Martyrs. Who upon the Third day of Auguſt were brought before Thornton the foreſaid Biſhop of Dover and his Complices, and there were both joyntly and ſeverally examined upon certain Articles, touching the Sacrament of their Altar, Auricular Confeſſion, and other ſuch like.

Examination and anwers of Catmer. To the which the ſaid Catmer (being firſt examined) made anſwer on this wiſe; Chriſt (quoth he) ſitteth in Heaven on the right hand of God the Father; and therefore I do not believe him to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: but he is in the worthy Receiver ſpiritually, and the Sacrament, as you uſe it, is an abominable Idol.

Next unto him was called forth Robert Streater who being alſo asked, Whether he did believe the Real Preſence of Chirſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, ſaid, Examination and anſwers of Streater.

Anno 55.

ſaid, that he did not ſo believe; for you do maintain Hereſie and Idolatry (quoth he) in that ye teach to worſhip a falſe God in the Sacrament, encloſed in a Box. It is you that are the malignant Church; for in your Church there are twenty things uſed againſt the Law of God.

Burward examined.

The like objection was articulate alſo againſt Anthony Burward, who alſo ſaid, that their Sacrament was made an Idol.

Brodbridge examined.

After him was George Brodbridge demanded what he ſaid to thoſe Articles. Who anſwered, that he would not be confeſſed of a Prieſt, becauſe he could not forgive his own ſins. And further ſaid, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the real Body of our Saviour Chriſt, but Bread given in the remembrance of him. Moreover, as for your holy Bread, your holy Water, and your Maſs, I do (quoth he) utterly deſie them.

James Tutty examined, with his anſwer to the ſame.

And laſt of all, did alſo James Tutty make and confirm their ſaid former anſwers.

And therefore they were all five condemned to be burned as Hereticks, and ſo were they all, in one fire at Canterbury aforeſaid, about the ſixth day of September then next following.

Thomas Hayward and John Goreway, Martyrs.

Th. Hayward, Joh. Goreway, Martyrs.

ALthough the rage nnd vehemency of this terrible Perſecution in Queen Maries days did chiefly light in London, Eſſex, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Kent, as hath been partly already declared; yet notwithſtanding, beſides the ſame, we find but few parts of this Realm free from this fatal ſtorm, but ſome good Martyrs or other there ſhed their blood. And firſt to begin with the Dioceſs of Lichfield and Coventry, there we find theſe two to be condemned and alſo burned about the midſt of the ſaid Month of September at the Town of Litchfield; whoſe names were Thomas Hayward and John Goreway.

The Martyrdom of Tho. Hayward and Joh. Goreway at Litchfield, Anno 1555. Septemb.

The perſecution and ſtory of Mr. Robert Glover Gentleman, and of John Glover his Brother, in the Dioceſs of Litchfield.

The ſtory of Mr. Rob. Glover, Martyr, and of Mr. John Glover his brother.

UNto this preſent time and month of September, pertaineth alſo the memorable Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover Gentleman, in the Dioceſs of Litchfield and Coventry. Of whoſe apprehenſion and troubles, becauſe I cannot well intreat, but I muſt alſo intermix ſome mention of his Brother John Glover, forſomuch as this privy Commiſſion was chiefly ſent down for the ſaid John, and not for Robert Glover, (albeit it pleaſed Almighty God, that John eſcaped, and Robert in his ſtead was apprehended) I thought therefore in one ſtory to comprehend them both, in deſcribing ſome part of their vertuous inſtitution and order of life: and firſt to begin with John the eldeſt Brother. Who being a Gentleman, and heir to his Father, dwelling in the Town of Mancetor, was endued with fair Poſſeſſions of worldly Goods, but yet much more plentifully enriched with Gods heavenly grace and inward vertues. Which grace of God ſo working in him, he with his other Brethren, Robert and William, not only received and embraced the happy light of Chriſts holy Goſpel, but alſo moſt zealouſly profeſſed, and no leſs diligently in their living and converſation followed the ſame; much unlike unto our Table-Goſpellers now adays, Virtutem qui verba putant, ut lucum ligna, as Horace ſaith.

John Glover, Rob. Glover, Wil. Glover, three godly brethren, and zealous profeſſors of the Goſpel.

And as touching this foreſaid John Glover (who through his manifold afflictions ſeemed to have a deeper taſte and contemplation of ſpiritual things, joyned with mortification from all worldly cares more than the other had) although ſufficient relation be made before in our firſt edition to be ſeen; yet concerning his ſpiritual conflicts, and the Lords gracious working in him, becauſe the conſideration thereof is both worthy of memory, and the example may work experience peradventure to the comfort of the godly, it ſhall not be hurtful to rehearſe ſome part of the ſame. So it pleaſed God to lay his heavy hand of inward afflictions and grievous paſſions upon this man, that though he ſuffered not the pains of the outward fire, as his Brother and other Martyrs did; yet if we conſider what inwardly in ſpirit and mind this man felt and ſuffered, and that of ſo long time, he may well be counted with his Brother Robert for a Martyr, being no leſs deſirous with him of the ſame Martyrdom; yea, and in compariſon may ſeem to be Chronicled for a double Martyr.

Touching further mention of Mr. John Glover, read in the firſt edition.

The inward conflicts and exerciſe of John Glover. Joh. Glover a double Martyr.

For as the ſaid Robert was ſpeedily diſpatched with the ſharp and extream torments of the fire in a ſhort time; ſo this no leſs bleſſed Saint of God, what and how much more grievous pangs, what ſorrowful torments, what boiling heats of the fire of hell in his ſpirit inwardly he felt and ſuſtained, no ſpeech outwardly is able to expreſs. Being young, I remember I was once or twice with him, who partly by his talk I perceived, and partly by mine own eyes ſaw to be ſo worn and conſumed by the ſpace of five years, that neither almoſt any brooking of meat, quietneſs of ſleep, pleaſure of life, yea and almoſt no kind of ſenſes was left in him. And doubtleſs I have greatly wondred oftentimes at the marvellous works and operation of Chriſt ſhewed upon him, who unleſs he had relieved betimes his poor wretched ſervant ſo far worn, with ſome opportune conſolation now and then betwixt, it could not poſſible be, that he ſhould have ſuſtained ſo intolerable pains and torments. And yet the occaſion thereof was not of ſo great moment and weight. But this we ſee common among holy and bleſſed men, how the more devout and godly they are, having the fear of God before their eyes, the more ſuſpicion and miſtruſt they have of themſelves; whereby it cometh to paſs, that often they are ſo terrified and perplexed with ſmall matters, as though they were huge Mountains; whereas contrary, others there be whom moſt heinous and very ſore crimes indeed do nothing touch or ſtir at all.

A heavy croſs of inward torments laid upon John Glover.

The better conſcience the tooner diſquieted.

The occaſion of this was, That he being firſt called by the light of the Holy Spirit to the knowledge of the Goſpel, and having received a wondrous ſweet feeling of Chriſts heavenly Kingdom, his mind, after that, falling a little to ſome cogitation of his former affairs belonging to his vocation, began by and by to miſdoubt himſelf upon the occaſion of theſe words written in the ſeventh to the Hebrews; For it cannot be that they which were once illumined, and have taſted the heavenly gift, &c. Upon the conſideration of which words, he fully perſwaded himſelf that he had ſinned verily againſt the Holy Ghoſt: even ſo much, that if he had been in the deepeſt pit of Hell, he could almoſt have deſpaired no more of his ſalvation. Here readily every good man may judge of himſelf, what terrors, boilings, and convulſions turmoiled in the mean time in his woful breaſt: although it be hard for any man to judge the grievouſneſs thereof, unleſs he which hath experience of the like.

The firſt occaſion of John Glover's inward afflictions.

Hebr. 7.

In comparing now the torments of all Martyrs with his pains, I pray you what pains, puniſhment, and flames would not he willingly have ſuffered, to have had ſome refocillation and time of refreſhing? Who in ſuch intolerable griefs of mind, although he neither had nor could have any joy of his meat, yet was he compelled to eat againſt his appetite, to the end to defer the time of his damnation, ſo long as he might, thinking with himſelf no leſs, but that he muſt needs be thrown into Hell, the breath being once out of the body. Albeit Chriſt, he thought, did pity his caſe, and was ſorry for him; yet he could not (as he imagined) help, becauſe of the verity of the word, which ſaid, It cannot be, &c.

No grief like to the grief of conſcience.

Hebr. 7.

And this I rehearſe of him, not ſo much to open his wounds and ſorrows, as for that by his example all we with him may glorifie the Sonof God, who ſuffereth none to be tempted above his ſtrength, but ſo tempereth and ſeaſoneth the aſperity of evils, that what ſeemeth to us intolerable, not only he doth allienate the ſame, that we may bear it, but alſo turneth it to our further commodity then we can think. Which well appeared in this good Servant of God, in no man more. Who albeit (as we have ſaid) he ſuffered many years ſo ſharp temptations and ſtrong buffetings of Satan; yet the Lord, who graciouſly preſerved him all the while, not only at laſt did rid him out of all diſcomfort, but alſo framed him thereby to ſuch mortification of life, as the like lightly hath not been ſeen, in ſuch ſort as he being like one placed in Heaven already, and dead in this World, both in word and meditation led a life altogether Celeſtial, abhorring in his mind all prophane doings. Neither was his talk any thing diſcrepant from the fruits of his life, throwing out never any idle, vile or vain language. The moſt part of his Lands he diſtributed to the uſe of his Brethren, and committed the reſt to the guiding of his Servants and Officers, whereby the more quietly he might give himſelf to his godly ſtudy, as to a continual Sabbath reſt. This was about the latter end of King Henry's reign, and continued a great part of the time of King Edward the ſixth.

Chriſt a merciful helper in temptations and hard diſtreſſes.

John Glover by the grace of Chriſt reſtored gata to perfect tranquillity.

After this, in the perſecuting days of Queen Mary, as ſoon as the Biſhop of Coventry heard the fame of this John aforeſaid, being ſo ardent and zealous in the Goſpel of Chriſt, eſtſoons he wrote his Letter to the Maior and Officers of Coventry to apprehend him as ſoon as might be. But it chanced otherwiſe by Gods holy Providence, diſpoſing all things after his own ſecret pleaſure, who ſeeng his old and truſty Servant ſo many years with ſo extream and many torments broken and dried up, would in no wiſe heap too many ſorrows upon one poor ſilly wretch: neither would commit him to the flames of fire, who had been already baked and ſcorched with the ſharp fires of inward affliction, and had ſuſteined ſo many burning darts and conflicts of Satan ſo many years: God therefore of his Divine Providence, thinking it too much that one man ſhould be ſo much overcharged with ſo many plagues and torments, did graciouſly provide, that Robert his Brother being both ſtronger of body, and alſo better furniſhed with helps of learning to anſwer the Adverſaries (being a Maſter of Art in Cambridge) ſhould ſuſtain that conflict, and even ſo it came to paſs, as ye ſhall hear.

The Maior of Coventry ſendeth a privy watch word to John Glover.

For as ſoon as the Maior of Coventry had received the Biſhops Letters for the apprehending of Mr. John Glover, he ſent forthwith a privy watch word to the ſaid John to convey away himſelf: Who with his Brother William was not ſo ſoon departed out of his houſe, but that yet in the ſight of the Sheriff and other, the ſearchers came and ruſhed in to take him, according to the Biſhops commandment.

Mr. Rob. Glover apprehended lying ſick in his Chamber.

But when the ſaid John could in no place be found, one of the Officers going into an upper Chamber, found there Robert the other Brother lying on his bed, and ſick of a long Diſeaſe; who was by him incontinent brought before the Sheriff. Which Sheriff notwithſtanding favouring Robert and his cauſe, would indeed fain have diſmiſſed him, and wrought what means he could, ſaying, That he was not the man for whom they were ſent: Yet nevertheleſs being feared with the ſtout words of the Officer, contending with him to have him ſtayed till the Biſhops coming, he was conſtrained to carry him away againſt his will, and ſo laid him faſt while the Biſhop came. And thus much by the way of preamble firſt concerning the worthy remembrance of Mr. John Glover.

Now to enter the matter which principally we have in hand, that is, to conſider the Story and Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover, forſomuch as the whole Narration of the ſame by his own record and teſtimony in writing was ſent unto his Wife, concerning the manner of his ordering and handling: it ſhall therefore ſeem beſt for the more credit of the matter, to exhibit the ſaid his own Letter, the words and contents whereof here enſue as followeth.

A Letter of Mr. Robert Glover to his wife, containing the whole diſcourſe and deſcription of his troubles ſuſtained in priſon, and of his ſundry conflicts between the Biſhop and him about Religion.

To my entirely beloved wife, Mary Glover.

A Letter of Mr R. Glover to his wife, certifying his troubles ſince his firſt apprehenſion.

THe Peace of Conſcience which paſſeth all underſtanding, the ſweet conſolation, comfort, ſtrength, and boldneſs of the Holy Ghoſt be continually increaſed in our heart, through a fervent, earneſt, and ſtedfaſt faith in our moſt dear and only Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

I thank you heartily (moſt loving Wife) for your Letters ſent unto me in my Impriſonment. I read them with tears more than once or twice, with tears (I ſay) for joy and gladneſs, that God had wrought in you ſo merciful a work; firſt, an unfeigned repentance; ſecondly, an humble and hearty reconciliation; thirdly, a willing ſubmiſſion and obedience to the will of God in all things. Which when I read in your Letters, and judged them to proceed from the bottom of your heart; I could not but be thankful to God, rejoycing with tears for you, and theſe his great mercies poured upon you. Anno 1555.

Theſe your Letters, and the hearing of your moſt godly proceedings and conſtant doings from time to time, much relieved and comforted me at all times, and ſhall be a goodly teſtimony with you at the great day, againſt many worldly and dainty Dames, which ſet more by their own pleaſure and pelf in this world, than by Gods glory, little regarding (as it appeareth) the everlaſting health of their own ſouls or others. My prayer ſhall be whilſt I am in this world, that God, which of his great mercy hath begun his good work in you, will finiſh it to the glory of his Name, and by the mighty power and inſpiration of his holy Spirit ſo ſtrengthen, ſtabliſh, and confirm you in all his ways to the end, that we may together ſhew forth his Praiſes in the world to come, to our unſpeakable conſolation everlaſtingly, Amen.

The worldly wantonneſs commonly of Engliſh women noted.

So long as God ſhall lend you continuance in this miſerable world, above all things give your ſelf continually to prayer, lifting up, as S. Paul ſaith, clean or pure hands without anger, wrath, or doubting, forgiving (as he ſaith alſo) if you have any thing againſt any man, as Chriſt forgiveth us. And that we may be the better willing to forgive, it is good often to call to remembrance the multitude and greatneſs of our ſins, which Chriſt daily and hourly pardoneth and forgiveth us, and then we ſhall, as S. Peter affirmeth, be ready to cover and hide the offences of our Brethren, be they never ſo many. And becauſe Gods Word teacheth us, not only the true manner of praying, but alſo what we ought to do or not to do in the whole diſcourſe and practice of this life, what pleaſeth or diſpleaſeth God, and that, as Chriſt ſaith, The Word of God that he hath ſpoken ſhall judge in the laſt day: Let your prayer be to this end ſpecially, That God of his great mercy would open and reveal more and more daily to your heart the true ſenſe, knowledge, and underſtanding of his moſt holy Word, and give you grace in your living, to expreſs the fruits thereof.

1 Pet. 4.

John 1.

And foraſmuch as it is, as the Holy Ghoſt calleth it, the word of affliction, that is, it is ſeldom without hatred, perſecution, peril, danger of loſs of life and goods, and whatſoever ſeemeth pleaſant in this world, as experience teacheth you in this time: call upon God continually for his aſſiſtance always, as Chriſt teacheth, caſting your accounts what it is like to coſt you, endeavouring your ſelf, through the help of the Holy Ghoſt by continuance of prayer, to lay your foundation ſo ſure, that no ſtorm or tempeſt ſhall be able to overthrow or caſt it down; remembring always (as Chriſt ſaith) Lots wife; that is, to beware of looking back to that thing that diſpleaſeth God. And becauſe nothing diſpleaſeth God ſo much as Idolatry, that is falſe worſhipping of God, otherwiſe than his Word commandeth: Look not back (I ſay) nor turn not your face to their idolatrous and blaſphemous maſſing, manifeſtly againſt the word, practice, and example of Chriſt; as it is moſt manifeſt to all that have any taſte of the true underſtanding of Gods Word, that there remaineth nothing in the Church of England at this preſent, profitable or edifying to the Church and Congregation of the Lord, all things being done in an unknown tongue, contrary to the expreſs commandment of the Holy Ghoſt.

They object that they be the Church, and therefore they muſt be believed. My anſwer was, The Church of God knoweth and reknowledgeth no other Head but Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, whom ye have refuſed, and choſen the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition, Enemy to Chriſt, the Devils Deputy and Lieutenant, the Pope.

The firſt note proving the Church of the Papiſts not to be the true Church.

Church

Anno 1555.

Church repelleth Gods Word, and forceth all men to follow their Traditions.

3 Note. Acts 7.

Christs Church dare not add or diminish, alter or change his blessed Testament; but they be not afraid to take away all that Christ instituted, and go a whoring (as the Scripture saith) with their own Inventions, Et lætari super operibus manuum suarum; i. To glory and rejoyce in the works of their own hands.

4 Note to know the Church.

The Church of Christ is, hath been, and shall be in all Ages under the Cross, persecuted, molested, and afflicted, the World ever hating them, because they be not of the world. But these persecute, murther, slay, and kill such as profess the true Doctrine of Christ, be they in learning, living, conversation, and other vertues never so excellent.

5 Note. John 5.

Christ and his Church referred the trial of their Doctrine to the Word of God, and gave the people leave to judge thereof by the same Word, Search the Scriptures: But this Church taketh away the Word from the people, and suffereth neither learned nor unlearned to examine or prove their Doctrine by the Word of God.

6 Note to know the Church.

The true Church of God laboureth by all means to resist and withstand the Lusts, Desires, and Motions of the World, the Flesh, and the Devil: These for the most part give themselves to all Voluptuousness, and secretly commit such things, which (as S. Paul saith) it is shame to speak of.

Ephes. 5. Compare the proceedings and doings of the Popes Church, with the true Members of Christs Church, and you shall see what they are.

By these, and such like manifest probations, they do declare themselves to be none of the Church of Christ, but rather of the Synagogue of Satan. It shall be good for you oftentimes to confer and compare their proceedings and doings with the practise of those whom the Word of God doth teach to have been true Members of the Church of God, and it shall work in you both knowledge, erudition, and boldness to withstand with suffering their doings. I likened them therefore to Nemrod, whom the Scripture calleth a mighty Hunter, or a stout Champion, telling them that that which they could not have by the Word, they would have by the Sword, and be the Church whether men will or no, and called them with good Conscience, as Christ called their Forefathers, the Children of the Devil; and as their Father the Devil is a liar and a murtherer, so their Kingdom and Church (as they call it) standeth by lying and murthering.

The Church of the valiant Papists compared to Nemrod, and why? The Popes Church standeth all in lying and murdering.

Have no fellowship with them therefore, my dear wife, nor with their Doctrine and Traditions, lest you be partaker of their sins, for whom is reserved a heavy damnation, without speedy repentance. Beware of such as shall advertise you something to bear with the world as they do, for a season. There is no dallying with Gods matters, It is a fearful thing (as S. Paul saith) to fall into the hands of God. Remember the Prophet Helias, Why halt ye on both sides? Remember what Christ saith, He that putteth his hands to the Plough, and looketh back, is not worthy of me. And seeing God hath hitherto allowed you as a good Souldier in the foreward, play not the coward, neither draw back to the rereward. S. John numbreth among them that shall dwell in the fiery Lake, such as be fearful in Gods cause. Set before your eyes always the examples of such as have behaved themselves boldly in Gods cause, as Stephen, Peter, Paul, Daniel, the three Children, the Widows sons, and in your days, Anne Askew, Laurence Saunders, John Bradford, with many other faithful Witnesses of Christ. Be afraid in nothing (saith S. Paul) of the Adversaries of Christs Doctrine, the which is to them the sign of perdition, but to you of everlasting salvation. Christ commandeth the same, saying, Fear them not. Let us not follow the example of him which asked time first to take leave of his friends. If we so do, we shall find few of them that will encourage us to go forward in our business, please it God never so much. We read not that James and John, Andrew and Simon, when they were called, put off the time till they had known their fathers and friends pleasure. But the Scripture saith, They forsook all, and by and by followed Christ. Christ likened the Kingdom of God to a precious Pearl, the which whosoever findeth, selleth all that he hath to buy it. Yea, whosoever hath but a little taste of glimmering how precious a Treasure the Kingdom of Heaven is, will gladly forego both life and goods for the obtaining of it. But the most part now adays be like to Esops Cock, which when he had found a precious stone, wished rather to have found a barley corn. So ignorant be they how precious a Jewel the Word of God is, that they choose rather the things of this world, which being compared to it, be less in value than a barley corn.

Matth. 13.

If I would have given place to worldly reasons, these might have moved me: First, the foregoing of you and my Children; the consideration of the state of my Children, being yet tender of Age, and young, apt and inclinable to vertue and learning, and so having the more need of my assistance, being not altogether destitute of gifts to help them withal; possessions above the common sort of men; because I was never called to be a Preacher or Minister; and (because of my sickness) fear of death in imprisonment before I should come to my answer, and so my death to be unprofitable.

Worldly allurements and motions of drawing back by Gods grace withstanded

But these and such like, I thank my heavenly Father (which of his infinite mercy inspired me with his holy Ghost, for his Sons sake my only Saviour and Redeemer) prevailed not in me: but when I had by the wonderful permission of God, fallen into their hands, at the first sight of the Sheriff, Nature a little abashed; yet e're ever I came to the Prison, by the working of GOD, and through his goodness, fear departed. I said to the Sheriff at his coming unto me, What matter have you Master Sheriff to charge me withal? He answered, You shall know when you come before the Masters; and so taking me with him, I looked to have been brought before the Masters, and to have heard what they could have burdened me withal: but contrary to my expectation, I was committed forthwith to the Goal, not being called to my Answer, little justice being shewed therein. But the less justice a man findeth at their hands, the more consolation in Conscience shall he find from God; for whosoever is of the world, the world will love him.

Experience of the Lords assistance in confirming his servants.

Mr. Glover committed to the Goal before any cause was declared.

Gods mighty consolation upon R. Glover in prison.

After I came into Prison, and had reposed my self there a while, I wept for joy and gladness, my belly full, musing much of the great mercies of God; and (as it were) saying to my self after this sort; O Lord, who am I, on whom thou shouldest bestow this thy great mercy, to be numbred among the Saints that suffer for the Gospel sake? And so beholding and considering on the one side my imperfection, unableness, sinful misery, and unworthiness, and on the other side the greatness of Gods mercy, to be called to so high promotion, I was, as it were, amazed and overcome for a while with joy and gladness, concluding thus with my self in my heart; O Lord, thou shewest power in weakness, wisdom in foolishness, mercy in sinfulness; who shall let thee to choose where and whom thou wilt? As I have zealously loved the confession of thy Word, so ever thought I my self to be most unworthy to be partaker of the affliction for the same.

Mr. Glover weepeth for joy in prison.

Not long after came unto me Mr. W. Brasbridge, Mr. C. Phineas, Mr. N. Hopkins, travelling with me to be dismissed upon bonds. To whom my answer was (to my remembrance) after this sort: Forasmuch as the Masters have imprisoned me, having nothing to burthen me withal, if I should enter into bonds, I should in so doing accuse my self; and seeing they have no matter to lay to my charge, they may as well let me pass without bonds, as with bonds.

Mr. Glover counselled to put in bonds. R. Glover refuseth to enter into bonds.

Secondarily, If I shall enter bonds, covenant, and promise to appear, I shall do nothing but excuse, colour and cloak their wickedness, and indanger my self nevertheless, being bound by my promise to appear. They alledged many worldly perswasions to me to avoid the present peril, and also how to avoid the forfeiture, if I brake promise: I said unto them, I had cast up my penny-worth by Gods help. They undertook also to make the bond easie.

Worldly perswasions not received

And when they were somewhat importunate, I said to Mr. Hopkins, That liberty of Conscience was a precious thing, and took, as it were, a pause, lifting up my heart to God earnestly for his aid and help, that I might do the thing that might please him. And so when they had let their suit fall, my heart (me thought) was wonderfully comforted. Mr. Dudley communed with me in like manner; whom I answered in effect as I did before.

Mr. Glover again visited with Gods holy comfort.

Afterward debating the matter with my self, these considerations came into my head; I have from time to time with good Conſcience (God I take to record) moved all ſuch as I had conference withal to be no dalliers in Gods matters, but to ſhew themſelves, after ſo great a light and knowledge, hearty, earneſt, conſtant, and ſtable in ſo manifeſt a Truth, and not to give place one jot contrary to the ſame. Now thought I, if I ſhall withdraw my ſelf, and make any ſhifts to pull my own neck out of the collar, I ſhall give great offence to my weak Brethren in Chriſt, and advantage to the Enemies to ſlander Gods Word. It will be ſaid, He hath been a great boldner of others to be earneſt and fervent, to fear no worldly perils or dangers, but he himſelf will give no ſuch example.

Mr. Glover reaſoning with himſelf.

Wherefore I thought it my bounden duty, both to God and Man, being (as it were) by the great goodneſs of God marvelouſly called and appointed hereunto, to ſet aſide all fear, perils and dangers, all worldly reſpects and conſiderations, and like as I had heretofore, according to the meaſure of my ſmall gift within the compaſs of my vocation and calling, from the bottom of my heart unfeignedly moved, exhorted and perſwaded all that profeſs Gods Word, manfully to perſiſt in the defence of the ſame, not with ſword and violence, but with ſuffering and loſs of life, rather than to defile themſelves again with the whoriſh abomination of the Romiſh Antichriſt; ſo the hour being come, with my fact and example to ratifie, confirm, and proteſt the ſame to the hearts of all true Believers: and to this end, by the mighty aſſiſtance of Gods holy Spirit, I reſolved my ſelf, with much peace of Conſcience, willingly to ſuſtain whatſoever the Romiſh Antichriſt ſhould do againſt me, and the rather becauſe I underſtood the Biſhops coming to be at hand, and conſidered that poor mens Conſciences ſhould be then ſharply aſſaulted. So remained I priſoner in Coventry by the ſpace of ten or eleven days, being never called to my anſwer of the Maſters, contrary to the Laws of the Realm, they having neither Statute, Law, Proclamation, Letter, Warrant, nor commandment for my apprehenſion. They would have laid all the matter upon the Sumner: who being examined, denied it before their faces (as one of my friends told me) ſaying, that he had no commandment concerning me, but for my elder brother. God lay not their extream doings againſt me to their charge at the great day.

Mr. Glover taketh courage all fear and danger ſet aſide.

Mr. Glover reſolved in himſelf to abide the uttermoſt for the Goſpels cauſe.

The Papiſts proceed with M. Glover againſt the Laws of the Realm. Commandment given to the Sumner againſt John Glover, and not againſt R. Glover.

This Biſhops name was D. Banes.

Mr. Warren of Coventry perſecutor of R. Glover.

A Leſſon for all Perſecutors.

The ſecond day after the Biſhops coming to Coventry, Mr. Warren came to the Guildhall, and willed the chief Jaylor to carry me to the Biſhop. I laid to Mr. Warrens charge the cruel ſeeking of my death; and when he would have excuſed himſelf, I told him he could not wipe his hands ſo; he was as guilty of my blood before God, as though he had murdered me with his own hands.

And ſo he departed from me, ſaying, I needed not to fear if I would be of his belief. God open his eyes if it be his will, and give him grace to believe this, which he and all of his inclination ſhall find (I fear) too true for their parts; that is, that all they which cruelly, maliciouſly, and ſpitefully perſecute, moleſt, and afflict the Members of Chriſt for their Conſcience ſake, and for the true teſtimony of Chriſts Word, and cauſe them moſt unjuſtly to be ſlain and murthered, without ſpeedy repentance, ſhall dwell with the Devil and his Angels in the fierce lake everlaſtingly; where they ſhall wiſh and deſire, cry and call, but in vain (as their right Companion Epulo did) to be refreſhed of them, whom in this world they contemned, deſpiſed, diſdained, as Slaves, Miſers, and Wretches.

Luke 16.

When I came before the Biſhop in one Denton's houſe, he began with this Proteſtation, that he was my Biſhop for lack of a better, and willed me to ſubmit my ſelf.

R. Glover brought before Banes Biſhop of Litchfield and Coventry. Mr. R. Glover M. of Art in Cambridge.

I ſaid to him, I am not come to accuſe my ſelf; what have you to lay to my charge?

He asked me whether I was learned? I anſwered, ſmally learned.

Maſter Chancellor ſtanding by, ſaid, I was a Maſter of Art.

R. Glover charged for not coming to the Church.

Then my Lord laid to my charge my not coming to the Church.

Here I might have dallied with him, and put him to his proofs, foraſmuch as I had not been for a long ſeaſon in his Dioceſs, neither was any of the Citizens able to prove any ſuch matter againſt me. Notwithſtanding I anſwered him through Gods merciful help, that I neither had nor would come at their Church as long as their Maſs was uſed there, to ſave (if I had them) five hundred lives. I willed him to ſhew me one jot or tittle in the Scriptures for the proof and defence of the Maſs.

Anno 15[illegible]

He anſwered, he came to teach, and not to be taught.

I was content (I told him) to learn of him, ſo far as he was able to teach me by the Word of God.

Biſh. Who ſhall judge the Word?

Glover. Chriſt was content that the people ſhould judge his Doctrine by ſearching the Scriptures, and ſo was Paul; me thinketh ye ſhould claim no further priviledge nor preheminence than they had.

The Biſhop refuſeth to be judged by the Primitive Church.

Thus ſpake Robert Glover, offering him further, that he was content the Primitive Church next to the Apoſtles time, ſhould judge betwixt the Biſhop and him. But he refuſed alſo to be judged by that. Then he ſaid he was his Biſhop, and therefore he muſt believe him.

Glover. If you ſay black is white, my Lord (quoth Glover) muſt I alſo ſay as you ſay, and believe the ſame becauſe you ſay it is ſo? Maſter Chancellor here noted me to be arrogant, becauſe I would not give place to my Biſhop.

Glover. If you will be believed becauſe you be a Biſhop, why find you fault with the people that believed Mr. Latimer, Mr. Ridley, Mr. Hooper, and the reſidue of them that were Biſhops?

Biſh. Becauſe they were Hereticks.

Where was the Church before King Edwards time?

Glover. And may not you err (quoth I) as well as they? I looked for learning at my Lords hand to perſwade me, and he oppreſſed me only with his Authority. He ſaid I diſſented from the Church, and asked me where my Church was before King Edwards time?

The Biſhop could not ſhew where Gods Church was in Iſrael nor where any Prophet was in all Judah in Helias time.

I deſired him to ſhew me where their Church was in Helias's time, and what outward ſhew it had in Chriſts time.

Biſh. Helias's complaint was only of the Ten Tribes that fell from Davids houſe, whom he called Hereticks.

Glover. You be not able to ſhew any Prophets that the other two Tribes had at that ſame time.

My Lord making no anſwer to that, Mr. Rogers, one of the Maſters of the City, cometh in the mean ſeaſon, taking upon him as though he would anſwer to the Text. But my Lord forthwith commanded me to be committed to ſome Tower, if they had any beſides the Common Goal, ſaying, He would at the end of his Viſitation of his Dioceſs, weed out ſuch Wolves. Mr. Rogers willed him to content himſelf for that night, till they had taken further order for me. Even where it pleaſeth you, ſaid I to my Lord, I am content; and ſo I was returned at that time to the Common Goal again from whence I came.

R. Glover ſomewhat diſcouraged at the firſt hearing that he ſhould be removed from Coventry to Litchfield.

On the Friday morning, being the next day after, I had warning by one of the Priſoners to prepare my ſelf to ride with my Fellow-Priſoners the ſame day to Litchfield, there to be beſtowed at the Biſhops pleaſure. Which tydings at the firſt ſomething diſcouraged me, fearing leſt I ſhould by the means of my great ſickneſs, through extream handling (which I looked for) have dyed in the Priſon before I ſhould come to my anſwer: But I rebuked immediately with Gods Word this infidelity in my ſelf, and by the ſame corrected mine own miſtruſt and fantaſie after this manner. What make I of God? Is not his Power as great in Litchfield as in Coventry? Doth not his Promiſe extend as well to Litchfield as to Coventry? Was he not with Habakkuk, Daniel, Miſaach, and Jeremy, in their moſt dangerous impriſonments? He knoweth what things we have need of. He hath numbred all the hairs of our head. The Sparrow falleth not on the ground, without our heavenly Fathers will; much more will he care for us if we be not faithleſs, whom he hath made worthy to be witneſſes of his Truth. So long as we put our truſt in him, we ſhall never be deſtitute of his help, neither in priſon, neither in ſickneſs, nor in health, neither in life, nor in death, neither before Kings, nor before Biſhops, nor the Devil himſelf, much

R. Glover comforted again with the meditation of the Scripture, and Gods promiſe.

leſs

Anno 1555.

leſs one of his Miniſters ſhall be able to prevail againſt us. With ſuch like Meditations I waxed chearful, of good conſolation and comfort: ſo that hearing one ſay that they could not provide horſes enow for us, I ſaid, let them carry us in a Dung-cart for lack of horſes, if they liſt; I am well content for my part.

Mr. Glover waxeth chearful again and bold.

Notwithſtanding, at the requeſt of my Friends, I wrote to Maſter Maior, and his Brethren, briefly requiring them that I might make anſwer here to ſuch things as ſhould be laid to my charge: The Contents of which Letter were theſe.

R. Glover requireth to make his anſwer at Coventry.

A Letter of Mr. Robert Glover to the Maior of Coventry and his Brethren.

The conteants of Mr. Glovers Letter ſent to the Maior of Coventry and his brethren

I Beſeech you to underſtand, that it is not unknown, as well to the Keeper of the Goal, as to the Inhabitants about me where I dwell, that I am a man ſubject to very great ſickneſs, and have been by the ſpace of ſeven years and more, ſo that it is not like that I ſhall be removed without peril and danger of life. And becauſe I was here committed to ward by your appointment, I would gladly here anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be laid to my charge. If I may obtain this of you, I have cauſe thankfully to acknowledge your indifference; if otherwiſe, I pray God it be not laid to your charge at the great day, where every man ſhall have juſt Judgment without reſpect of perſon.

Your priſoner in the Lord, always mindful of you in my poor prayer,
Robert Glover.

But I received no anſwers of my Letters to nor fro. I conjectured, that when the Biſhop and the Chancellor had ſeen them, it moved them the rather to have me away, being more deſirous (as I ſuppoſe) to have had me diſpatched privily in Priſon, then to come openly to my anſwer. The manner of intreating and uſing me at my firſt coming to Priſon, did partly declare the ſame.

R. Glover and his fellow priſoners removed from Coventry to Litchfield in the face of the open market.

Certain Sergeants and Conſtables of Coventry, being appointed to have the conveying of us to Litchfield, to be delivered there to one Jephcot the Chancellors man, ſent from Coventry with us for the ſame purpoſe, we were commanded to horſback about eleven or twelve of the clock on Friday, being Market-day, that we might be the more gazed and wondred at: and to kindle the peoples hearts more againſt us, they did proclaim a Letter concerning a Proclamation made for calling in, and diſanulling of all ſuch Books as truly expound and interpret the Scriptures. We came to Litchfield about four of the clock at night, and had leave to repoſe our ſelves for our Supper time. We Inned at the ſign of the Swan, where we were entertained friendly and gently.

Jephcot the Chancellors ſervant.

After Supper Jephcot repaired to us, whom we intreated that upon Sureties we might reſt our ſelves that night, being unprovided of any thing to help our ſelves withal in the Priſon at that preſent. He was content at the firſt (as he ſeemed) but afterwards, whether it was by perſwaſion, or rather (as it ſeemed to me) he did but of policy put off the time till he had gathered a multitude to ſtare and wonder upon us, and alſo that we ſhould provide nothing to eaſe our ſelves withal; he revoked his promiſe, and ſo by conſent we were had to the Priſon, the Multitude wondring at us. I willed Jephcot before to execute his Office with mercy, telling him that they ſhould have judgment without mercy, that ſhewed no mercy. And this mercy I found at his hand.

Papiſts keep no promiſe.

He put me into a Priſon that ſame night, where I continued till I was condemned, in a place next to the Dungeon, narrow of rooms, ſtrong of building, and very cold, with ſmall light, and there allowed he me a bundle of ſtraw, in ſtead of my bed, without chair, form, or any other thing elſe to eaſe my ſelf withal. God of his mercy gave me great patience through prayer that night, ſo, that if it had been his pleaſure, I could have been contented to have ended my life: But Jephcot and one Perſey the Biſhops man, which afterwards was my continual Keeper for the moſt part, came to me in the morning, to whom I ſaid, This is a great extremity, God ſend us patience, and no more.

Jephcot and Perſey cruel and ſtraight againſt Mr. Glover.

Then they were content that I ſhould have a bed of mine own procurement. But I was allowed no help, neither night nor day, nor company of any man, notwithſtanding my great ſickneſs; nor yet paper, pen nor ink, or books, ſaving my New Teſtament in Latin, and a Prayer-Book which I privily ſtole in.

Talk between Mr. Glover and the Chancellor in priſon.

Within two days after, Maſter Chancellor, and one Temſey a Prebendary there, came to me into my Priſon. Maſter Chancellor exhorted me to conform my ſelf to my Lord and to the Church. He wiſhed to my Soul no more hurt than to his own, belike becauſe I had laid to his charge at Coventry the ſeeking of my blood unjuſtly and wrongfully.

Now thus the ſecond time I anſwered Mr. Chancellor to his Exhortation, That I refuſed not to be ruled by that Church that was content to be ordered and governed by the Word of God.

Chan. He asked me how I knew the Word of God, but by the Church.

Glover. The Church ſheweth which is the Word of God, therefore the Church is above the Word of God. This is no good reaſon in learning, ſaid I to Maſter Chancellor. For it is like unto this; John ſhewed the people who was Chriſt; Ergo, John was above Chriſt. Or elſe, I have a man that knoweth not the King, and I tell him who was the King: am I therefore above the King?

The Church giveth witneſs which be the true books and writings of the Apoſtles: as alſo the old Synagogue of the Jews doth witneſs which be the true books of the holy Prophets: yet it followeth not thereby, that the Jews have authority over the Scripture.

Mr. Chancellor ſaid, he came not to reaſon with me, and ſo departed. So remained I without any further conference of any man by the ſpace of eight days, and till the Biſhops coming: In the which time I gave my ſelf continually to prayer, and meditation of the merciful promiſes of God, made unto all, without exception of perſon, that call upon the Name of his dear Son Jeſus Chriſt. I found in my ſelf daily amendment of health of body, increaſe of peace in conſcience, and many conſolations from God, by the help of his holy Spirit, and ſometimes as it were a taſte and glimmering of the life to come; all for his only Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake: to him be all praiſe for ever and ever.

The comforts and ſweet feeling of Mr. Glover in priſon.

The Enemy ceaſed not many times ſundry ways to aſſault me, often objecting to my Conſcience mine own unworthineſs, through the greatneſs of the benefit to be counted among the number of them that ſhould ſuffer for Chriſt, for his Goſpels ſake. Againſt him I replyed with the Word of God on this ſort, What were all thoſe whom God had choſen from the beginning, to be his witneſſes, and to carry his name before the world? Were they not men, as Paul and Barnabas ſaid, Similiter obnoxii peccato, as well ſubject to wickedneſs, ſin, and imperfections, as other men be? Even ſuch were Noah, Abraham, David, and all the reſt. Quis prior dedit illi, as Paul ſaith, Who gave firſt unto him? And alſo ſpeaking to every man, What haſt thou that thou receiveſt not? Likewiſe John, All have received of his fulneſs; they were no bringers of any goodneſs to God, but altogether receivers. They choſe not God firſt, but he choſe them. They loved not God firſt, but he loved them firſt. Yea, he both loved and choſe them when they were his enemies, full of ſin and corruption, and void of all goodneſs. Eſt Dominus omnium, dives in omnes & ſuper omnes invocantes eum. He is and will be ſtill the ſame God, as rich in mercy, as mighty, as able, as ready, as willing to forgive ſins without reſpect of perſon, to the worlds end, of all them that call upon him. Prope eſt Dominus omnibus invocantibus eum: God is near, he is at hand, he is with all, with all (I ſay) and refuſeth none, excepteth none that faithfully in true repentance call upon him, in what hour, what place, or what time ſoever it be. It is no arrogancy nor preſumption in any man, to burthen God (as it were) with his promiſe, and of duty to claim and challenge his aid, help, and aſſiſtance in all our perils, dangers and diſtreſs, calling upon him, not in the confidence of our own godlineſs, but in the truſt of his promiſes made in Chriſt, in whom, and by whom, and for whoſe ſake, whoſoever boldly approacheth to the Mercy ſeat of the Father, is ſure to receive whatſoever is expedient or neceſſary, either for body or ſoul, in more ample wiſe and large manner, than he can well wiſh, or dare deſire. His Word cannot lye, Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will hear thee, and thou ſhalt praiſe me.

Mr. Glover replieth againſt the temptation of the enemy in that he is a ſinner.

I anſwered the enemy alſo on this manner; I am a ſinner, and therefore unworthy to be a witneſs of this truth. What then? Muſt I deny his Word, becauſe I am not worthy to profeſs it? What bring I to paſs in ſo doing, but add ſin to ſin? What is greater ſin than to deny the truth of Chriſts Goſpel? as Chriſt himſelf beareth witneſs, He that is aſhamed of me or of my words, of him I will be alſo aſhamed before my Father and all his Angels. I might alſo by like reaſon forbear to do any of Gods Commandments.

When I am provoked to pray, the enemy may ſay to me, I am not worthy to pray, therefore I ſhall not pray: and ſo in like manner of all the Commandments, I ſhall not forbear ſwearing, ſtealing, murdering, becauſe I am not worthy to do any Commandment of God. Theſe be the deluſions of the Devil, and Satans ſuggeſtions, which muſt be overcome by continuance of Prayer, and with the Word of God applyed, according to the meaſure of every mans gift, againſt all aſſaults of the Devil.

Mr. Glover brought again before the Biſhop.

At the Biſhops firſt coming to Litchfield, after mine impriſonment, I was called into a By-chamber next to my Priſon, to my Lord. Before whom, when I came and ſaw none but his Officers, Chaplains and Servants, except it were an old Prieſt, I was partly amazed, and lifted up my heart to God for his merciful help and aſſiſtance.

Reaſoning between Mr. Glover and the Biſhop.

My Lord asked me how I liked my impriſonment, I gave him no anſwer touching that queſtion. He proceeded to perſwade me to be a Member of his Church, which had continued ſo many years. As for our Church (as he called it) it was not known he ſaid, but lately in King Edwards time.

* The true Church is always builded upon the Doctrine of the Apoſtles; which though it appear not always alike in outward ſight, the fault is in the time, not in the Church. Times did alter, and with the times the outward face of the Church may alter, ſometimes appearing more, ſometimes leſs, ſometimes very little, ſometimes nothing at all, according as the Perſecution is. Nevertheleſs, the Truth of the Church abideth always one. Neither doth it go by number of men, but by ſoundneſs of truth. Many agreeing in one maketh an unity: but the verity of the word maketh the Church, whether it be in few or in many.

I profeſs my ſelf to be a Member of that Church (ſaid I) that is builded * upon the Foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt being the Head corner ſtone; and ſo alledged the place of St. Paul to the Epheſians. And this Church hath been from the beginning (ſaid I) though it bear no glorious ſhew before the world, being ever, for the moſt part, under the Croſs and Affliction, contemned, deſpiſed and perſecuted; My Lord on the other ſide, contended that they were the Church.

Glover. So cried all the Clergy againſt the Prophets of Jeruſalem, ſaying, Templum Domini, Templum Domini, The Church, the Church, &c.

Biſhop. And always when I was about to ſpeak any thing, my Lord cried, Hold thy peace; I command thee by the vertue of obedience to hold thy peace, calling me a proud arrogant Heretick.

Glover. I willed my Lord to burthen me with ſome ſpecialties, and then to convince me with ſome Scriptures and good Learning.

Then my Lord began to move certain queſtions. I refuſed to anſwer him in corners, requiring that I might make my anſwer openly. He ſaid I ſhould anſwer him there. I ſtood with him upon that point until he ſaid, I ſhould to priſon again, and there have neither meat nor drink till I had anſwered him.

Then I lifted up my heart to God, that I might ſtand and agree with the Doctrine of his moſt holy Word.

The firſt queſtion.

Biſh. The firſt queſtion was this, How many Sacraments Chriſt inſtituted to be uſed in the Church?

Glover. The Sacrament of Baptiſm, ſaid I, and the Sacrament that he inſtituted at his laſt Supper.

Biſh. No more, ſaid he?

Power by Gods word in the Miniſtry, to remit ſin.

Glover. To all thoſe that declare a true and unfeigned repentance, a ſure hope, truſt and confidence in the death of Chriſt, to ſuch, Miniſters (I grant) have authority to pronounce, by the power of Gods Word, the remiſſion of ſins.

Here interrupting me, he would needs bear me in hand that I called this a Sacrament. I would not greatly contend with him in that point, becauſe that matter was of no great weight or importance; although he in ſo doing did me wrong, for I called it not a Sacrament.

He asked me further, whether I allowed their confeſſion?

Ann. 1555.

I anſwered, No.

2 Queſtion. 3 Queſtion.

Biſh. Then he would know my mind what I thought of the preſence of Chriſts Body in the Sacrament.

Glover. I anſwered, that their Maſs was neither Sacrifice nor Sacrament, becauſe (ſaid I) you have taken away the true inſtitution, which when you reſtore again, I will tell you my judgment concerning Chriſts Body in the Sacrament.

And thus much did this worthy Martyr of God leave behind him by his own hand in writing concerning the manner of his uſing and intreating in Priſon, and alſo of his conflicts had with the Biſhop and his Chancellor. More Examinations he had (no doubt) with the Biſhop in the publick Conſiſtory, when he was brought forth to be condemned, which alſo he would have left unto us, if either length of life, or leiſure of time, or haſte of execution had permitted him to finiſh that he intended; but by reaſon of the Writ of his burning being come down from London, lack of time neither did ſerve him ſo to do, neither yet could I get the Records of his laſt Examinations, whereſoever they are become.

Only this which I could learn by relation of one Auſten Bernher, a Miniſter, and a familiar friend of his, concerning the going to his death; I can report, that the ſaid bleſſed Servant of the Lord, Mr. Robert Glover, after he was condemned by the Biſhop, and was now at a point to be delivered out of this world, it ſo happened, that two or three days before, his heart being lumpiſh and deſolate of all ſpiritual conſolation, felt in himſelf no aptneſs nor willingneſs, but rather a heavineſs and dulneſs of ſpirit, full of much diſcomfort to bear the bitter Croſs of Martyrdom ready to be laid upon him.

R. Glover deſtitute for a time of the Lords comfort.

Whereupon fearing in himſelf leſt the Lord had utterly withdrawn his wonted favour from him, made his moan to this Auſten his friend above remembred, ſignifying unto him how earneſtly he had prayed day and night unto the Lord, and yet could receive no motion nor ſenſe of any comfort from him.

Unto whom the ſaid Auſten anſwering again, willed and deſired him patiently to wait the Lords pleaſure, and howſoever his preſent feeling was, yet ſeeing his cauſe was juſt and true, he exhorted him conſtantly to ſtick to the ſame, and to play the man, nothing miſdoubting but the Lord in his good time would viſit him, and ſatisfie his deſire with plenty of conſolation, whereof (he ſaid) he was right certain and ſure, and therefore deſired him whenſoever any ſuch feeling of Gods heavenly mercies ſhould begin to touch his heart, that then he ſhould ſhew ſome ſignification thereof, whereby he might witneſs with him the ſame, and ſo departed from him.

The Lord for a time may withdraw his comforts, but at length he viſiteth his ſervants.

The next day when the time came of his Martyrdom, as he was going to the place, and was now come to the ſight of the Stake, although all the night before praying for ſtrength and courage he could feel none, ſuddenly he was ſo mightily repleniſhed with Gods holy comfort and heavenly joyes, that he cried out, clapping his hands to Auſten, and ſaying in theſe words, Auſten, he is come, he is come, &c. and that with ſuch joy and alacrity, as one ſeeming rather to be riſen from ſome deadly danger to liberty of life, than as one paſſing out of the world by any pains of death. Such was the change of the marvellous working of the Lords hand upon that good man.

R. Glover receiveth again comfort of the Lord.

Cornelius Bungey, Fellow Martyr with Maſter Robert Glover.

Cor. Bungey Martyr.

IN the ſame fire with him was burned alſo Cornelius Bungey, a Capper of Coventry, and condemned by the ſaid Radulph Biſhop of Coventry and Litchfield. As concerning the Articles which were to him objected, the effect thereof was this.

Articles objected to Cor. Bungey.

Firſt, It was articulate againſt him, that theſe three years laſt, in the City of Coventry and Litchfield, and other places about, he did hold, maintain, argue and teach, that the Prieſt hath no power here to abſolve any ſinner from his ſins.

Secondly, That by Baptiſm ſins be not waſhed away, becauſe he ſaid that the waſhing of the fleſh purgeth the fleſh outwardly, and not the ſoul.

Thirdly,

Anno 1555.

Thirdly, That there be in the Church only two Sacraments, that is, Baptiſm and the Lords Supper.

Fourthly, That in the Sacrament of the Popiſh Altar, was not the real Body and Blood of Chriſt, but the Subſtance of Bread and Wine there remaining ſtill, becauſe St. Paul calleth it Bread and Wine, &c.

Fifthly, That he within the compaſs of the ſaid years and time, did hold, maintain, and defend, that the Pope is not the Head of the Viſible Church here on Earth, &c.

Sixthly, That he was of the Dioceſs and Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, &c.

Seventhly, That the Premiſſes are true, manifeſt and notorious, and that upon the ſame there hath been and is a publick voice and fame, as well in the places above rehearſed, as in other quarters alſo about, &c.

His Anſwer.

His Anſwers to the Articles.

Unto the which Articles he anſwered again: To the firſt he granted, and to every part thereof, meaning after the Popiſh manner of Abſolution.

To the ſecond he granted firſt, after revoked the ſame.

To the third alſo he granted, adding withal that in Scripture there be no more contained.

To the fourth, touching the Sacrament, he granted, and to every part thereof.

To the fifth, concerning the Pope likewiſe.

Alſo to the ſixth he granted, and likewiſe to the ſeventh.

Upon theſe Articles and his Anſwers to the ſame, the ſaid Radulph the Biſhop read the Sentence, and ſo committed him alſo after condemnation of Mr. Robert Glover, to the Secular Power.

Thus this foreſaid Cornelius, falſly condemned by the Biſhop before mentioned, ſuffered at the ſame Stake with the Chriſtian Martyr Mr. Robert Glover at Coventry, about the twentieth day of September.

Here followeth the Story of John Glover and William Glover, how they were Excommunicate and caſt out after theie death, and buried in the Fields.

John Glover and W. Glover, after their death, condemned and caſt out for Hereticks.

NOw that we have diſcourſed the Story of Mr. Robert Glover, ſomething alſo would be touched of his other two Brethren, John and William Glover. Who albeit they were not called to finiſh their courſe by like kind of Martyrdom in the fire, as the other did; yet becauſe for their conſtant profeſſion of Gods Goſpel unto the later end, they were exempted after their death, and caſt out of the ſame Church, as the other was, I thought them not unworthy therefore in the ſtory to be joyned together, which in one cauſe and the ſame profeſſion were not ſundred one from the other.

And firſt concerning Mr. John Glover the eldeſt Brother, what inward ſtorms and agonies he ſuſtained by the ghoſtly Enemy, partly ye heard before deſcribed: now what his bodily Enemies wrought againſt him, remaineth to be declared. Whoſe rage and malice, although God reſtrained, that they could little prevail againſt him ſo long as his life endured, yet after his deceaſe, having power upon him, what they did ye ſhall now underſtand.

After the Martyrdom of Mr. Robert Glover, although John Glover, ſeeing his Brother to be apprehended for him, had ſmall joy of his life for the great ſorrow of his heart, wherewith he was ſore oppreſſed, and would gladly have put himſelf in his Brothers ſtead, if Friends had not otherwiſe perſwaded him, ſhewing that in ſo doing he might intangle himſelf, but ſhould do his Brother no good: He thus in great care and vexation endured, yet notwithſtanding rubbed out as well as he could, till at length about the later end of Queen Mary, there was a new ſearch made for the ſaid John Glover.

A new ſearch made for J. Glover.

Whereupon the Sheriffs, with their under Officers and Servants, being ſent to ſeek him, came into his Houſe where he and his wife were. It chanced as he was in the Chamber by himſelf, the Officers bruſting into the houſe, and ſearching other rooms, came to the Chamber door where this John Glover was, who being within, and holding the latch ſoftly with his hand, perceived and heard the Officers buskling about the door, amongſt whom, one of the ſaid Officers having the ſtring in his hand, was ready to draw and pluck at the ſame.

The providence of God again in ſaving John Glover.

In the mean time another coming by (whoſe voice he heard and knew) bade them come away, ſaying they had been there before. Whereupon they departing thence, went to ſearch other corners of the houſe, where they found Agnes Glover his wife, who being had to Lichfield, and there examined before the Biſhop, at length, after much ado, was conſtrained to give place to their tyranny: John Glover in the mean time, partly for care of his wife, partly through cold taken in the Woods where he did

did live, took an Ague, whereupon not long after he left his life, which the cruel Papists so long had sought for.

Thus by the mighty protection of the Almighty Lord, how John Glover was delivered and defended from the hands of the persecuting Enemies during all the time of his life, ye have heard. Now what befell after his death both to him, and William his brother, it is not unworthy to be remembred. Who after that he was dead, and buried in the Church-yard without Priest or Clerk, Dr. Dracot then Chancellor, six weeks after, sent for the Parson of the Town, and demanded how it chanced that he was there buried. The Parson answered that he was then sick, and knew not of it. Then the Chancellor commanded the Parson to go home, and to cause the body of the said John Glover to be taken up, and to be cast over the Wall into the High-way: The Parson again answered, that he had been six weeks in the Earth, and so smelled, that none was able to abide the savour of him. Well, quoth Dr. Dracot, then take this Bill, and pronounce him in the Pulpit a damned Soul, and a twelve month after take up his bones (for then the flesh will be consumed) and cast them over the Wall, that Carts and Horses may tread upon them, and then I will come and hallow again that place in the Church-yard where he was buried. Recorded by the Parson of the Town, who told the same to Hugh Burrows, dwelling at Fynden in Darbyshire, and to Mr. Robert Glovers wife, by whose credible Information we received the same.

Dr. Dracot not suffering John Glover to be buried in the Churchyard.

John Glover after his death judged of Dr. Dracot to be a damned soul.

Testimony of the story.

Not much unlike usage was practised also by these Catholick Children of the Mother Church, upon the body of William the third brother. Whom after it had pleased Almighty God about the same season to call out of this vale of misery, the good disposed people of the Town of Weme in Shropshire, where he died, brought the body unto the Parish Church, intending there to have it buried. But one Bernard being then Curate of the said Church (and yet is, as I hear say, to this day) to stop the burial thereof rode to the Bishop named Ralph Baine, to certifie him of the matter, and to have his advice therein. In the mean time the body lying there a whole day, in the night-time one Richard Morice a Taylor, would have enterred him. But then came John Thorlyne of Weme with other more, and would not suffer the body to be buried; expressing to us the contrary examples of good Toby: for as he was religious in burying the dead, so this man putteth Religion in not burying the dead: so that after he had lain there two days and one night, cometh the foresaid Bernard the Curate with the Bishops Letter, the Contents of which Letter being copied out word for word, here followeth.

The manner of handling the body of Wil. Glover after his death.

The Letter of Ralph Baine Bp. of Chester, for the not burying of W. Glovers body.

UNderstanding that one Glover an Heretick is dead in the Parish of Weme, which Glover hath for all the time of my being in this Country been known for a Rebel against our holy Faith and Religion, a contemner of the holy Sacraments and Ceremonies used in the holy Church, and hath separated himself from the holy Communion of all good Christian men, and never required to be reconciled to our Mother holy Church, nor in his last days did call for his Ghostly Father, but died without all rites belonging to a Christian man; I thought it good not only to command the Curate of Weme, that he should not be buried in Christian mans burial, but also will and command all the Parish of Weme, that no man procure, help, nor speak to have him buried in holy ground: but I do charge and command the Churchwardens of Weme in special, and all the Parish of the same, that they assist the said Curate in defending and letting, and procuring that he be not buried either in the Church, or within the Wanybles of the Church-yard: and likewise I charge those that brought the body to the place, to carry it away again, and that at their charge, as they will answer at their peril. At Eccleseh this sixth of September, Anno 1558.

By your Ordinary, Radulph Coventry and Litchfield.

By the vertue of this foresaid Letter, so it fell out, that they which brought the Corps thither, were fain at their own Charges to carry it back again. But for so much as the body was corrupted, and smelt so strongly that unneth any man might come near it, they were forced to draw it with Horses into a Broom-field, and there was he buried. Ann. 1555.

The dead Corps of W. Glover dragged with horse into the fields.

Witnesses of the godly end of the said William Glover, dying in the true Faith and Confession of Christ, Mr. Nowell Dean of Litchfield, George Wilestone and his Wife, Thomas Constantine, Roger Wydhouse, John Prynne, George Torpelley, &c.

The like example of charitable affection in these Catholick Church-men, is also to be seen and noted in the burying of one Mr. Edward Burton Esquire, who in the same Dioces of Chester, departing out of this world the very day before Queen Elizabeth was crowned, required of his friends, as they would answer for it, that his body should be buried in his Parish Church (which was S. Chads in Shrewsbury) so that no Massmonger should be present thereat. Which thing being declared to the Curate of that Parish, named Sir John Marshall, and the Body being withal brought to the burial, upon the same day when the Queen was crowned, the Curate being therewith offended, said plainly, That he should not be buried in the Church there. Whereunto one of his friends, named George Torpelley, answering again, said, That God would judge him in the last day, &c. Then the Priest, Judge God (saith he) or Devil, the body shall not come there. And so they buried him in his own Garden, where he is no doubt as near the Kingdom of Heaven, as if he had been buried in the midst of the Church.

Mr. Ed. Burton not suffered to be buried in christian burial, the same day when Queen Elizabeth was crowned.

Moreover, in the said County of Salop, I find that one Oliver Richardine of the Parish of Whitchurch, was burned in Hartford-west, Sir John Ygone being Sheriff the same time, which seemeth to be about the latter year of King Henry the Eighth. Whose name, because it was not mentioned before, I thought here to give some little touch of him, having now in hand to speak of the Persecution within the Dioces of Coventry and Litchfield.

The Martyrdom of William Wolsey, and Robert Pygot Painter.

AFter the suffering of Mr. Robert Glover, and Cornelius Bungey at Coventry, followeth next the condemnation of other two blessed Martyrs, which were judged and condemned at Ely, by John Fuller the Bishops Chancellor of Ely, Dr. Shaxton his Suffragane, Robert Steward, Dean of Ely, John Christopherson Dean of Norwich, Anno 1555. October 9. the names of which Martyrs, were William Wolsey and Robert Pygot, dwelling both in the Town of Wisbitch, which William Wolsey being a Constable, dwelling and inhabiting in the Town of Well, was there brought to death by the means and procurement of one Richard Everard Gentleman, a Justice appointed for those days, who extreamly handled the same William Wolsey, and bound him to the good abearing, causing him to put in Sureties upon his good behaviour, until the next General Sessions holden within the Isle of Ely: and so the said Wolsey being dispatched of his Office, and brought in trouble, removed his house and dwelling place, coming to dwell in the Town of Wisbitch. Then being called again at the next Sessions, he was still constrained to put in new Sureties, which at the length he refused to do, and so was commanded to the Jayl, at the Size holden at Ely in Lent.

W. Wolsey and R. Pygot Martyrs.

R. Everard extream against Wil. Wolsey.

Wil. Wolsey commanded to the Jayl.

In the Easter week following, there repaired to confer with him, Dr. Fuller, the Chancellor, with Christopherson, and one Dr. Yong, who laid earnestly to his charge that he was out of the Catholik faith, willing him to meddle no further with the Scriptures, than it did become such a Lay-man as he was, to do. The said William Wolsey standing still a great while, suffering them to say their pleasures, at the last answered in this wise; Good Mr. Doctor, what did our Saviour Christ mean, when he spake these words written in the 23. Chap. of St. Matthews Gospel, Wo be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, ye

Dr. Fuller, Christopherson and Dr. Yong come to confer with Wolsey.

Wolsey putteth a question to the Doctors.

Anno 1555.

ye hypocrites, for ye ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men: ye your ſelves go not in, neither ſuffer ye them that come to enter in.

Yea, ſaith Dr. Fuller, you muſt underſtand, that Chriſt ſpake to the Scribes and Phariſees.

Nay, Maſter Doctor (ſaith Wolſey) Chriſt ſpake even to you, and your fellows here preſent, and to all other ſuch like as you be.

Away Maſter Doctor (ſaid Chriſtopherſon) for you can do no good with this man. Yet ſaith Dr. Fuller, I will leave thee a Book to read, I promiſe thee of a learned mans doing, that is to ſay, of Dr. Watſons doing (who was then Biſhop of Lincoln.)

Dr. Watſons Book of Sermons or Homilies.

Wolſey receiving the ſame Book, did diligently read it over, which in many places did manifeſtly appear contrary to the known truth of Gods Word. At the length, a fortnight or three weeks following, the ſaid Dr. Fuller, reſorting again to the Priſon-houſe to confer with the ſaid Wolſey, did ask him how he did like the ſaid Book (thinking that he had won him by the reading of the ſame:) who anſwered him and ſaid, Sir, I like the Book no otherwiſe than I thought before I ſhould find it. Whereupon the Chancellor taking his Book, departed home.

Dr. Fuller again reſorteth to Will. Wolſey.

At night when Dr. Fuller came to his Chamber to look on it, he did find in many places, contrary to his mind, the Book raſed with a Pen by the ſaid Wolſey. The which he ſeeing, and being vexed therewith, ſaid, Oh, this is an obſtinate Heretick, and hath quite marred my Book.

The Chancellor giveth leave to Wolſey to depart.

Then the Sizes holden at Wisbich drawing nigh, Dr. Fuller cometh again to the ſaid Wolſey, and ſpeaketh unto him on this manner; Thou doeſt much trouble my Conſcience, wherefore I pray thee depart, and rule thy tongue, ſo that I hear no more complaint of thee, and come to the Church when thou wilt, and if thou be complained upon, ſo far as I may, I promiſe thee I will not hear of it.

Maſter Doctor (quoth Wolſey) I was brought hither by a Law, and by a Law I will be delivered.

W. Wolſey laid in the Caſtle of Wisbich.

Then being brought to the Seſſions before named, Wolſey was laid in the Caſtle at Wisbitch, thinking to him and all his friends, that he ſhould have ſuffered there at that preſent time, but it proved nothing ſo.

Rob. Pygot Painter, preſented for not coming to the Church.

Then Robert Pygot the Painter, being at liberty, was there preſented by ſome evil diſpoſed perſons (ſworn men as they called them) for not coming to the Church.

Talk between Sir Clement Higham Judge, and Rob. Pygot.

The ſaid Pygot being called in the Seſſions, would not abſent himſelf, but there did plainly appear before Sir Clement Hygham being Judge, who ſaid unto him; Ah, are you the holy Father the Painter? How chance ye came not to the Church? Sir, quoth the Painter, I am not out of the Church, I truſt in God.

No Sir, ſaid the Judge? This is no Church, this is a Hall. Yea Sir, ſaid Pygot, I know very well it is a Hall: but he that is in the true Faith of Jeſus Chriſt, is never abſent, but preſent in the Church of God.

Rob. Pygot brought to the Jayl where W. Wolſey lay. Wolſey and Pygot returned to Ely to priſon.

An Sirra, ſaid the Judge, you are too high learned for me to talk withal: wherefore I will ſend you to them that be better learned than I, ſtreight-ways commanding him to the Jayl where Wolſey lay. So the Seſſions being broken up and ended, the ſaid Wolſey and Pygot were carried again to Ely into Priſon, where they both did remain till the day of their death.

In the mean time certain of their Neighbours of Wisbitch aforeſaid, being at Ely, came to ſee how they did.

Tho. Goodrick Biſh. of Ely. The Biſhops Chaplain a Frenchman, confirmeth the Priſoners in the truth.

There came thither alſo a Chaplain of Biſhop Goodrikes a Frenchman born, one Peter Valentius, who ſaid unto the ſaid Wolſey and Pygot; My Brethren, according to mine Office I am come to talk with you, for I have been Amner here theſe twenty years and above. Wherefore I muſt deſire you, my Brethren, to take it in good part that I am come to talk with you, I promiſe you, not to pull you from your Faith. But I both require and deſire in the Name of Jeſus Chriſt, that you ſtand to the truth of the Goſpel and Word, and I beſeech the Almighty God, for his Son Jeſus Chriſts ſake, to preſerve both you and me in the ſame unto the end. For I know not my ſelf (my Brethren) how ſoon I ſhall be at the ſame point that you now are. Thus with many other like words he made an end, cauſing all that were there preſent to water their cheeks, contrary to the hope they all had in him, God be praiſed therefore:

Pygot and Wolſey called to judgment in the Biſhops Conſiſtory.

Then within ſhort time after, Pygot and Wolſey were called to Judgment about the ninth day of October, before Dr. Fuller then Chancellor, with old Dr. Shaxton, Chriſtopherſon, and others in Commiſſion, who laid earneſtly to their charge for their belief in divers Articles, but eſpecially of the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto their anſwer was, That the Sacrament of the Altar was an Idol, and that the natural body and blood of Chriſt was not preſent really in the ſaid Sacrament, and to this opinion they ſaid they would ſtick, believing perfectly the ſame to be no hereſie that they had affirmed, but the very truth, whereunto they would ſtand. Then ſaid the Doctors, that they were out of the Catholick Faith.

The words of Nicholas Shaxton to the Martyrs. Wolſeys anſwer to Shaxton.

Then Dr. Shaxton ſaid unto them; Good Brethren, remember your ſelves, and become new men, for I my ſelf was in this fond Opinion that you are now in, but I am now become a new man.

Ah, ſaid Wolſey, are you become a new man? Wo be to thee thou wicked new man; for God ſhall juſtly judge thee.

Dr. Fuller then ſpake, ſaying, This Wolſey is an obſtinate Fellow, and one that I could never do good upon. But as for the Painter, he is a man quiet and indifferent (as far as I perceive) and is ſoon reformed, and may very well be delivered for any evil Opinion I find in him.

Mr. Chriſtopherſon writeth what he would have Pygot confeſs of the Sacrament.

Then Chriſtopherſon called for Pen and Ink, and wrote theſe words following; I Robert Pygot do believe, that after the words of Conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, there remaineth no more bread and wine, but the very body and blood of Chriſt really and ſubſtantially, the ſelf ſame that was born of the Virgin Mary; and reading it to the Painter, he ſaid thus, Doſt thou believe all this according as it is written?

Pygot. No, Sir, ſaid the Painter, that is your Faith, and not mine.

Pygot refuſeth to ſubſcribe to Chriſtopherſons Faith.

Chriſtopher. Lo, Maſter Dr. Fuller, you would have let this Fellow go, he is as much an Heretick as the other. And ſo immediately Judgment was given upon them to dye. Which done, after the Sentence read, they were ſent again to the Priſon, where they did lye till the day of their death. At which day, one Peacock Batchelor of Divinity, being appointed to preach, took his Text out of the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, Ch. 5. of one that had lived inordinately, by abuſing his Fathers wife; likening the ſaid Pygot and Wolſey to the ſame man, oftentimes ſaying, that ſuch Members muſt be cut off from the Congregation, moſt maliciouſly reporting the ſaid Wolſey to be clean out of the Faith, and in many places quite denying the Scripture.

M. Peacock appointed to preach at the burning of Wolſey and Pygot.

So his Sermon being ended, the forenamed Pygot and Wolſey being brought to the place of Execution, and ſo bound to the Stake with a Chain, thither cometh one Sir Richard Collinſon a Prieſt, at that time deſtitute of any biding place or ſtay of Benefice, who ſaid unto Wolſey; Brother Wolſey, the Preacher hath openly reported in his Sermon this day, that you are quite out of the Catholick Faith, and deny Baptiſm, and that you do err in the holy Scripture; wherefore I beſeech you for the certifying of my Conſcience, with others here preſent, that you declare in what place of the Scripture you do err or find fault.

W. Wolſey cleareth himſelf to be found in all points of the Scripture belonging to his ſalvation.

Wolſey. I take the eternal and everlaſting God to witneſs, that I do err in no part or point of Gods Book, the holy Bible, but hold and believe in the ſame to be moſt firm and ſound Doctrine in all points moſt worthy for my ſalvation, and for all other Chriſtians to the end of the world. Whatſoever mine Adverſaries report by me, God forgive them therefore. With that cometh one to the fire with a great ſheet knit full of Books to burn, like as they had been New Teſtaments. O, ſaid Wolſey, give me one of them, and Pygot deſired another, both of them clapping them cloſe to their breaſts, ſaying the 106 Pſalm, deſiring all the People to ſay Amen, and ſo received the fire moſt thankfully.

Books burned with Wolſey and Pygot.

Con-

Concerning the Story of William Woolſey, I received moreover from the Univerſity of Cambridge, by a credible perſon, and my faithful friend William Fulke, this Relation which I thought in this place not unmeet to be notified unto the Reader in order and form as followeth.

Th natures of Wolſy and Pygot deſcribed.

There were burned at Ely two godly Martyrs, the one called Wolſey, the other Pygot. In theſe two appeared a divers diſpoſition of ſpirit. Pygot was mild, humble and modeſt, promiſing that he would be conformable to his Perſecutors, if they could perſwade him by the Scripture. The other, Wolſey was ſtout, ſtrong, and vehement, as one having πληροφορίαν of the Spirit, and deteſted all their doings, as of whom he was ſure to receive nothing but cruelty and tyranny. He was wonderful jealous over his Companion, fearing leſt his gentle nature would have been overcome by the flattering enticements of the world, and therefore the ſame day that they were burned, when they would have talked with him alone, he pulled him away from them almoſt by force. He was ſo deſirous to glorifie God with his ſuffering, that being wonderful ſore tormented in the Priſon with the Toothach, he feared nothing more than that he ſhould depart before the day of Execution (which he called his glad day) were come.

W. Wo*ſey* deſirous of Martyrdom. Wolſey calleth the day of his Martyrdom his glad day.

This Wolſey being in Priſon at Ely, was viſited by Thomas Hodilo Beer-Brewer in Ely. To him he delivered certain money to be diſtributed (as he appointed) part to his Wife, and part to his Kinsfolks and Friends, and eſpecially ſix ſhillings eight pence to be delivered to one Richard Denton, Smith, dwelling at Wells in Cambridgeſhire, within the Juriſdiction of the Iſle of Ely, with his Commendation, that he marvelled that he tarried ſo long behind him, ſeeing that he was the firſt that delivered him the Book of Scripture into his hand, and told him that it was the Truth, deſiring him to make haſte after as faſt as he could.

Tho. Hodilo Beer-Brewer in Ely witneſs of the ſtory.

Rich. Denton firſt converter of Wolſey.

Money ſent by Wolſey to Denton.

Wolſey exhorting R. Denton to perſiſt in the truth.

Denton afraid of burning.

R. Denton burned in his own houſe, which before would not burn for Chriſt, Anno 1564. April 18.

This Thomas Hodilo, both to avoid the danger of the time, and to have a witneſs of his doings herein, delivered the ſaid ſum of Money to one Mr. Laurence, Preacher in Eſſex (who then reſorted often to his houſe) to be diſtributed as Wolſey had appointed; which thing he performed, riding from place to place. And when this ſix ſhillings eight pence was delivered to Richard Denton with the Commendation aforeſaid: His anſwer was this, I confeſs it is true, but alas I cannot burn. This was almoſt one whole year after Wolſey was burned. But he that could not burn in the Cauſe of Chriſt, was afterward burned againſt his will, when Chriſt had given peace to his Church. For in the year of our Lord 1564. on Tueſday being the eighteenth of April, his houſe was ſet on fire, and while he went in to ſave his goods, he loſt his life, with two other that were in the ſame houſe.

Witneſſed by Thomas Hodilo and William Fulke.

Not much unlike to this, was alſo the example of M. Weſt, Chaplain to Biſhop Ridley, who refuſing to dye in Chriſts Cauſe with his Maſter, ſaid Maſs againſt his Conſcience, and ſoon after died.

Dr. Nicholas Ridley, and Mr. Hugh Latimer, both Biſhops, Preachers, and Martyrs of Chriſt, with their doings, conferences, and ſufferinge deſcribed.

Dr. Nicholas Ridley Martyr.

THe ſame year, month and day which the foreſaid two Martyrs, William Wolſey and Thomas Pygot ſuffered at Ely, the which was Anno 1555. Octob. 16. followed alſo at Oxford the ſlaughter of two other ſpecial and ſingular Captains and principal Pillars of Chriſts Church, Mr. Ridley Biſhop of London, and Mr. Hugh Latimer, Biſhop ſometime of Worceſter, of whoſe famous doings and memorable learning, and incomparable ornaments and gifts of grace, joyned with no leſs commendable ſincerity of life, as all the Realm can witneſs ſufficiently; ſo it needeth not greatly that we ſhould ſtand exactly at this time in ſetting forth a full deſcription of the ſame, but only to comprehend briefly in a few words, touching the order of their lives, ſo much as neceſſarily ſerveth to the due inſtruction of the Reader, and maketh to the uſe of this preſent Hiſtory, in declaring firſt their beginning and bringing up, then their ſtudies and acts in the Univerſity, their preferments alſo by their ſtudies to higher dignity, at laſt their trouble and travel in ſetting forth Religion, and in maintaining the ſame to the ſhedding of their blood. And firſt to begin with the life of Mr. Ridley, whoſe ſtory here enſueth. Anno 1555

A Mong many other worthy and ſundry Hiſtories and notable Acts of ſuch as of late days have been turmoiled, murthered, and martyred for the true Goſpel of Chriſt in Queen Maries reign, the tragical ſtory and life of Dr. Ridley, I thought good to commend to Chronicle, and leave to perpetual memory; beſeeching thee (gentle Reader) with care and ſtudy well to peruſe, diligently to conſider, and deeply to print the ſame in thy breaſt, ſeeing him to be a man beautified with ſuch excellent qualities, ſo ghoſtly inſpired and godly learned, and now written doubtleſs in the Book of Life, with the bleſſed Saints of the Almighty, crowned and throned amongſt the glorious Company of Martyrs. Firſt, deſcending of a ſtock right worſhipful, he was born in Northumberlandſhire, who being a Child, learned his Grammar with great dexterity in Newcaſtle, and was removed from thence to the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he in ſhort time became ſo famous, that for his ſingular aptneſs, he was called to higher functions and offices of the Univerſity, by degree attaining thereunto, and was called to be Head of Pembroke Hall, and there made Doctor of Divinity. After this, departing from thence, he travelled to Paris, who at his return was made Chaplain to King Henry the Eighth, and promoted afterwards by him to the Biſhoprick of Rocheſter; and ſo from thence tranſlated to the See and Biſhoprick of London in King Edwards days.

Nich. Ridley born in Northumberland.
Nich. Ridley learned at Newcaſtle.
Nich. Ridley Maſter of Pembroke Hall in Cambridge.
Nich. Ridley made Dr. of Divinity.
Nich. Ridley King Henries Chaplain.
Nich. Ridley made Bp. of Rocheſter.
Nich. Ridley made Bp. of London.

In which calling and offices he ſo travelled and occupied himſelf by preaching and teaching the true and wholeſom Doctrine of Chriſt, that never good Child was more ſingularly loved of his dear Parents, than he of his Flock and Dioceſs. Every Holiday and Sunday he lightly preached in ſome one place or other, except he were otherwiſe letted by weighty affairs and buſineſs, to whoſe Sermons the people reſorted ſwarming about him like Bees, and coveting the ſweet flowers and wholeſom juyce of the fruitful Doctrine, which he did not only preach, but ſhewed the ſame by his life, as a glittering Lanthorn to the eyes and ſenſes of the blind, in ſuch pure order and chaſtity of life (declining from evil deſires and concupiſcences) that even his very enemies could not reprove him in any one jot thereof.

The fruitful diligence of Bp. Ridley in preaching Gods word.

Beſides this, he was paſſingly well learned, his memory was great, and he of ſuch reading withal, that of right he deſerved to be comparable to the beſt of this our Age, as can teſtifie as well divers his notable Works, pithy Sermons, and ſundry his Diſputations in both the Univerſities, and alſo his very Adverſaries, all which will ſay no leſs themſelves.

Bp. Ridley of great memory and reading.

Beſides all this, wiſe he was of counſel, deep of wit, and very politick in all his doings. How merciful and careful he was to reduce the obſtinate Papiſts from their erroneous opinions, and by gentleneſs to win them to the Truth, his gentle ordering and courteous handling of Dr. Heath, late Archbiſhop of York, being Priſoner with him in King Edwards time in his houſe one year, ſufficiently declareth. In fine, he was ſuch a Prelate, and in all points ſo good, godly, and ghoſtly a man, that England may juſtly rue the loſs of ſo worthy a Treaſure. And thus hitherto concerning theſe Publick Matters.

Now will I ſpeak ſomething further particularly of his perſon and conditions. He was a man right comly and well proportioned in all points, both in complexion and lineaments of the body. He took all things in good part, bearing no malice nor rancour from his heart, but ſtreightways forgetting all injuries and offences done againſt him. He was very kind and natural to his Kinsfolk, and yet not bearing with them any thing otherwiſe than right would require, giving them always for a general rule, yea to his own Brother and Siſter, that they doing evil ſhould ſeek or look for nothing nothing at his hand, but ſhould be as ſtrangers and aliens unto him, and they to be his Brother and Siſter, which uſed honeſty, and a godly trade of life.

Biſhop Ridley a great mortifier of himſelf.

He uſing all kinds of ways to mortifie himſelf, was given to much prayer and contemplation: For duly every Morning, ſo ſoon as his apparel was done upon him, he went forthwith to his Bed-chamber, and there upon his knees prayed the ſpace of half an hour; which being done, immediately he went to his Study (if there came no other buſineſs to interrupt him) where he continued till ten of the Clock, and then came to the Common Prayer, daily uſed in his houſe. The prayers being done, he went to dinner; where he uſed little talk, except otherwiſe occaſion by ſome had been miniſtred, and then was it ſober, diſcreet and wiſe, and ſometime merry, as cauſe required.

The order of his ſtudy and diet.

The dinner done, which was not very long, he uſed to ſit an hour or thereabouts talking, or playing at the Cheſs: That done, he returned to his Study, and there would continue, except Suters or buſineſs abroad were occaſion of the contrary, untill five of the Clock at Night, and then would come to Common-Prayer, as in the fore-noon: which being finiſhed, he went to Supper behaving himſelf there as at his dinner before. After Supper recreating himſelf in playing at Cheſs the ſpace of an hour, he would then return again to his Study; continuing there till 11 of the Clock at Night, which was his common hour to go to Bed, then ſaying his prayers upon his knees as in the Morning when he roſe. Being at his Manor of Fulham, as divers times he uſed to be, he read daily a Lecture to his Family at the Common-Prayer, beginning at the Acts of the Apoſtles, and ſo going thorow all the Epiſtles of S. Paul, giving to every man that could read a New teſtament, hiring them beſides with mony to learn by heart certain principal Chapters, but eſpecially the 13 Chapter of the Acts, reading alſo unto his houſhold oftentimes the 101 Pſalm, being marvellous careful over his Family, that they might be a ſpectacle of all vertue and honeſty to others. To be ſhort, as he was godly and vertuous himſelf, ſo nothing but vertue and godlineſs reigned in his houſe, feeding them with the food of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

His order after Supper.

The careful diligence of B. Ridley in inſtructing his Family.

Now remaineth a word or two to be declared of his gentle nature and kindly pity in the uſage of an Old woman called Mrs. Boner, Mother to Dr. Boner ſometime Biſhop of London, which I thought good to touch, as well for the rare clemeney of Dr. Ridley, as the unworthy inhumanity and ingrateful diſpoſition again of Dr. Boner. Biſhop Ridley being at his Manor of Fulham, always ſent for this ſaid Mrs. Boner, dwelling in a houſe adjoyning to his houſe, to dinner and Supper, with one Mrs. Mungey, Boners Siſter, ſaying, Go for my Mother Boner, who coming, was ever placed in the Chair at the Tables end, being ſo gently intreated, welcomed, and taken, as though he had been born of her own Body, never diſplaced of her ſeat, although the Kings Council had been preſent, ſaying, when any of them were there (as divers times they were) By your Lordſhips favour this place of right and cuſtom is for my Mother Boner. But how well he was recompenced for this his ſingular gentleneſs, and pitiful pity after, at the hands of the ſaid Dr. Boner, almoſt the leaſt Child that goeth by the ground can declare. For who afterward was more enemy to Ridley, than Boner and his? Who more went about to ſeek his deſtruction than he? recompenſing this his gentleneſs with extreme Cruelty; As well appeared by the ſtrait handling of Ridleys own Natural Siſter, and George Shipſide her Husband from time to time: whereas the gentleneſs of the other did ſuffer Boners Mother, Siſter, and other of his kindred, not only quietly to enjoy all that which they had of Boner, but alſo entertained them in his houſe, ſhewing much courteſie and friendſhip daily unto them: whereas on the other ſide, Biſhop Boner being reſtored again, would not ſuffer the Brother and Natural Siſter of Biſhop Ridley, and other his friends not only not to enjoy that which they had by the ſaid their Brother Biſhop Ridley, but alſo curriſhly without all order of Law or honeſty, by extort power wreſted from them all the Livings they had.

The behaviour of B. Ridley to B. Boners Mother.

The courtieſie of Ridley, and the curriſhneſs of Boner deſcribed and compared together.

B. Ridley good and kind to Boners Mother.

Boner unkind and churliſh to Biſh. Ridleys Siſter, and ſeeketh the death of his Brother in Law.

And yet being not therewith ſatisfied, he ſought all the means he could to work the death of the foreſaid Shipſide, ſaying, that he would make twelve Godfathers to go upon him; which had been brought to paſs indeed, at what time he was Priſoner at Oxford, had not God otherwiſe wrought his deliverance by means of Dr. Heath, then the Biſhop of Worceſter. Teſte Georgio Shipſidio.

Whereby all good indifferent Readers notoriouſly have to underſtand, what great diverſity was in the diſpoſition of theſe two Natures. Whereof as the one excelled in mercy and piety, ſo the other again as much or more excelled in churliſh ingratitude, and deſpiteful diſdain. But of this matter enough.

Now concerning Gods vocation, how Dr. Ridley was firſt called to the ſavouring and favouring of Chriſt and his Goſpel, partly by his diſputation before, and other his Treatiſes it may appear, that the firſt occaſion of his Converſion, was by reading of Bertrams Book of the Sacrament, whom alſo the conference with Biſhop Cranmer, and with Peter Martyr did not a little confirm in that behalf. Who now by the grace of God, being thorowly won and brought to the true way, as he was before blind and zealous in his old ignorance, ſo was he conſtant and faithful in the right knowledge which the Lord had opened unto him (as well appeared by his preachings and doings during all the time of King Edward) and ſo long did much good, while Authority of extern power might defend and hold up the peace of the Church, and proceedings of the Goſpel. But after that it ſo pleaſed the heavenly will of the Lord our God, to bereave us of our ſtay, and call from us King Edward that precious Prince, as the whole ſtate of the Church of England was left deſolate and open to the enemies hand: ſo this Biſhop Ridley, after the coming in of Queen Mary, eſtſoon and with the firſt was laid hands upon, and committed to Priſon, as before hath ſufficiently been expreſſed: firſt in the Tower, then after tranſlated from thence with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Mr. Latimer to Oxford, was with them incloſed in the Common Gaol, and Priſon of Bocardo, while at length, being diſſevered from them, he was commited to cuſtody in the houſe of one Iriſh, where he remained till the laſt day of his death and Martyrdom, which was from the year of our Lord, 1554, till the year 1555. and 16 day of October.

B. Ridley firſt converted by Bertrams Book.

B. Ridley one of the firſt in trouble after the death of K. Edward.

B. Ridley in the Tower.

B. Ridley removed to the Priſon of Bocardo in Oxford.

Furthermore, as touching his diſputations and conflicts had at Oxford, and alſo of his determination had at Cambridge, alſo his travels in perſwading and inſtructing the Lady Mary before ſhe was Queen, his reaſons and conference likewiſe had in the Tower at the Lieutenants Boord, enough hath been ſaid already. Beſide this, other conferences he had in Priſon both with Dr. Cranmer, and Mr. Latimer, as here followeth to be read.

A Conference had betwixt Mr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer in Priſon, upon the Objection of Antonian, meaning by that name ſome Popiſh Perſecutor, as Winchester, alluding thereby to the Story of Victor. lib. 3. De perſecut. Aphri.

IN writing again ye have done me an unſpeakable pleaſure, and I pray that the Lord may requite it you in that day. For I have received great comfort at your words: but yet I am not ſo filled withal, but that I thirſt much more now than before, to Drink more of the Cup of yours, wherein ye mingle unto me profitable with pleaſant. I pray you, good Father, let me have one draught more to comfort my ſtomach. For ſurely except the Lord aſſiſt me with his gracious aid, in the time of his ſervice, I know I ſhall play but the part of a white-livered Knight. But truly my truſt is in him, that in mine infirmity he ſhould try himſelf ſtrong, and that he can make the Coward in his cauſe to fight like a man.

M. Ridley.

Sir, now I daily look when Diotrephes with his warriors ſhall aſſault me: wherefore I pray you good Father, for that you are an old Souldier, and an expert Warriour, and God knoweth I am but a young Souldier, and as yet of ſmall experience in theſe feats, help me, I pray you, to buckle my harneſs. And now I would have you to think, that theſe darts are caſt at my Head of ſome one of Diotrephes, or Antonius Souldiers.

The Objection of the Antonian.

Anton. object. 1. All men marvel greatly, why you, after the liberty you have granted unto you, more than the reſt, do not go to Maſs, which is a thing (as you know) now much eſteemed of all men, yea of the Queen herſelf.

The Anſwer

N. Rid. ys Anſwers Luke 9. Gal 2. Becauſe no man that layeth hand on the plough and looketh back is fit for the Kingdom of God, and alſo for the ſelf ſame cauſe why St. Paul would not ſuffer Titus to be circumciſed, which is, that the Truth of the Goſpel might remain with us uncorrupt, Galat. the ſecond: And again, If I build again the things which I deſtroyed I make my ſelf a Treſpaſſer. This is alſo another cauſe: leſt I ſhould ſeem by outward fact to allow the thing, which I am perſwaded is contrary to ſound Doctrine, and ſo ſhould be a ſtumbling ſtock unto the weak. But wo be unto him by whom offence cometh: Matth 18. Mark 9. it were better for him that a Mill-ſtone were hanged about his neck, and he caſt into the midſt of the Sea.

Except the Lord help me, ye ſay. Truth it is. For without me, ſaith he, ye can do nothing, much leſs ſuffer death of our Adverſaries, through the bloody Law now H. Latimer. John 15. prepared againſt us. But it followeth, If you abide in me, and my word abide in you, ask what you will, and it ſhall be done for you. What can be more comfortable? Sir, you make anſwer your ſelf ſo well, that I cannot better it. Sir, I begin now to ſmell what you mean by travelling thus with me, you uſe me as Bilney did once, when he converted me, pretending as though he would be taught of me, he ſought ways and means to teach me, and ſo do you. I thank you therefore moſt heartily. For indeed you miniſter armour unto me, whereas I was unarmed before and unprovided, ſaving that I give my ſelf to prayer for my refuge, Anton. object. 2. What is it then that offendeth you ſo greatly in the Maſs that you will not vouchſafe once either to hear it or ſee it? And from whence cometh this new Religion upon you? have not you uſed in times paſt to ſay Maſs your ſelf?

N. Ridleys Anſwer. He meaneth his own confeſſion openly in preaching. Matth. 26. I confeſs unto you my fault and ignorance; but know you that for theſe matters I have done penance long ago, both at Pauls Croſs, and alſo openly in the Pulpit at Cambridge, and I truſt God hath forgiven me this mine offence: for I did it upon ignorance. But if you be deſirous to know and will vouchſafe to hear what things do offend me in the Maſs, I will rehearſe unto you thoſe things which be moſt clear, and ſeem to repugn moſt manifeſtly againſt Gods word, and they be theſe: the ſtrange Tongue; the want of the ſhewing of the Lords Death; the breaking of the Lords Commandment of having a Communion; the Sacrament is not communicated to all under both kinds, according to the Word of the Lord; the ſign is ſervilely worſhipped for the thing ſignified; Chriſts Paſſion is injured, foraſmuch as this Maſs-ſacrifice is affirmed to remain for the purging of ſins; to be ſhort, the mainfold ſuperſtitions, and trifling fondneſs which are in the Maſs, and about the ſame. 1 Tim. 1.

H. Latimer. Better a few things well pondered, than to trouble the memory with too much; you ſhall prevail more with praying, than with ſtudying, though mixture be beſt, for ſo one ſhall alleviate the tedioufneſs of the other. I intend not to contend much with them in words, after a reaſonable account of my Faith given: for it ſhall be but in vain. They will ſay, as their Fathers ſaid, when John 19. 1 Cor. 15. 1 Tim. 3. John 15. Colos. 1. they have no more to ſay: We have a Law, and by our Law he ought to die. Be ye ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, ſaith St. Paul: and again Perſiſtito, Stand faſt: And how oft is this repeated, If ye abide, if ye abide? &c. But we ſhall be called obſtinate, ſturdy, ignorant, heady, and what not? ſo that a man hath need of much patience, having to do with ſuch men.

Anton. object. 3. But you know how great a Crime it is to ſeparate your ſelf from the Communion or fellowſhip of the Church, and to make a Schiſm, or diviſion. You have been reported to have hated the Sect of the Anabaptiſts, and always to have impugned the ſame. Moreover, this was the pernicious error of Novatus, and of the Hereticks called (Cathari) that they would not communicate with the Church. Anno 1555.

N. Ridleys Anſwer. I know that the Unity of the Church is to be retained by all means, and the ſame to be neceſſary to ſalvation. But I do not take the Maſs, as it is at this day, for the Communion of the Church, but a Popiſh device, whereby both the Commandment and Inſtitution of our Saviour Chriſt, for the oft frequenting of the remembrance of his Death, is eluded, and the People of God are miſerably deluded. The Sect of the Anabaptiſts, and the Hereſie of the Novatians ought of right to be condemned, foraſmuch as without any juſt or neceſſary cauſe they wickedly ſeparated themſelves from the Communion of the Congregation, for they did not alledge that the Sacraments were unduly miniſtred, but turning away their eyes from themſelves, wherewith according to St. Pauls rule they ought to examine themſelves, and caſting their eyes ever upon others, either Miniſters, or 1 Cor. 11. Communicants with them, they always reproved ſomething for the which they abſtained from the Communion, as from an unholy thing.

H. Latimer Hilarius contra Axem I remember that Calvin beginneth to confute the Interim after this ſort with this ſaying of Hilary, The name of Peace is beautiful, and the Opinion of Unity is fair: but who doubteth that to be the true and only Peace of the Church, which is Chriſt? I would you had that little Book, there ſhould you ſee how much is to be given to Unity. St. Paul when he requireth Unity, he joyneth ſtraight-withal, ſecundum Jeſum Chriſtum, Rom. 15. according to Jeſus Chriſt, no further. Diotrephes now of late did ever harp upon Unity, Unity. Yea Sir (quoth I) but in Verity, not in Popery. Better is diverſity, than an Unity in Popery. I had nothing again but ſcornful Taunts, with commandment to the Tower.

Anton. object. 4. But admit there be in the Maſs, that peradventure might be amended, or at leaſt made better: yea, ſeeing you will have it ſo, admit there be a fault; if you do not conſent thereto, why do you trouble your ſelf in vain? do you not know both by Cyprian and Auguſtine that Cyr. l. 1. ep. 2. Aug. ep. 152. Communion of Sacraments doth not defile a man, but conſent of deeds?

N. Ridleys Anſwer. If it were any one trifling Ceremony, or if it were ſome one thing of it ſelf indifferent (although I would wiſh nothing ſhould be done in the Church, which doth not edifie the ſame) yet for the continuance of the common quietneſs I could be content to bear it. But foraſmuch as things done in the Maſs tend openly to the overthrow of Chriſts Inſtitution, I judge that by no means either in word or deed I ought to conſent unto it. As for that which is objected out of the Fathers, I acknowledge it to be well ſpoken, if it be well underſtood. But it is meant of them which ſuppoſe they are defiled if any ſecret vice be either in the Miniſters, or in them that communicate with them, and is not meant of them which do abhor ſuperſtition, and wicked traditions of men, and will not ſuffer the ſame to be thruſt upon themſelves, or upon the Church in ſtead of Gods Word and the Truth of the Goſpel.

H. Latimer. The very Marrow-bones of the Maſs are altogether deteſtable, and therefore by no means to be born withal: ſo that of neceſſity the mending of it is to aboliſh it for ever. For if you take away oblation and adoration, which do hang upon Conſecration and Tranſubſtantiation, the moſt Papiſts of them all will not ſet a Button by the Maſs, as a thing which they eſteem not, but for the gain that followeth thereon, For if the Engliſh Communion, which of late was uſed, were as gainful to them, as the Maſs hath been heretofore, they would ſtrive no more for their Maſs; from thence groweth the grief.

Anton. object. 5. Conſider into what dangers you caſt your ſelf, if you forſake the Church; and you cannot but forſake it, if you refuſe to go to Maſs. For the Maſs is the Sacrament of Unity; without the Ark there is no ſalvation. The Aug. lib. 1. de Sim. 10. In ep. poſt. col. contra Donat. Church is the Ark and Peters Ship. Ye know this ſaying well enough; He ſhall not have God to be his Father, which acknowledgeth not the Church to be his Mother. Moreover without the Church, (ſaith S. Auguſtine) be the life never ſo well ſpent, it ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of Heaven.

The

Anno 1555.

The Holy Catholick or universal Church, which is the communion of Saints, the House of God, the City of God, the Spouse of Christ, the Body of Christ, the pillar and stay of the truth; this Church I believe, according to the Creed. This Church I do reverence, and honor in the Lord. But the rule of this Church is the Word of God, according to which rule we go forward unto life. And as many as walk according to this rule, I say with Saint Paul, Peace be upon them, and upon Israel which pertaineth unto God. The guide of this Church is the Holy Ghost. The marks whereby this Church is known unto me in this dark World, and in the midst of this crooked and froward generation, are these; The sincere preaching of Gods Holy Word, the due administration of the Sacraments, charity, and faithful observing of Ecclesiastical discipline, according to the Word of God. And that Church or congregation which is garnished with these marks, is in very deed that heavenly Jerusalem, which consisteth of those that be born from above. This is the Mother of us all, and by Gods grace I will live and die the Child of this Church. Forth of this (I grant) there is no salvation; and I suppose the residue of the places objected are rightly to be understood of this Church only. In times past (saith Chysostome) there were many ways to know the Church of Christ, that is to say, by good life, by miracles, by chastity, by Doctrine, by ministring the Sacraments. But from that time that Heresies did take hold of the Church, it is onely known by the Scriptures which is the true Church. They have all things in outward shew, which the true Church hath in truth. They have Temples like unto ours.

N. Ridleys anſwer. 1 Tim. 3. Apoc. 21. Epheſ. 1. Gal. 6. Phil. 2. Apoc. 21. John 3. Gal. 4. In op. im. hom. 49. in Matth.

And in the end concluded. Wherefore onely by the Scriptures do we know which is the true Church. To that which they say, that the Mass is the Sacrament of Unity, I answer; The Bread which we break, according to the institution of the Lord, is the Sacrament of the Unity of Christs mystical Body. For we being many, are one Bread and one Body, forsomuch as we all are partakers of one Bread. But in the Mass the Lords institution is not observed; for we are not all partakers of one Bread, but one devoureth all, &c. So that (as it is used) it may seem a Sacrament of singularity, and of a certain special priviledge for one sect of People, whereby they may be discerned from the rest, rather then a Sacrament of unity, wherein our knitting together in one is represented.

1. Cor. 10.

Yea, what fellowship hath Christ with Antichrist? Therefore is it not lawful to bear the yoke with Papists. Come forth from among them, and separate your selves from them, saith the Lord. It is one thing to be the Church indeed, another thing to counterfeit the Church. Would God it were well known what is the forsaking of the Church. In the Kings days that dead is, who was the Church of England? The King and his fautors, or Mass-mongers in corners? If the King and the fautors of his proceedings, why be not we now the Church abiding in the same proceedings? If clanculary Mass-mongers might be of the Church, and yet contrary to the Kings proceedings, why may not we as well be of the Church contraryng the Queens proceedings? Not all that be covered with the title of the Church, are the Church indeed. Separate thy self from them that are such, saith S. Paul; from whom? The text hath before, If any man follow other Doctrine, &c. he is puft up, and knoweth nothing, &c. Weigh the whole text, that ye may perceive what is the fruit of contentious disputations: But wherefore are such men said to know nothing, when they know so many things? You know the old Verses,

M. Latimer. 2 Cor. 6. 1 Tim. 6.

Hoc eſt neſcire, ſine Chriſto plurima ſcire:
Si Chriſtum bene ſcis, ſatis eſt, ſi cætera neſcis.

That is, This is to be ignorant, to know many things without Christ. If thou knowest Christ well, thou knowest enough, though thou know no more. Therefore would S. Paul know nothing but Jesus Christ crucified, &c. As many as are Papists and Mass-mongers, they may well be said to know nothing. For they know not Christ, forasmuch as in their massing they take much away from the benefit and merit of Christ.

2 Cor. 2.

That Church which you have described unto me is invisible, but Christs Church is visible and known. For else why would Christ have said, Dic Ecclesiæ, Tell it unto the Church. For he had commanded in vain to go unto the Church, if a man cannot tell which it is.

Anton. object. 6.

The Church which I have described is visible, it hath members which may be seen; and also I have afore declared, by what marks and tokens it may be known. But if either our eyes are so dazeled, that we cannot see, or that Satan hath brought such darkness into the World, that it is hard to discern the true Church; that is not the fault of the Church, but either of our blindness, or of Satans darkness. But yet in this most deep darkness there is one most cleer candle, which of it self alone is able to put away all darkness. Thy Word is a candle unto my feet, and a light unto my steps.

N. Ridleys anſwer.

The Church of Christ is a Catholick or universal Church, dispersed throughout the whole World; this Church is the great house of God, in this are good men and evil mingled together, goats and sheep, corn and chaff; it is the net which gathereth all kind of fishes; this Church cannot err, because Christ hath promised it his Spirit, which shall lead it into all truth, and that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it; that he will be with it unto the end of the World; whatsoever it shall loose or bind upon earth, shall be ratified in heaven, &c. This Church is the pillar and stay of the truth; this is it for the which Saint Augustine saith, he believeth the Gospel: But this universal Church alloweth the Mass, because the more part of the same alloweth it. Therefore, &c.

Anton. object. 7.

I grant that the name of the Church is taken after three divers manners in the Scriptures. Sometimes for the whole multitude of them which profess the Name of Christ, of the which they are also named Christians. But as S. Paul saith of the Jew, not every one is a Jew, that is a Jew outwardly, &c. Neither yet all that be of Israel, are counted the seed; even so not every one which is a Christian outwardly is a Christian indeed. For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, the same is none of his. Therefore that Church which is his Body, and of which Christ is the head, standeth onely in living stones, and true Christians, not onely outwardly in name and title, but inwardly in heart and in truth. But forsomuch as this Church (which is the second taking of the Church) as touching the outward fellowship, is contained within the great house, and hath with the same, outward society of the Sacraments and ministery of the Word, many things are spoken of that Universal Church (which S. Augustine calleth the mingled Church) which cannot truly be underdstood, but only of that pure part of the Church. So that the rule of Ticonius concerning the mingled Church, may here well take place; where there is attributed unto the whole Church that which cannot agree unto the same, but by reason of the one part thereof; that is, either for the multitude of good men, which is the very true Church indeed; or for the multitude of evill men, which is the malignant Church and Synagogue of Satan. And there is also a third taking of the Church; of the which, although there be seldomer mention in the Scriptures, in that signification, yet in the World, even in the most famous assemblies of Christendom, this Church hath born the greatest swinge. This distinction presupposed of the three sorts of Churches, it is an easie matter, by a figure called Synecdoche, to give to the mingled and Universal Church, that which cannot truly be understood but onely of the one part thereof. But if any man will stiffly affirm, that Universal doth so pertain unto Church, that whatsoever Christ hath promised to the Church, it must needs be understood of that, I would gladly know of the same man, where that Universal Church was in the times of the Patriarks and Prophets, of Noah, Abraham, and Moses, (at such time as the People would have stoned him) of Helias, of Jeremy, in the times of Christ, and the dispersion of the Apostles, in the time of Arrius, when Constantius was Emperour, and Felix Bishop of Rome succeeded Liberius. It is worthy to be noted, that Lyra writeth upon Matthew; The Church (saith he) doth not stand in men by reason of their power or dignity, whether it be Ecclesiastical or Secular. For many Princes and Popes, and other inferiours, have been found to have faln away from God. Therefore the Church consisteth in those persons, ſons, in whom is true knowledge and confeſſion of the faith, and of the truth. Evil men (as it is in a gloſs of the decrees) are in the Church in name, and not indeed.

De poenit. dist. 1 cap. eccles. lib. 2 cap. And Saint Auguſtine, contra Creſconium grammaticum, ſaith; Whoſoever is affraid to be deceived by the darkneſs of this queſtion, let him ask Counſel at the ſame Church of it: which Church the Scripture doth point out without any doubtfulneſs. All my notes which I have written and gathered out of ſuch Authors as I have read in this matter, and ſuch like, are come into the hands of ſuch, as will not let me have the leaſt of all my written books; wherein I am inforced to complain of them unto God: for they ſpoil me of all my labours, which I have taken in my ſtudy theſe many years. My memory was never good, for help whereof I have uſed for the moſt part to gather out notes of my reading, and ſo to place them, that thereby I might have had the uſe of them when the time required. But who knoweth whether this be Gods will, that I ſhould be thus ordered, and ſpoiled of the poor learning I had (as me thought) in ſtore, to the intent that I now deſtitute of that, ſhould from henceforth,

1 Cor. 2. learn onely to know with Paul, Chriſt, and him crucified? The Lord grant me herein to be a good young Scholar, and to learn this leſſon ſo well, that neither death nor life, wealth nor wo, &c. make me ever to forget that, Amen, Amen.

H. Latimer. I have no more to ſay in this matter; for you yourſelf have ſaid all that is to be ſaid. That ſame vehement ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, I would not believe the Goſpel, &c. was wont to trouble many men; as I remember,

Mel. de. eccleſ. I have read it well qualified of Philip Melanchton; but my memory is altogether ſlippery. This it is in effect; The Church is not a Judge, but a witneſs. There were in his time that lightly eſteemed the teſtimony of the Church, and the outward miniſtery of Preaching, and rejected the outward word it ſelf, ſticking onely to their inward revelations. Such raſh contempt of the word provoked and drave Saint Auguſtine into that exceſſive vehemency. In the which after the bare ſound of the words, he might ſeem to ſuch as do not attain unto his meaning, that he preferred the Church farr before the Goſpel, and that the Church hath a free Authority over the ſame; but that godly man never thought ſo. It were a ſaying worthy to be brought forth againſt the Anabaptiſts, which think the open miniſtery to be a thing not neceſſary, if they any thing eſteemed ſuch teſtimonies. I would not ſtick to affirm, that the more part of the great houſe, that is to ſay, of the whole Univerſal Church, may eaſily err. And again, I would not ſtick to affirm, that it is one thing to be gathered together in the Name of Chriſt, and another thing to come together with a Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt going before. For in the firſt Chriſt ruleth, in the later the Devil beareth the ſwing; and how then can any thing be good that they go about? From this later ſhall our ſix Articles come forth again into the light, they themſelves being very darkneſs. But it is demanded, whether the Well, thus is the text: The ſure foundation of God ſtandeth ſtill, and hath this ſeal, the Lord knoweth them that are his; and let every man that nameth the name of Chriſt depart from iniquity. Now how many are there of the whole Catholick Church of England which depart from iniquity? How many of the Noble men, how many of the Biſhops or Clergy, how many of the rich men, or Merchants, how many of the Queens Councellors, yea, how many of the whole Realm? In how ſmall room then I pray you is the true Church within the Realm of England? And where is it? And in what ſtate? I had a conceit of mine own well grounded (as they ſay) when I began, but now it is faln by the way.

Anton: object. 1. General Councils repreſent the Univerſal Church, and have this promiſe of Chriſt; Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. If Chriſt be preſent with two or three, then much more where there is ſo great a multitude, &c. But in general Councils Maſs hath been approved and uſed: Therefore, &c.

Of the Univerſal Church, which is mingled of good and bad, thus I think; Whatſoever they which be chief in it, which rule and govern the ſame, and to whom the whole myſtical Body of Chriſt doth obey, are the lively members of Chriſt, and walk after the guiding and rule of his Word, and go before the flock towards everlaſting life, then undoubtedly Councils gathered together of ſuch guides and paſtours of the Chriſtian flock, do indeed repreſent the Univerſal Church, and being ſo gathered in the name of Chriſt, they have a promiſe of the gift and guiding of his Spirit into all truth. But that any ſuch Council hath at any time allowed the Maſs; ſuch an one as ours was of late, in a ſtrange tongue, and ſtuffed with ſo many abſurdities, errours, and ſuperſtitions; that I utterly deny, and affirm it to be impoſſible. For like as there is no agreement betwixt 2 Cor. 6. light and darkneſs, between Chriſt and Belial; ſo ſurely ſuperſtition and the ſincere Religion of Chriſt, will worſhip and the pure worſhipping of God, ſuch as God requireth of his, that is, in Spirit and truth, can never agree together. But ye will ſay, where ſo great a company is gathered together, it is not credible but there be two or three gathered in the name of Chriſt. I anſwer; If there be one hundred good, and two hundred bad (forſomuch as the decrees and ordinances are pronounced according to the greater number of the multitude of voices) what can the leſs number of voices avail? It is a known A proverb. thing; and a common Proverb; Oftentimes the greater part overcometh the better.

As touching general Councils, at this preſent I have H. Latimer. no more to ſay, then you have ſaid. Onely I referr you to your own experience, to think of our Country Parliaments and Convocations, how and what ye have The inconſtancy of the Engliſh Parliaments and Convocations. ſeen and heard. The more part in my time did bring forth ſix Articles; for then the King would ſo have it, being ſeduced of certain. Afterward the more part did repel the ſame, our good Joſias willing to have it ſo. The ſame Articles now again (alas) another great, but worſe part hath reſtored. O what an uncertainty is this? But after this ſort moſt commonly are mans proceedings, God be merciful unto us. Who ſhall deliver us from ſuch torments of mind? Therefore is death the beſt Phyſitian, but unto the faithful, whom ſhe together and at once delivereth from all griefs. You muſt think this written upon this occaſion, becauſe you would needs have your paper bloted. Death is the beſt Phyſitian to the faithful.

If the matter ſhould go thus, that in general Councils Anton: object. 2. men ſhould not ſtand to the more number of the multitude (I mean of them which ought to give voices) then ſhould no certain rule be left unto the Church; by the which controverſies in weighty matters might be determined; but it is not to be believed, that Chriſt would leave his Church deſtitute of ſo neceſſary a help and ſafeguard.

Chriſt, who is the moſt loving ſpouſe of his eſpouſe Nich. Ridley: anſwer. the Church, who alſo gave himſelf for it, that he might Epheſ. 5. ſanctifie it unto himſelf, did give unto it abundantly all things which are neceſſary to ſalvation; but yet ſo, that the Church ſhould declare it ſelf obedient unto him in all things, and keep it ſelf within the bounds of his commandments, and further not to ſeek any thing which he teacheth not, as neceſſary unto ſalvation. Now further, for determination of all controverſies in Chriſts Religion, Chriſt himſelf hath left unto the Church not onely Moſes Luke 16. and the Prophets, whom he willeth his Church in all Iſaiah 8. doubts to go unto, and ask Counſel at, but alſo the Goſpels, and the reſt of the Body of the New Teſtament; in the which whatſoever is heard of Moſes and the Prophets, and whatſoever is neceſſary to be known unto ſalvation, is revealed and opened.

So that now we have no need to ſay, Who ſhall climb Rom. 10. up into Heaven, or who ſhall go down into the depth, to tell us what is needful to be done? Chriſt hath done both, and hath commended unto us the Word of faith, which alſo is abundantly declared unto us in his Word written; ſo that hereafter if we walk earneſtly in Luke 1. this way, to the ſearching out of the truth, it is not to be doubted, but through the certain benefit of Chriſts Spirit, which he hath promiſed unto his, we may find it, and obtain everlaſting life. Should men ask Counſel of the dead for the living, ſaith Iſaiah? Let them go rather Iſaiah 8.

to the Law and to the Teſtimony, &c. Chriſt ſendeth them that be deſirous to know the Truth, unto the Scriptures, ſaying, Search the Scriptures. I remember a like thing well ſpoken of Hierom; Ignorance of the Scriptures. is the mother and cauſe of all Errours. And in another place, as I remember in the ſame Author; The knowledge of the Scriptures. is the food of everlaſting life. But now me thinketh I enter into a very broad Sea, in that I begin to ſhew, either out of the Scriptures themſelves, or out of the ancient Writers, how much the holy Scripture is of force to teach the Truth of our Religion. But this is it, that I am now about that Chriſt would have the Church his Spouſe in all doubts to ask counſel at the Word of his Father written, and faithfully left, and commended unto it in both Teſtaments, the Old and New. Neither do we read, that Chriſt in any place hath laid ſo great a burthen upon the members of his Spouſe, that he hath commanded them to go to the Univerſal Church. Whatſoever things are written, ſaith Paul, are written for our learning. And it is true, that Chriſt gave unto his Church, ſome Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangeliſts, ſome Shepherds and Teachers, to the edifying of the Saints, till we come all to the unity of Faith, &c. But that all men ſhould meet together out of all parts of the world, to define of the Articles of our Faith, I neither find it commanded of Chriſt, nor written in the word of God.

Rom. 15. Ephel. 4.

M. Latimer.

There is diverſity betwixt things pertaining to God or Faith, and Politick and Civil matters. For in the firſt we muſt ſtand only to the Scriptures, which are able to make us all perfect and inſtructed unto ſalvation, if they well be underſtood. And they offer themſelves to be well underſtood only to them, which have good wills, and give themſelves to ſtudy and prayer. Neither are there any men leſs apt to underſtand them, then the prudent and wiſe men of the World. But in the other, that is, in Civil or Politick matters oftentimes the Magiſtrates do tolerate a leſs evil, for avoiding of a greater, as they which have this ſaying oft in their mouths; Better an inconvenience than a miſchief. And it is the property of a wiſe man, ſaith one, to diſſemble many things; and he that cannot diſſemble, cannot Rule. In which ſayings they bewray themſelves, that they do not earneſtly weigh what is juſt, what is not. Wherefore forſomuch as mans laws, if it be but in this reſpect only, that they be deviſed by men, are not able to bring any thing to perfection, but are inforced of neceſſity to ſuffer many things out of ſquare, and are compelled ſometime to wink at the worſt things: ſeeing they know not how to maintain the common peace and quiet otherwiſe, they do ordain that the more part ſhall take place. You know what theſe kinds of ſpeeches mean, I ſpeak after the manner of men; ye walk after the manner of men, all men are lyars. And that of S. Auguſtine, If ye live after mans reaſon, ye do not live after the will of God.

Anton. object. 10.

If ye ſay, that Councils have ſometime erred, or may err, how then ſhould we believe the Catholick Church? for that Councils are gathered by the authority of the Catholick Church.

N. Ridley's Anſwer.

From may be, to be indeed, is no good Argument; but from being, to may be, no man doubteth but it is a moſt ſure Argument. But now that Councils have ſometime erred it is manifeſt. How many Councils were there in the Eaſt parts of the World, which condemned the Nicene Council; and all thoſe which would not forſake the ſame, they called by a ſlanderous name (as they thought) Homouſians. Was not Athanaſius, Chryſoſtom, Cyril, Euſtachius, men very well learned, and of godly life, baniſhed and condemned as famous Hereticks, and that by wicked Councils? How many things are there in the Canons and Conſtitutions of the Councils, which the Papiſts themſelves do much miſlike? But here peradventure one man will ſay unto me; We will grant you this in provincial Councils, or Councils of ſome one Nation, that they may ſometimes err, forſomuch as they do not repreſent the Univerſal Church; but it is not to be believed, that the general and full Councils have erred at any time. Here if I had my Books of the Councils, or rather ſuch notes as I have gathered out of thoſe Books, I could bring ſomthing which ſhould ſerve for this purpoſe. But now ſeeing I have them not, I will recite one place only out of S. Auſtin, which (in my judgment,) may ſuffice in this matter in ſtead of many. Who knoweth not (ſaith he) that the holy Scripture is ſo ſet before us, that it is not lawful to doubt of it, and that the Letters of Biſhops may be reproved by other mens words, and by Councils, and that the Councils themſelves which are gathered by Provinces and Countries, do give place to the authority of the general and full Councils; and that the former and general Councils are amended by the later, when as by ſome experience of things, either that which was ſhut up, is opened, or that which was hid, is known. Thus much out of Auſtin. But I will plead with out Anton. upon matter confeſſed. Here with us when as Papiſtry reigned, I pray you how doth that Book, which was called the Biſhops Book, made in the time of King Henry the Eighth, whereof the Biſhop of Wincheſter is thought to be either the firſt Father, or chief gatherer; how doth it (I ſay) ſharply reprove the Florentine Council, in which was decreed the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, and that with the conſent of the Emperour of Conſtantinople, and of the Grecians? So that in thoſe days our learned ancient Fathers and Biſhops of England did not ſtick to affirm, that a general Council might err. But me think I hear another man deſpiſing all that I have brought forth, and ſaying, Theſe which you have called Councils, are not worthy to be called Councils, but rather Aſſemblies, and Conventicles of Hereticks. I pray you Sir, why do you judge them worthy of ſo ſlanderous a name? Becauſe (ſaith he) they decreed things Heretical, contrary to true godlineſs and ſound Doctrine and againſt the Faith of Chriſtian Religion. The cauſe is weighty, for the which they ought of right ſo to be called. But if it be ſo that all Councils ought to be deſpiſed, which decree any thing contrary to ſound Doctrine, and the true Word, which is according to godlineſs, forſomuch as the Maſs, ſuch as we had here of late, is openly againſt the Word of God; forſooth it muſt follow of neceſſity, that all ſuch Councils, as have approved ſuch Maſſes, ought of right to be fled and deſpiſed, as Conventicles and Aſſemblies of men that ſtray from the Truth.

The Biſhops Book.

1 Tim. 6.

Another man alledgeth unto me the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, without which, neither can the Councils (ſaith he) be lawfully gathered, neither being gathered determine any thing concerning Religion. But this Objection is only grounded upon the ambitious and ſhameleſs maintainance of the Romiſh Tyranny and uſurped dominion over the Clergy; which Tyranny we Engliſh men long ago, by the conſent of the whole Realm, have expulſed and abjured. And how rightly we have done it, a little Book ſet forth de utraque Poteſtate (that is, of both the Powers) doth clearly ſhew. I grant that the Romiſh ambition hath gone about to challenge to it ſelf and to uſurp ſuch a Priviledge of old time. But the Council of Carthage, in the year of our Lord 457. did openly withſtand it, and alſo the Council at Milevite, in the which S. Auſtin was preſent, did prohibit any appellations to be made to Biſhops beyond the Sea.

Anton. object. 11. Epheſ. 4.

I ſpeak nothing of the goodneſs or evilneſs of your Congregations; but I fight in Chriſts quarrel againſt the Maſs, which doth utterly take away and overthrow the ordinance of Chriſt. Let that be taken quite away, and then the partition of the wall that made the ſtrife, ſhall be broken down. Now to the place of S. Auſtin; for bearing with the evil for the goods ſake, there ought to be added other words, which the ſame writer hath expreſſedly in other places; that is, if thoſe evil men do caſt abroad no ſeeds of falſe Doctrine, nor lead other to deſtruction by their example.

Aug. lib. 3. cont. literas Parm. cap. 23.

It is perillous to attempt any new thing in the Church, which lacketh example of good men. How much more perillous is it to commit any act, unto the which the example of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles are contrary? But unto this your fact, in abſtaining from the Church by reaſon of the Maſs, the Example of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles are clean contrary:

Anton. object. 12.

Therefore, &c. The firſt part of the Argument is evident, and the ſecond part I prove thus. In the times of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, all things were moſt corrupt. The People was miſerably given to ſuperſtition, the Prieſts deſpiſed the Law of God; and yet notwithſtanding we read not that the Prophets made any Schiſms or diviſions, and Chriſt himſelf haunted the Temple, and taught in the Temple of the Jews. Peter and John went up into the Temple at the ninth hour of Prayer; Paul after the reading of the Law, being deſired to ſay ſomthing to the People, did not refuſe to do it. Yea further, no man can ſhew, that either the Prophets, or Chriſt, and his Apoſtles did refuſe to pray together with others, to ſacrifice, or to be partakers of the Sacrament of Moſes Law.

Luke 21. Heb. 1. Acts 13.

I grant the former part of your Argument, and to the ſecond part I ſay, that although it contain many true things, as of the corrupt ſtate in the times of the Prophets, of Chriſt, and the Apoſtles, and of the Temple being haunted of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; yet notwithſtanding the ſecond part of your Argument is not ſufficiently proved: For ye ought to have proved, that either the Prophets, either Chriſt or his Apoſtles did in the Temple communicate with the People in any kind of worſhipping, which is forbidden by the Law of God, or repugnant to the Word of God. But that can no where be ſhewed. And as for the Church, I am not angry with it, and I never refuſed to go to it, and to pray with the People, to hear the Word of God, and to do all other things whatſoever may agree with the Word of God. S. Auſtin ſpeaking of the Ceremonies of the Jews (I ſuppoſe in the Epiſtle ad Januarium) although he grant they grievouſly oppreſſed that People, both for the number, and bondage of the ſame, yet he calleth them burdens of the Law, which were delivered unto them in the word of God, not preſumptions of men, which notwithſtanding if thy were not contrary to Gods Word, might after a ſort be born withal. But now, ſeeing they are contrary to thoſe things which are in the Word of God written, whether they ought to be born of any Chriſtian or no, let him judge which is ſpiritual, which feareth God more then man, and loveth everlaſting life more then this ſhort and tranſitory life. To that which was ſaid, that my fact lacketh example of the godly Fathers that have gone before, the contrary is moſt evident in the hiſtory of Toby. Of whom it is ſaid, that when all other went to the golden Calves, which Jeroboam the King of Iſrael had made, he himſelf alone fled all their Companies, and got him to Jeruſalem unto the Temple of the Lord, and there worſhipped the Lord God of Iſrael. Did not the man of God threaten grievous plagues both unto the Prieſts of Bethel, and to the Altar which Jeroboam had there made after his own fantaſie? Which plagues King Joſias the true Miniſter of God, did execute at the time appointed. And where do we read, that the Prophets or the Apoſtles did agree with the People in their Idolatry, when as the People went a whoring with their Hill-altars? For what cauſe I pray you did the Prophets rebuke the People ſo much, as for their falſe worſhipping of God after their own minds, and not after Gods Word? For what was ſo much as that was? Wherefore the falſe Prophets ceaſed not to malign the true Prophets of God: therefore they beat them, they baniſhed them, &c. How elſe, I pray you, can you underſtand that S. Paul alledgeth, when he ſaith, what concord hath Chriſt with Belial? Either what part hath the Believer with the Infidel? or how ageeth the Temple of God with Images? For ye are the Temple of the living God, as God himſelf hath ſaid; I will dwell among them, and will be their God, and they ſhall be my People. Wherefore, come out from among them, and ſeparate your ſelves from them (ſaith the Lord) and touch none unclean thing; ſo will I receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye ſhall be my Sons and Daughters, ſaith the Lord Almighty.

All the Saints of God, which truly feared God, when they have been provoked to do any thing which they knew to be contrary to Gods Laws, have choſen to die, rather then to forſake the Laws of their God. Wherefore the Machabees put themſelves in danger of death for the defence of the Law, Yea and at length died manfully in the defence of the ſame. If we do praiſe (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) the Machabees, and that with great admiration, becauſe they did ſtoutly ſtand even unto death, for the Law of their Country; how much more ought we to ſuffer all things for our Baptiſm, for the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Chriſt, &c? But the Supper of the Lord, ſuch a one (I mean) as Chriſt commandeth us to celebrate, the Maſs utterly aboliſheth, and corrupteth moſt ſhamefully.

Pſal. 9.

Seeing you are ſo obſtinately ſet againſt the Maſs, that you affirm, becauſe it is done in a Tongue not underſtood of the People, and for other cauſes, I cannot tell what; therefore is it not the true Sacrament ordained of Chriſt? I begin to ſuſpect you, that you think not catholickly of Baptiſm alſo. Is our Baptiſm, which we do uſe in a Tongue unknown unto the People, the true Baptiſm of Chriſt, or no? If it be, then doth not the ſtrange Tongue hurt the Maſs. If it be not the Baptiſm of Chriſt, tell me how were you Baptized. Or whether will ye (as the Anabaptiſts do) that all which were Baptized in Latin, ſhould be Baptiſed again in the Engliſh Tongue?

Anſw. obj.

Although I would wiſh Baptiſm to be given in the vulgar Tongue for the Peoples ſake which are preſent, that they may the better underſtand their own profeſſion, and alſo be more able to teach their Children the ſame, yet notwithſtanding there is not like neceſſity of the vulgar Tongue in Baptiſm, as in the Lords Supper. Baptiſm is given to Children, who by reaſon of their Age are not able to underſtand what is ſpoken unto them, what Tongue ſoever it be. The Lords Supper is, and ought to be given to them that are waxen. Moreover, in Baptiſm which is accuſtomed to be given to Children in the Latin Tongue, all the ſubſtantial points (as a man would ſay) which Chriſt commanded to be done, are obſerved. And therefore I judge that Baptiſm to be a perfect and true Baptiſm; and that it is not only not needful, but alſo not lawful for any man ſo chriſtned, to be chriſtned again. But yet notwithſtanding, they ought to be taught the Catechiſm of the Chriſtian Faith, when they ſhall come to years of diſcretion; which Catechiſm whoſoever deſpiſeth, or will not deſirouſly imbrace and willingly learn, in my judgment he playeth not the part of a Chriſtian man. But in the Popiſh Maſs are wanting certain ſubſtantials, that is to ſay, things commanded by the Word of God to be obſerved in the Miniſtration of the Lords Supper; of the which there is ſufficient declaration made before.

N. Ridleys anſwer.

Where you ſay (I would wiſh) ſurely I would with that you had ſpoken more vehemently, and to have ſaid, it is of neceſſity, that all things in the Congregation ſhould be done in the vulgar Tongue, for the edifying and comfort of them that are preſent, notwithſtanding that the Child it ſelf is ſufficiently Baptized in the Latin Tongue.

H. Latimer.

Foraſmuch as I perceive you are ſo ſtiffly, I will not ſay obſtinately bent, and ſo wedded to your Opinion, that no gentle Exhortations, no wholſom counſels, no other kind of means can call you home to a better mind, there remaineth that which in like caſes was wont to be the only remedy againſt ſtiffnecked and ſtubborn perſons, that is, you muſt be hampered by the Laws, and compelled either to obey whether ye will or no, or elſe to ſuffer that which a Rebel to the Laws ought to ſuffer. Do you not know that whoſoever refuſeth to obey the Laws of the Realm, he bewrayeth himſelf to be an enemy to his Country? Do you not know that this is the readieſt way to ſtir up Sedition and Civil war? it is better that you ſhould bear your own ſin, than that through the example of your breach of the Common Laws, the common quiet ſhould be diſturbed. How can you ſay, you will be the Queens true ſubject, when as you do openly profeſs that you will not keep her Laws?

Anno 15[illegible]

Anno 1555.

N. Ridleys Anſwer.

O heavenly Father, the Father of all wiſdom, underſtanding, and true ſtrength, I beſeech thee for thy only Son our Saviour Chriſts ſake, look mercifully upon me wretched Creature, and ſend thine holy Spirit into my breaſt, that not only I may underſtand according to thy wiſdom, how this peſtilent and deadly dart is to be born off, and with what anſwer it is to be beaten back, but alſo when I muſt joyn to fight in the field for the glory of thy Name, that then I being ſtrengthened with the defence of thy right hand, may manfully ſtand in the Confeſſion of thy Faith, and of thy Truth, and continue in the ſame unto the end of my life, through the ſame our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Amen.

Now to the objection. I grant it to be reaſonable, that he which by words and gentleneſs cannot be made to yield to that is right and good, ſhould be bridled by the ſtrait correction of the Laws: that is to ſay, he that will not be ſubject to Gods Word, muſt be puniſhed by the Law. It is true that is commonly ſaid, He that will not obey the Goſpel, muſt be tamed and taught by the rigour of the Law. But theſe things ought to take place againſt him, which refuſeth to do that is right and juſt according to true Godlineſs, not againſt him, which cannot quietly bear Superſtitions, but doth hate and deteſt from his heart ſuch kind of proceedings, and that for the glory of the Name of God. To that which ye ſay, a tranſgreſſor of the common Laws bewrayeth himſelf to be an enemy of his Country, ſurely a man ought to look unto the nature of the Laws, what manner of Laws they be which are broken. For a faithful Chriſtian ought not to think alike of all manner of Laws. But that ſaying ought only truly to be underſtood of ſuch Laws as be not contrary to Gods Word. Otherwiſe, whoſoever love their Country in Truth (that is to ſay, in God) they will always judge if at any time the Laws of God and man be the one contrary to the other) that a man ought rather to obey God than man. And they that think otherwiſe, and pretend a love to that Country forſomuch as they make their Country to fight as it were againſt God, in whom conſiſteth the only ſtay of their Country, ſurely I do think that ſuch are to be judged moſt deadly enemies, and traytors to their Country. For they that fight againſt God which is the ſafety of their Country, what do they elſe but go about to bring upon their Country a preſent ruine and deſtruction? But they that do ſo are worthy to be judged enemies to their Country, and betrayers of the Realm. Therefore, &c.

But this is the readieſt way (ye ſay) to ſtir up Sedition, to trouble the quiet of the Common-wealth; therefore are theſe things to be repreſſed in time by force of Laws. Behold, Satan doth not ceaſe to practiſe his old guiles, and accuſtomed ſubtleties. He hath ever this dart in a readineſs to hurl againſt his Adverſaries, to accuſe them of Sedition, that he may bring them (if he can) in danger of the Higher Powers. For ſo hath he by his Miniſter always charged the Prophets of God. Ahab ſaid unto Elias; Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael? The falſe Prophets alſo complained to their Princes of Jeremy, that his words were ſeditious, and not to be ſuffered: Did not the Scribes and Phariſees falſly accuſe Chriſt as a Seditious perſon, and one that ſpake againſt Cæſar? Did they not at the laſt cry, If you let this man go, ye are not Cæſars Friend? The Orator Tertullus, how doth he accuſe Paul before Felix the high Deputy? We have found this man, ſaith he, a peſtilent fellow, and a ſtirrer of ſedition, unto all the Jews in the whole world, &c. But I pray you were theſe men, as they were called, Seditious perſons? Chriſt, Paul and the Prophets? God forbid. But they were of falſe men falſly accuſed. And wherefore I pray you? but becauſe they reproved before the People their guiles, ſuperſtition, and deceits. And when the other could not bear it, and would gladly have had them taken out of the way, they accuſed them as Seditious perſons, and troublers of the Common-wealth, that being by this means made hateful to the People and Princes, they might the more eaſily be ſnatched up to be tormented, and put to death. But how far they were from all Sedition, their whole doctrine, life, and converſation doth well declare. For that which was objected laſt of all, that he cannot be a faithful ſubject to his Prince, which profeſſeth openly that he will not obſerve the Laws which the Prince hath made; here I would wiſh that I might have an indifferent Judge, and one that feareth God, to whoſe Judgment in this cauſe I promiſe I will ſtand. I anſwer therefore, A man ought to obey his Prince, but in the Lord, and never againſt the Lord. For he that knowingly obeyeth his Prince againſt God, doth not a duty to the Prince, but is a deceiver of the Prince, and an helper unto him to work his own deſtruction. He is alſo unjuſt, which giveth not to the Prince that is the Princes, and to God that is Gods. Here cometh to my remembrance, that notable ſaying of Valentinianus the Emperour for chooſing the Biſhop of Millain. Set him (ſaith he) in the Biſhops ſeat, to whom if we (as man) do offend at any time, we may ſubmit our ſelves. Polycarpus the moſt conſtant Martyr, when he ſtood before the cheif Rulers and was commanded to blaſpheme Chriſt, and to ſwear by the fortune of Cæſar, &c. he anſwered with a mild ſpirit; We are taught (ſaith he) to give honour unto Princes: and thoſe powers which be of God; but ſuch honour as is not contrary to Gods Religion.

Theod. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 4. c. 5. Euſeb. Eccleſ. hiſt. lib. 4. c. 4. Niceph. lib. 3. cap. 35.

Hitherto ye ſee (good Father) how I have in words only made as it were a flouriſh before the fight, which I ſhortly look after, and how I have begun to prepare certain kinds of weapons to fight againſt the adverſary of Chriſt, and to muſe with my ſelf how the darts of the old enemy may be born off, and after what ſort I may ſmite him again with the Sword of the Spirit. I learn alſo hereby to be in ure with armour, and to aſſay how I can go armed. In Tindal where I was born, not far from the Scotiſh Borders, I have known my Country-men to watch night and day in their harneſs, ſuch as they had, that is, in their Jacks, and their Spears in their hand (you call them Northern-gads) eſpecially when they had any privy warning of the coming of the Scots. And ſo doing, although at every ſuch bickering ſome of them ſpent their lives, yet by ſuch means, like pretty men, they defended their Country. And thoſe that ſo died, I think that before God they died in a good quarrel, and their off-ſpring and Progeny all the Country loved them the better for their Fathers ſake. And in the quarrel of Chriſt our Saviour, in the defence of his own Divine Ordinances, by the which he giveth unto us life and immortality; yea, in the quarrel of Faith, and Chriſtian Religion, wherein reſteth our everlaſting ſalvation, ſhall we not watch? ſhall we not go always armed? ever looking when our Adverſary (which like a roaring Lion ſeeketh whom he may devour) ſhall come upon us by reaſon of our ſlothfulneſs? yea, and wo be unto us, if he can oppreſs us unawares, which undoubtedly he will do, if he find us ſleeping. Let us awake therefore. For if the good man of the houſe knew at what hour the thief ſhould come he would ſurely watch, and not ſuffer his houſe to be broken up. Let us awake therefore, I ſay: Let us not ſuffer our houſe to be broken up. Reſiſt the Devil, ſaith Saint James, and he will fly from you. Let us therefore reſiſt him manfully, and taking the Croſs upon our ſhoulders, let us follow our Captain Chriſt, who by his own Blood hath dedicated and hallowed the way which leadeth unto the Father, that is, to the light which no man can attain, the fountain of the everlaſting joys. Let us follow, I ſay, whither he calleth and allureth us, that after theſe afflictions which laſt but for a moment, whereby he trieth our Faith, as gold by the fire, we may everlaſtingly reign and triumph with him in the glory of the Father, and that through the ſame our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; to whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory, now and for ever, Amen, Amen.

Good Father, forſomuch as I have determined with my ſelf, to pour forth theſe my cogitations into your boſom, here, me thinketh, I ſee you ſuddenly lifting up your head towards heaven, after your manner, and then looking upon me with your Prophetical countenance, and ſpeaking unto me, with theſe or like words; Truſt not, my Son (I beſeech you vouchſafe me the honour of this name; for in ſo doing I ſhall think my ſelf both honoured, and beloved of you.) Truſt not, I ſay, my Son, to theſe word-weapons; for the Kingdom of God is not in words but in power. And remember always the words of the Lord. Do not imagine aforehand, what and how

I pray you therefore, Father, pray for me, that I may caſt my whole care upon him, and truſt upon him in all perils. For I know, and am ſurely perſwaded, that whatſoever I can imagine or think aforehand, it is nothing, except he aſſiſt me with his Spirit when the time is. I beſeech you therefore, Father, pray for me, that ſuch a compleat harneſs of the Spirit, ſuch boldneſs of mind may be given unto me, that I may out of a true Faith ſay with David; I will not truſt in my Bow, and it is not my Sword that ſhall ſave me. For he hath no pleaſure in the ſtrength of an Horſe, &c. But the Lords delight is in them that fear him, and put their truſt in his mercy. I beſeech you pray, pray, that I may enter this fight only in the Name of God, and that when all is paſt, I being not overcome through his gracious aid, may remain and ſtand faſt in him, till that day of the Lord, in the which to them that obtain the victory ſhall be given the lively Manna to eat, and a triumphant Crown for evermore.

Ephes. 6. Pſal. 44. Pſal. 147. Apoc. 2.

Now Father, I pray you help me to buckle on this gear a little better. For ye know the deepneſs of Satan, being an old Souldier, and you have collered with him ere now: bleſſed be God, that hath ever aided you ſo well. I ſuppoſe he may well hold you at the bay. But truly he will not be ſo willing (I think) to joyn with you as with us yonglings: Sir, I beſeech you, let your ſervant read this my babling unto you, and now and then, as it ſhall ſeem unto you beſt, let your pen run on my Book; ſpare not to blot my Paper: I give you good leave.

H. Latimer. Sir, I have cauſed my Man not only to read your Armour unto me, but alſo to write it it out. For it is not only no bare Armour, but alſo well buckled Armour. I ſee not how it could be better. I thank you even from the bottom of my heart for it, and my prayer ſhall you not lack, truſting that you do the like for me; For indeed there is the help, &c. Many things make confuſion in memory. And if I were learned as well as St. Paul, I would not beſtow much amongſt them, further than to gall them, and ſpur-gall too, when and whereas occaſion were given, and matter came to mind; for the Law ſhall be their ſhoot-anchor ſtay, and refuge. Therefore there is no remedy; Namely, now when they have the maſter bowl in their hand, and rule the roſt, but patience. Better it is to ſuffer what cruelly they will put upon us, than to incur Gods high indignation. Wherefore (good my Lord) be of good cheer in the Lord, with due conſideration what he requireth of you, and what he doth promiſe you. Our common Enemy ſhall do no more than God will permit him. God is faithful, which will not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength, &c. Be at a point what ye will ſtand unto; ſtick unto that, and let them both ſay and do what they liſt. They can but kill the Body, which otherwiſe is of it ſelf mortal. Neither yet ſhall they do that when they liſt, but when God will ſuffer them, when the hour appointed is come. To uſe many words with them it ſhall be but in vain, now that they have a bloody and deadly Law prepared for them. But it is very requiſite that ye give a reſonable account of your Faith, if they will quietly hear you; elſe ye know in a wicked place of judgment a man may keep ſilence, after the example of Chriſt. Let them not deceive you with their ſophiſtical Sophiſms and fallacies: you know that falſe things may have more appearance of Truth, than things that be moſt true: therefore Paul giveth us a watch-word, Let no man deceive you with likelineſs of ſpeech. Neither is it requiſite that with the contentious ye ſhould follow ſtrife of words, which tend to no edification, but to the ſubverſion of the hearers, and the vain bragging and oſtentation of the Adverſaries. Fear of death doth moſt perſwade a great number. Be well ware of that Argument; for that perſwaded Shaxton (as many men thought) after that he had once made a good profeſſion openly before the judgment ſeat. The fleſh is weak, but the willingneſs of the Spirit ſhall refreſh the weakneſs of the fleſh.

1 Cor. 10. 1 Pet. 3. Luke 23. Coloſ. 2. 2 Tim. 2.

The number of the Criers under the Altar muſt needs be fulfilled; if we be ſegregated thereunto, happy be we. That is the greateſt promotion that God giveth in this world, to be ſuch Philippians, to whom it is given not only to believe, but alſo to ſuffer, &c. But who is able to do theſe things? Surely all our ability, all our ſufficiency is of God. He requireth and promiſeth. Let us declare our obedience to his will, when it ſhall be requiſite in the time of trouble, yea, in the midſt of the fire.

Apoc. 6. Phil. 1.

When that number is fulfilled, which I ween ſhall be ſhortly, then have at the Papiſts, when they ſhall ſay peace, all things are ſafe, when Chriſt ſhall come to keep his great Parliament to the redreſs of all things that be amiſs. But he ſhall not come as the Papiſts feign him, to hide himſelf, and to play bo-peep as it were under a piece of Bread: but he ſhall come glorioully, to the terrour and fear of all Papiſts; but to the great conſolation and comfort of all that will here ſuffer for him. Comfort your ſelves one another with theſe words.

1 Theſ. 5. 1 Theſ. 4.

Lo Sir, here have I blotted your Paper vainly, and played the fool egregiouſly; but ſo I thought better than not to do your requeſt at this time. Pardon me, and pray for me, pray for me, I ſay, pray for [illegible]. For I am ſomtime ſo fearful, that I would creep into a Mouſe-hole; ſomtime God doth viſit me again with his comfort. So he cometh and goeth, to teach me to feel and to know mine infirmity, to the intent to give thanks to him that is worthy, leſt I ſhould rob him of his due, as many do, and almoſt all the world. Fare ye well.

What credence is to be given to Papiſts, it may appear by their wracking, writing, wrinching, and monſtrouſly injuring of Gods holy Scripture, as appeareth in the Popes Law. But I dwell here now in a School of oblivioufneſs. Fare you well once again, and be you ſtedfaſt and unmovable in the Lord. Paul loved Timothy marvellous well, notwithſtanding he ſaith unto him; Be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Goſpel; and again, Harden thy ſelf to ſuffer afflictions. Be faithful unto the death, and I will give thee a Crown of life, ſaith the Lord.

Here followeth the Letters of the Reverend Biſhop and Martyr, Nicholas Ridley.

A Letter ſent from Biſhop Ridley, and his Priſon-fellows unto Mr. Bradford and his Priſon-fellows, in the Kings-Bench in Southwark, Anno 1554.

A Letr of B. Rid. to M. Brad. and others.

Well beloved in Chriſt our Saviour, we all with one heart wiſh to you, with all thoſe that love God in deed and Truth, grace and health, and eſpecially to our dearly beloved Companions which are in Chriſts cauſe, and the cauſe both of their Brethren, and of their own ſalvation, to put their neck willingly under the yoke of Chriſts Croſs. How joyful it was to us to hear the report of Dr. Taylor, and of his godly Confeſſion, &c. I inſure you, it is hard for me to expreſs.

Bleſſed be God, which was and is the giver of that, and of all godly ſtrength and ſtomach in the time of adverſity. As for the rumours that have or do go abroad, either of our relenting or maſſing; we truſt, that they wich know God and their duty towards their Brethren in Chriſt, will not be too light of credence. For it is not the ſlanderers evil Tongue, but a mans evil deed that can with God defile a man; and therefore with Gods grace ye ſhall never have cauſe to do otherwiſe than ye ſay ye do, that is, not to doubt but that we will, by Gods grace, continue, &c. Like rumour as ye have heard of our coming to London, hath been here ſpread of the coming of certain learned men Priſoners, hither from London; but as yet we know no certainty whether of theſe rumors is, or ſhall be more true. Know you that we have you in our daily remembrance, and wiſh you and all the reſt of our foreſaid companions well in Chriſt.

His Reports ſpread by the policy of the Papiſts.

It ſhould do us much comfort, if we might have knowledge of the State of the reſt of our moſt dearly Beloved, which in this troubleſom time do ſtand in Chriſts cauſe, and in the defence of the Truth therof. Somewhat we have heard of Mr. Hoopers matter; but of the reſt never a deal. We long to hear of Father Crome, Dr. Sands, Mr. Saunders, Veron, Beacon, Rogers, &c. We are in good health, thanks be to God, and yet the manner of our intreating doth change as ſowr Ale doth in ſummer. It is reported to us of our Keepers, that the the Univerſity beareth us heavily. A cole chanced to fall in the night out of the chimney, and burnt a hole in the floor, and no more harm was done, the Bayliffs ſervant ſitting by the fire. Another night there chanced (as Mr. Bayliffs told us) a drunken fellow to multiply words, and for the ſame he was ſet in Bocardo. Upon theſe things (as is reported) there is riſen a rumour in the Town and Country about, that we ſhould have broken the priſon with ſuch violence, as that if Maſter Bayliffs had not playèd the pretty men, we ſhould have made a ſcape. We had out of our priſon a wall that we might have walked upon, and our ſervants had liberty to go abroad in the Town or fields, but now both they and we are reſtrained of both.

Whatſoever fault is done, the cauſe is laid upon the poor Chriſtians.

My Lord of Worceſter paſſed by throw Oxford, but he did not viſit us. The ſame day began our reſtraint to be more, and the book of the Communion was taken from us by the Bayliffs at the Mayors commandment, as the Bayliffs did report to us. No man is licenſed to come into us before they might, that would ſee us upon the wall, but that is ſo grudged at, and ſo evil reported, that we are now reſtrained, &c. Sir, bleſſed be God, with all our evil reports, grudges, and reſtraints, we are merry in God, all our cure and care is and ſhall be (by Gods grace) to pleaſe and ſerve him, of whom we look and hope after theſe temporall and momentany miſeries, to have eternall joy and perpetual felicity with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, Peter and Paul, and all the heavenly company of the Angels in heaven, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

M. Ridley and his fellow priſoner in Bocardo, reſtrained of their liberty.

As yet there was never learned man, nor any Scholar, or other that viſited us ſince we came into Bocardo, which now in Oxford may be called a Colledge of "Quondams. For as ye know, we be no fewer than three, and I dare ſay, every one well contented with his portion, which I do reckon to be our heavenly Fathers fatherly, good and gracious gift. Thus fare you well. We ſhall by Gods grace one day meet together, and be merry. The day aſſuredly approacheth apace; the Lord grant that it may ſhortly come. For before that day come, I fear me the World will wax worſe and worſe. But then all our enemies ſhall be overthrown, and troden under foot; Righteouſneſs and truth then ſhall have the victory, and bear the bell away, whereof the Lord grant us to be partakers, and all that love truely the truth.

The ingratitude of the Scholars in not viſiting the Biſhops in Bocardo.

"Bocardo a Colledge of Quondams.

We all pray you, as we can, to cauſe all our commendations to be made unto all ſuch as ye know did viſit us and you, when we were in the Tower, with their friendly remembrances and benefits. Miſtreſs Wilkſon and Miſtreſs Warcup have not forgotten us, but ever ſince we came to Bocardo, with their charitable and friendly benevolence have comforted us: not that elſe we did lack (for God be bleſſed, he ever hitherto hath provided ſufficiently for us) but that is a great comfort, and an occaſion for us to bleſs God, when we ſee that he maketh them ſo friendly to tender us, whom ſome of us were never familiarly acquainted withall.

The goodneſs of Miſtreſs Wilkſon and Anne Warcup to help the Biſhops in Bocardo.

Yours in Chriſt, Nich. Ridley.

A Letter of Maſter Ridley, ſent to a Couſin of his.

GOds Holy Spirit be with you now and ever, Amen.

Another Letter of B. Ridley to his Couſin.

When I call to remembrance (beloved Couſin) the ſtate of thoſe that for fear of trouble, either for loſs of goods, will do in the ſight of the World thoſe things that they know and are aſſured are contrary to the will of God, I can do no leſs but lament their caſe, being aſſured the end thereof will be ſo pitiful (without ſpeedy repentance) that I tremble and fear to have it in remembrance. I would to God it lay upon ſome earthly burden, ſo that freedom of conſcience might be given unto them. I wrote (as God knoweth) not of preſumption, but onely lamenting the ſtate of thoſe, whom I thought now in this dangerous time ſhould have given both you and me comfortable inſtruction. But alas, inſtead thereof we have inſtructions to follow (I lament to rehearſe it) ſuperſtitious Idolatry. Yea, and that worſt of all is, they will ſeek to prove it by the Scriptures. The Lord for his mercy turn their hearts, Amen. Commend me, &c.

M. Ridley lamenteth the ſtate of them which for fear of trouble do winde with the world, and go contrary to their conſcience.

To Maſter Bradford.

Another worthy letter of Biſhop Ridley to M. Bradford.

BRother Bradford, I wiſh you and your company in Chriſt, yea, and all the Holy Brotherhood, that now with you in divers priſons ſuffereth and beareth patiently Chriſts Croſs for the maintenance of his Goſpel, grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Sir, conſidering the ſtate of this chivalry and warfare, wherein I doubt not but we be ſet to fight under Chriſts banner, and his Croſs, againſt our ghoſtly enemy the Devil, and the old Serpent Satan, me think I perceive two things to be his moſt perillous and moſt dangerous engines, which he hath to impugne Chriſts verity, his Goſpel, and his faith; and the ſame two alſo to be the moſt maſſy poſts, and moſt mighty pillars, whereby he maintaineth and upholdeth this Satanical Synagogue. Theſe two, Sir, are they, in my judgement: the one, his falſe Doctrine and Idolatrical uſe of the Lords Supper, and the other, the wicked and abominable uſurpation of the primacy of the See of Rome. By theſe two Satan ſeemeth to me principally to maintain and uphold his Kingdom; by theſe two he driveth down mightily (alas I fear me) the third part of the ſtarrs in heaven. Theſe two poyſonful rotten poſts he had ſo painted over with ſuch a pretence and colour of Religion, of Unity in Chriſts Church of the Catholick faith, and ſuch like, that the wily Serpent is able to deceive (if it were poſſible) even the elect of God. Wherefore John ſaith not without great cauſe; If any man know not Satans ſubtilties and the profundities thereof, I will wiſh him no other burden to be laden withall.

Two main pillars holding up the Synagogue of Satan.
1. Falſe doctrine in the Sacrament.
2. The Popes primacy: Apoc. 8: Sátans poyſon painted over with fair pretenſes of Religion. Apoc. 2:

Sir, becauſe theſe be his principal and main poſts whereupon ſtandeth all his falſhood, craft, and treachery, therefore according to the poor power that God hath given me, I have bended mine Artillery to ſhoot at the ſame. I know it to be but little (God knoweth) that I can do, and of my ſhot I know they paſs not. Yet I will not (God willing) ceaſe to do the beſt that I can, to ſhake thoſe cankered and rotten poſts. The Lord grant me good ſucceſs, to the glory of his Name, and the furtherance of Chriſts Goſpel. I have now already (I thank God) for this preſent time ſpent a good part of my powder in theſe ſcriblings, whereof this bearer ſhall give you knowledge. Good Brother Bradford, let the wicked ſurmiſe and ſay what they liſt; know you for a certainty, by Gods grace, without all doubt, that in Chriſts Goſpels cauſe, againſt and upon the aforeſaid Gods enemies, I am fully determined to live and die. Farewel (dear Brother) and I beſeech you and all the reſt of our Brethren to have good remembrance of the condemned Hereticks (as they call them) of Oxford, in your prayers. The bearer ſhal certifie you of our ſtate. Fare well in the Lord. From Bocardo

Another Letter of Maſter Ridley unto Maſter Bradford, and other his priſon-fellows, Anno, 1555.

DEarly beloved, I wiſh you grace, mercy, and peace.

Another Letter of B. Ridley anſwering to M. Bradford, This was a treatiſe of the Lords Supper with other things which M. Bradford ſent to him to peruſe, and to judge thereof:

According to your mind, I have run over all your "papers, and what I have done (which is but ſmall) therein may appear. In two places I have put in two looſe leaves. I had much ado to read that was written in your great leaves. and I ween ſomewhere I have altered ſome words, becauſe I could not read perfectly that which was written. Sir, what ſhall be beſt done with theſe things, now ye muſt conſider; for if they come in ſight at this time, undoubtedly they muſt to the fire with their Father: and as for any ſafeguard that your cuſtody can be unto them, I am ſure you look not for it. For as you have been partner of the work, ſo I am ſure you look for none other, but to have and receive like wages, and to drink of the ſame cup. Bleſſed be God, that hath given you liberty in the mean ſeaſon, that you may uſe your pen to his glory, and the comfort (as I hear ſay) of many. I bleſs God daily in you, and all your whole company, to whom I beſeech you commend me heartily. Now I love my country-man in deed and in truth. I mean D. Taylor not for my earthly countries ſake, but for our heavenly Fathers ſake, and for Chriſts ſake, whom I heard ſay, he did ſtoutly in time of perill confeſs, and yet alſo for our countries ſake, and for all our Mothers ſake; but I mean of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of heavenly Jeruſalem, and becauſe of the Spirit, which bringeth forth in him, in you, and in our company ſuch bleſſed fruits of boldneſs in the Lords cauſe, of patience and conſtancy. The Lord which hath begun this work in you all, perform and perfect this his own deed, until his own day come Amen.

And yet I perceive ye have not been baited, and the cauſe thereof God knoweth, which will let them do no more to his, than is his pleaſed will and pleaſure to ſuffer them to do for his own glory, and to the profit of them which be truely his. For the Father, which doth guide them that be Chriſts to Chriſt, is more mighty than all they, and no man is able to pull them out of the Fathers hands: except, I ſay, it pleaſe our Father, it pleaſe our Maſter Chriſt to ſuffer them, they ſhall not ſtir one hair of your heads.

My Brother P. the bearer hereof, and Maſter Hoopers Letters; would that we ſhould ſay what we think good concerning your "mind: that is, not to anſwer, except ye might have ſomewhat indifferent Judges; We are (as ye know) ſeparated, and one of us cannot in any thing conſult with another, and much ſtrait watching of the Bayliffs is about us, that there be no privy conference amongſt us. And yet, as we hear, the Scholars bear us more heavily then the Townſmen. A wonderful thing, among ſo many, never yet Scholar offered any of us (ſo farr as I know) any manner of favour, either for or in Chriſts cauſe.

"This matter was concerning the deliberation of the priſoners in London what to do if they were called to open diſputation.

Now as concerning your demand of your Counſell, for my part I do not miſlike that which I perceive ye are minded to do. For I look for none other, but if ye anſwer afore the ſame Commiſſioners that we did, ye ſhall be ſerved and handled as we were, though ye were as well learned as ever was either Peter or Paul. And yet further I think, that occaſion afterward may be given you, and the conſideration of the profit of your auditory may perchance move yo to do otherwiſe.

Finally, determinately to ſay what ſhall be beſt, I am not able; but I truſt he, whoſe cauſe ye have in hand, ſhall put you in mind to do that which ſhall be moſt for his glory, the profit of his flock, and your own ſalvation. This Letter muſt be common to you and Maſter Hooper, in whom and in his priſon-fellow good Father C. I bleſs God, even from the bottom of my heart; for I doubt not but they both do to our Maſter Chriſt, true, acceptable, and honorable ſervice, and profitable to his flock; the one with his pen, and the other with his fatherly example of patience and conſtancy, and all manner of true godlineſs. But what ſhall I need to ſay to you? Let this be common among your Brethren, among whom (I dare ſay) it is with you as it is with us, to whom all things here are common, meat, money, and whatſoever any of us hath, that can or may do another good. Although I ſaid the Bayliffs and our Hoſteſs ſtraitly watch us, that we have no conference or intelligence of any thing abroad, yet hath God provided for every one of us inſtead of our ſervants, faithful fellows, which will be content to hear and ſee, and to do for us whatſoever they can. It is Gods work ſurely, bleſſed be God for his unſpeakable goodneſs. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God, and the communication of the Holy Ghoſt be with you all, Amen, Amen.

Communion of Saints in Biſhop Ridley, Biſhop Hooper, D. Taylor, and other.

Gods proviſion for his Saints.

As farr as London is from Oxford, yet thence we have received of late, both meat, money, and ſhirts, not onely from ſuch as are of our acquaintance, but of ſome (whom this bearer can tell) with whom I had never to my knowledge any acquaintance. I know for whoſe ſake they do it; to him therefore be all honour, glory, and due thanks.

The Chriſtian charity of certain godly Brethren of London, toward the priſoned Biſhops in Oxford.

And yet I pray you do ſo much as to ſhew them, that we have received their benevolence, and (God bee bleſſed) have plenty of all ſuch things. This I deſire you to do; for I know they be of Maſter Hoopers and your familiar acquaintance. Maſter Latimer was craſed; but I hear now (thanks be to God) that he amendeth again.

Nicholas Ridley.

Another Letter of M. Ridley unto Maſter Bradford.

This letter of B. Ridley was written to M. Bradford ſoon after his condemnation. when it was thought that he ſhould be had to Lancaſhire. Mat. 25.

OH dear Brother, ſeeing the time is now come, wherein it pleaſeth the heavenly Father for Chriſt our Saviour his ſake, to call upon you, and to bid you to come, happy are you that ever you were born, thus to be found awake at the Lords calling. Euge ſerve bone & fidelis, quia ſuper pauca fuiſti fidelis, ſuper multa te conſtituet, & intrabis in gaudium Domini, i. Well done good and faithful ſervant, becauſe thou haſt been truſty in ſmall matters, he ſhall ſet thee over great things, and thou ſhalt enter into the joy of thy Lord.

O dear Brother, what meaneth this, that you are ſent into your own native Country? The wiſedom and policy of the World may mean what they will, but I truſt God will ſo order the matter finally by his fatherly providence, that ſome great occaſion of Gods gracious goodneſs ſhall be plentifully powred abroad amongſt his [illegible] thren in that Country, by this your Martyrdom, where the Martyrs for Chriſts ſake ſhed their Blood, and loſt their lives. Oh what wondrous things hath Chriſt afterward wrought to his glory, and confirmation of their Doctrine? if it be not the place that ſanctifieth the man, but the holy man doth by Chriſt ſanctifie the place, Brother Bradford, then happy and holy ſhall be that place wherein thou ſhalt ſuffer, and ſhall be with thy aſhes in Chriſts cauſe ſprinkled over withall. All thy Country may rejoyce of thee, that it ever brought forth ſuch a one, which would render his life again in his cauſe, of whom he had received it. Brother Bradford, ſo long as I ſhall underſtand thou art in thy journey, by Gods grace I ſhall call upon our heavenly Father for Chriſts ſake, to ſet thee ſafely home: and then, good Brother, ſpeak you, and pray for the remnant which are to ſuffer for Chriſts ſake, according to that thou then ſhalt know more clearly.

We do look now every day when we ſhall be called on, bleſſed be God, I ween I am the weakeſt many ways of our company; and yet I thank our Lord God and heavenly Father by Chriſt, that ſince I heard of our dear Brother Rogers departing, and ſtout confeſſion of Chriſt and his truth even unto the death, my heart (bleſſed be God) rejoyced of it, that ſince that time (I ſay) I never felt any lumpiſh heavineſs in my heart, as I grant I have felt ſometimes before. Oh good Brother, bleſſed be God in thee, and bleſſed be the time that ever I knew thee. Farewel, farewel.

To the Brethren remaining in captivity of the fleſh, and diſperſed abroad in ſundry priſons, but knit together in Unity of Spirit and Holy Religion in the bowels of the Lord Jeſus.

A Letter of B. Ridley to the perſecuted flock of Chriſt. Written in Latine, and tranſlated into Engliſh.

GRace, peace, and mercy be multiplied among you. What worthy thanks can we render unto the Lord for you my Brethren, namely, for the great conſolation which through you we have received in the Lord, who notwithſtanding the rage of Satan that goeth about by all manner of ſubtile means to beguile the World, and alſo buſily laboureth to reſtore and ſet up his Kingdom again, that of late began to decay and fall to ruine; ye remain yet ſtill unmoveable, as men ſurely grounded upon a ſtrong rock. And now, albeit that Satan by his ſouldiers and wicked miniſters, daily (as we hear) draweth numbers unto him, ſo that it is ſaid of him, that he plucketh even the very Stars out of heaven, whiles he driveth into ſome men the fear of death, and loſs of all their goods, and ſheweth and offereth to otherſome the pleaſant baits of the World: namely, riches, wealth and all kind of delights and pleaſures, fair houſes, great revenues, fat benefices, and what not; and all to the intent they ſhould fall down and worſhip, not the Lord, but the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the Devil, that great Beaſt and his Image, and ſhould be inticed to commit fornication with the Strumpet of Babylon, together with the Kings of the earth, with the leſſer Beaſt and with the falſe Prophets, and ſo to rejoyce and be pleaſant with her, and to be drunken with the wine of her fornication; fornication; yet bleſſed be God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which hath given unto you a manly courage, and hath ſo ſtrengthened you in the inward man, by the power of his Spirit, that you can contemn as well all the terrors, as alſo the vain flatterings and allurements of the world, eſteeming them as vanites, meer triſles, and things of nought: Who hath alſo wrought, planted, and ſurely ſtabliſhed in your hearts, ſo ſtedfaſt a Faith and love of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, joyned with ſuch conſtancy, that by no engines of Antichriſt, be they never ſo terrible or plauſible, ye will ſuffer any other Jeſus, or any other Chriſt to be forced upon you, beſides him whom the Prophets have ſpoken of before, the Apoſtles have preached, the holy Martyrs of God have confeſſed and teſtified with the effuſion of their Blood.

He exhorteth the Brethren to ſtand faſt. Gal. 5.

In this Faith ſtand ye faſt, my Brethren, and ſuffer not your ſelves to be brought under the yoke of bondage and ſuperſtition any more. For ye know, Brethren, how that our Saviour warned his beforehand, that ſuch ſhould come as would point unto the world another Chriſt, and would ſet him out with ſo many falſe miracles, and with ſuch deceivable and ſubtile practices, that even the very elect (if it were poſſible) ſhould thereby be deceived: ſuch ſtrong deluſion to come did our Saviour give warning of before. But continue ye faithful and conſtant, be of good comfort, and remember that our grand Captain hath overcome the world; for he that is in us, is ſtronger than he that is in the world, and the Lord promiſeth unto us that for the elects ſake, the days of wickedneſs ſhall be ſhortned. In the mean ſeaſon abide ye and endure with patience as ye have begun: endure, I ſay, and reſerve your ſelves unto better times, as one of the Heathen Poets ſaid, ceaſe not to ſhew your ſelves valiant ſouldiers of the Lord and help to maintain the travelling Faith of the Goſpel.

Matth. 24.

1 John 4.

Virg. Æneid. 1. Phil. 1.

Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God, ye may receive the promiſes. For yet a very little, and he that ſhall come, will come and will not tarry, and the juſt ſhall live by Faith: but if any withdraw himſelf my Soul ſhall have no pleaſure in him (ſaith the Lord.) But we are not they which do withdraw our ſelves unto damnation, but believe unto the ſalvation of the Soul. Let us not ſuffer theſe words of Chriſt to fall out of our hearts by any manner of terrour, or threatnings of the world. Fear not them which kill the Body, the reſt ye know. For I write not unto you, as to men which are ignorant of the Truth, but which know the Truth, and to this end only, that we agreeing together in one Faith, may take comfort one of another, and be the more confirmed and ſtrengthned thereby. We never had a better or more juſt cauſe either to contemn our life, or ſhed our Blood; we cannot take in hand the defence of a more certain, clear, and manifeſt Truth. For it is not any Ceremony for the which we contend; but it toucheth the very ſubſtance of our whole Religion, yea, even Chriſt himſelf. Shall we, either can we receive and acknowledge any other Chriſt inſtead of him, who is alone the everlaſting Son of the everlaſting Father, and is the brightneſs of the glory and a lively image of the ſubſtance of the Father, in whom only dwelleth corporally the fulneſs of the Godhead, who is the only way, the Truth, and the life? Let ſuch wickedneſs (my Brethren) let ſuch horrible wickedneſs be far from us. For although there be that are called gods, whether in Heaven or in Earth, as there be many gods and many Lords, yet unto us there is but one God, which is the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him, and one Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him; but every man hath not knowledge. This is life eternal (ſaith S. John) that they know thee to be the only true God, and whom thou haſt ſent Jeſus Chriſt. If any therefore would force upon us any other God, beſides him whom Paul and the Apoſtles have taught, let us not hear him but let us flee from him, and hold him accurſed.

Heb. 10. Patience neceſſary for all Chriſtians.

John 10.

The quarrel of the Martyrs is juſt and true. Heb. 1. Coloſ. 1.

Martyrs put to death, becauſe they will acknowledge no more Chriſts but one. 1 Cor. 8.

Brethren, ye are not ignorant of the deep and profound ſubtilties of Satan; for he will not ceaſe to range about you, ſeeking by all means poſſible whom he may devour: but play ye the men, and be of good comfort in the Lord. And albeit your enemies and the adverſaries of the Truth, armed with all worldly force and power that may be, do ſet upon you; yet be ye not faint hearted, and ſhrink not therefore; but truſt unto your Captain Chriſt, truſt unto the Spirit of Truth, and truſt to the Truth of your cauſe; which as it may by the malice of Satan be darkned, ſo can it never be clean put out. For we have (high praiſe be given to God therefore) moſt plainly, evidently, and clearly on our ſide, all the Prophets, all the Apoſtles, and undoubtedly all the ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writers which have written, until of late years paſt.

The profundities of Satan. Acts 20.

1 Pet. 5. The Martyrs have all the Prophets, Apoſtles, and ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writers on their ſide.

Let us be hearty and of good courage therefore, and thorowly comfort our ſelves in the Lord. Be in no wiſe afraid of your Adverſaries; for that which is to them an occaſion of perdition, is to you a ſure token of ſalvation, and that of God. For unto you it is given, that not only ye ſhould believe on him, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. And when ye are railed upon for the Name of Chriſt, remember that by the voice of Peter, yea, and of Chriſt our Saviour alſo, ye are counted with the Prophets, with the Apoſtles, and with the holy Martyrs of Chriſt, happy and bleſſed therefore: for the glory and Spirit of God reſteth upon you.

Phil. 1.

1 Pet. 4.

On their part our Saviour Chriſt is evil ſpoken of, but on your part he is glorified. For what can they elſe do unto you by perſecuting you, and working all cruelty and villany againſt you, but make your Crowns more glorious, yea beautifie and multiply the ſame, and heap upon themſelves the horrible plagues and heavy wrath of God: and therefore (good Brethren) though they rage never ſo fiercely againſt us, yet let us not wiſh evil unto them again, knowing that whiles for Chriſts cauſe they vex and perſecute us, they are like mad men, moſt outragious and cruel againſt themſelves, heaping hot burning coals upon their own heads; but rather let us wiſh well unto them, knowing that we are thereunto called in Chriſt Jeſus, that we ſhould be heirs of the bleſſing. Let us pray therefore unto God, that he would drive out of their hearts this darkneſs of Errors, and make the light of his Truth to ſhine unto them, that they acknowledging their blindneſs, may with all humble repentance be converted unto the Lord, and together with us confeſs him to be the only true God, which is the Father of light, and his only Son Jeſus Chriſt, worſhipping him in Spirit and verity, Amen. The Spirit of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt comfort your hearts in the love of God, and patience of Chriſt, Amen.

He exhorteth us not to wiſh evil to our Perſecutors.

1 Pet. 3.

Your Brother in the Lord, whoſe name this Bearer ſhall ſignifie unto you, ready always by the grace of God to live and dye with you.

To the Brethren which conſtantly cleave unto Chriſt, in ſuffering affliction with him, and for his ſake.

Another Letter of B. Ridley, wherein he confirmeth the Brethren in captivity, tranſlated out of the Latin.

GRace and Peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be multiplied unto you, Amen.

Although Brethren, we have of late heard nothing from you, neither have at this preſent any news to ſend to you; yet we thought good ſomething to write unto you, whereby ye might underſtand that we have good remembrance of you continually, as we doubt not but ye have of us alſo. When this Meſſenger, coming unto us from you of late, had brought us good tidings of your great conſtancy, fortitude, and patience in the Lord, we were filled with much joy and gladneſs, giving thanks to God the Father through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which hath cauſed his face ſo to ſhine upon you, and with the light of ſpiritual underſtanding hath ſo lightned your hearts, that now being in captivity and bonds for Chriſts cauſe, ye have not ceaſed, as much as in you lieth, by words, but much more by deed and by your example, to ſtabliſh and confirm that thing, which when ye were at liberty in the world, ye laboured to publiſh and ſet abroad by the Word and Doctrine: that is to ſay, holding faſt the Word of Life, ye ſhine as lights in the world, in the midſt of a wicked and crooked Nation, and that with ſo much the greater glory of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and profit of your Brethren, by how much Satan more cruelly now rageth, and buſily laboureth to darken the light of the Goſpel.

Communion and Unity of Saints.

Phil. 2.

And

Anno 1555.

And as for the darkneſs that Satan now bringeth upon the Church of England, who needeth to doubt thereof? Of late time our Saviour Chriſt, his Apoſtles, Prophets, and Teachers ſpake in the Temple to the People of England *in the Engliſh Tongue, ſo that they might be underſtood plainly, and without any hardneſs, of the godly and ſuch as ſought for heavenly knowledge in matters, which of neceſſity of ſalvation pertained to the obtaining of eternal life; but now thoſe things, which once were written of them for the edifying of the Congregation, are read in a ſtrange Tongue without interpretation, manifeſtly againſt St.*Pauls commandment, ſo that there is no man able to underſtand them, which hath not learned that ſtrange and unknown Tongue.

Reaſons proving the Religion in Queen Maries time not to be of God.

Of late days thoſe heavenly Myſteries, whereby Chriſt hath ingraffed us into his Body, and hath united us one to another, whereby alſo being regenerate, and born anew unto God; he hath nouriſhed, increaſed and ſtrengthned us, whereby moreover, either he hath taught and ſet forth an order amongſt them which are whole, or elſe to the ſick in Soul or Body, hath given, as it were, wholſom medicines and remedies; thoſe (I ſay) were all plainly ſet forth to the People in their own language; ſo that what great and exceeding good things every man had received of God, what duty every one owed to another by Gods Ordinance, what every one had profeſſed in his vocation, and was bound to obſerve, where remedy was to be had for the wicked and feeble, he to whom God hath given a deſire and willing heart to underſtand thoſe things, might ſoon perceive and underſtand. But now all theſe things are taught and ſet forth in ſuch ſort, that the People redeemed with Chriſts Blood, and for whoſe ſakes they were by Chriſt himſelf ordained, can have no manner of underſtanding thereof at all.

Comparison between the Religion in King Edward's time, and the Religion ſet out in Q. Maries time.

Scriptures in King Edward's time known, in Q. Maries time unknown.

Of late (forſomuch as we know not how to pray as we ought) our Lord Jeſus Chriſt in his Prayer, whereof he would have no man ignorant, and alſo the Holy Ghoſt in the Pſalms, Hymns, and ſpiritual Songs which are ſet forth in the Bible, did teach and inſtruct all the People of England in the Engliſh Tongue, that they might ask ſuch things as are according to the will of the Father, and might joyn their hearts and lips in Prayer together; but now all theſe things are commanded to be hid and ſhut up from them in a ſtrange Tongue, whereby it muſt needs follow, that the People can neither tell how to pray, nor what to pray for; and how can they joyn their hearts and voice together, when they underſtand no more what the voice ſignifieth, than a brute Beaſt?

In King Edward's time the People knew what they prayed. In Queen Maries time they neither knew what, nor to whom they prayed.

The Catechiſm ſet forth in King Edward's time for Children, in Queen Maries time forbidden.

Finally, I hear ſay, that the Catechiſm which was lately ſet forth in the Engliſh Tongue, is now in every Pulpit condemned. Oh deviliſh malice, and moſt ſpitefully injurious to the ſalvation of Mankind purchaſed by Jeſus Chriſt! Indeed Satan could not long ſuffer that ſo great light ſhould be ſpread abroad in the world; he ſaw well enough that nothing was able to overthrow his Kingdom ſo much, as if Children being godly inſtructed in Religion, ſhould learn to know Chriſt whilſt they are yet young; whereby not only Children, but the Elder ſort alſo and aged Folks that before were not taught to know Chriſt in their Childhood, ſhould now even with Children and Babes be forced to learn to know him. Now therefore he roareth, now he rageth. But what elſe do they (Brethren) which ſerve Satan, and become his miniſters and ſlaves in maintaining of his impiety, but even the ſame which they did, to whom Chriſt our Saviour threatneth this Curſe in the Goſpel; Wo unto you which ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, and take away the Key of knowledge from them: you your ſelves have not entred in, neither have ye ſuffered them that would enter, to come in.

Matt. 23. The Catholick Phariſees neither enter themſelves, nor will ſuffer other to enter Gods Kingdom.

And from whence ſhall we ſay (Bretbren) that this horrible and miſchievous darkneſs proceedeth, which is now brought upon the world? From whence, I pray you, but even from the ſmoke of the great furnace of the bottomleſs Pit, ſo that the Sun and the Air are now darkned by the ſmoke of the Pit? Now, even now (out of doubt Brethren) the Pit is opened againſt us, and the Locuſts begin to ſwarm, and Abaddon now reigneth.

Apoc. 9. The Pit of Locuſts opened.

*Ye therefore (my Brethren) which pertain unto Chriſt, and have the Seal of God marked in your Foreheads: that is to wit, are Sealed with the earneſt of the Spirit to be a peculiar People of God, quit your ſelves like men, and be ſtrong; for he that is in us, is ſtronger than he which is in the World; and ye know that all that is born of God overcometh the World, and this is our victory that overcometh the World, even our Faith. Let the World fret, let it rage never ſo much, be it never ſo cruel, and bloody, yet be ye ſure that no man can take us out of the Fathers hands, for he is greater than all; who hath not ſpared his own Son, but hath given him to death for us all; and therefore how ſhall he not with him give us all things alſo; Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of Gods elect? It is God that juſtifieth, who then ſhall condemn? It is Chriſt that is dead, yea rather which is riſen again, who alſo is at the right hand of God, and maketh requeſt alſo for us. Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or anguiſh, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? the reſt ye know, Brethren. We are certainly perſwaded with S.*Paul, by the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, no kind of thing ſhall be able to ſeparate us from the love of God which is in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. Which thing, that it may come to paſs by the grace and mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, to the comfort both of you and of us all, as we for our parts will continually (God willing) pray for you; ſo (dear Brethren in the Lord) with all earneſt and hearty requeſt we beſeech you, even in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that ye will not ceaſe to pray for us. Fare ye well dear Brethren. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all evermore, Amen.

Exhortation to ſtand conſtant in Chriſt and his Truth. Rom. 8.

A Letter of Biſhop Ridley, anſwering to a certain Letter of one Mr. Weſt ſomtime his Chaplain.

Another Letter of B. Ridley, anſwering one M. Weſt, ſometime his Chaplain.

I Wiſh you grace in God, and love of the Truth, without the which truly eſtabliſhed in mens hearts by the mighty hand of the Almighty God, it is no more poſſible to ſtand by the Truth in Chriſt in time of trouble, than it is for the wax to abide the heat of the fire. Sir you know this, that I am (bleſſed be God) perſwaded that this World is but tranſitory, and (as St. John ſaith) The World paſſeth away, and the luſt thereof. I am perſwaded Chriſts words to be true; whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs alſo before my Father which is in heaven: And I believe that no earthly Creature ſhall be ſaved, whom the Redeemer and Saviour of the World ſhall before his Father deny. This the Lord grant, that it may be ſo graffed, eſtabliſhed, and fixed in my heart, that neither things preſent nor to come, high or low, life nor death, be able to remove me thence. It it is a goodly wiſh, that you wiſh me deeply to conſider the things pertaining unto Gods glory; but if you had wiſhed alſo, that neither fear of death, nor hope of worldly proſperity ſhould let me to maintain Gods word and his Truth, which is his glory and true honour, it would have liked me well. You deſire me for Gods ſake to remember my ſelf. Indeed Sir, now it is time ſo to do; for ſo far as I can perceive, it ſtandeth me upon no leſs danger, than of the loſs both of Body and Soul; and I trow, then it is time for a man to awake, if any thing will awake him. He that will not fear him that threatneth to caſt both Body and Soul into everlaſting fire, whom will he fear? With this fear, O Lord, faſten thou together our frail fleſh, that we never ſwerve from thy Laws. You ſay, you have made much ſute for me. Sir, God grant that you have not in ſuing for my worldly deliverance, impaired and hindered the furtherance of Gods Word and his Truth.

You have known me long indeed; in the which time it hath chanced me, as you ſay, to miſlike ſome things. Confeſſion unto the Miniſter which is able to inſtruct, correct, comfort, and inform the weak, wounded, and ignorant Conſcience, indeed I ever thought might do much good in Chriſts Congregation, and ſo I aſſure you, I think even at this day. deal better than of the rest (as you say) yet in the Margent you write warily, and in this world Wisely; and yet me thought all sounding not well. Sir, but that I see so many changes in this world, and so much alteration, else at this your saying I would not a little marvel. I have taken you for my Friend, and a man whom I fancied for plainness and faithfulness, as much I assure you, as for your learning; and have you kept this so close in your heart from me unto this day? Sir, I consider more things than one, and will not say all that I think. But what need you to care what I think, for any thing I shall be able to do unto you, either good or harm? You give me good Lessons to stand in nothing against my learning, and to beware of vain-glory. Truly Sir, I herein like your counsel very well, and by Gods grace I intend to follow it unto my lives end.

The part of a true Bishop, only to seek the glory of Christ his Master.

To write unto those whom you name, I cannot see what it will avail me. For this I would have you know, that I esteem nothing available for me, which also will not further the glory of God. And now, because I perceive you have an entire zeal and desire of my deliverance out of this captivity and worldly misery, If I should not bear you a good heart in God again, me think I were to blame. Sir, how nigh the day of my dissolution and departure out of this world is at hand, I cannot tell: the Lords will be fulfilled how soon soever it shall come. I know the Lords words must be verified on me that I shall appear before the incorrupt Judge, and be countable to him of all my former life. And although the hope of his mercies is my Shoot-anchor of eternal salvation, yet am I perswaded, that whosoever wittingly neglecteth and regardeth not to clear his Conscience, he cannot have peace with God, nor a lively faith in his mercy. Conscience therefore moveth me, considering you were one of my Family, and one of my household, of whom then I think I had a special Cure, and of all them which were within my house, which in deed ought to have been an example of godliness to all the rest of my Cure, not only of good life, but also in promoting of Gods Word to the uttermost of their power, (but alas, now when the trial doth separate the Chaff from the Corn, how small a deal it is, God knoweth, which the wind doth not blow away) this Conscience (I say) doth move me to fear, lest the lightness of my Family shall be laid to my charge for lack of more earnest and diligent instruction, which should have been done. But blessed be God which hath given me grace to see this my default and to lament it from the bottom of my heart, before my departing hence.

B. Ridley repenteth that he was not more earnest in stablishing the Consciences of his Family and Cure.

Dr. Harvey charged.

This Conscience doth move me also now to require both you and my Friend Dr. Harvey, to remember your promises made to me in times past, of the pure setting forth and Preaching of Gods Word and his Truth. These promises, although you shall not need to fear to be charged with them of me hereafter before the world, yet look for none other (I exhort you as my Friends) but to be charged with them at Gods hand. This Conscience and the love that I bear unto you, biddeth me now say unto you both in Gods Name; Fear God, and love not the world: for God is able to cast both Body and Soul into Hell-fire. When his wrath shall suddenly be kindled, blessed are all they that put their trust in him. And the saying of St. John is true, All that is in the world, as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world, and the world passeth away and the lust thereof, but he that doth the will of God abideth for ever. If this gift of grace (which undoubtedly is necessarily required unto eternal salvation) were truly and unfeignedly graffed and firmly established in mens hearts, they would not be so light, so suddenly to shrink from the maintenance and confession of the Truth as is now (alas) seen so manifestly of so many in these days. But here peradventure you would know of me, what is the Truth. Sir, Gods Word is the Truth, as St. John saith, and that even the same that was heretofore. For albeit man doth vary and change as the Moon, yet Gods Word is stable, and abideth one for evermore: and of Christ it is truly said, Christ yesterday and to day, the same is also for ever.

Good admonitions of B. Ridley to his old Chaplains.

Psal. 2. 1 John 2.

What is Truth. John 17. Eccles. 27. Heb. 13.

Common-Prayer in the common Tongue.

When I was in office, all that were esteemed learned in Gods Word, agreed this to be a Truth in Gods Word written, that the Common Prayer of the Church should be had in the Common Tongue. You know I have conferred with many, and I ensure you, I never found man (so far as I do remember) neither old nor young, Gospeller nor Papist of what judgment soever he was, in this thing to be of a contrary opinion. If then it were a Truth of Gods Word, think you that the alteration of the world can make it an untruth? If it cannot, why then do so many men shrink from the confession and maintenance of this Truth received once of us all? For what is it, I pray you, else to confess or deny Christ in this world, but to maintain the Truth taught in Gods Word, or for any worldly respect to shrink from the same? This one thing have I brought for an ensample; other things be in like case, which now particularly I need not rehearse. For he that will forsake wittingly, either for fear or gain of the world, any one open Truth of Gods Word, if he be constrained, he will assuredly forsake God and all his Truth, rather than he will endanger himself to lose or to leave that he loveth better indeed, than he doth God and the Truth of his Word.

What it is to confess Christ.

He that denieth an open Truth against Gods Word for worldly danger, will be as ready to deny God himself.

I like very well your plain speaking, wherein you say, I must either agree or die, and I think that you mean of the bodily death, which is Common both to good and bad. Sir, I know I must die, whether I agree or no. But what folly were it then to make such an agreement, by the which I could never escape this death which is common to all, and also incurr the guilt of death and eternal damnation? Lord, grant that I may utterly abhor and detest this damnable agreement so long as I live. And because (I dare say) you wrote of friendship unto me this short earnest advertisement, and I think verily, wishing me to live and not to die, therefore bearing you in my heart no less love in God, then you do me in the world, I say unto you in the Word of the Lord (and that I say to you, I say to all my Friends and lovers of us in God) that if you do not confess and maintain to your power and knowledge that which is grounded upon Gods Word, but will either for fear or gain of the world shrink and play the * Apostata, indeed you shall die the death; you know what I mean. And I beseech you all true Friends and lovers in God, remember what I say, for this may be the last time peradventure that ever I shall write unto you.

Death common to good and bad. Damnable agreement.

From Bocardo in Oxford the 8. day of April, 1555.

Master Grindal now Archbishop of Canterbury, being in the time of exile in the City of Frankford, wrote to Dr. Ridley then Prisoner, a certain Epistle, wherein first he lamenteth his captivity, exhorting him withal to be constant. Secondly, he certifieth him of the state of the English Exiles being dispersed in Germany, and of the singular providence of God in stirring up the favour of the Magistrates and Rulers there towards them. Thirdly, he writeth to know his mind and will concerning the printing of his Book against Transubstantiation, and of certain other Treatises and his disputations. Whereunto Bishop Ridley answereth again in order, as followeth

An answer of B. Ridley to M. Grindals Letter sent from Frankford.

BLessed be God our heavenly Father which enclined your heart to have such a desire to write unto me, and blessed be he again which hath heard your request, and hath brought your Letters safe unto my hands; and over all this I bless him through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the great comfort I have received by the same, of the knowledge of your state, and of other our dearly beloved Brethren and Country-men in those parts beyond the Sea.

Dearly beloved Brother Grindal, I say to you and all the rest of our Brethren in Christ with you, rejoyce in the Lord, and as you love me, and the other my Reverend Fathers and Concaptives, (which undoubtedly are Gloria Christi) lament not our state, but I beseech you and them all to give to our heavenly Father for his bounceless mercies and unspeakable benifits even in the midst of all our troubles given unto us, most hearty thanks. For Know ye, that as the weight of his Cross hath increased upon us, so he hath not nor doth not cease to multiply his mercies to strengthen us; and I trust, yet by his grace I doubt nothing, but he will ſo do for Chriſt our Maſters ſake even to the end. To hear that you and our other Brethren do find in your exile favour, and grace with the Magiſtrates, Miniſters, and Citizens at Tigury, Frankford, and otherwhere, it doth greatly comfort (I dare ſay) all here that do indeed love Chriſt and his true Word. I enſure you, it warmed my heart, to hear you by chance to name ſome, as Scory and Cox, &c. Oh that it had come in your mind to have ſaid ſomewhat alſo of Cheek, of Turner, of Leaver, of Sampſon, of Chambers, but I truſt in God they be all well. And Sir, ſeeing you ſay, that there be in thoſe parts with you of Students and Miniſters ſo good a number, now therefore care you not for us, otherwiſe than to wiſh that Gods glory may be ſet forth by us. For whenſoever God ſhall call us home (as we look daily for none other, but when it ſhall pleaſe God to ſay, Come) you, bleſſed be God, are enow through his aid, to light, and ſet up again the Lantern of his Word in England. As concerning the Copies ye ſay ye have with you, I wonder how ever they did and could find the way to come to you. My diſputation, except ye have that which I gathered my ſelf after the diſputation done, I cannot think ye have it truly. If ye have that, then ye have therewithal the whole manner after the which I was uſed in the diſputation.

As for the Treatiſe in Engliſh, Contra tranſubſtantiationem, vix poſſum adduci ut credam operæ pretium fore ut in Latinum transferatur. Cæterum, quicquid ſit nullo modo velim ut quidquam quocunq; modo meo nomine ederetur, donec quid de nobis Dominus, conſtituerit fieri, vobis prius certo conſtiterit; and thus much unto your Letters. Now although I ſuppoſe you know a good part of our ſtate here (for we are forth-coming, even as when ye departed, &c. You ſhall underſtand that I was in the Tower about the ſpace of two months cloſe Priſoner, and after that had granted to me without my labour, the liberty of the Tower, and ſo continued about half a year, and then, becauſe I refuſed to allow the Maſs with my preſence, I was ſhut up in Priſon again.

B. Ridley Priſoner in the Tower half a year and more.

The laſt Lent ſave one: it chanced by reaſon of the tumult ſtirred up in Kent, there were ſo many Priſoners in the Tower, that my Lord of Canterbury, M. Latimer, M. Bradford, and I were put all together in one Priſon, where we remained till almoſt the next Eaſter, and then we three, Canterbury, M. Latimer, and I, were ſuddenly ſent a little before Eaſter to Oxford, and were ſuffered to have nothing with us, but that we carried upon us. About the Whitſontide following was our diſputations at Oxford, after the which was all taken from us, as Pen, Ink, &c. Our own ſervants were taken from us before, and every one had put to him a ſtrange man, and we each one appointed to be kept in ſeveral places, as we are unto this day.

Canterbury, Ridley, Latimer, Bradford, Priſoners together in the Tower.

Cant. Ridley, Latimer removed to Oxford.

Bleſſed be God, we three at the writing hereof were in good health, and (in God) of good chear. We have looked long ago to have been diſpatched, for we were all three on one day within a day or two of our diſputations, of Dr. Weſton being the head Commiſſioner, condemned for Hereticks, and ſince that time we remain as we were of him left. The Lords will be fulfilled in us, as, I do not doubt but by his grace it ſhall be to his glory, and our endleſs ſalvation through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

D. Weſton condemner of Canter. Ridley and Latimer.

Likewiſe the Lord hath hitherto preſerved above all our expectation, our dear Brother, and in Chriſts cauſe a ſtrong Champion, John Bradford. He is likewiſe condemned, and is already delivered to the Secular Power, and Writs (as we have heard ſay) given out for his execution, and called in again.

Writs for burning of J. Bradford called in again.

Thus the Lord, ſo long as his bleſſed pleaſure is, preſerveth whom he liſteth, notwithſtanding the wonderful raging of the world. Many (as we hear ſay) have valiantly ſuffered confeſſing Chriſts Truth. and nothing yielding to the Adverſary, yea not for the fear or pains of death.

The names of them which I knew, and have now ſuffered, are theſe: Farrar the Biſhop of S. Davids, Hooper the Biſhop of Worceſter, Rogers tuus olim comprebendarius, Dr. Taylor of Hadley, M. Sanders, and one Tomkins a Weaver, and now this laſt day M. Cardmaker, with another, were burnt in Smithfield at London, and many other in Eſſex and Kent, whoſe names are written in the Book of Life, whom yet I do not know.

Names of Martyrs.

Weſt, your old companion, and ſomtime mine Officer (alas) hath relented (as I have heard) but the Lord hath ſhortned his days, for anon after he died, and is gone. Grembold was caught by the heel, and caſt into the Marſhalſey, but now is at liberty again, but I fear me he eſcaped not without ſome becking or bowing (alas) of his knee unto Baal.

This Weſt when he had relented and ſaid Maſs againſt his Conſcience, ſhortly after pined away, and died for ſorrow.

My dear Friend Thomas Ridley of the Bull-head in Cheap, which was to me the moſt faithful Friend, that I had in my trouble, is departed alſo unto God. My Brother Shipſide, that hath married my ſiſter, hath been almoſt half a year in Priſon, for delivering (as he was accuſed) of certain things, I ween, from me; but now, thanks be to God, he is at liberty again, but ſo that the Biſhop hath taken from him his * Park.

* Note how Boner here requited the kindneſs of B. Ridley ſhewed to his Mother.

Of all us three Concaptives at Oxford, I am kept moſt ſtrait, and with leaſt liberty, Vel quia [illegible] cujus ædibus ego cuſtodior, uxor dominatur (licet modo ſit Præfectus Civitatis) mulier vetula, moroſa, & ſuperſtitioſiſſ. quæ etiam hoc ſibi laudi ducit quod me dicatur. arctiſſime & cautiſſime cuſtodire; vir autem ipſe, Iriſchius nomine, mitis ſatis eſt omnibus, uxori vero pluſquam obſequens. Licet uxorem (uti noſti) nunquam habuerim, tamen ex hac quotidiana conſuetudine quam cum iſtis conjugibus habeo, videor mihi nonnihil poſſe intelligere, quam grave malum & intoler abile jugum ſit cum mala muliere in conjugio collocari. Recte ergo ſapiens dixit, uxor bona donum Dei; & iterum, mulieris bonæ beatus vir. Vel hæc, inquam, cauſa eſt, vel quia à magnis Magiſtratibus (neſcio quas ob cauſas) illud eſt, ut ita fieret, ipſis mandatum: idque illi, ſi quando de mea nimia ſervitute apud eos conqueror, ſedulo ſæpe rurſus mihi inculcant.

At Cambridge (as I hear ſay) Omnes ſtudiorum & ſtatutorum reformationes nuper factæ nunc ſunt denuo deformatæ & deletæ, & omnia ſunt in priſtinum chaos & in antiquum Papiſmum reducta: omnes Collegiorum Præfecti qui ſynceritati Evangelij favebant, vel qui conjugati erant loco moti ſunt, & alij Papiſticæ factionis in eorum loca ſurrogati, quod & de Sociis Collegiorum qui noluerunt flectere genu Baal factum eſſe audio. Nec mirum, nam idem paſſim factum eſt in univerſo regno Angliæ, in omnibus Archiepiſcopis, Epiſcopis, Decanis, Prebendariis, Sacerdotibus Eccleſiarum, & in toto Clero: and to tell you much naughty matter in few Words; Papiſmus apud nos ubique in pleno ſuo antiquo robore regnat.

All the Statutes of Reformation in Cambridge broken, and all things reduced again into the old ſtate of Popery.

The Lord be merciful, and for Chriſts ſake pardon us our old unkindneſs and unthankfulneſs: for when he poured upon us the gifts of his manifold graces and favours, (alas) we did not ſerve him nor render unto him thanks according to the ſame. We Paſtors many of us were too cold, and bare to much (alas) with the wicked world; our Magiſtrates did abuſe, to their own worldly gain, both Gods Goſpel and the Miniſters of the ſame. The People in many places was wayward and unkind. Thus of every ſide and of every ſort we have provoked Gods anger and wrath to fall upon us: but bleſſed might he be that hath not ſuffered his to continue in thoſe ways which ſo wholly have diſpleaſed his Sacred Majeſty, but hath awaked them by the fatherly correction of his own Sons Croſs, unto his glory and our endleſs ſalvation, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Unthankful receiving of Gods great gifts and graces. Coldneſs of Paſtors, corruption of Magiſtrates, waywardneſs of the People provoked Gods wrath.

My daily Prayer is (as God doth know) and by Gods grace ſhall be ſo long as I live in this world, for you, my dear Brethren that are fled out of your own Country, becauſe you will rather forſake all worldly things than the Truth of Gods Word. It is even the ſame that I uſe to make to God, for all thoſe Churches abroad thorow the world, which have forſaken the Kingdom of Antichriſt, and profeſſed openly the purity of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, that God our eternal Father, for our Saviour Chriſts ſake, will daily increaſe in you the gracious gift of his heavenly Spirit, to the true ſetting forth of his glory and of his Goſpel, & make you to agree Brotherly in the Truth of the ſame, that there ariſe no root of bitterneſs among you that may infect that good ſeed which God hath ſown in your hearts already, and finally that your life may be ſo pure and ſo honeſt, according to the rule of Gods Word and according to that vocation whereunto we we are called by the Gospel of Christ our Saviour, that the honesty and purity of the same may provoke all that shall see or know it, to the love of your Doctrine, and to love you for your honesty and vertues sake, and so both in brotherly Unity of your true Doctrine, and also in the godly vertue of your honest life, to glorifie our Father which is in heaven.

To Augustine Bernher.

A Letter of B. Ridley to one Augustin Bernher.

BRother Augustine, I bless God with all my heart in his manifold merciful gifts, given unto our dear Brethren in Christ, specially to our Brother Rogers, whom it pleased him to set forth first, no doubt out of his gracious goodness and fatherly favour towards him. And likewise blessed be God in the rest, as Hooper, Sanders, and Taylor, whom it hath pleased the Lord likewise to set in the forefront of the battel against his Adversaries, and hath endued them all (so far as I can hear) to stand in the confession of his truth, and to be content in his cause, and for his Gospels sake to lose their life. And evermore and without end blessed be even the same our heavenly Father for our dear and entirely beloved Brother Bradford, whom now the Lord (I perceive) calleth for: for I ween he will no longer vouchsafe him to abide among the adulterous and wicked generation of this World. I do not doubt but that he (for those gifts of grace which the Lord hath bestowed on him plenteously) hath holpen those which are gone before in their journey, that is, hath animated and encouraged them to keep the high way, & sic currere, uti tandem acciperent præmium. The Lord be his comfort, whereof I do not doubt, and I thank God heartily that ever I was acquainted with him, and that ever I had such a one in my house. And yet again I bless God in our dear Brother, and of this time Protomartyr Rogers, that he was also one of my calling to be a Prebendary Preacher of London. And now because Grindal is gone (the Lord I doubt not hath and knoweth wherein he will bestow him) I trust to God, it shall please him of his goodness to strengthen me to make up the trinity out of Pauls Church, to suffer for Christ whom God the Father hath anointed, the Holy Spirit doth bear witness unto, Paul and all the Apostles preached. Thus fare you well, I had no paper, I was constrained thus to write.

Commemoration of Saints.

Protomartyr is the first martyr, whom he so called, because he was the first that suffered here in those Bloody days.

Besides these Letters of Bishop Ridley, divers other tractations also were written by him, partly out of prison, partly in prison: as namely among certain other, there remain in my hands certain notes answering to the two notable Sermons of Doctor Watson, Bishop of Lincoln, &c.

Here beginneth the life, acts, and doings of Master Hugh Latimer, the famous Preacher and worthy Martyr of Christ and his Gospel.

The story of M. Hugh Latimer, Martyr.

NOw consequently after the life of Bishop Ridley, with other his Letters, which partly we have expressed, and partly we have deferred to our latter appendix, followeth likewise the life and doings of the worthy Champion, and old practised Souldier of Christ; Master Hugh Latimer: of whose acts and long travels even from his first years and tender age, to begin here to entreat: first, he was the Son of one Hugh Latimer, of Thirkesson in the County of Liecester, a Husbandman of right good estimation; with whom also he was brought up until he was of the age of four years or thereabout. At which time his Parents (having him as then left for their onely son, with six other daughters) seeing his ready, prompt, and sharp wit, purposed to train him up in erudition; and knowledge of good literature; wherein he so profited in his youth, at the common Schools of his own Country, that at the age of 14. years, he was sent to the Universitie of Cambridge. Where, after some continuance of exercises in other things, he gave himself to the study of such School Divinity, as the ignorance of that age did suffer.

M. Latimer first set to School.

M. Latimer sent to Cambridge.

Zealous he was then in the Popish Religion, and therewith so scrupulous, as himself confessed, that being a Priest, and using to say Mass, he was so servil an observer of the Romish Decrees, that he thought he had never sufficiently mingled his massing wine with water: and moreover that he should never be damned, if he were once a professed Frier, with divers such superstitious fantasies. And in this blinde zeal he was a very enemy to the Professors of Christs Gospel; as both his Oration made, when he proceeded Bachelor of Divinity, against Philip Melanchthon, and also his other works did plainly declare. But especially his Popish zeal could in no case abide in those days good Master Stafford, Reader of the Divinity Lectures in Cambridge, most spitefully railing against him, and willing the youth of Cambridge in no wise to believe him.

M. Latimer a long time was a zealous and superstitious Papist.

M. Latimer declaimed in Cambridge against Melanchthon.

Notwithstanding, such was the goodness and merciful purpose of God, that when he saw his good time, by the which way he thought to have utterly defaced the professors of the Gospel, and true Church of Christ, he was at length himself by a member of the same pretily caught in the blessed net of Gods Word. For M. Thomas Bilney (whose story is before described) being at that time a trier out of Satans subtilties, and a secret overthower of Antichrists Kingdom, seeing Master Latimer to have a zeal in his ways (although without knowledge) was stricken with a brotherly pity towards him, and bethought by what means he might best win this zealous ignorant Brother, to the true knowledge of Christ. Wherefore, after a short time, he came to Master Latimers study, and desired him to hear him make his confession. Which thing he willingly granted; by hearing whereof, he was (through the good Spirit of God) so touched, that hereupon he forsook his former studying of the School Doctors, and other such fopperies, and became an earnest student of true Divinity, as he himself, as well in his conference with Master Ridley, as also in his first Sermon made upon the Pater noster, doth confess. So that whereas before he was an enemy, and almost a persecutor of Christ, he was now a zealous seeker after him, changing his old manner of cavilling and railing, into a diligent kinde of conferring, both with Master Bilney and others, and came also to Master Stafford before he dyed, and desired him to forgive him.

Latimer converted by M. Bilney.

Read M. Latimers own confession in his first Sermon upon the Pater noster.

M. Latimer a Papist, turned to a zealous Christian.

After this, his winning to Christ, he was not satisfied with his own conversion onely, but like a true Disciple of the blessed Samaritane, pitied the misery of other, and therefore became both a Publick Preacher, and also a private instructer to the rest of his Brethren within the University, by the space of three years, spending his time partly in the Latin tongue among the learned, and partly amongst the simple People in his natural and vulgar language. Howbeit, as Satan never sleepeth when he seeth his Kingdom to begin to decay, so likewise now, seeing that this worthy member of Christ would be a shrewd Enemies ſtirred in Cambridge againſt Mr. Latimer.

Amonſt theſe there was an Auguſtine Frier who took occaſion upon certain Sermons that Mr. Latimer made about Chriſtmas 1529. as well in the Church of St. Edward, as alſo in St. Auguſtines, within the Univerſity of Cambridge to envy againſt him, for that Mr. Latimer in the ſaid Sermons (alluding to the common uſage of the ſeaſon) gave the People certain Cards out of the 5, 6, 7. Chapters of S. Matthew, whereupon they might, not only then, but always elſe, occupy their time. For the chief triumph in the Cards he limited the Heart, as the principal thing that they ſhould ſerve God withal, whereby he quite overthrew all hypocritical and external Ceremonies, not tending to the neceſſary furtherance of Gods holy Word and Sacraments. For the better attaining hereof, he wiſhed the Scriptures to be in Engliſh, whereby the Common People might the better learn their duties, as well to God as their neighbours.

Mr. Latimers preaching of the Cards in Cambridge

The handling of this matter was ſo apt for the time, and ſo pleaſantly applied of him, that not only it declared a ſingular towardneſs of wit in the Preacher, but alſo wrought in the hearers much fruit, to the overthrow of Popiſh ſuperſtition, and ſetting up of perfect Religion.

This was upon the Sunday before Chriſtmas day; on which day coming to the Church, and cauſing the bell to be tolled to a Sermon, he entered into the Pulpit, taking for his text the words of the Goſpel aforeſaid, read in the Church that day; Tu quis es? &c. In delivering the which Cards (as is aboveſaid) he made the Heart to be triumph, exhorting and inviting all men thereby to ſerve the Lord with inward Heart and true affection, and not with outward Ceremonies: adding moreover to the praiſe of that triumph, that though it were never ſo ſmall, yet it would take up the beſt Coat Card beſide in the bunch, yea, though it were the King of Clubs, &c. meaning thereby how the Lord would be worſhipped and ſerved in ſimplicity of Heart and verity, wherein conſiſteth true Chriſtian Religion, and not in the outward deeds of the letter only, or in the gliſtering ſhew of mans Traditions, or Pardons, Pilgrimages, Ceremonies, Vows, Devotions, voluntary Works, and works of Supererogation, Foundations, Oblations, the Popes Supremacy, &c. ſo that all theſe either were needleſs, where the other is preſent; or elſe were of ſmall eſtimation, in compariſon of the other.

The difference between true and falſe.

The tenor and effect of theſe his Sermons, ſo far as they could come to our hands, here follow.

The tenor and effect of certain Sermons made by Maſter Latimer in Cambridge, about the Year of our Lord, 1529.

TU quis es? Which words are as much to ſay in Engliſh, Who art thou? Theſe be the words of the Phariſees, which were ſent by the Jews unto St. John Baptiſt in the Wilderneſs, to have knowledge of him, who he was; which words they ſpake unto him of an evil intent, thinking that he would have taken on him to be Chriſt, and ſo they would have had him done with their good wills, becauſe they knew that he was more carnal, and given to their Laws, than Chriſt indeed ſhould be, as they perceived by their old Propheſies: and alſo, becauſe they marvelled much of his great Doctrine, Preaching and Baptizing, they were in doubt whether he was Chriſt or not: wherefore they ſaid unto him, Who art thou? Then anſwered S. John, and confeſſed that he was not Chriſt. Now here is to be noted, the great and prudent anſwer of S. John Baptiſt unto the Phariſees, that when they required of him who he was, he would not directly anſwer of himſelf, what he was himſelf; but he ſaid he was not Chriſt, by the which ſaying he thought to put the Jews and Phariſees out of their falſe opinion, and belief towards him, in that they would have had him to exerciſe the office of Chriſt, and ſo declared further unto them of Chriſt, ſaying, He is in the midſt of you, and amongſt you, whom ye know not, whoſe latchet of his ſhoo I am not worthy to unlooſe, or undo. By this you may perceive that St. John ſpake much in the laud and praiſe of Chriſt his Maſter, profeſſing himſelf to be in no wiſe like unto him. So likewiſe it ſhall be neceſſary unto all men and women of this world, not to aſcribe unto themſelves any goodneſs of themſelves, but all unto our Lord God, as ſhall appear hereafter, when this queſtion aforeſaid (Who art thou?) ſhall be moved unto them: not as the Phariſees did unto S. John, of an evil purpoſe, but of a good and ſimple mind, as may appear hereafter.

Now then, according to the Preachers mind, let every Man and Woman, of a good and ſimple mind, contrary to the Phariſees intent, ask this queſtion (Who art thou?) This queſtion muſt be moved to themſelves, what they be of themſelves, on this faſhion, What art thou of thy only and natural generation between Father and Mother, when thou cameſt into the world? What ſubſtance, what vertue, what goodneſs art thou of by thy ſelf? Which queſtion if thou rehearſe oftentimes unto thy ſelf, thou ſhalt well perceive and underſtand, how thou ſhalt make anſwer unto it: which muſt be made on this wiſe; I am of my ſelf, and by my ſelf, coming from my natural Father and Mother, the Child of the ire and indignation of God, the true Inheritor of Hell, a lump of ſin, and working nothing of my ſelf, but all towards Hell, except I have better help of another, than I have of my ſelf. Now we may ſee in what ſtate we enter into this world, that we be of our ſelves the true and juſt inheritors of Hell, the Children of the ire and indignation of Chriſt, working all towards Hell, whereby we deſerve of our ſelves perpetual damnation, by the right judgment of God, and the true claim of our ſelves: which unthrifty ſtate that we be born unto is come unto us for our own deſerts, as proveth well this example following.

Let it be admitted for the probation of this, that it might pleaſe the Kings Grace now being, to accept into his favour a mean man, of ſimple degree and birth, not born to any poſſeſſion; whom the Kings grace favoureth, not becauſe this perſon hath of himſelf deſerved any ſuch favour, but that the King caſteth his favour unto him of his own meer motion and fantaſie: and becauſe the Kings Grace will more declare his favour unto him, he giveth unto this ſaid man a thouſand pounds in Lands, to him and his heirs, on this condition, that he ſhall take upon him to be the chief Captain and Defender of his Town of Calice, and to be true and faithful to him in the cuſtody of the ſame, againſt the French-men eſpecially, above all other enemies.

This man taketh on him this charge, promiſing his fidelity thereunto; It chanceth in proceſs of time, that by the ſingular acquaintance and frequent familiarity of this Captain with the French-men, theſe French-men give unto the ſaid Captain of Calice a great ſum of money, ſo that he will be but content and agreeable, that they may enter into the ſaid Town of Calice by force of arms, and ſo thereby poſſeſs the ſame unto the Crown of France: upon this agreement the French-men do invade the ſaid Town of Calice, alonely by the negligence of this Captain.

Now the Kings Grace hearing of this Invaſion, cometh with a great puiſſance to defend this his ſaid Town, and ſo by good policy of war overcometh the ſaid French-men, and entreth again into his Town of Calice. Then he being deſirous to know how theſe Enemies of his came thither, he maketh profound ſearch and inquiry, by whom this Treaſon was conſpired; by this ſearch it was known and found his own Captain to be the very author and the beginner of the betraying of it. The King, ſeeing the great infidelity of this Perſon, diſchargeth this man of his office, and taketh from him and his heirs this thouſand pounds poſſeſſions. Think you not that the King doth uſe juſtice unto him, and all his poſterity and heirs? Yes truly: the ſaid Captain cannot deny himſelf, but that he had true juſtice, conſidering how unfaithfully he behaved himſelf to his Prince, contrary to his own fidelity and promiſe: So likewiſe it was of our firſt Father Adam. He had given unto him the ſpirit and ſcience of knowledge, to work all goodneſs therewith; this ſaid ſpirit was not given alonely unto him, but unto all his heirs and poſterity. He had alſo delivered him the Town of Calice, that is to ſay, Paradiſe in earth, the moſt ſtrong and faireſt Town in the world, to be in his cuſtody: He nevertheleſs by the inſtigation of theſe French-men, i.e. the temptation of the Fiend, did obey unto their deſire,

and

Anno 1555.

and ſo he brake his promiſe and fidelity, the commandment of the everlaſting King his Maſter, in eating of the Apple by him inhibited.

Now then, the King ſeeing this great treaſon in his Captain, depoſed him of the thouſand pounds of poſſeſſions, that is to ſay, from everlaſting life in glory, and all his heirs and poſterity: for likewiſe as he had the ſpirit of ſcience and knowledge, for him and his heirs; ſo in like manner when he loſt the ſame, his heirs alſo loſt it by him, and in him. So now, this example proveth, that by our Father Adam we had once in him the very inheritance of everlaſting joy; and by him, and in him again we loſt the ſame.

The Heirs of the Captain of Calice, could not by any manner of claim ask of the King the right and title of their Father, in the thouſand pounds poſſeſſions, by reaſon the King might anſwer, and ſay unto them, that although their Father deſerved not of himſelf to enjoy ſo great poſſeſſions, yet he deſerved by himſelf to loſe them, and greater, committing ſo high treaſon, as he did, againſt his Princes commandments; whereby he had no wrong to loſe his title, but was unworthy to have the ſame, and had therein true juſtice; let not you think which be his heirs, that if he had juſtice to loſe his poſſeſſions, you have wrong to loſe the ſame: In the ſame manner it may be anſwered unto all men and women now being, that if our Father Adam had true juſtice to be excluded from his poſſeſſion of everlaſting glory in Paradiſe, let us not think the contrary that be his heirs, but that we have no wrong in loſing alſo the ſame; yea, we have true juſtice and right. Then in what miſerable eſtate we be, that of the right and juſt title of our own deſerts have loſt the everlaſting joy and claim of our ſelves to be true inheritors of Hell? For he that committeth deadly ſin willingly, bindeth himſelf to be an inheritor of everlaſting pain: and ſo did our Fore-father Adam willingly eat of the Apple forbidden. Wherefore he was caſt out of the everlaſting joy in Paradiſe, into this corrupt world amongſt all vileneſs, whereby of himſelf he was not worthy to do any thing laudable or pleaſant to God, evermore bound to corrupt affections and beaſtly appetites, transformed into the uncleaneſt and variableſt nature that was made under heaven, of whoſe ſeed and diſpoſition all the world is lineally deſcended, inſomuch that this evil Nature is ſo diffuſed and ſhed from one into another, that at this day there is no man nor woman living, that can of themſelves waſh away this abominable vileneſs: and ſo we muſt needs grant of our ſelves to be in like diſpleaſure unto God, as our Father Adam was; by reaſon hereof, as I ſaid, we be of our ſelves the very Children of the indignation and vengeance of God, the true inheritors of Hell, and working all towards Hell, which is the anſwer to this queſtion, made to every man and woman by themſelves, Who art thou?

And now the world ſtanding in this damnable ſtate, cometh in the occaſion of the Incarnation of Chriſt; the Father in Heaven perceiving the frail nature of man, that he by himſelf and of himſelf could do nothing for himſelf, by his prudent wiſdom ſent down the ſecond perſon in Trinity, his Son Jeſus Chriſt, to declare unto man his pleaſure and commandment: and ſo at the Fathers will Chriſt took on him humane Nature, being willing to deliver man out of this miſerable way, and was content to ſuffer cruel paſſion in ſhedding his blood for all mankind, and ſo left behind for our ſafeguard, Laws and Ordinances, to keep us always in the right path unto everlaſting life, as the Evangelies, the Sacraments, the Commandments, and ſo forth: which if we do keep and obſerve according to our profeſſion, we ſhall anſwer better unto this queſtion, (Who art thou?) than we did before: for before thou didſt enter into the Sacrament of Baptiſm, thou wert but a natural Man, a natural Woman; as I might ſay, A man, a woman. But after thou takeſt on thee Chriſts Religion, thou haſt a longer name: for then thou art a Chriſtian man, a Chriſtian woman. Now then, ſeeing thou art a Chriſtian man, what ſhall be the anſwer of this queſtion, Who art thou?

The anſwer of this Queſtion is, when I ask it unto my ſelf, I muſt ſay that I am a Chriſtian man, a Chriſtian woman, the Child of everlaſting Joy, through the merits of the bitter Paſſion of Chriſt. This is a joyful anſwer. Here we may ſee how much we be bound, and in danger unto God, that hath revived us from death to life, and ſaved us that were damned: which great benefit we cannot well conſider, unleſs we do remember what we were of our ſelves before we medled with him or his Laws: and the more we know our feeble nature, and ſet leſs by it, the more we ſhall conceive and know in our hearts what God hath done for us: and the more we know what God hath done for us, the leſs we ſhall ſet by our ſelves; and the more we ſhall love and pleaſe God; ſo that in no condition we ſhall either know our ſelves or God, except we do utterly confeſs our ſelves to be meer vileneſs and corruption. Well, now it is come unto this point, that we be Chriſtian men, Chriſtian women; I pray you what doth Chriſt require of a Chriſtian man, or of a Chriſtian woman? Chriſt requireth nothing elſe of a Chriſtian man or woman, but that they will obſerve his Rule. For likewiſe as he is a good Auguſtine Frier that keepeth well St. Auguſtine's rule, ſo is he a good Chriſtian man that keepeth well Chriſts Rule.

Now then; what is Chriſts Rule? Chriſts Rule conſiſteth in many things, as in the Commandments, and the works of Mercy, and ſo forth. And becauſe I cannot declare Chriſts Rule unto you at one time, as it ought to be done, I will apply my ſelf according to your cuſtom at this time of Chriſtmaſs, I will, as I ſaid, declare unto you Chriſts Rule, but that ſhall be in Chriſts Cards. And where you are wont to celebrate Chriſtmaſs in playing at Cards, I intend by Gods grace to deal unto you Chriſts Cards, wherein you ſhall perceive Chriſts Rule. The game that we will play at ſhall be called the Triumph, which if it be well played at, he that dealeth ſhall win; the Players ſhall likewiſe win; and the ſtanders and lookers upon ſhall do the ſame; inſomuch that there is no man that is willing to play at this Triumph with theſe Cards; but they ſhall be all winners, and no loſers.

Let therefore every Chriſtian man and woman play at theſe Cards, that they may have and obtain the Triumph; you muſt mark alſo that the Triumph muſt apply to fetch home unto him all the other Cards, whatſoever ſuit they be of. Now then take ye this firſt Card, which muſt appear and be ſhewed unto you as followeth. You have heard what was ſpoken to men of the old Law, Thou ſhalt not kill; whoſoever ſhall kill ſhall be in danger of Judgment. But I ſay unto you of the new Law, ſaith Chriſt, that whoſoever is angry with his neighbour, ſhall be in danger of Judgment, and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour, Racha, that is to ſay, Brainleſs, or any other like word of rebuking, ſhall be in danger of a Council; and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour, Fool, ſhall be in danger of Hell-fire. This Card was made and ſpoken by Chriſt, as appeareth in the 5th Chap. of St. Matthew.

Now it muſt be noted, that whoſoever ſhall play with this Card, muſt firſt before they play with it, know the ſtrength and virtue of the ſame; wherefore you muſt well note and mark terms how they be ſpoken, and to what purpoſe: Let us therefore read it once or twice, that we may be the better acquainted with it.

Now behold and ſee, this Card is divided into four parts: The firſt part is one of the Commandments that was given unto Moſes in the old Law, before the coming of Chriſt, which Commandment we of the new Law be bound to obſerve and keep, and it is one of our Commandments. The other three parts ſpoken by Chriſt, be nothing elſe but expoſitions unto the firſt part of this Commandment: for in very effect of all theſe four parts be but one Commandment, that is to ſay, Thou ſhalt not kill: yet nevertheleſs, the three laſt parts do ſhew unto thee how many ways thou maiſt kill thy neighbour contrary to this Commandment: yet for all Chriſts expoſition, in the three laſt parts of this Card, the terms be not open enough to thee that doſt read and hear them ſpoken. No doubt, the Jews underſtood Chriſt well enough when he ſpake to them theſe three laſt ſentences, for he ſpake unto them in their own natural terms and tongue: wherefore ſeeing that theſe terms were natural terms of the Jews, it ſhall be neceſſary to expound them, and compare them unto ſome like terms of our natural ſpeech, that we in like manner may underſtand Chriſt as well as the Jews did. We will begin firſt with the firſt part of this Card, and then after with the other three parts: you muſt therefore underſtand that the Jews and the Phariſees of the old Law, to whom this firſt part, this commandment, Thou ſhalt not kill, was ſpoken, thought it ſufficient and enough for their diſcharge not to kill with any manner of material weapon, as Sword, Dagger, or with any ſuch weapon, and they thought it no great fault whatſoever they ſaid or did by their neighbour, ſo that they did not harm or meddle with their corporal bodies, which was a falſe Opinion in them, as prove well the three laſt other Sentences following the firſt part of this Card,

Now as touching the three other Sentences, you muſt note and take heed what difference is between theſe three manner of offences, To be angry with your neighbour, To call your neighbour brainleſs, or any ſuch word of diſdain, Or to call your neighbour Fool: whether theſe three manner of offences be of themſelves more grievous one than the other, it is to be opened unto you. Truly, as they be of themſelves divers offences, ſo they kill diverſly one more than the other, as you ſhall perceive by the firſt of theſe three, and ſo forth: A man which conceiveth againſt his neighbour or Brother, ire, or wrath in his mind, by ſome manner of occaſion given unto him, although he be angry in his mind againſt his ſaid neighbour, he will peradventure expreſs his ire by no manner of ſign, either in word or deed; yet nevertheleſs he offendeth againſt God, and breaketh this Commandment in killing his own Soul; and is therefore in danger of judgment.

Now to the ſecond part of theſe three; That man that is moved with ire againſt his neighbour, and in his ire calleth his neighbour brainleſs, or ſome other like word of diſpleaſure, as a man might ſay in a fury I ſhall handle thee well enough, which words and countenances do more repreſent and declare ire to be in this man, than in him that was but angry, and ſpake no manner of word nor ſhewed any countenance to declare his ire: wherefore as he that ſo declareth his ire either by word or countenance, offendeth more againſt God, ſo he both killeth his own Soul, and doth that in him is to kill his neighbours Soul in moving him unto ire, wherein he is faulty himſelf, and ſo this man is in danger of a Councel.

Now to the third offence, and laſt of theſe three; That man that calleth his neighbour Fool, doth more declare his angry mind toward him, than he that called his neighbour brainleſs, or any ſuch words moving ire: but for to call a man Fool, that word repreſenteth more envy in a man, than brainleſs doth. Wherefore he doth moſt offend, becauſe he doth moſt earneſtly with ſuch words expreſs his ire, and ſo he is in danger of Hell-fire: wherefore you may underſtand now theſe three parts of this Card to be three offences, and that one is more grievous to God than the other, and that one killeth more the Soul of man than the other.

Now peradventure there be ſome that will marvel that Chriſt did not declare this commandment by ſome greater faults of ire, than by theſe which ſeem but ſmall faults, as to be angry and ſpeak nothing of it, to declare it and to call a man brainleſs, and to call his neighbour Fool; truly theſe be the ſmalleſt, and the leaſt faults that belong to ire, or to killing in ire. Therefore beware how you offend in any kind of ire: ſeeing that the ſmalleſt be damnable to offend in, ſee that you offend not in the greateſt. For Chriſt thought, if he might bring you from the ſmalleſt manner of faults, and give you warning to avoid the leaſt, he reckoned you would not offend in the greateſt and worſt, as to call your neighbour thief, Whoreſon, Whore, Drab, and ſo forth, into more blaſphemous names, which offences muſt needs have puniſhment in Hell, conſidering how that Chriſt hath appointed theſe three ſmall faults, to have three degrees of puniſhment in Hell, as appeareth by theſe three terms, Judgment, Council, and Hell-fire; theſe three terms do ſignifie nothing elſe but three divers puniſhments in Hell, according to the offences: Judgment is leſs in degree than Council, therefore it ſignifieth a leſſer pain in Hell, and it is ordained for him that is angry in his mind with his neighbour, and doth expreſs his malice neither by word, nor countenance: Council is a leſs degree in Hell, than Hell-fire, and is a greater degree in hell than judgment; and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour brainleſs, or any ſuch word, that declareth his ire and malice: wherefore it is more pain than Judgment. Hell-fire is more pain in Hell, than Council or Judgment, and it is ordained for him that calleth his neighbour Fool, by reaſon that in calling his neighbour Fool, he declareth more his malice, in that it is an earneſt word of ire. Wherfore Hell-fire is appointed for it, that is, the moſt pain of the three puniſhments. Anno 1555.

Now you have heard that to theſe divers offences of ire and killing, be appointed puniſhments according to their degrees: for look as the offence is, ſo ſhall the pain be: if the offence be great the pain ſhall be according: if it be leſs, there ſhall be leſs pain for it. I would not now that you ſhould think becauſe that here are but three degrees of puniſhment ſpoken of, that there be no more in Hell: no doubt Chriſt ſpake of no more here but of theſe three degrees of puniſhment, thinking they were ſufficient enow for example, whereby we might underſtand, that there be as divers and many pains as there be offences: and ſo by theſe three offences, and theſe three puniſhments, all other offences and puniſhments may be compared with each other: yet I would ſatisfie your minds further in theſe three terms, of Judgment, Council, and Hell-fire. Where you might ſay, what was the cauſe that Chriſt declared more the pains of Hell by theſe terms, than by any other terms? I told you afore that he knew well to whom he ſpake them; theſe terms were natural and known well amongſt the Jews and the Phariſees. Wherefore Chriſt taught them with their own terms, to the intent they might underſtand the better his Doctrine: and theſe terms may be likened unto three terms which we have common and uſual amongſt us, that is to ſay, the Seſſions of enquirance, the Seſſions of deliverance, and the Execution day: Seſſions of enquirance is like unto Judgment: for when Seſſions of enquiry is, then the Judges cauſe Twelve men to give verdict of the Felons crime, whereby he ſhall be judged to be endited: Seſſions of deliverance, is much like Council: for at Seſſions of deliverance, the Judges go among themſelves to Council, to determine ſentence againſt the Felon. Excution day is to be compared unto Hell-fire: for the Jews had amongſt themſelves a place of Execution, named Hell-fire: and ſurely when a man goeth to his death it is the greateſt pain in this world: wherefore you may ſee that there are degrees in theſe our terms, as there be in thoſe terms. Theſe evil diſpoſed affections and ſenſualities in us are always contrary to the rule of our ſalvation. What ſhall we do now or imagine to thruſt down theſe Turks, and to ſubdue them? It is a great ignominy and ſhame for a Chriſtian man to be bond and ſubject unto a Turk: Nay, it ſhall not be ſo, we will firſt caſt a Trump in their way, and play with them at Cards who ſhall have the better, let us play therefore on this faſhion with this Card. Whenſoever it ſhall happen theſe foul paſſions and Turks to riſe in our ſtomachs againſt our Brother, or neighbour, either for unkind words, injuries, or wrongs, which they have done unto us, contrary unto our mind, ſtraightways let us call unto our remembrance, and ſpeak this queſtion unto our ſelves, Who art thou? The anſwer is, I am a Chriſtian man. Then further we muſt ſay to our ſelves, What requireth Chriſt of a Chriſtian man? Now turn up your Trump, your Heart (Hearts is Trump as I ſaid before) and caſt your Trump, your Heart, on this Card, and upon this Card you ſhall learn what Chriſt requireth of a Chriſtian man, not to be angry, ne moved to ire againſt his Neighbour, in mind, countenance, nor other ways, by word or deed. Then take up this Card with your Heart, and lay them together; that done, you have won the game of the Turk, whereby you have defaced and overcome by true and lawful play: but alas for pity, the Rhodes are won and overcome by theſe falſe Turks, the ſtrong Caſtle Faith is decayed, ſo that I fear it is almoſt impoſſible to win it again.

Harts Trump.

The great occaſion of the loſs of this Rhodes is by reaſon that Chriſtian men do ſo daily kill their own Nation, that the very true number of Chriſtianity is decayed: which murther and killing one of another, is increaſed ſpecially two ways, to the utter undoing of Chriſtendom, that is to ſay, by example and ſilence. By example as thus: When the Father, the Mother, the Lord, the Lady, the Maſter, the Dame, be themſelves overcome

Two manner of killings.

Anno 1555.

come with these Turks, they be continual swearers, adulterers, disposers to malice, never in patience, and so forth in all other vices: Think you not when the Father, the Mother, the Master, the Dame, be disposed unto vice or impatience, but that their Children and Servants shall encline and be disposed to the same? No doubt, as the Child shall take disposition natural of his Father and Mother, so shall the Servants apply unto the vices of their Masters and Dames; if the Heads be false in their faculties and crafts, it is no marvel if the Children, Servants, and Apprentices do joy therein. This is a great and shameful manner of killing Christian men, that the Fathers, the Mothers, the Masters, and the Dames, shall not alonely kill themselves, but all theirs, and all that belongeth unto them, and so this way is a great number of Christian linage murthered and spoyled. The second manner of killing is silence. By silence also is a great number of Christian men slain; which is on this fashion: although that the Father and Mother, Master and Dame of themselves be well disposed to live according to the Law of God, yet they may kill their Children and Servants in suffering them to do evil before their own faces, and do not use due correction according unto their offences; the Master seeth his Servant or apprentice take more of his neighbour than the Kings Laws, or the order of his faculty doth admit him, or he suffered him to take more of his neighbour than he himself would be content to pay if he were in like condition: thus doing, I say, such men kill willingly their Children and Servants, and shall go to Hell for so doing; but also their Fathers and Mothers, Masters and Dames, shall bear them company for so suffering. Wherefore I exhort all true Christian men and woman to give good example unto your Children and Servants, and suffer not them by silence to offend: every man must be in his own house, according uo St. Augustines mind, a Bishop, not alonely giving good ensample, but teach according to it, rebuke and punish vice, not suffering your Children and Servants to forget the Laws of God: you ought to see them have their belief, to know the commandments of God, to keep their holy-days, not to lose their time in idleness; if they do so, you shall all suffer pain for it, if God be true of his saying, as there is no doubt thereof: and so you may perceive that there be many one that break this Card, Thou shalt not kill, and playeth therewith, oftentime, at the blind Trump, whereby they be no winners, but great losers, but who be those now a days that can clear themselves of these manifest murders used to their Children and Servants? I think not the contrary, but that many have these two ways slain their own Children unto their damnation, were not the great mercy of God ready to help them when they repent therefore.

Wherefore considering that we be so prone and ready to continue in sin, let us cast down our selves with Mary Magdalen, and the more we bow down with her toward Christs feet, the more we shall be afraid to rise again in sin, and the more we know and submit our selves, the more we shall be forgiven, and the less we know and submit our selves, the less we shall be forgiven, as appeareth by this example following.

Christ when he was in the world amongst the Jews and Pharisees, there was a great Pharisee whose name was Simon; this Pharisee desired Christ on a time to dine with him, thinking in himself that he was able and worthy to give Christ a dinner: Christ refused not his dinner, but came unto him. In time of their dinner it chanced there came into the house a great and a common sinner named Mary Magdalen. As soon as she perceived Christ, she cast herself down, and called unto her remembrance what she was of her self, and how greatly she had offended God, whereby she conceived in Christ great love, and so came near unto him, and washed his feet with bitter tears, and shed upon his head precious oyntment, thinking that by him she should be delivered from her sins; this great and proud Pharisee seeing that Christ did accept her oblation in the best part, had great indignation against this woman, and said to himself, if this man Christ were a holy Prophet, as he is taken for, he would not suffer this sinner to come so nigh him. Christ understanding the naughty mind of this Pharisee said to him; Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee: Say what you please (quoth the Pharisee.) Then said Christ, I pray thee tell me this: If there be a man to whom is owing twenty pound by one, and forty by another, this man to whom this mony is owing, perceiveth these two men be not able to pay him, he forgiveth them both. Which of these two debtors ought to love this man most? The Pharisee said, That man ought to love him best that had most forgiven him: Likewise said Christ, it is by this woman. She hath loved me most, therefore most is forgiven her, she hath known her sins most, whereby she hath most loved me? and thou hast least loved me, because thou hast least known thy sins, therefore because thou hast least known thine offences, thou art least forgiven. So this proud Pharisee had an answer to allay his pride: and think you not, but that there be amongst us a great number of these proud Pharisees, which think themselves worthy to bid Christ to dinner, which will perk and presume to sit by Christ in the Church, and have disdain of this poor Woman Magdalen, their poor Neighbour, with an high disdainous and solemn countenance, and being always desirous to climb highest in the Church, reckoning their selves more worthy to sit there than another, I fear me poor Magdalen under the Boord, and in the Belfrey, hath more forgiven of Christ than they have: for it is like that these Pharisees do less know themselves and their offences, whereby they less love God, and so they be less forgiven.

I would to God we would follow this example, and be like unto Magdalen. I doubt not but we be all Magdalens in falling into sin, and in offending: but we be not again Magdalens in knowing our selves, and in rising from sin. If we be the true Magdalens, we should be as willing to forsake our sin, and rise from sin, as we were willing to commit sin, and to continue in it, and we then should know our selves best, and make more perfect answer than ever we did, unto this question, Who art thou? To the which we might answer; that we be true Christian men and women: and then I say you should understand, and know how you ought to play at this Card, Thou shalt not kill; without any interruption of your deadly enemies the Turks, and so triumph at the last, by winning everlasting life in glory, Amen.

It would ask a long discourse to declare what a stir there was in Cambridge, upon this preaching of M. Latimer. Belike Satan began to feel himself and his kingdom to be touched too near, and therefore thought it time to look about him, and to make out his men of arms.

First came out the Prior of the Black Friers called Buckneham, otherwise surnamed Domine labia, who thinking to make a great hand against Mr. Latimer, about the same time of Christmas, when Mr. Latimer brought forth his Cards to deface belike the doings of the other, brought out his Christmas Dice, casting there to his audience cinque and quater, meaning by the cinque five places in the new Testament, and the four Doctors by the quater; by which his Cinque quater, he would prove that it was not expedient the Scripture to be in English, lest the ignorant and vulgar sort through the occasion therof, might haply be brought in danger to leave their vocation, or else to run into some inconvenience: as for example.

D. Denyse playeth at Dice with M. Latimer.

The Plowman when he heareth this in the Gospel, No man that layeth his hand on the Plough and looketh back, is meet for the Kingdom of God; might peradventure hearing this, cease from his Plough. Likewise the Baker, when he hears that a little Leaven corrupteth a whole lump of dough, may percase leave our Bread unleavened, and so our bodies shall be unseasoned. Also the simple man, when he heareth in the Gospel, If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee, may make himself blind. and so fill the world full of beggars. These with other more this Clerkly Frier brought out, to the number of five to prove his purpose.

Note these great reasons of the Catholicks, why the Scriptures should not come in English.

Mr. Latimer hearing this Frierly Sermon of Dr. Buckneham, cometh again the afternoon, or shortly after to the Church, to answer the Frier, where resorted to him a great multitude, as well of the University as of the Town, both Doctors and other Graduates, with great expectation to hear what he could say: among whom also, directly in the face of Latimer underneath the Pulpit, sate ſate Buckneham the foreſaid Frier, Prior of the Black-Friers, with his Black Friers coul about his Shoulders.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to D. Buckneams Sermon.

Then Maſter Latimer firſt repeating the Frierly reaſons of Doctor Buckneham, whereby he would prove it a dangerous thing for the vulgar People to have the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, ſo refuted the Frier, ſo anſwered to his objections, ſo dallied with his bald reaſon of the Ploughman looking back, and of the Baker leaving his Bread unleavened, that the vanity of the Frier might to all men appear, well proving and declaring to the People, how there was no ſuch fear nor danger for the Scriptures to be in Engliſh, as the Frier pretended; at leaſt requiring this, that the Scripture might be ſo long in the Engliſh tongue, till Engliſhmen were ſo mad, that either the Ploughman durſt not look back, or the Baker ſhould leave his bread unleavened. And proceeding moreover in his Sermon, he began to diſcourſe of the myſtical ſpeeches, and figurative phraſes of the Scripture: which phraſes he ſaid were not ſo diffuſe and difficult, as they were common in the Scripture, and in the Hebrew tongue are commonly uſed and unknown: and not onely in the Hebrew tongue, but alſo every ſpeech (ſaith he) hath his like metaphors and figurative ſignifications, ſo common and vulgar to all men, that the very Painters do paint them on walls, and on houſes.

As for example (ſaith he, looking toward the Frier that ſate over againſt him) when they paint a Fox preaching out of a Friers coul, none is ſo mad to take this to be a Fox that preacheth, but know well enough the meaning of the matter, which is to paint out unto us, what hypocriſie, crafts, and ſubtile diſſimulation lieth hid many times in theſe Friers couls, willing us thereby to beware of them. In fine, Frier Buckneham with this Sermon was ſo daſhed, that never after he durſt peep out of the pulpit againſt M. Latimer.

Another barking Frier againſt Mr. Latimer.

Beſides this Buckneham, there was alſo another railing Frier, not of the ſame coat, but of the ſame note and faction, a gray Frier and a Doctor, an Outlandiſhman called Doctor Venetus, who likewiſe in his brawling Sermons railed and raged againſt Maſter Latimer, calling him a mad and brainleſs man, and willing the People not to believe him, &c. To whom Maſter Latimer anſwering again, taketh for his ground the words of our Saviour Chriſt, Matthew 5. Thou ſhall not kill, &c. But I ſay unto you, whoſoever is angry with his neighbour ſhall be in danger of judgement; and whoſoever ſhall ſay unto his neighbour, Racha (or any other like words of rebuking, as brainleſs) ſhall be in danger of Council: And whoſoever ſhall ſay to his neighbour, Fool, ſhall be in danger of hell fire.

Matth. 5.

Anſwer of M. Latimr to another railing Frier

In diſcuſſing of which place, firſt he divideth the offence of killing into three branches. One to be with hand, the other with heart, the third with word. With hand, when we uſe any weapon drawn, to ſpill the life of our neighbour: With heart, when we be angry with him: With word, when in word or countenance we diſdainfully rebuke our neighbour, or deſpitefully revile him. Words of rebuking are, when we ſpeak any opprobrious or unſeemly thing, whereby the patience of our neighbour is moved, as when we call him mad (ſaid he) or brainleſs, or ſuch like, which are guilty of Council: Words of ſpite, or reviling are, when we call him Fool; which Chriſt ſaith is guilty of hell fire, &c.

Thus M. Latimer in handling and trimming this matter, after that with the weight of Chriſts words, and the explaining of the ſame, he had ſufficiently born the Frier clean down, then he turned to the fifth Chapter of the Book of Wiſedom. Out of the which Chapter he declared to the audience, how the true Servants and preachers of God in this World commonly are ſcorned and reviled of the proud enemies of Gods Word, which account them here as mad men, fools, brainleſs, and drunken: ſo did they (ſaid he) in the Scripture call them which moſt purely preached, and ſet forth the glory of Gods Word. But (ſaid he) what will be the end of theſe jolly fellows, or what will they ſay in the end? Nos inſenſati, nos inſenſati, &c. We mad men, we mad fools, we, we our ſelves, &c. And that will be their end except they repent. And thus ending his Sermon, he ſo confounded the poor Frier, that he drave him not onely out of countenance, but alſo clean out of the Univerſity.

Sap. 5.

Ann. 1555.

But what ſhould I here ſtand deciphering the names of his Adverſaries, when whole ſwarms of Friers and Doctors flockt againſt him on every ſide, almoſt thorow the whole Univerſity, preaching likewiſe and barking againſt him? Amongſt whom was Doctor Watſon, Maſter of Chriſts Colledge, whoſe Scholar Latimer had been afore. Doctor Notaries, Maſter of Clare-hall, Doctor Philo, Maſter of Michael-houſe, Doct. Metcalfe, Maſter of St. Johns, Doctor Blithe of the Kings-Hall, Doctor Bullock, Maſter of the Queens Colledge, Doctor Cliffe of Clement-Houſe, Doctor Donnes of Jeſus Colledge, Doctor Pſalms, M. of St. Nicholas Hoſtel, Bain, Rud, and Greenwood, Bachelor of Divinity, all three of St. Johns Colledge. Alſo Brikenden Bachelor of Divinity of the ſame houſe, and Scholar ſomtimes to the ſaid Latimer. Briefly, almoſt as many as were Heads there of houſes, ſo many impugners did this worthy ſtandard-bearer of Chriſts Goſpel ſuſtain.

D. Weſt Biſh. of Ely forbidding Mr. Latimer to preach.

Then came at laſt Doctor Weſt, Biſhop of Ely, who preaching againſt M. Latimer at Barwel Abbey, forbade him within the Churches of that Univerſity to preach any more. Notwithſtanding, ſo the Lord provided, that Doctor Barnes, Prior of the Auguſtine Friers, did licence Maſter Latimer to preach in his Church of the Auguſtines, and he himſelf preached at the Church by, called Saint Edwards Church, which was the firſt Sermon of the Goſpel, which Doct. Barnes preached, being upon Chriſtmas Even upon a Sunday. Whereupon certain Articles were gathered out of his Sermon, and were commenced againſt him by Maſter Tirell, Fellow of the Kings Hall, and ſo by the Vice-chancellor preſented to the Cardinal, as in his ſtory before hath been declared.

This M. Latimer (as you have heard) being baited by the Friers, Doctors, and Maſters of that Univerſity, about the year aforeſaid, 1529. notwithſtanding the maugre and malice of theſe malignant Adverſaries, continued yet in Cambridge preaching the ſpace of three years together with favour and applauſe of the godly, alſo with ſuch admiration of his enemies that heard him, that the Biſhop himſelf coming in, and hearing his gift wiſhed himſelf to have the like, and was compelled to commend him upon the ſame.

Bilney and Latimer joyned companions.

So M. Latimer, with M. Bilney, after this continued yet in Cambridge a certain ſpace, where he with the ſaid Bilney uſed much to confer and company together, inſomuch that the place where they moſt uſed to walk in the fields, was called long after, the Hereticks hill.

The ſociety of theſe two, as it was much noted of many in that Univerſity, ſo it was full of many good examples, to all ſuch as would follow their doings, both in viſiting the priſoners, in relieving the needy, in feeding the hungry, whereof ſomewhat is before mentioned in the hiſtory of Maſter Bilney, in a place of his Sermons. Maſter Latimer, maketh mention of a certain hiſtory which happened about this time in Cambridge between them two, and a certain woman then priſoner in the Caſtle or Tower of Cambridge, which I thought here not unworthy to be remembred. The hiſtory is this: It ſo chanced, that after Maſter Latimer had bin ſo acquainted with the foreſaid Maſter Bilney, he went with him to viſit the Priſoners in the Tower in Cambridge, and being there, among other priſoners there was a woman which was accuſed that ſhe had killed her own child, which act ſhe plainly and ſtedfaſtly denied. Whereby it gave them occaſion to ſearch for the matter, and at length they found that her husband loved her not, and therefore ſought all means he could to make her away. The mattter was thus:

A ſtory of a certain woman condemned, who was ſaved by M. Latimer.

A child of hers had been ſick a whole year, and at length died in harveſt time, as it were in a conſumption: Which when it was gone, ſhe went to have her neighbours to help her to the burial, but all were in harveſt abroad, whereby ſhe was enforced with heavineſs of heart, alone to prepare the child to the burial. Her husband coming home, and not loving her, accuſed her of murthering the child. This was the cauſe of her trouble, and Mr. Latimer, by earneſt inquiſition, of conſcience thought the woman not guilty. Then immediately after, was he called to preach before King Henry the Eighth at Windſor, where

Anno 1555.

M. Latimer obtained pardon of the King for a woman wrongfully condemned.

where after his Sermon the Kings Majesty sent for him, and talked whith him familiarly. At which time Master Latimer finding opprortunity, kneeled down, opened this whole matter to the King, and begged her pardon, which the King most graciously granted, and gave it him at his return homeward. In the mean time the woman was delivered of a child in the prison, whose Godfather was M. Latimer, Mistress Cheek Godmother. But all the while he would not tell her of the pardon, but laboured to have her confess the truth of the matter. At length the time came when she should look to suffer, and Master Latimer came as he was wont to instruct her: unto whom she made great lamentation and moan, to be purified before her suffering, for she thought to be damned if she should suffer without purification.

Purification of women.

Then Master Bilney being with Master Latimer, both told her that that Law was made to the Jews, and not to us, and that women be as well in the favour of God before they be purified, as after; and rather it was appointed for a civil and politick law, for natural honesty sake, than that they should any thing the more be purified from Sin thereby, &c. So thus they travelled with this woman, till they had brought her to a good trade, and then at length shewed her the Kings pardon, and let her go.

This good act among many other at this time happened in Cambridge by Master Latimer, and Master Bilney. But this was not alone, for many more like matters were wrought by them, if all were known, whereof partly some are touched before, such especially as concern Master Bilney, mention whereof is above expressed. But as it is commonly seen in the naturall course of things, that as the fire beginneth more to kindle, so the more smoke ariseth withal, in much like sort it happened with Master Latimer; whose towardness the more it began to spring, his vertues to be seen, and his doings to be known, the more his Adversaries began to spurn and kick against him. Concerning these Adversaries, and such as did molest him, partly their names be above expressed. Among the rest of this number was Doctor Redman, of whom mention is made before in the raign of King Edward, a man savouring at that time somewhat more of superstition, then of true Religion, after the zeal of the Pharisees, yet not so malignant or harmful, but of a civil and quiet disposition, and also so liberal in well doing, that few poor Scholars were in that University, which fared not better by his purse. This D. Redman being of no little Authoritie in Cambridge, perceiving and understanding the bold enterprise of M. Latimer, in setting abroad the word and Doctrine of the Gospel, at this time, or much about the same, writeth to him, seeking by perswasion to revoke the said Latimer from that kind and manner of teaching; to whom M. Latimer maketh answer again in few words: The sum and effect of both their letters, translated out of Latine, here followeth to be seen.

D. Redman against M. Latimer.

The sum of the Epistle written by D. Redman to M. Latimer.

A letter of D. Redman to M. Latimer.

GRace be with you, and true peace in Christ Jesus. I beseech you heartily, and require most earnestly, even for charities sake, that you will not stand in your own conceit with a mind so indurate, nor prefer your own singular judgement in matters of Religion and controversies before so many learned men, and that more is, before the whole Catholick Church, especially considering that you neither have any thing at all in the word of God to make for you, nor yet the testimony of any authentical Writer. Nay, nay: I beseech you rather consider that you are a man, and that lying and vanity may quickly blear your eye, which doth sometime transform it self into an Angel of light.

Judge not so rashly of us, as that wicked Spirit hath tickled you in the ear. Wit you well that we are careful for you, and that we wish you to be saved, and that we are careful also for your own salvation. Lay down your stomach I pray you, and humble your Spirit, and suffer not the Church to take offence with the hardness of your heart, nor that her unity and Christs coat without seam (as much as lyeth in you) should be torn asunder. Consider what the saying of the wiseman is, and be obedient thereunto: Trust not your own wisedom. The Lord Jesus Christ, &c.

The sum of M. Latimers answer to Doctor Redman.

Answer of M. Latimer to D. Redman.

REverend Master Redman, it is even enough for me, that Christs Sheep hear no mans voice but Christs: and as for you, you have no voice of Christ against me, whereas for my part I have a heart that is ready to harken to any voice of Christ that you can bring me. Thus fare you well, and trouble me no more from the talking with the Lord my God.

M. Latimer called up to the Cardinal.

After M. Latimer had thus travelled in preaching and teaching in the University of Cambridge about the space of three years, at length he was called up to the Cardinal for Heresie, by the procurement of certain of the said University, where he was content to subscribe, and grant to such Articles as then they propounded unto him, &c.

D. Buts a worthy favourer of Gods Word.

After that he returned to the University again, where shortly after by the means of Doctor Buts, the Kings Physitian, a singular good man, and a special favourer of good proceedings, he was in the number of them which laboured in the cause of the Kings supremacy. Then went he to the Court, where he remained a certain time in the said Doctor Buts chamber, preaching then in London verie often. At last being weary of the Court, having a benefice offered by the King, at the sute of the L. Cromwel, and Doctor Buts, was glad thereof, seeking by that means to be rid out of the Court, wherewith in no case he could agree; and so having a grant of the Benefice, contrary to the mind of D. Buts, he would needs depart, and be resident at the same.

This Benefice was in Wiltshire, under the Dioces of Sarum, the name of which Town was called West-Kingston, where this good Preacher did exercise himself with much diligence of teaching to instruct his flock, and not only to them his diligence extended, but also to all the Country about. In fine, his diligence was so great, his Preaching so mighty, the manner of his teaching so zealous, that there in like sort he could not escape without enemies. So true it is that S. Paul foretelleth us, Whosoever will live godly in Christ, shall suffer persecution. It so chanced, that whereas he Preaching upon the blessed Virgin Christs Mother (whom we call our Lady) had thereupon declared his mind, referring and reducing all honor only to Christ our only Saviour, certain Popish Priests, being therewith offended, sought and wrought much trouble against him, drawing out Articles and impositions which they untruly, unjustly, falsly, and uncharitably imputed unto him: First, that he should preach against our Lady, for that he reproved in a sermon the superstitious rudeness of certain blinde Priests, which so held together upon that blessed Virgin, as though she never had any sin, nor were saved by Christ the only Saviour of the whole World.

M. Latimer Benefliced in Wiltshire in Westkingston.

M. Latimer troubled for preaching. Christ only to be our Saviour, and not our Lady.

The superstitious rude ness of blind Priests.

Item, that he should say, that Saints were not to be worshipped.

Item, that Ave Maria was a salutation only, and no prayer.

Item, that there was no material fire in hell.

Item, that there was no Purgatory, in saying, that he had rather be in Purgatory than in Lollards Tower.

Matter devised against M. Latimer by Popish Priests.

Touching the whole discourse of which Articles, with his reply and answer to the same, hereafter shall follow (by the Lords assistance) when we come to his letters.

The chief impugners and molesters of him, besides these Country Priests, were Doct. Powel of Salisbury, D. Wilson sometime of Cambridge, M. Hubberdin, and D. Sherwood. Of whom some preached against him, some also did write against him; insomuch that by their procurement he was cited up and called to appear before W. Warrham Archbishop of Canterbury, and John Stokesly Bishop of London, Anno 1531 Jan. 29. the copie of which citation here followeth.

Mr. Latimer appealed from the Biſhop of London's citation, to his own Ordinary. M. Latimer moleſted by Warham Archb. of Cant. and Tokeſly B. of London.

Againſt this Citation, although Mr. Latimer did appeal to his own Ordinary, requiring by him to be ordered, yet all that notwithſtanding, he was had up to London before Warham the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London, where he was greatly moleſted, and detained a long ſpace from his Cure at home. There he being called thrice every week before the ſaid Biſhops, to make anſwer for his Preaching, had certain Articles or Propoſitions drawn out and laid to him, whereunto they required him to ſubſcribe. At length he not only perceiving their practical proceedings, but alſo much grieved with their troubleſom unquietneſs, which neither would preach themſelves, nor yet ſuffer him to preach and do his duty, writeth to the foreſaid Archbiſhop, partly excuſing his Infirmity, whereby he could not appear at their commandment, partly expoſtulating with them for ſo troubling and detaining him from his duty doing, and that for no juſt cauſe, but only for preaching the truth againſt certain vain abuſes crept into Religion, much needful to be ſpoken againſt. Which all may appear by his Epiſtle ſent to a certain Biſhop or Archbiſhop, whoſe name is not expreſſed; the Copy of which Epiſtle in Latin is this.

NOn licet, *Reverendiſſime Præſul, per ſupervenientem ægrotationem ad tuum Palatium venire, non novam quidem illam, ſed inveteratam, etſi novis occaſionibus nuper exaſperatam. Certe quantum videre videor, & quantum conjecturis ducor, hodie non licebit, citra meum (inquam) magnum malum non licebit. Abuſus in rebus Religioni amovendi.

quot hactenus fuere, imitaturus. Intolerabiles ſane ſunt, & diu fuere quarundam rerum abuſus, ut nemo Chriſtianæ gloriæ ſtud. oſus poteſt, niſi abuſibus rerum multo etiam magis improbatis, res ipſas e ſuggeſtu probare: quæ ſi rarius fierent (ne dicam nunquam) modo hac occaſione quæ mandantur a Deo fieri fierent officioſius, quid quæſo paterctur jacturæ Religio Chriſtiana? niſi forte ſic cæcutimus miſeri, ut illa turpi quæſtu noſtro, non cultu Dei vero putentur conſiſtere. Iam non poteſt (opinor) fieri, ut damnabilis ejuſmodi rerum abuſus juſte reprobetur, niſi paulatim infrequentior earundem uſus ſequatur. Quanquam præſtiterit quædam nunquam fieri quam tam fiducialiter fieri, ut minus curentur quæ oportuit fieri, cum alia oportet facere, alia oportet non omittere, alia nec oportet facere, & omittere licet. Et quis manifeſtum multarum rerum abuſum non videt? quis videt, & non vehementer dolet? quis dolet deniq; & non laborat amovere? & quando amovebitur, ſi uſus prædicatione celebrabitur, tacebitur abuſus? Imo non poteſt non regnare & dominari abuſus. Aliud eſt, res quæ poſſunt in loco fieri tolerare, aliud eaſdem pro rebus quæ debent fieri aut paſſim prædicare, aut legibus prædicanda conſtituere. Euntes docete (inquit) omnia. Quænam omnia? omnia quæ ego præcepi vobis (inquit,) non dicit omnia quæ vobis ipſis videntur prædicanda. Agite igitur per immortalem Deum. Sic nervos intendamus noſtros, ut quæ Dei ſunt prædicemus ad unum omnes, ne adulterarii & caupones prædicationis verius, quam vere prædicatores evadamus; maxime, dum homines ad divina ſunt pigerrimi, ad ſua velociſſimi, ut nihil ſit opus calcaribus; injuſta rerum æſtimatione, & innata ſuperſtitione, certe ab ineunte ætate a majoribus contracta miſerabiliter decepti, quibus rebus medere vix ullis prædicationibus, quamlibet frequentibus, quamlibet ſinceris & puris, quimus. Quare prohibeat Deus: Sed in hac dierum malitia qui debent ipſi potius prædicare (præcepit enim nobis, inquit Petrus, prædicare) vel volentes & potentes prædicare præpediant, contra illud, noli prohibere eum benefacere qui poteſt, vel cauponantes prædicare compellant, ſic miſeram plebeculam in ſuperſtitione & fallaci fiducia damnabiliter detinentes. Quin Deus potius miſereatur noſtri, ut cognoſcamus in terra viam tuam, ne videamur in quos illud quadret digne, non cogitationes meæ, cogitationes veſtræ, neque viæ meæ, viæ veſtræ, dicit Dominus. Hinc ego nudis ſententiis ſubſcribere non audeo, Domine cum primis obſervande, quia popularis ſuperſtitionis diutius duraturæ, quoad poſſum, authorculus eſſe nolo, ne mei ipſius damnationis ſimul ſim author. Quod ſi dignus eſſem qui tibi conſilium darem, Colendiſſime Pater, ſed cohibeo me; quam ſit parvum & intolerabile hominis cor detur vel conjectare. Neque ſane quiſquam novit quæ ſunt hominis, niſi ſpiritus hominis qui eſt in eo. Non ſuperbia detinet ulla ab illa ſubſcriptione tôties a tua Dominatione cum maxima mei animi moleſtia rogata. Non poteſt non eſſe impium Patribus & Proceribus Eccleſiæ non obtemperare; ſed videndum interim illis, & quid & quibus imperent, cum in loco, Deo quam hominibus obedire oportet magis. Sic dolet mihi caput, & reliquum corpus languet, ut nec venire, nec hæc reſcribere licet, & emendare. Sed tua dominatio, ſi non judicium meum, certe ſtudium (ſpero) probabit. Valeat Dominatio tua.

Multa tolerari poſſunt quum fiunt, quæ tamen ut fierent, neceſſitatem nullam habent.

In this foreſaid Epiſtle (as ye hear) he maketh mention of certain Articles or Propoſitions, whereunto he was required by the Biſhops to ſubſcribe. The Copy and effect of thoſe Articles or rude Propoſitions (as he calleth them) be theſe.

Articles deviſed by the Biſhops, for M. Latimer to ſubſcribe unto.

Articles propounded to M. Latimer to ſubſcribe unto.

I Believe that there is a Purgatory to purge the Souls of the dead after this life.

That the Souls in Purgatory are holpen with the Maſſes, Prayers, and Alms of the living.

That the Saints do pray as Mediators now for us in Heaven.

That they are to be honoured of us in Heaven.

That it is profitable for Chriſtians to call upon the Saints, that they may pray as Mediators for us unto God.

That Pilgrimages and Oblations done to the Sepulchres and Reliques of Saints are meritorious.

That they which have vowed perpetual chaſtity may not marry, nor break their Vow, without the diſpenſation of the Pope.

That the Keys of binding and looſing delivered to Peter, do ſtill remain with the Biſhops of Rome, his Succeſſors, although they live wickedly, and are by no means nor at any time committed to Laymen.

That men may merit and deſerve at Gods hand by faſting, Prayer, and other good works of piety.

That they which are forbidden of the Biſhop to preach, as ſuſpect perſons, ought to ceaſe until they have purged themſelves before the ſaid Biſhop, or their Superiors, and be reſtored again.

That the faſt which is uſed in Lent, and other faſts preſcribed by the Canons, and by cuſtom received of the Chriſtians (except neceſſity otherwiſe require) are to be obſerved and kept.

That God in every one of the ſeven Sacraments giveth grace to a man, rightly receiving the ſame.

That conſecrations, ſanctifyings, and bleſſings by uſe and cuſtom received in the Church, are laudable and profitable.

That it is laudable and profitable, that the venerable Images of the Crucifix and other Saints, ſhould be had in the Churches as a remembrance, and to the honour and worſhip of Jeſus Chriſt, and his Saints.

That it is laudable and profitable to deck and to cloath thoſe Images, and ſet up burning lights before them to the honour of the ſaid Saints.

M. Latimer, whether he ſubſcribed or not, it is uncertain.

To theſe Articles whether he did ſubſcribe or no, it is uncertain. It appeareth by this Epiſtle above written to the Biſhop, that he durſt not conſent unto them, where he writeth in theſe words, His ego nudis ſententiis ſubſcribere non audeo, quia popularis ſuperſtitionis diutius duraturæ, quoad poſſum, authorculus eſſe nolo, &c. But yet whether he was compelled afterwards to agree, through the cruel handling of the Biſhops, it is in doubt. By the words and the title in Tonſtal's Regiſter prefixed before the Articles, it may ſeem that he did ſubſcribe. The words of the Regiſter be theſe: Hugo Latimerus in ſacra Theologia Bacch. in Univerſitate Cantabrig. coram Cant. Archiepiſc. Johan. Lond. Epiſcopo, reliquaq; concione apud Weſtmon. vocatus, confeſſus eſt & recognovit fidem ſuam ſic ſentiendo ut ſequitur in his artic. 21. die Martii Anno 1531 If theſe words be true, it may be ſo thought that he ſubſcribed. And whether he ſo did, no great matter nor marvel, the iniquity of the time being ſuch, that either he muſt needs ſo do, or elſe abide the Biſhops bleſſing, that is, cruel ſentence of death, which he at that time (as he himſelf confeſſed preaching at Stamford) was loath to ſuſtain for ſuch matters as theſe were, unleſs it were for Articles neceſſary, of his belief; by which his words I conjecture rather that he did ſubſcribe at length, albeit it was long before he could be brought ſo to do. Yet this by the way is to be noted, concerning the crafty and deceitful handling of theſe Biſhops in his Examinations, what ſubtile devices they uſed the ſame time to entrap him in their ſnares. The Truth of the ſtory he ſheweth forth himſelf in a certain Sermon preached at Stamford, An. 1550. Octob. 9. his words be theſe: I was once (ſaith he) in Examination before five or ſix Biſhops, where I had much turmoiling; every week thrice I came to Examinations, and many ſnares and traps were laid to get ſomthing. Now God knoweth I was ignorant of the Law, but that God gave me anſwer and wiſdom what I ſhould ſpeak; it was God indeed, for elſe I had never eſcaped them. At the laſt I was brought forth to be examined into a Chamber hanged with Arras, where I was wont to be examined: but now at this time the Chamber was ſomewhat altered. For whereas before there was wont ever to be a fire in the Chimny, now the fire was taken away, and an Arras hanged over the Chimny, and the Table ſtood neer the Chimnies end.

The crafty handling of the Biſhops in examining M. Latimer.

Ex verbis Latimeri.

There

There was amongſt the Biſhops that examined me, one with whom I have been very familiar, and took him for my great Friend, an aged man, and he ſate next the tables end.

Then amongſt all other queſtions he put forth one, a very ſubtile and crafty one, and ſuch an one indeed, as I could not think ſo great danger in. And when I ſhould make anſwer; I pray you Mr. Latimer, ſaid one, ſpeak out; I am very thick of hearing, and here be many that ſit farr off. I marvelled at this, that I was bidden ſpeak out, and began to miſdeem, and gave an ear to the chimny; and, Sir, there I heard a pen walking in the chimny behind the cloth. They had appointed one there to write all mine anſwers; for they made ſure, that I ſhould not ſtart from them: there was no ſtarting from them. God was my good Lord, and gave me anſwer, I could never elſe have ſcaped it. The queſtion to him there and then objected was this; Whether he thought in his Conſcience, that he hath been ſuſpected of Hereſie. This was a captious queſtion. There was no holding of peace would ſerve; for that was to grant him ſelf faulty. To anſwer, it was every way full of danger; But God, which alway giveth in need what to anſwer helped him, or elſe (as he confeſſed himſelf) he had never eſcaped their Bloody hands. Albeit what was his anſwer, he doth not there expreſs. And thus hitherto you have heard declared the manifold troubles of this godly Preacher, in the time not onely of his being in the Univerſity, but eſpecially at his Benefice, as partly in his own words above mentioned, and partly by his own Letters hereafter following, may better appear.

A ſubtile and captious queſtion put to Mr. Latimer by the Biſhops.

In theſe ſo hard and dangerous ſtraits, and ſuch ſnares of the Biſhops, hard it had been for him and impoſſible to have eſcaped and continued ſo long; had not the Almighty helping hand of the higheſt, as he ſtirred him up, ſo preſerved him through the favour and power of his Prince; who with much favour embraced him, and with his meer power ſometime reſcued and delivered him out of the crooked claws of his enemies. Moreover, at length alſo, through the procurement partly of Doctor Buts, partly of good Cromwel (whoſe ſtory ye heard before) he advanced him to the diguity and degree of a Biſhop, making him the Biſhop of Worceſter, which ſo continued a few years, inſtructing his Dioceſs, according to the duty of a diligent and vigilant Paſtor, with wholſome Doctrine and example of perfect converſation duly agreeing to the ſame. It were a long matter to ſtand particularly upon ſuch things as might here be brought to the commendation of his pains; as ſtudy, readineſs, and continual carefulneſs in teaching, preaching, exhorting viſiting, correcting, and reforming, either as his ability could ſerve, or elſe the time would bear. But the dayes then were ſo dangerous and variable, that he could not in all things do that he would. Yet what he might do, that he performed to the uttermoſt of his ſtrength, ſo that although he could not utterly extinguiſh all the ſparkling reliques of old ſuperſtition, yet he ſo wrought, that though they could not be taken away, yet they ſhould be uſed with as little hurt, and with as much profit as might be. As (for example) in this thing, and in divers other it did appear, that when it could not be avoided, but holy water and holy bread muſt needs be received, yet ſo he prepared and inſtructed them of his Dioceſs, with ſuch informations and leſſons, that in receiving thereof ſuperſtition ſhould be excluded, and ſome remembrance taken thereby, teaching and charging the Miniſters of his Dioceſs, in delivering the Holy water and the Holy Bread, to ſay theſe words following.

M. Latimer reſcued by the King.

M. Latimer advanced to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter by the King.

The Paſtoral diligence of M. Latimer in this Dioceſs.

The time unable for Biſhop Latimer to work in.

Wherefore of your ſins you muſt be forſakers,
If of Chriſts death ye will be partakers.

Anno 1555.

By this it may be conſidered what the diligent care of this Biſhop was in doing the duty of a faithful Paſtor among his flock. And moreover it is to be thought that he would have brought more things elſe to paſs, if the time then had anſwered to his deſire; for he was not ignorant how the inſtitution of Holy Water and Holy Bread, not onely had no ground in Scripture, but alſo how full of prophane exorciſms and conjurations they were, contrary to the rule and learning of the Goſpel. Thus this good man behaved himſelf in his Dioceſs. But (as before) both in the Univerſity, and at his Benefice, he was toſt and turmoiled by wicked and evil diſpoſed perſons; So in his Biſhoprick alſo he was not all clear and void of ſome that ſought his trouble. As among many other evil willers, one eſpecially there was, and that no ſmall perſon, which accuſed him then to the King for his Sermons. The ſtory becauſe he himſelf ſheweth in a Sermon of his before King Edward. I thought therefore to uſe his own words, which be theſe:

The behaviour of B. Latimer in his Office.

The troubles of M. Latimer in his Biſhoprick.

Ex verbis Latimer. pro concione.

In the Kings days that is dead, a great many of us were called together before him, to ſay our minds in certain matters. In the end, one kneeleth down and accuſeth me of ſedition: and that I had preached ſeditious Doctrine. A heavy ſalutation, and a hard point of ſuch a man's doing, as if I ſhould name, ye would not think. The King turned to me, and ſaid; What ſay you to that Sir?

B. Latimer accuſed to King Henry for his preaching.

Then I kneeled down, and turned me firſt to my accuſer, and required him; Sir, what form of preaching would you appoint me, in preaching before a King? would you have me preach nothing as concerning a King in the Kings Sermon? have you any commiſſion to appoint me what I ſhall preach? beſides this, I asked him divers others queſtions, and he would make no anſwer to any of them all; he had nothing to ſay.

M. Latimer anſwereth his accuſer.

Then I turned me to the King, and ſubmitted my ſelf to his Grace, and ſaid; I never thought my ſelf worthy, nor did I ever ſue to be a Preacher before your Grace, but I was called to it, and would be willing (if you miſlike me) to give place to my betters; for I grant there be a great many more worthy of the room than I am. And if it be your Graces pleaſure ſo to allow them for Preachers, I could be content to bear their books after them. But if your Grace allow me for a Preacher, I would deſire your Grace to give me leave to diſcharge my Conſcience, give me leave to frame my Doctrine according to my audience. I had been a very dolt to have preached ſo at the borders of your Realm, as I preach before your Grace.

The words of B. Latimer to the King.

And I thank Almighty God (which hath always been my remedy) that my ſayings were well accepted of the King; for like a gracious Lord he turned into another communication. It is even as the Scripture ſaith; Cor Regis in manu Domini, i. The Lord directeth the Kings heart. Certain of my Friends came to me with tears in their eyes, and told me they looked I ſhould have been in the Tower the ſame night.

The Kings heart reſteth toward Biſhop Latimer.

Beſides this, divers other conflicts and combats this godly Biſhop ſuſtained in his own Country and Dioceſs, in taking the cauſe of right and equity againſt oppreſſion and wrong. As for another example, there was at that time not far from the Dioceſs of Worceſter a certain Juſtice of Peace, whom here I will not name, being a good man afterward, and now deceaſed. This Juſtice in purchaſing of certain land for his Brother, or for himſelf, went about to wrong or damnifie a poor man, who made his complaint to Mr. Latimer. He firſt hearing, then tendring his rightful cauſe, wrote his letter to the Gentleman, exhorting him to remember himſelf, to conſider the cauſe, and to abſtain from injury. The Juſtice of Peace not content with al (as the faſhion of men is when they are told of their fault) ſendeth word again in great diſpleaſure, that he would not ſo take it at his hands, with ſuch threatning words, &c. Maſter Latimer hearing this, anſwered again by writing to a certain Gentleman: the Copy whereof among his Letters hereafter followeth in the ſequel of this ſtory to be ſeen.

B. Latimer taketh the poor mans part againſt his oppreſſor.

It were a large and long proceſs to ſtory out all the doings, travels, and writings of this Chriſtian Biſhop, neither

Anno 1555. neither yet have we expreſſed all that came to our hands; but this I thought ſufficient for this preſent. Thus he continued in this laborious Function of a Biſhop the ſpace of certain years, till the coming in of the ſix Articles. Then being diſtreſſed through the ſtreightneſs of time, ſo that either he muſt loſe the quiet of a good Conſcience, or elſe forſake his Biſhoprick, he did of his own free accord reſign his Paſtorſhip. At which time Shaxton the Biſhop of Salisbury reſigned likewiſe with him his Biſhoprick. And ſo theſe two remained a great ſpace unbiſhopped, keeping ſilence till the time of King Edward of bleſſed memory. At what time he firſt put off his Rochet in his Chamber among his Friends, ſuddenly he gave a skip in the floor for joy, feeling his ſhoulder ſo light, and being diſcharged (as he ſaid) of ſuch an heavy burden. Howbeit neither was he ſo lightned, but that troubles and labours followed him wheresoever he went. For a little after he had renounced his Biſh. Latimer at the coming in of the ſix Articles reſigned his Biſhoprick.

Mr. Latimer kept ſilence till the time of K. Edward

The whole life of Mr. Latimer full of tribulation.

Biſhoprick, firſt he was almoſt ſlain, but ſore bruiſed with the fall of a Tree. Then coming up to London for remedy, he was moleſted and troubled of the Biſhops, whereby he was again in no little danger, and at length was caſt into the Tower, where he continually remained Priſoner, till the time that bleſſed King Edward entred his Crown, by means whereof the golden mouth of this Preacher, long ſhut up before, was now opened again. And ſo he beginning afreſh to ſet forth his Plough again, continued all the time of the ſaid King, labouring in the Lords Harveſt moſt fruitfully, diſcharging his Talent as well in divers other places of this Realm, as in Stamford, and before the Dutcheſs of Suffolk (whoſe Sermons be extant and ſet forth in print) as alſo at London in the Covocation-houſe, and eſpecially before the King at the Court: In the ſame place of the inward Garden, which was before applied to laſcivious and courtly Paſtimes, there he diſpenſed the fruitful Word of the glorious Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, preaching there before the King and his whole Court, to the edification of many.

Mr. Latimer almoſt ſlain with the fall of a Tree.

Mr. Latimer caſt into the Tower.

Mr. Latimer reſtored by K. Edward to liberty of preaching.

Divers Sermons of Mr. Latimer in K. Edwards time.

Mr. Latimer preaching before King Edward.

IN this his painful travel he occupied himſelf all King Edward's days, preaching for the moſt part every Sunday twice, to no ſmall ſhame of all other loytering and unpreaching Prelates, which occupy great rooms, and do little good; and that ſo much more to their ſhame, becauſe he being a ſore bruiſed man by the fall of a Tree, mentioned a little before, and above 67 years of age, took ſo little eaſe and care of ſparing himſelf, to do the people good. Now to ſpeak here of his indefatigable travel and diligence in his own private ſtudies, who notwithſtanding both his years, and other pains in preaching, every morning orderly, Winter and Summer, about two of the Clock in the morning, was at his Book moſt diligently. How careful his heart was of the preſervation of the Church, and the good ſucceſs of the Goſpel, his Letters can teſtifie, wherewith he admoniſhed ſuch as as then were in authority of their duty, and aſſiſted them with his godly counſel.

The diligent travelling of Mr. Latimer in King Edwards time.

The early waking of Mr. Latimer to his Book.

As the diligence of this man of God never ceaſed all the time of King Edward, to profit the Church both publickly and privately, ſo among other doings in him to be noted, this is not lightly to be overpaſſed, but worthy to be obſerved, that God not only gave unto him his Spirit plenteouſly and comfortably to preach his word unto his Church, but alſo by the ſame Spirit he did ſo evidently foreſhew and prophecy of all thoſe kinds of Plagues afore, which afterward enſued, that if England ever had a Prophet, he might ſeem to be one. And as touching himſelf, he ever affirmed that the preaching of the Goſpel would coſt him his life, to the which he no leſs chearfully prepared himſelf, than certainly was perſwaded that Wincheſt. was kept in the Tower for the ſame purpoſe, as the event did too truly prove the ſame. For after the death of the ſaid bleſſed King Edward, not long after Queen Mary was proclaimed, a Purſuivant was ſent down (by the means no doubt of Wincheſter) into the Country, to call him up, of whoſe coming, although Mr. Latimer lacked no forewarning, being premoniſhed about ſix hours before by one John Careles (whoſe ſtory hereafter followeth) yet ſo far off was it that he thought to eſcape, that he prepared himſelf towards his journey before the ſaid Purſuivant came to his Houſe.

Mr. Latimer prophecieth what plagues are to be come in Queen Maries time.

Mr. Latimer called up to London by Wincheſter.

Mr. Latimer being premoniſhed before, yet refuſeth to eſcape.

At the which thing when the Purſuivant marvelled, ſeeing him ſo prepared towards his journey, he ſaid unto him, My Friend, you be a welcome Meſſenger to me. And be it known unto you, and to all the World, that I go as willingly to London at this preſent, being called by my Prince to render a reckoning of my Doctrine, as ever I was at any place in the world. I doubt not but that God, as he hath made me worthy to preach his Word before two excellent Princes, ſo will he able me to witneſs the ſame unto the third, either to her comfort or diſcomfort eternally, &c. At the which time the Purſuivant,

Mr. Latimers words to the Queens Purſuivant.

ſervant, when he had delivered his Letters, departed, affirming that he had Commandment not to tarry for him. By whoſe ſudden departure it was manifeſt that they would not have him appear, but rather to have fled out of the Realm. They knew that his conſtancy ſhould deface them in their Popery, and confirm the godly in the Truth.

Mr Latimer comes up to London not compelled.

Mr. Latimer chearful in imprisonment.

Thus Mr. Latimer being ſent for, and coming up to London, thorow Smithfield (where merrily he ſaid, That Smithfield had long groaned for him) was brought before the Councel, where he patiently bearing all the mocks and taunts given him by the ſcornful Papiſts, was caſt again into the Tower, where he being aſſiſted with the heavenly Grace of Chriſt, ſuſtained moſt patient impriſonment a long time, notwithſtanding the cruel and unmerciful handling of the lordly Papiſts, which thought then their Kingdom would never fall; yet he ſhewed himſelf not only patient, but alſo chearful in and above all that which they could or would work againſt him; yea, ſuch a valiant Spirit the Lord gave him, that he was able not only to deſpiſe the terribleneſs of Priſons and Torments, but alſo to deride and laugh to ſcorn the doings of his Enemies. As it is not unknown to the ears of many, what he anſwered to the Lieutenant being then in the Tower. For when the Lieutenants man upon a time came to him, the aged Father kept without fire in the froſty Winter, and well nigh ſtarved for cold, merrily bade the man tell his Maſter, That if he did not look the better to him, perchance he would deceive him.

Mr. Latimers merry meſſage to the Lieutenant.

The Lieutenant hearing this, bethought himſelf of theſe words, and fearing leſt that indeed he thought to make ſome eſcape, began to look more ſtreightly to his Priſoner, and ſo coming to him, beginneth to charge him with his words, reciting the ſame unto him which his man had told him before; How that if he were not better looked unto, perchance he would deceive him, &c.

The anſwer of Mr. Latimer to the Lieutenant.

Yea, Mr. Lieutenant, ſo I ſaid, quoth he, for you look, I think, that I ſhould burn; but except you let me have ſome fire, I am like to deceive your expectation, for I am like here to ſtarve for cold.

Many ſuch like Anſwers and Reaſons, merry, but ſavoury, coming not from a vain mind, but from a conſtant and quiet reaſon, proceeded from that man, declaring a firm and ſtable heart, little paſſing for all this great bluſtering of their terrible threats, but rather deriding the ſame.

Mr. Latimer with Dr. Cranmer and Bp. Ridley, removed from the Tower to Oxford.

Thus Mr. Latimer paſſing a long time in the Tower, with as much patience as a man in his caſe could do, from thence was tranſported to Oxford, with Dr. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Mr. Ridley Biſhop of London, there to diſpute upon Articles ſent down from Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, as is before touched, the manner and order of which Diſputations between them and the Univerſity Doctors, is alſo before ſufficiently expreſſed. Where alſo is declared, how and by whom the ſaid Latimer with his other Fellow-priſoners were condemned after the Diſputations, and ſo committed again to the Priſon, and there they continued from the Month of April above mentioned, to this preſent Month of October; where they were moſt godly occupied, either with brotherly conference, or with fervent prayer, or with fruitful writing.

October 16.

Albeit Mr. Latimer, by reaſon of the feebleneſs of his Age, wrote leaſt of them all in this later time of his impriſonment; yet in Prayer he was fervently occupied, wherein oftentimes ſo long he continued kneeling, that he was not able to riſe without help: And amongſt other things, theſe were three principal matters he prayed for.

Three requeſts of Mr. Latimers prayer.

First, That as GOD had appointed him to be a Preacher of his Word, ſo alſo he would give him grace to ſtand to his Doctrine until his death, that he might give his heart blood for the ſame.

Once again, Once again.

Secondly, That God of his mercy would reſtore his Goſpel to England once again; and theſe words once again, once again, he did ſo inculcate and beat into the ears of the Lord God, as though he had ſeen God before him, and ſpoken to him face to face.

Mr. Latimers prayer for Q. Elizabeth.

The third matter was, to pray for the preſervation of the Queens Majeſty that now is, whom in his Prayer he was wont accuſtomably to name, and even with tears deſired God to make her a comfort to this comfortleſs Realm of England. Theſe were the matters he prayed for ſo earneſtly. Neither were theſe things of him deſired in vain, as the good ſucceſs thereof after following did declare; for the Lord moſt graciouſly did grant all thoſe his requeſts.

Anno 1565.

First, Concerning his conſtancy, even in the moſt extremity the Lord graciouſly aſſiſted him. For when he ſtood at the Stake without Bocardo-gate at Oxford, and the Tormentors about to ſet the fire to him, and to the learned and godly Biſhop Mr. Ridley, he lifted up his eyes towards Heaven with an amiable and comfortable countenance, ſaying theſe words, Fidelis eſt Deus, qui non ſinit nos tentari ſupra id quod poſſumus; God is faithful, which doth not ſuffer us to be tempted above our ſtrength; and ſo afterward by and by ſhed his blood in the cauſe of Chriſt, the which blood ran out of his heart in ſuch abundance, that all thoſe that were preſent, being godly, did marvel to ſee the moſt part of the blood in his body to be gathered to his heart, and with ſuch violence to guſh out, his body being opened by the force of the fire; by the which thing God moſt graciouſly granted his requeſt, which was, That he might ſhed his heart blood in the defence of the Goſpel.

All three requeſts of M. Latimer granted of the Lord.

How mercifully the Lord heard his ſecond Requeſt, in reſtoring his Goſpel once again unto this Realm, theſe preſent days can bear record. And what then ſhall England ſay now for her defence, which being ſo mercifully viſited and refreſhed with the Word of God, ſo ſlenderly and unthankfully conſidereth either her own miſery paſt, or the great benefit of God now preſent? The Lord be merciful unto us, Amen.

The unthankfulneſs of England.

Again, Concerning his third Requeſt, it ſeemeth likewiſe moſt effectuouſly granted, to the great praiſe of God, the furtherance of his Goſpel, and to the unſpeakable comfort of this Realm. For whether at the requeſt of his Prayer, or of other Gods holy Saints, or whether God was moved with the cry of his whole Church, the truth is, that when all was deplorate and in a deſperate caſe, and ſo deſperate that the Enemies mightily flouriſhed and triumphed, Gods Word was baniſhed, Spaniards received, no place left for Chriſts Servants to cover their heads, ſuddenly the Lord called to remembrance his mercy, and forgetting our former iniquity, made an end of all theſe miſeries, and wrought a marvellous change of things; at the change whereof the ſaid Queen Elizabeth was appointed and anointed, for whom this gray-headed Father ſo earneſtly prayed in his impriſonment: through whoſe, true, natural, and imperial Crown, the brightneſs of Gods Word was ſet up again to confound the dark and falſe vizored Kingdom of Antichriſt, the true Temple of Chriſt re-edified, the captivity of ſorrowful Chriſtians releaſed, which ſo long was wiſhed for in the Prayers of ſo many good men, ſpecially of this faithful and true ſervant of the Lord, Mr. Latimer.

Gods gracious help in time of need, upon the Realm of England.

Acts 2. Q. Elizabeth granted of God to England.

The ſame God, which at the requeſts of his holy and faithful Saints hath poured upon us ſuch benefits of his mercy, peace, and tranquillity, aſſiſt our moſt vertuous and chriſtian Princeſs, and her Subjects, that we may every one in his ſtate and calling ſerve to his glory, and walk in our Vocation, that we loſe not that which they have obtained, but may proceed in all faithfulneſs, to build and keep up the Houſe and Temple of the Lord, to the advancing of his glory, and our everlaſting comfort in him. And thus much concerning the doings and laborious travels of Mr. Latimer. Now after theſe things thus finiſhed and diſcourſed pertaining to the ſtory of his Life, let us come to his Letters, which he wrote at divers and ſundry times from the firſt beginning of his preaching, all which here to comprehend which he wrote both in Engliſh and Latin, lack of ſpace and place at this preſent will not permit: nevertheleſs certain we will take, and firſt concerning the Articles above mentioned, for the which he was troubled by the Prieſts of the Country about his Benefice at Weſt-Kington; which he writeth thereof to Mr. Morice, the Copies whereof followeth.

God for Chriſts ſake to grant.

Anno 1555.

Articles untruly unjuſtly, falſly, uncharitably imputed to me by Dr. Powell of Salisbury.

Firſt that our Lady was a Sinner.

OCcaſioned of ſome, not only Lay-men, but alſo Prieſts and Beneficed-men, which gave ſo much to our Lady of Devotion without Judgment, as though ſhe had not needed Chriſt to ſave her: to prove Chriſt her Saviour, to make Chriſt a whole Saviour of all that be, or ſhall be ſaved: I reaſoned after this manner; That either ſhe was a ſinner, or no ſinner; there is no mean: if ſhe were a ſinner, then ſhe was redeemed or delivered from ſin by Chriſt, as other ſinners be: If ſhe were no ſinner, then ſhe was preſerved from ſin by Chriſt; ſo that Chriſt ſaved her, and was her neceſſary Saviour, whether ſhe ſinned or no. Now certain Authors (ſaid I) as Chryſoſtom, Theophilact, and others, writeth as though ſhe had been ſomething faulty in her time. Alſo I ſaid that certain Scriptures ſtandeth ſomething to the ſame, unleſs they be the more warily underſtood and taken, (as in the 3. 10. 20.) All have declined, that every mouth be ſtopped, and all the world be bounden or in danger to God. And after in the ſame Chapter, All have ſinned, and need the glory of God. And in the fifth, And ſo death paſſed thorow into all men and women, foraſmuch as all have ſinned. But to theſe Scriptures I ſaid it might be anſwered that the priviledge of one, or of a few, doth not derogate or miniſh the verity of a univerſal Expoſition in Scriptures.

And as to the Doctors, I ſaid, that other more ſaith otherwiſe; and foraſmuch as now it is univerſally and conſtantly received and applyed that ſhe was no ſinner, it becometh every man to ſtand and agree to the ſame, and ſo will I, quoth I, nor any man that wiſe is, will the contrary: But to my purpoſe it is neither to nor from, to prove neither this nor that; for I will have her ſaved, and Chriſt her Saviour, whether ever ſhe was, &c.

And to that, what need you to ſpeak of this? I anſwered great need, when men cannot be content that ſhe was a Creature ſaved, but as it were a Savioureſs, not needing Salvation, it is neceſſary to ſet her in degree to the glory of Chriſt, Creator and Saviour of all that be or ſhall be ſaved. Good Authors have written that ſhe was not a ſinner: but good Authors never wrote that ſhe was not ſaved: for though ſhe never ſinned, yet ſhe was not ſo impeccable, but ſhe might have ſinned, if ſhe had not been preſerved: It was of the goodneſs of God that ſhe never ſinned: it had come of her own illneſs if ſhe had ſinned: there was difference betwixt her and Chriſt: And I will give as little to her as I can (doing her no wrong) rather than Chriſt her Son and Saviour ſhall lack any parcel of his glory; and I am ſure that our Lady will not be diſpleaſed with me for ſo doing, for our Lady ſought his glory here upon Earth, ſhe would not defraud him now in Heaven: But ſome are ſo ſuperſtitiouſly religious, or ſo irreligiouſly ſuperſtitious, ſo prepoſterouſly devout toward our Lady, as though there could not too much be given to her: ſuch are zeals without knowledge and judgment to our Ladies diſpleaſure.

Our Lady is not diſpleaſed to have God honoured.

No doubt our Lady was, through the goodneſs of God, a good and a gracious Creature, a devout Handmaid of the Lord, indued with ſingular gifts and graces from above, which through the help of God ſhe uſed to Gods pleaſure, according to her duty, ſo giving us enſample to do likewiſe, ſo that all the goodneſs that ſhe had, ſhe had it not of her ſelf, but of God the Author of all goodneſs: the Lord was with her favourably, and poured graces unto her plenteouſly, as it is in the Ave Marie. The Son of God, when he would become man, to ſave both man and woman, did chooſe her to his Mother, which love he ſhewed to her alone, and to none other, of his benign goodneſs, by the which ſhe was the natural Mother of Chriſt: and through faith in Chriſt ſhe was the ſpiritual Siſter of Chriſt, ſaved by Chriſt, bleſſed by hearing Chriſts Word, and keeping the ſame. It ſhould not availed her to Salvation, to have been his natural Mother, if ſhe had not done the will of his heavenly Father: By him ſhe was his Mother, by him ſhe did the will of his Father: ſhe the Handmaiden, he the Lord. The Handmaiden did magnifie her Lord, the Handmaiden would that all ſhould magnifie the Lord, to whom be honour and glory Amen, &c.

To honour him worthily, is not to diſhonour our Lady; he is as able to preſerve from ſin, as to deliver from ſin; he was then ſubject to Joſeph, his Father in Law, his Mothers Husband; Joſeph is now ſubject to him. He never diſhonoured Joachim and Anna, his Grandfather and Grandmother, and yet I have not read that he preſerved them from all ſin.

To ſay that Peter and Paul, David and Mary Magdalen, were ſinners, is not to diſhonour them: for then Scripture doth diſhonour them. It had not been for our profit to have preſerved all that he could have preſerved.

For remembrance of that fall and upriſing, keepeth us in our fall from deſpairing: both is of God, to have not ſinned, and to have forſaken and left ſin. And as ſure is this of Heaven, as that, and this more common then that, and to us that have been ſinners more comfortable.

It hath been ſaid in times paſt, without ſin, that our Lady was a ſinner: but it was never ſaid, without ſin, that our Lady was not ſaved, but a Saviour: I go not about to make our Lady a ſinner, but to have Chriſt her Saviour. When mine Adverſaries cannot reprove the thing that I ſay, then they will bely me, to ſay the thing that they can reprove. They will ſin to make our Lady no ſinner, to prove that, that no man dieth. So that provers, and ſo cold probations ſaw you never. It were better unproved, than ſo weakly proved. But they be devout towards honouring of our Lady, but to ſin to have our Lady no ſinner, or to ſay ſhe was no ſinner.

I would be loath to diſhonour our Lady as they, I pray God we may honour her as ſhe would be honoured; for verily ſhe is worthy to be honoured.

To make a pernicious and a damnable lye, to have our Lady no ſinner, is neither honour, nor yet pleaſure to our Lady, but great ſin, to the diſhonour and diſpleaſure both of God and our Lady.

They ſhould both pleaſe and honour our Lady much better, to believe their ſinful living, and keep themſelves from ſinfulneſs, as our Lady did, than ſo ſinfully to lye to make our Lady no ſinner; which if they do not, they ſhall go to the Devil certainly, though they believe that our Lady was no ſinner never ſo ſurely.

And for the Ave Marie they lye falſly, I never denied it: I know it was a heavenly ſaluting or greeting of our Lady, ſpoken by the Angel Gabriel, and written in holy Scripture of S. Luke. But yet it is not properly a Prayer, as the Pater noſter is. Saluting or greeting, lauding or praiſing, is not properly praying. The Angel was ſent to greet our Lady, and to annunciate and ſhew the good will of God towards her, and therefore it is called The Annunciation of our Lady, and not to pray her, or to pray to her properly: Shall the Father of Heaven pray to our Lady? When the Angel ſpake it, it was not properly a Prayer. And is it not the ſame thing now that it was then? Nor yet he that denieth the Ave Marie to be properly a Prayer, denieth the Ave Marie; ſo that we may ſalute our Lady with Ave Marie, as the Angel did, though we be not ſent of God ſo to do, as the Angel was. So though we may ſo do, yet we have no plain bidding of God ſo to do, as the Angel had; ſo that the Angel had been more to blame peradventure to have left it unſaid than we be. Foraſmuch as he was appointed of God to ſay it, and not we: But as I deny not, but as we may ſay the Pater noſter, and the Ave Marie together, that to God, this to our Lady, ſo we may ſay them ſunderly, the Pater noſter by it ſelf, and the Ave by it ſelf; and the Pater noſter is a whole and a perfect Prayer, without the Ave Marie; ſo that it is but a ſuperſtition to think that a Pater noſter cannot be well ſaid without an Ave Marie at his heel. For Chriſt was no fool, and when he taught the people to ſay a Pater noſter to God, he taught them not to ſay, neither Pater noſter, neither Ave Marie to our Lady, nor yet Pater noſter to S. Peter, as Mr. Hubberdin doth: Therefore to teach to ſay twenty Ave Maries for one Pater noſter, is not to ſpeak Sermones Dei, ut Sermones Dei, the Word of God as the Word of God. And one Ave Marie well ſaid, and devoutly with affection, ſenſe and underſtanding, is better than 25 ſaid ſuperſtitiouſly. And it is not like, but our Lady ſaid many times the Pater noſter, foraſmuch as her Son Chriſt, whom ſhe loved and honoured over all, did make it, and taught it to be ſaid, whether ſhe made an Ave Marie with all, or ten or twenty Ave Maries for one Pater noſter, I will leave that to great Clerks, as Hubberdin and Powell to diſcuſs and determine: ſhe was not ſaved by often ſaying of the Ave Marie, but by conſenting to the will of him, that ſent the Angel to ſalute her with Ave Marie: wherefore if the praying of them which decline their ear from hearing the Law of God is execrable in the ſight of God, yea, though they ſay the Pater noſter, I doubt not but the ſalvation of them hath been unpleaſant to our Lady in her ſight, for whatſoever pleaſeth not her Son, pleaſeth not her; for ſhe hath delight and pleaſure in nothing, but in him, and in that that delighteth and pleaſeth him. Now we will be Trayrors to her Son by cuſtomable ſinful living, and yet we ſhall think great perfection and holineſs in numbering every day many Ave-Maries to our Lady, and ſo we think to make her our Friend and Patroneſs, and then we care not for God: for having our Lady of our ſide, we may be bold to take our pleaſure: for we fantaſie as though the very work and labour of ſlummering the Ave Marie is very acceptable to our Lady, and the more, the more acceptable, not paſſing how they be ſaid, but that they be ſaid, if the Pater noſter which Chriſt both made, and bid us ſay it, may be ſaid to Chriſts diſpleaſure, much more the Ave Marie, which neither Chriſt nor our Lady bid to be ſaid, may be ſaid to our Ladies diſpleaſure, and better never once ſaid, then often ſo ſaid. So that I would have a difference betwixt well ſaying and often ſaying, and betwixt that that Chriſt bid us ſay, and that that he bid not ſay: and whether Ave Marie be ſaid in Heaven or no, who can tell but Dr. Powel? and if it be ſaid alway there without a Pater noſter, why may not Pater noſter be ſaid here without Ave-Marie; and whether doth our Lady ſay it in Heaven or no? which thing I ſpeak not to withdraw you from ſaying of it, but to withdraw you from ſuperſtitious and unfruitful ſaying of it. So that by occaſion of falſe faith and truſt that ye have in the daily ſaying of it, you ſet not aſide imitation and following of holy living, which will ſerve at length, when ſuperſtitious greeting, will neither ſerve nor ſtand in ſtrength: It is meet that every thing be taken, eſteemed and valued as it is.

We ſalute alſo and greet well the Holy Croſs, or the Image of the Holy Croſs, ſaying, All hail Holy Croſs, which hath deſerved to bear the precious Talent of the World: and yet who will ſay that we pray properly to the Holy Croſs? whereby it may appear that greeting is one thing, praying another thing. The Croſs can neither hear nor ſpeak again, no more then this Pulpit: therefore we do ſalute it, not properly pray to it.

The Angel ſpake alſo to Zachary, before he ſpake to our Lady. Ne timeas Zacharia, &c. Be not afraid Zachary, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth ſhall bring thee forth a child, which ſhall be called John, and great joy and gladneſs ſhall be at his birth, and he ſhall be great and full of the Holy Ghoſt from the womb of his mother, &c.

What if a man ſhould ſay theſe words every day., betwixt the Pater noſter, and the Ave Marie in the worſhip of St. Zachary, which I think is a Saint in Heaven, and was e're ever our Lady came therefore to be honoured, I think he might pleaſe and honour Saint Zachary, as well ſome other way, and better too, though they be words ſent from God, ſpoken of an Angel, and written in holy Scripture of the Evangeliſt Luke.

And yet if it were once begun and accuſtomed, I warrant ſome men would make it more then Sacriledge to leave it of, though the Devil ſhould ſow never ſo much Superſtition by proceſs of time unto it.

Chriſt made the Pater noſter for a Prayer, and bid his people ſay it to his heavenly Father, one God in Trinity of Perſons, one Father and Comforter, one worker and doer of all things here in this World, ſaying unto us; Vos autem ſic orabitis; ſo or after ſuch manner, ſhall ye pray, Pater noſter, &c. God ſent his Son amongſt other things to teach his people to pray: God ſent his Angel to greet our Lady, not to teach his people to pray. For neither Chriſt nor the Angel ſaid to the people, this ſhall ye pray, Ave Maria. When the Apoſtles ſaid to Chriſt, Doce nos orare, teach us to pray; Chriſt ſaid, Cum oratis, dicite, Pater noſter; when you pray, ſay Pater noſter: he ſaid not when you pray, ſay Ave Maria. I wene Chriſt could teach to pray, as well as Dr. Powell and Mr. Hubberdin. I ſay that the Ave Maria was before the Pater noſter; Dr. Powell ſaith, it ſhall endure after the Pater noſter: I can prove my ſaying by Scripture, ſo cannot he his: yet as it is no good Argument, the Ave Mary was before the Pater noſter, Ergo it is properly a Prayer: ſo it is no good Argument, the Ave Mary ſhall laſt after the Pater noſter; Ergo it is properly a Prayer, without the Antecedent be impoſſible, which is not credible to come out of ſuch a phantaſtical brain.

Ave Marie no Prayer, but a Salutation.

Who was ever ſo mad as to think that words of holy Scripture could not be well ſaid? And yet we may not be ſo peeviſh as to allow the ſuperſtitious ſaying of holy Scripture. The Devil is crafty, and we frail and prone to Superſtition and Idolatry, God give me grace to worſhip him and his, not after our own curioſity, but according to his Ordinance with all Humility.

S. Zachary is to be honoured, and in no wiſe to be diſhonoured: ſo that we may leave unſaid that, that the Angel ſaid without diſhonouring him.

It is not neceſſary to our Salvation to make an Ordinance of honouring him with ſaying as the Angel did.

It is better for a mortal man to do the office of a man, which God biddeth him do, than to leave that undone, and do the office of an Angel which God biddeth us not do: if the other be preſumption, I had rather preſume to pray to God, which is Gods bidding and mans office, than to preſume into the office of an Angel without Gods bidding.

It is a godly preſumption to preſume to do the bidding of God.

Here I neither ſay, that our Lady was a ſinner, nor yet I deny the Ave Mary.

Saints are not to be honoured.

I Said this word Saints is diverſly taken of the Vulgar People, Images of Saints are called Saints, and Inhabitors of Heaven are called Saints. Now by honouring of Saints, is meant praying to Saints. Take honouring ſo, and Images for Saints; ſo Saints are not to be honoured, that is to ſay, dead Images are not to be prayed unto; for they have neither ears to hear withal, nor tongue to ſpeak withal, nor heart to think withal, &c.

They can neither help me, nor mine Ox, neither my Head nor my Tooth, nor work any Miracle for me, one no more than another: and yet I ſhewed the good uſe of them to be Lay-mens Books, as they be called, reverently to look upon them, to remember the things that are ſignified by them, &c.

And yet I would not have them ſo coſtly and curiouſly gilted and decked, that the quick Image of God, (for whom Chriſt ſhed his blood, and to whom whatſoever is done, Chriſt reputeth it done to himſelf) lack neceſſaries, and be unprovided for, by that occaſion, for then the Lay-man doth abuſe his Book.

A man may read upon his Book, though it be not very curiouſly gilded, and in the day time, a man may behold it without many Candles, if he be not blind.

Now I ſay, there be two manner of Mediatours, one by way of Redemption, another by way of Interceſſion; and I ſaid, that theſe Saints, that is to ſay, Images called Saints, be Mediators neither way.

As touching Pilgrimages, I ſaid, that all Idolatry, Superſtition, Error, falſe Faith, and hope in the Images, muſt be pared away, before they can be well done, houſhold looked upon, poor Chriſtian people provided for, reſtitutions made, all ordinance of God diſcharged, or ever they can be well done. And when they be at beſt, before they be vowed, they need not to be done: they ſhall never be required of us, though they be never done, and yet we ſhall be blamed when they be all done; Wives muſt counſel with their Husbands, and Husbands with their Wives, both with Curats, e're ever they may be vowed to be done.

And yet Idolatry may be committed in doing of them, as it appeareth by S. Paul, in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, cap. 10. where he biddeth the Corinthians this; to beware of Idolatry, and that after they had received the true Faith in Chriſt, which had been vain, if

Anno 155[illegible]. they could not have done Idolatry, and Expoſitors add beware not only of the act of idolatry, but alſo of all occaſion of that act: which is plain againſt Mr. Hubberdine; and Parſon of Chriſts Church, which went about to prove, that now there could be no idolatry.

As touching the Saints in Heaven, I ſaid, They be not our Mediatours by way of Redemption: for ſo Chriſt alone is our Mediatour and theirs both: ſo that the blood of Martyrs hath nothing to do by way of Redemption: the blood of Chriſt is enough for a thouſand worlds, &c.

But by way of Interceſſion, ſo Saints in Heaven may be Mediatours, and pray for us, as I think they do when we call not upon them; for they be charitable, and need no ſpurs, and we have no open bidding of God in Scripture to call upon them, as we have to call upon God, nor yet we may call upon them without any diffidence or miſtruſt in God; for God is more charitable, more merciful, more able, more ready to help then them all, ſo that though we may deſire the Saints in Heaven to pray God for us, yet it is not ſo neceſſary to be done, but that we may pray to God our ſelves, without making ſute firſt to them, and obtain of him whatſoever we need, if we continue in prayer, ſo that whatſoever we ask the Father in the Name of Chriſt his Son, the Father will give it us: for Saints can give nothing without him, but he can without them, as he did give to them: Scripture doth ſet Saints that be departed before our eyes for enſamples, ſo that the chiefeſt and moſt principal worſhip and honouring of them is to know their holy living, and to follow them, as they followed Chriſt, &c.

God biddeth us come to him with Prayer, and to do his bidding is no preſuming; it is rather preſuming to leave it undone to do that, that he biddeth us not do, &c. We muſt have Saints in reverent memory, and learn at Gods Goodneſs towards them to truſt in God, and mark well their Faith toward God and his Word, their Charity toward their Neighbour, their patience in all adverſity, and pray to God which gave them grace ſo to do, that we may do likewiſe, for which like doings we ſhall have like ſpeedings, they be well honoured when God is well pleaſed; The Saints were not Saints by praying to Saints, but by believing in him that made them Saints: and as they were Saints, ſo may we be Saints, yea there be many Saints that never prayed to Saints: And yet I deny not, but we may pray to Saints, but rather to him, which can make us Saints, which calleth us to him, biddeth us call upon him, promiſeth help, cannot deceive us and break his promiſe; when we pray faithfully to him we honour him, not after our own fantaſtical imagination, but even after his own moſt wiſeſt ordination, whom to honour is not to diſhonour Saints; therefore they lye that ſay, that I would not have Saints to be honoured, &c.

There is no fire in Hell.

I Never knew man that ever ſaid ſo. I ſpeak of divers Opinions that have been written of the nature of that fire; ſome that it is a ſpiritual fire, or at leaſt way a ſpiritual pain in the corporal fire; for as it is called a fire, ſo it is called a worm: now becauſe they think not that it is a corporal worm, but a ſpiritual and metaphorical worm, ſo they think of the fire. Some that it is a corporal and natural fire; ſome have thought diverſly before the Reſurrection without body, and after with body; ſome that the ſoul without body ſuffereth in the fire, but not of the fire; ſome both in and of the fire. The Scholaſtical Authors think, that the ſouls before the Reſurrection, becauſe they be ſpiritual ſubſtance, doth not receive the heat of the fire into them, which is a ſenſible and a corporal quality, ſo that Athanaſius, a Greek Author, calleth their pain Triſtitiam, a heavineſs or an anguiſh: and this opinion is probable enough: Some think that though they be alway in pain, yet they be not always in fire, but go from waters of ſnow to exceeding heat: but it is when their bodies be there; but whether in cold or in heat, in water or in fire, in air or in earth, they lack no pain, their torment goeth with them, for they think that the Devils that tempt us, though they have pain with them, yet they have not fire with them, for then they ſhould be known by heat of the fire.

I am certain, ſaith St. Auguſtine, that there is a fire in Hell, but what manner of fire, or in what part of the world, no man can tell, but he that is of Gods Privy Councel: I would adviſe every man to be more careful to keep out of Hell, then truſt he ſhall find no fire in Hell. Chryſoſtom ſaith, That to be deprived of the fruition of the Godhead, is greater pain than the being in Hell: there is fire burning, there is the worm gnawing, there is heat, there is cold, there is pain without pleaſure, torment without eaſment, anguiſh, heavineſs, ſorrow, and penſiveneſs, which tarrieth and abideth for all lyars and hinderers of the truth.

There is no Purgatory after this life.

NOt for ſuch lyars that will bear me in hand to ſay that I ſaid not: I ſhewed the ſtate and condition of them that be in Purgatory: Then I denied it, not that they have Charity in ſuch ſure tye that they cannot loſe it, ſo that they cannot murmur nor grutch againſt God, cannot diſhonour God, can neither diſpleaſe God; nor be diſpleaſed with God, cannot be diſſevered from God, cannot dye, nor be in peril of death, cannot be damned, nor be in peril of damnation, cannot be but in ſurety of ſalvation, they be Members of the Myſtical Body of Chriſt as we be, and in more ſurety than we be; they love us charitably; Charity is not idle, if it be, it worketh and ſheweth it ſelf, and therefore I ſay, they wiſheth us well, and pray for us, they need not cry loud to God, they be in Chriſt, and Chriſt in them, they be with Chriſt, and Chriſt with them, they joy in their Lord Chriſt alway, taking thankfully whatſoever God doth with them, ever giving thanks to their Lord God, ever lauding and praiſing him in all things that he doth, diſcontent with nothing that he doth, &c. Purgatory.

And foraſmuch as they be always in charity, and when they pray for us, they pray always in charity, and be always Gods friends, Gods children, brethren and ſiſters to our Saviour Chriſt, even in Gods favour, even have Chriſt with them, to offer their Prayer to the Father of Heaven, to whom they pray in the Name of the Son. And we many times for lack of charity, having malice and envy, rancor, hatred, one toward another, be the children of the Devil, inheritors of Hell, adverſaries to Chriſt, hated of God, his Angels, and all his Saints; they in their ſtate may do us more good with their Prayers, than we in this ſtate: And they do us alway good, unleſs the lack and impediment be in us; for Prayer ſaid in charity, is more fruitful to him that it is ſaid for, and more acceptable to God than ſaid out of charity; for God looketh not to the work of praying, but to the heart of the Prayer. We may well pray for them, and they much better for us, which they will do of their charity, though we deſire them not.

I had rather be in Purgatory than in the Biſhop of Londons Priſon; for in this I might dye bodily for lack of meat: In that I could not, in this I might dye ghoſtly for fear of pain, or lack of good counſel; in that I could not: In this I might be in extream neceſſity; in that I could not, if extream neceſſity be periculum peréundi, peril of periſhing. And then you know what followeth, if we be not bounden, per præceptum, to help, but them that be in extream neceſſity, we ſee not who needeth in Purgatory, but we ſee who needeth in this world. And John ſaith, If thou ſee thy brother, and help him not, how is the charity of God in thee? Here, either we be, or we may be in extream neceſſity, both in body and ſoul; in Purgatory neither one nor other: Here we be bound to help one another, as we would be holpen our ſelves under pain of damnation: Here for lack of help we may murmur and grudge againſt God, diſhonour God, fordote our ſelves, which inconveniencies ſhall not follow, if we do our duty one to another. I am ſure the ſouls in Purgatory be ſo charitable, and of charity ſo loath to have God diſhonoured, that they would have nothing withdrawn from the Poor here in this world, to be beſtowed upon them which might occaſion the diſhonour of God, &c.

Therefore howſoever we do for Purgatory, let us provide to keep out of Hell. And had I a thouſand pound to beſtow, as long as I ſaw neceſſary occaſion offered to me of God to diſpenſe it upon my needy Brother here in this world, according to Gods Commandment, I would not withdraw my duty from him for any proviſion of Purgatory, as long as I ſaw dangerous ways unrepaired, poor mens daughters unmarried, men beg for lack of work, ſick and ſore for lack of ſuccour. I would have difference betwixt that that may be done, and that that ought to be done, and this to go before that, and that to come after this: If God command one way, mine one Devotion moveth me another way, whether way ſhould I go? I may by no Trentals, no Maſſes, no Ladders of Heaven make no foundations for my ſelf with other mens goods; goods wrongfully gotten muſt needs home again, muſt needs be reſtored to the owners, if they can be known, if not, they be poor mens goods: Debts muſt needs be paid, Creditors ſatisfied and content, Gods ordinance toward my Neighbour here in this world diſcharged, all affections and luſts moving to the contrary purged. Or elſe though our Soul-Prieſts ſing till they be blear-eyed, ſay till they have worn their tongues to the ſtumps, neither their ſingings, nor their ſayings, ſhall bring us out of Hell, whether we ſhall go for contemning of Gods forbiddings.

He that purgeth all Errors of falſe Opinions, all unluſtineſs to do Gods Ordinance, provideth not for Hell and Purgatory. Purgatories iniquity hath ſet aſide Reſtitutions, and brought poor Chriſtians to extream beggary, repleniſhed Hell, and left Heaven almoſt empty.

That can break their Charity.
That can break their Patience.
That can diſſever them from Chriſt.
That can diſſever Chriſt from them.

In Purgatory there is no pain.
That can cauſe them to diſhonour God.
That can cauſe them to diſpleaſe God.
That can cauſe them to be diſpleaſed with God.
That can bring them to peril of death.

That can bring them to peril of damnation.
That can bring them to extream neceſſity.
That can cauſe them to be diſcontent with God.
That can bring them from ſurety of ſalvation.

And yet it followeth not that there is no pain.

Howbeit if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a good part, if a Friers Cowl, or the Popes Pardon, or Scala Cæli of a Groat can diſpatch for altogether, it is not ſo greatly to be cared for, I have not leiſure to write at large, and I wrote before ſuch things, which in this haſte cometh now to mind.

They that can reclaim at this, that the Souls in Purgatory do pray for us, if they could get as much money for the Prayer, that the Souls in Purgatory ſaith for us, as they have done for that, that they have ſaid for them, they would not reclaim: You know the Waſp that doth ſting them, and maketh them ſo ſwell, they that reclaim at that, do not reclaim at this.

Nor at this. Chriſts blood is not ſufficient without blood of Martyrs.
Nor at this. Magdalen did not know Chriſt to be God, before his Reſurrection.
Nor at this, &c. There can be no Idolatry.
Rome cannot be deſtroyed.
The Pope is Lord of all the world.
Whatſoever he doth is well done.
Pater noſter is to be ſaid to St. Peter.
Pater noſter is but a beggarly prayer.
Ave Marie is infinitely better.
20 Ave Maries for one Pater noſter.
It was not neceſſary Scripture to be written.
He that leaveth Father and Mother maketh for our Pilgrimage.

Letters of Mr. Latimer.

Anno 1555.

A Letter of Mr. Latimer to Mr. Morice, concerning the Articles written, which were falſly and untruly laid againſt him.

A Letter of Mr. Latimer to Mr. Morice.

RIght Worſhipful, and mine own good Maſter Morice, Salutem in Chriſto Ieſu. And I thank you for all hearty kindneſs, not only heretofore ſhewed unto me, but alſo that now of late you would vouchſafe to write unto me ſo poor a Wretch, to my great comfort among all theſe my troubles. I truſt and doubt nothing in it, but God will reward you for me, and ſupply abundantly mine unability, &c. Mr. Morice, you would wonder to know how I have been intreated at Briſtow, I mean of ſome of the Prieſts, which firſt deſired me, welcomed me, made me chear, heard what I ſaid, and allowed my ſaying in all things whiles I was with them; when I was gone home to my Benefice, perceiving that the People favoured me ſo greatly, and that the Maior had appointed me to preach at Eaſter, privily they procured an Inhibition for all them that had not the Biſhops Licence, which they knew well enough I had not, and ſo craftily defeated Maſter Maiors appointment, pretending that they were ſorry for it, procuring alſo certain Preachers to blatter againſt me, as Hubberdine and Powel, with other more, whom when I had brought before the Maior and the wiſe Councel of the Town, to know what they could lay to my charge, wherefore they ſo declaimed againſt me, they ſaid they ſpake of Information: Howbeit no man could be brought forth that would abide by any thing: So that they had place and time to bely me ſhamefully, but they had no place nor time to lay to my charge when I was preſent and ready to make them anſwer. God amend them, and ſwage their malice that they have againſt the Truth and me, &c.

Note the diſſembling inconſtancy of Popiſh Prieſts.

Inhibition procured againſt Mr. Latimer not to preach.

Hubberdine and Powel preach againſt Mr. Latimer.

Our Lady was a ſinner.

So they did bely me to have ſaid, when I had ſaid nothing ſo, but to reprove certain, both Prieſts and Benefic-ed-men, which do give ſo much to our Lady, as though ſhe had not been ſaved by Chriſt, a whole Saviour both of her, and of all that be and ſhall be ſaved; I did reaſon after this manner, That either ſhe was a ſinner, or no ſinner: if a ſinner, then ſhe was delivered from ſin by Chriſt; ſo that he ſaved her, either by delivering or preſerving her from ſin, ſo that without him neither ſhe, nor none other, either be, or could be ſaved. And to avoid all offence, I ſhewed how it might be anſwered, both to certain Scriptures which maketh all generally ſinners, and how it might be anſwered unto Chryſoſtom and Theophilact, which make her namely and ſpecially a ſinner. But all would not ſerve, their malice was ſo great; notwithſtanding that five hundred honeſt men can and will bear record. When they cannot reprove that thing that I do ſay, then they will bely me, to ſay that thing that they can reprove; for they will needs appear to be againſt me.

What the Papiſts do give to our Lady.

Our Lady not without ſin.

Papiſts deprave when they cannot diſprove.

Saints are not to be worſhipped.

So they lied when I had ſhewed divers ſignifications of this word (Saints) among the vulgar People: Firſt, Images of Saints are called Saints, and ſo they are not to be worſhipped: take worſhipping of them for praying to them; for they are neither Mediators by way of Redemption, nor yet by way of Interceſſion. And yet they may be well uſed, when they be applied to that uſe that they were ordained for, to be Lay-mens books for remembrance of heavenly things, &c.

Difference betwixt Images and Saints.

Take Saints for Inhabiters of Heaven, and worſhipping of them for praying to them, I never denied, but that they might be worſhipped, and be our Mediators, though not by way of Redemption (for ſo Chriſt alone is a whole Mediator, both for them, and for us) yet by the way of Interceſſion.

Mr. Latimers error in thoſe days.

Pil-

Anno 1555

Pilgrimage.

Pare away the ſcurf, and clean take away all popery

And I never denied Pilgrimage. And yet I have ſaid that much ſcurf muſt be pared away, e're ever it can be well done; Superſtition, Idolatry, falſe faith and truſt in the Image, unjuſt eſtimation of the thing, ſetting aſide Gods Ordinance for doing of the thing; Debts muſt be paid, Reſtitutions made, Wife and Children be provided for, duty to our poor Neighbours diſcharged. And when it is at the beſt, before it be vowed, it need not to be done; for it is neither under the bidding of God, nor of Man, to be done. And Wives muſt counſel with Husbands, and Husbands and Wives with Curates, before it be vowed to be done, &c.

Ave Maria.

Ave Maria.

As for the Ave Maria, who can think that I would deny it? I ſaid it was an heavenly greeting or ſaluting of our bleſſed Lady, wherein the Angel Gabriel, ſent from the Father of Heaven, did annunciate and ſhew unto her the good will of God towards her, what he would with her, and to what he had choſen her. But I ſaid, it was not properly a Prayer, as the Pater noſter, which our Saviour Chriſt himſelf made for a proper Prayer, and bid us ſay it for a Prayer, not adding that we ſhould ſay ten or twenty Ave Maries withal: and I denied not but that we may well ſay Ave Maria alſo, but not ſo that we ſhall think that the Pater noſter is not good, a whole and perfect Prayer, nor cannot be well ſaid without Ave Maria; ſo that I did not ſpeak againſt well ſaying of it, but againſt ſuperſtitious ſaying of it, and of the Pater noſter too; and yet I put a difference betwixt that, and that which Chriſt made to be ſaid for a Prayer.

Ave Maria, no prayer.

No fire in Hell.

Whether the fire in hell be a material fire, or ſpiritual.

Who ever could ſay or think ſo? Howbeit good Authors do put a difference betwixt a ſuffering in the fire with Bodies, and without Bodies. The Soul without the Body is a Spiritual Subſtance, which they ſay cannot receive a Corporal Quality; and ſome make it a ſpiritual fire, and ſome a corporal fire. And as it is called a fire, ſo it is called a Worm, and it is thought of ſome not to be a material Worm, that is a living Beaſt, but it is a Metaphor, but that is neither to nor fro. For a fire it is, a worm it is, pain it is, a torment it is, an anguiſh it is, a grief, a miſery, a ſorrow, a heavineſs inexplicable, intolerable, whoſe nature and condition in every point who can tell, but he that is of Gods Privy Councel, ſaith St. Auſtin? God give us grace rather to be diligent to keep us out of it, than to be curious to diſcuſs the property of it; for certain we be, that there is little eaſe, yea none at all, but weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth, which be two effects of extream pain, rather certain tokens what pain there is, than what manner of pain there is.

The worm of Conſcience is ſo called by a metaphorical ſpeech.

No Purgatory.

M. Latimer had rather be in Purgatory than in Lollards Tower.

He that ſheweth the ſtate and condition of it, doth not deny it. But I had rather be in it, than in Lollards Tower, the Biſhops Priſon, for divers skills and cauſes.

Declared why it is better to be in Purgatory than in Lollards Tower.

First, In this I might dye bodily for lack of meat and drink; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might dye ghoſtly for fear of pain, or lack of good counſel; there I could not.

Item, In this I might be in extream neceſſity; in that I could not, if it be peril of periſhing.

Item, In this I might lack Charity; there I could not.

Item, In this I might loſe my patience; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be in peril and danger of death; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be without ſurety of ſalvation; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might diſhonour God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might murmur and grudge againſt God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might diſpleaſe God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be diſpleaſed with God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be judged to perpetual Priſon, as they call it; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be craftily handled; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be brought to bear a Fagot; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be diſcontented with God; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be ſeparated and diſſevered from Chriſt; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be a Member of the Devil; in that I could not.

Item, In this I might be an inheritor in Hell, in that I could not.

Item, In this I might pray out of Charity, and in vain; in that I could not.

Item, In this my Lord and his Chaplains might manacle me by night; in that they could not.

Item, In this they might ſtrangle me, and ſay that I hanged my ſelf; in that they could not.

As they did with Hunne.

Item, In this they might have me to the Conſiſtory and judge me after their faſhion; from thence they could not.

Ergo, I had rather to be there then here. For though the fire be called never ſo hot, yet if the Biſhops two fingers can ſhake away a peice, a Friers cowl another part, and ſcala cœli altogether, I will never found Abbey, Colledge, nor Chauntrey, for that purpoſe.

For ſeeing there is no pain that can break my charity, break my patience, cauſe me to diſhonour God, to diſpleaſe God, to be diſpleaſed with God, cauſe me not to joy in God, nor that can bring me to danger of death or to danger of deſperation, or from ſuretie of Salvation, that can ſeparate me from Chriſt, or Chriſt from me, I care the leſs for it. John Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the greateſt pain that damned Souls have, is to be ſeperate and cut off from Chriſt for ever: which pains the Souls in Purgatory neither have nor can have.

Chryſoſt. What is the greateſt pain to damned Souls.

Conſider, Maſter Morice, whether proviſion for Purgatory hath not brought thouſands to hell. Debts have not been paid; reſtitution of evil gotten lands and goods hath not been made; Chriſtian People (whoſe neceſſities we ſee, to whom whatſoever we do, Chriſt reputeth done to himſelf, to whom we are bounden under pain of damnation to do for, as we would be done for our ſelf) are neglected and ſuffered to periſh; laſt wills unfulfilled and broken; Gods ordinance ſet aſide: and alſo for Purgatory, foundations have been taken for ſufficient ſatisfaction; ſo we have trifled away the ordinance of God, and reſtitutions. Thus we have gone to hell with Maſſes, Dirges and ringing of many a bell. And who can pull Pilgrimages from Idolatry, and purge Purgatory from Robbery, but he ſhall be in peril to come in ſuſpicion of Hereſie with them? ſo that they may pill with Pilgrimage and ſpoyl with Purgatory. And verily the abuſe of them cannot be taken away, but great lucre and vantage ſhall fall away from them, which had rather have profit with abuſe, then lack the ſame with uſe; and that is the Waſpe that doth ſting them, and maketh them to ſwell. And if Purgatory were purged of all that it hath gotten, by ſetting aſide reſtitution, and robbing of Chriſt, it would be but a poor Purgatory; ſo poor, that it ſhould not be able to feed ſo fat, and trick up ſo many idle and ſlothful Lubbers.

Proviſion for Purgatory bringeth many to hell.

What the waſpe is that ſtingeth the Papiſts, and maketh them to ſwell.

I take God to witneſs, I would hurt no man, but it grieveth me to ſee ſuch abuſe continue without remedy, I cannot underſtand what they mean by the Popes pardoning of Purgatory, but by way of ſuffrage; and as for ſuffrage, unleſs he do his duty, and ſeek not his own but Chriſts glory, I had rather have the ſuffrage of Jack of the Skullery, which in his calling doth exerciſe both faith and charity; but for his Maſs; And that is as good of another ſimple Prieſt as of him: For as for Authority of Keyes, it is to looſe from guiltineſs of Sin and eternal pain, due to the ſame, according to Chriſts Word and not to his own private will: And as for Pilgrimage

The Popes pardoning out of Purgatory, a vain invention. Suffrage. Maſs. Authority of keyes.

you

Pilgrimage. This blood of Hailes was proved before the King, and openly shewed at Paules Croſs by the Bp. of Rochester that then was, to be but the blood of a Duck.

you would wonder what jugling there is to get money withal. I dwell within half a mile of the Foſs-way, and you would wonder to ſee how they come by flocks out of the Weſt-country to many Images, but chiefly to the blood of Hailes. And they believe verily that it is the very blood that was in Chriſts body, ſhed upon the Mount of Calvary for our ſalvation, and that the ſight of it with their bodily eye, doth certifie them, and putteth them out of doubt, that they be in clean life, and in ſtate of ſalvation without ſpot of ſin, which doth bolden them to many things. For you would wonder if you ſhould commune with them both coming and going, what faiths they have. For as for forgiving their Enemies, and reconciling their Chriſtian Brethren, they cannot away withal; for the ſight of that blood doth quit them for the time.

Two Certifications of our remiſſion out of the Scripture.

I read in Scripture of two Certifications; one to the Romans; Juſtificati ex fide, pacem habemus: i. We being juſtified by faith, have peace with God.

If I ſee the blood of Chriſt with the eye of my ſoul, that is, true faith, that his blood was ſhed for me, &c.

Another in the Epiſtle of John; Nos ſcimus quod tranſlati ſumus de morte ad vitam, quoniam diligimus fratres: i. We know that we are tranſlated from death to life, becauſe we love the Brethren. But I read not that I have peace with God, or that I am tranſlated from death to life, becauſe I ſee with my bodily eye the blood of Hailes. It is very propable, that all the blood that was in the body of Chriſt, was united and knit to his Divinity, and then no part thereof ſhall return to his corruption. And I marvel that Chriſt ſhall have two Reſurrections. And if it were that they that did violently and injuriouſly pluck it out of his body when they ſcourged him and nailed him to the Croſs, did ſee it with their bodily eye, yet they were not in clean life. And we ſee the ſelf ſame blood in form of wine, when we have conſecrated, and may both ſee it, feel it, and receive it to our damnation as touching bodily receiving. And many do ſee it at Hailes without Confeſſion, as they ſay. God knoweth all, and the Devil in our time is not dead.

The bodily ſeeing of Chriſts blood profiteth little.

Chriſt hath left a Doctrine behind him, wherein we be taught how to believe, and what to believe; he doth ſuffer the Devil to uſe his crafty faſhion for our trial and probation. It were little thank-worthy to believe well and rightly, if nothing ſhould move us to falſe faith, and to believe ſuperſtitiouſly. It was not in vain that Chriſt, when he had taught truly, by and by bade, Beware of falſe Prophets, which would bring in errour ſlyly. But we be ſecure and uncareful, as though falſe Prophets could not meddle with us, and as though the warning of Chriſt were no more earneſt and effectual, then is the warning of Mothers when they trifle with their children, and bid them beware the Bugg, &c.

Warning againſt falſe Prophets.

Lo Sir, how I run at riot beyond meaſure. When I began, I was minded to have written but half a dozen lines; but thus I forget my ſelf, ever when I write to a truſty friend, which will take in worth my folly, and keep it from mine Enemy, &c.

As for Dr. Wilſon, I wot not what I ſhould ſay; but I pray God endue him with charity. Neither he, nor any of his Country-men, did ever love me, ſince I did inveigh againſt their factions, and partiality in Cambridge. Before that, who was more favoured of him than I? That is the Byle that may not be touched, &c.

Dr. Wilſon againſt Mr. Latimer, and why.

A certain friend ſhewed me, that Dr. Wilſon is gone now into his Country about Beverley in Holdernes, and from thence he will go a progreſs through Yorkſhire, Lancaſhire, Cheſhire, and ſo from thence to Briſtol. What he intended by this Progreſs, God knoweth, and not I. If he come to Briſtol, I ſhall hear, till &c.

Hubberdin a great railer againſt Mr. Latimer.

As for Hubberdin (no doubt) he is a man of no great learning, nor yet of ſtable wit. He is here ſervus hominum; for he will preach whatſoever the Biſhops will bid him preach. Verily in my mind they are more to be blamed than he. He doth magnifie the Pope more than enough. As for our Saviour Chriſt and Chriſtian Kings, they are little beholding to him. No doubt he did miſs the Cuſhion in many things. Howbeit they that did ſend him, men think, will defend him; I pray God amend him and them both. They would fain make matter againſt me, intending ſo either to deliver him by me, or elſe to rid us both together, and ſo they would think him well beſtowed, &c.

Anno 1555.

As touching Dr. Powel, how highly he took upon him in Briſtol, and how little he regarded the Sword, which repreſenteth the Kings Perſon, many can tell you. I think there is never an Earl in this Realm that knoweth his obedience by Chriſts Commandment to his Prince, and wotteth what the Sword doth ſignifie, that would have taken upon him ſo ſtoutly. Howbeit Mr. Maior, as he is a profound wiſe man, did twit him prettily; it were too long to write all. Our Pilgrimages are not a little beholding to him. For to occaſion the people to them, he alledged this Text:

Dr. Powel a ſtout Preacher of Popery.

Omnis qui relinquit patrem, domos, uxorem; i. Whoſoever leaveth father, houſe, wife, &c. By that you may perceive his hot zeal and crooked judgment, &c. Becauſe I am ſo belied, I could wiſh that it would pleaſe the Kings Grace to command me to preach before his Highneſs a whole year together every Sunday, that he himſelf might perceive how they bely me, ſaying, that I have neither learning, nor utterance worthy thereunto, &c. I pray you pardon me, I cannot make an end.

Scripture applied of the Papiſts.

A brief digreſſion touching the railing of Hubberdin againſt Mr. Latimer.

Forаſmuch as mention hath been made in this Letter of Hubberdin, an old Divine of Oxford, a right painted Phariſee, and a great ſtrayer abroad in all quarters of the Realm to deface and impeach the ſpringing of Gods holy Goſpel, ſomething would be added more touching that man, whoſe doings and pageants, if they might be deſcribed at large, it were as good as any Enterlude for the Reader to behold. Who in all his life, and in all his actions (in one word to deſcribe him) ſeemeth nothing elſe but a right Image or a Counterfeit, ſetting out unto us in lively colours the pattern of perfect hypocriſie. But becauſe the man is now gone, to ſpare therefore the dead (although he little deſerved to be ſpared, which never ſpared to work what villany he could againſt the true Servants of the Lord) this ſhall be enough for examples ſake, for all Chriſtian men neceſſarily to obſerve, how the ſaid Hubberdin, after his long railing in all places againſt Luther, Melanthon, Zuinglius, John Frith, Tindall, Latimer, and all other like Profeſſors, after his hypocritical open Alms given out of other mens Purſes, his long Prayers, pretenced Devotions, devout Faſtings, his woolward going, and other his prodigious demeanour, riding in his long Gown down to the Horſe heels like a Phariſee, or rather like a Sloven, dirted up to the Horſe belly, after his forged Tales and Fables, Dialogues, Dreams, Dancings, Hoppings and Leapings, with other like Hiſtrionical toyes and geſtures uſed in the Pulpit, and all againſt Hereticks; at laſt riding by a Church ſide, where the Youth of the Pariſh were dancing in the Church-yard, ſuddenly this Silenus lighting from his horſe, by the occaſion of their dancing came into the Church, and there cauſing the Bell to toll-in the People, thought in ſtead of a fit of mirth to give them a Sermon of dancing. In the which Sermon, after he had patched up certain common Texts out of the Scriptures, and then coming to the Doctors, firſt to Auguſtine, then to Ambroſe, ſo to Jerom and Gregory, Chryſoſtom and other Doctors, had made them every one (after his Dialogue manner) by name to anſwer to his call, and to ſing after his tune for the probation of the Sacrament of the Altar againſt John Frith, Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Luther, Tindall, Latimer, and other Hereticks (as he called them) at laſt to ſhew a perfect harmony of all theſe Doctors together; as he had made them before to ſing after his tune, ſo now to make them dance alſo after his Pipe, firſt he calleth out Chriſt and his Apoſtles, then the Doctors and ancient Seniors of the Church, as in a round ring all to dance together; with pipe up Hubberdin. Now dance Chriſt, now dance Peter, Paul, now dance Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Jerom; and thus old Hubberdin, as he was dancing with his Doctors luſtily in the Pulpit againſt the Hereticks, how he ſtampt and took on I cannot tell, but craſh quoth the Pulpit, down cometh the Dancer, and there lay Hubberdin not dancing, but ſprawling in the midſt of his Audience; where altogether he brake not his neck, Hubberdin dancing in the Pulpit.

A dancing Sermon of Hubberdin.

Hubberdin fell with Pulpit, and brake his leg.

Ann. 1555. Neck, yet he ſo brake his Leg the ſame time, and bruiſed his Old Bones, that he never came in Pulpit more, and died not long after the ſame. Whereupon when the Church-Wardens were called, and charged for the Pulpit being no ſtronger, they made anſwer again, excuſing themſelves, that they had made their Pulpit for Preaching, and not for dancing, &c. But to ſpend no more Paper about this idle matter, now to our purpoſe again.

Amongſt many other impugners and adverſaries, whereof there was no ſmall ſort which did infeſt this good Man in Sermons; ſome alſo there were, which attempted the Pen againſt him. In the number of whom was one Doctor Sherwood, who upon the ſame occaſion of preaching of the Virgin Mary (or as they thought, againſt the Virgin) did invade him with his Pen, writing againſt him in Latine, whoſe long Epiſtle, with Mr. Latimers anſwer alſo in Latin to the ſame hereunder followeth.

Epiſtola Gulielmi Sherwodi adverſus Dominum Latimerum expoſtulatoria.

Gulielmus Sherwodus Presbiter, D. Latimero Kingtoniæ Rectori, gratiam & pacem à Deo Patre noſtro, & Domino Jeſu Chriſto.

NIhil moleſtè feres ſat ſcio, vir egregie, ab homine chriſtiano chriſtianè admoneri, quæ res una (eſt Deus teſtis) nos hoc tempore animavit liberius tecum per literas (quando coram fandi copia negatur) confabulari ſuper nonnullis, quæ parum chriſtianè in concione illa tua (ſi modo concio & non verius multo Satyra quædam inſana dicenda) Magnesfeldiæ effudiſſe mihi videbare. Ac primum quidem proverbio illo de fure & paſtore (quanquam proverbii vocem parabolæ vice mihi uſurpaſſe videtur Evangeliſta) carpſit, ut rectè & vere aiebas, Chriſtus Scribarum & Phariſæorum (utpote Deus, eoque πρόγνωσιν.) veſaniam obduratamque incredulitatem, ſed clam, ſed tectè, ſed in genere. Non aiebat, Scribæ & Phariſæi ad unum fures ſunt & latrones. Sed quid? Amen dico vobis qui non intrat per oſtium in ſtabulum ovium, ſed aſcendit aliunde, ille fur eſt & latro. Tu contra homo patentium intuitor, non mentium rimator. Epiſcopi omnes, Papæ omnes, Rectores eccleſiarum omnes (te uno pauciſque aliis, quos neſcio, tuæ farinæ hominibus, id enim ſenſiſſe videris, exceptis) vicarij omnes fures ſunt, & latrones, quibus furibus, quibus latronibus ſuffocandis ne Angliæ totius quidem canabum ſufficere prædicabas, aut verius dementabas, hyperbole forſan, ut ſemper, uſus, ſed temeraria, ſed audaci ſupra modum, ſed truci, ſed impia. Non eſt, mi frater, non eſt ſic temere, ſi divo credimus Paulo, ante tempus judicandum, quod veniet Dominus qui & illuminabit abſcondita tenebrarum, & manifeſtabit conſilia cordium: Chriſtus quoque ipſe, Judex vivorum & mortuorum à Deo patre conſtitutus, temerariam ejuſmodi proximi condemnationem apud Matthæum, chriſtiano homini mihi ſuſtuliſſe videtur, quum inquit; Nolite condemnare, ne condemnemini, nec tanti flagitii ſubticens pœnam. Quo enim (inquit) judicio judicatis, eo judicabitur de vobis, & qua menſura metimini, ea metientur vobis & alii. Volo hominum vitia taxari, volo ſua ſcelera populo prædicari, annunciari, revelari, & ſi fieri poſſit, ob oculos poni, non debacchari in homines eoſque abſentes, non poni lucem tenebras, & tenebras lucem, non dici bonum malum, & malum bonum, dulce amarum, & amarum dulce. Quod ſi fit, verendum ne dum alius alium mordemus & devoramus, viciſſim alius ab alio conſumetur. An iſta parcius, imo modeſtius viris objicienda, ipſe videto. Novimus, & qui te tranſverſa tuentibus birquis, & quo, ſed faciles, nimphæ riſere ſacello. Heu, heu, Latimere, quæ te dementia cæpit, ut mentireris, dixiſſem prædicares, plures longe in Chriſti eccleſia fures eſſe, quam paſtores, plures hœdos quam oves? Non ſic Cyprianus ille, non ſic. Sed quid? Eſt, inquit, Deus verax, omnis autem homo mendax. Stat confeſſorum, hoc eſt (ut ipſe intelligit pie) Chri[illegible]ianorum pars major & melior in fidei ſuæ robore, [illegible] legis ac diſciplinæ dominicæ veritate, nec ab eccleſi[illegible] diſcedunt, qui ſe in eccleſia gratiam conſeca[illegible] Dei dignatione meminerunt. Atque hoc ipſi ampl[illegible] ſequuntur fidei ſuæ laudem, quòd ab eorum perfidia [illegible] regati, qui junctis confeſſionis conſortio fuerint, à contagionis crimine receſſerunt. Vero illuminati evangelij lumine, pura & candida domini luce radiati, tam ſunt in conſervanda Chriſti pace laudabiles, quam fuerunt in diaboli congreſſione Victores. Quæ ſanctiſſimi hominis ſanctiſſima verba, auſim, te etiam reclamante, de ea ipſa, quæ nunc, eccleſia, prædicare, vereq; affirmare; quam ubi ex confeſſoribus Chriſti filij Dei vivi pepinxiſſes, ſtatim ubi eſſet gentium te neſcire prædicabas. Dicebas enim, Quiſquis cum Petro Chriſtum Dei viventis filium fatetur, Petrus eſt, & de eccleſia, ſeu uti ipſe interpretabaris, congregatione (ſubdola nimirum uſus arte, ac cæco potius præſtigio) ac ſi hoc loci magis nihil ad Petrum, Chriſti in terris ſummum Vicarium, attineret, quam ex chriſtianis alium quemlibet. Eſto, ſimus nos, ut Origenis utar verbis, aliquo modo Petrus; ſi dixerimus quod dixit Petrus; Tu es Chriſtus, Filius Dei vivi, non carne & ſanguine nobis revelante, ſed Patre qui eſt in cœlis mentem noſtram illuminante, non alio dicendi genere dicemus hæc nobis Petri competere verba, quam ipſi Petro? Abſit procul, abſit. Nam ſecundum Chriſti nomen omnes qui ſunt illius Chriſti dicuntur, dicente propheta; Ut ſalvos faciat Chriſtus ſuos. Item. Nolite tangere Chriſtos meos, & tum alio longe modo hic, alio illi unctionis vocabulo inſigniuntur. Sanius certe Roterodamus, cujus imitatorem, & ſequacem ſtrenuum te in nonnullis video. Is (tu es Petrus & mox quæ ſequuntur) in primis in Romanum pontificem, ut in Chriſtianæ fidei principem competere ait, omnium ſemoto dubio, annotatione in 16 Matthæi caput; quanquam plus æquo Origeanæ ſententiæ inniti ibidem mihi videtur. Quod ſi dixerimus te authore æqualiter, & indiſcriminatim hæc de Petro, & omnibus chriſtianis intelligi, incidemus in illam Lutheranam ſententiam; Omnes Chriſtianos eſſe ſacerdotes, & ordinatam nullam poteſtatem accipere, quam antea non habebant, ſed deputari tantum ad licite utendum poteſtate prius habita; quæ ſententia jam olim eſt ab eccleſia damnata.

Ad hæc aiebas Chriſtum, quum minima vocaret præcepta, Scribarum & Phariſæorum alluſiſſe impietati, qui ut ſua eveherent, & amplificarent, minima dicebant divina. Multum hic diſcors es ab Origene, Scripturarum interprete, ſaneq; vigilantiſſimo, qui Homilia in Matthæum quinta adeo non negat revera quædam Dei præcepta dici, & eſſe minima, ut ex ſolutione, & obſervatione eorum minimum & magnum dici in regno cœlorum nihil obſcure prædicet. Simul pugnat quod tum Chriſtus ipſe ſeorſum à plebe & populo cum pauculis Diſcipulis, ſuæ cæleſtis tum ſolis, Doctrinæ capacibus in monte verſabatur, nihil interim cum Scribis, nihil cum Phariſæis tractans, ut divina illa concione ſua prorſus indignis.

Subjunxiſti chriſtiane parum ut mihi videbatur, hominem chriſtianum carnis acquieſcentem deſideriis, non magis chriſtianum eſſe, quam ſit Judæus, quam ſit Turcus. Hoc mihi non chriſtianum, ſed Oecolampadianum.

* Deſunt nonnulla, quæ conjecturis forſan utcunq; ſuppleri poſſunt ex ſequenti Latimeri reſponſione.

Sit opus, quam ad beneficam Petri confeſſionem germanis fructibus referandam. Quid tu hic tibi velis neſcio. Si eſt aliquis Petri primatus, is certe Catholico cuilibet pro viribus defendendus eſt. Eſt aliquis Petri primatus; alioqui Chriſti verbum inefficax eſt (tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum, &c.) Si nihil eſt opus ut defenſetur Petri primatus, nihil eſt opus ut defenſetur veritas. Et ob veritatem ad necem uſque mortali cuilibet certandum. Non puto quenquam germanis fructibus referre poſſe beneficam Petri confeſſionem, negando Petri primatum: beneficæ Petri confeſſio, an non eſt Jeſum eſſe Chriſtum filium Dei viventis? Dei filius eſt veritas. At non Chriſtus, ſi nullus eſt Petri primatus. Hic fœde lapſus mihi videre. Nihil enim alienum eſſe puto à beneficæ Chriſti confeſſione, ſi quis pro virili ſedem tueatur & defenſet Apoſtolicam.

Apertiſſimum mendacium eſſe clamitas, Chriſtum cum pauculis Diſcipulis in monte ſeorſum à turba verſatum fuiſſe. Apertiſſime tum mecum mentis eſt Origenes, Scripturarum interpres vigilantiſſimus, qui Homilia in Mattheum 5. inquit, Deſcendente Jeſu de monte, ſequutæ ſunt eum turbæ multæ, Docente vero Domino in monte, Diſcipuli erant cum ipſo, quibus datum erat cæleſtis doctrinæ noviſſe ſecreta, per quæ ſalutis ſcientia brutorum corda ſalirent, cæcorumque oculis per mundanæ delectationis tenebras caligantibus, lucem patefecerunt veritatis, Unde & Dominus ad eos: Vos eſtis (inquit) ſal terræ, vos eſtis & lumina mundi. Nunc vero deſcendente eo de monte, turbæ ſecutæ ſunt eum. In montem ſcilicet aſcendere nequaquam poterant, quia quos delictorum ſarcinæ deprimunt, ad myſteriorum ſublimia, niſi abjecto onere, ſcandere minime valent. Audis noſtram, non tuam ab Origene probari ſententiam:

Notas præterea, quos neſcio, tibi tum notiſſimos; alij nonnulli pſeudo-prædicatores, qui populo ſuadent chriſtiano ſat eſſe, ſi credit quemadmodum credit eccleſia, & neſcire interim quid, aut quomodo credat, ita miſerum vulgus ab ampliore Dei agnitione quærenda dehortando. Iniqua, & præceps ſatis cenſura in verbi Dei miniſtros. Tales ſiqui ſunt, debemus Lutheranæ & Hæreticorum eccleſiæ: in noſtra eſſe nequeunt, quum pollicitus ſit ſponſus ad conſummationem uſque ſeculi ſe non deſerturum ſponſam ſuam eccleſiam. Quæ dicis reliqua, quum ſint mera convitia tranſeo.

Quod ſatis declarat, quod poſtremo pene dicis argute philoſophatum me de juſtificatione fidei, interim mea nihil convellens. An hoc eſt argute philoſophari de juſtificatione fidei, dicere fidem juſtificare, ſed non ſolam, imo & opera ſuam habere juſtitiam, ſed in fide, ſed in charitate? Hoc ego arguebam quod opera diceres non juſtificare. Si hoc eſt philoſophari, ego ſum philoſophatus, & non ego tantum, ſed et Jacobus Apoſtolus. Fides eſt, fateor, ut recte dixit Auguſtinus, Fundamentum & radix juſtæ vitæ, qua conſequimur bonorum operum voluntatem, ac ita juſtitiam. Tantum ne putet quis juſtitiam ſola animi exiſtimatione finiri, omni bono & pio excluſo opere. Cætera, quum non agnoſcis, ego ſepelio. Unum id adjiciens, ſi bene feceris, bene recipies; ſin autem male, ecce in foribus aderit peccatum tuum. Alias nacto otio abundantius. Interim vale. Derhamia.

Salutem plurimam.

NOn equidem ſum ego vel adeo ferox, quod ſciam, vir item eximie, ut ab homine Chriſtiano chriſtiane admoneri moleſte feram, vel adeo inſenſatus, & à communi ſenſu alienus (ni fallor) ut me prius ſuggillatum fuiſſe abs te & inter pocula, neque ſemel ſuggillatum, quam admonitum, imo nec admonitum tandem ſed acerrime, potius redargutum, ſed convitiis & mendaciis male habitum potius, ſed calumniis inique affectum potius, ſed falſo condemnatum potius, conſtanter probem. Quod ſi tuis biſce literis pro illarum jure & mei animi ductu ego jam reſponderem. Sed cohibeo me, ne dum conor tuo morbo mederi, bilem tibi moveam homini vel citra ſtumulum (ut præ ſe ferunt literæ) plus quam oportet bilioſo. Imo det utrique Deus, quod ipſe utrique norit commodo fore, & mihi videlicet vel in mediis calumniis patientiam chriſtiano homine dignam, & tibi judicium aliquando tam rectum, quam nunc habes zelum tuopte marte bene fervidum. Conducibilius, opinor, fuerit ſic orare, quam ejuſmodi criminationi apologiam parare, quum & ego jam negotioſior ſum pro concione mihi perendie dicenda, quam ut commode poſſim reſpondere; & mendaciora ſint tua omnia, quam ut jure debeam ea confutare. Sed ut paucis tamen multis, ſi fieri poſſit, ſatisfaciam, primum operæpretium fuerit in medium ſtatuere, & quid ego dixi, & quid tu ex dictis collegiſti. Collegiſti quidem multa veluti ſanguinem è ſilice collidendo excuſſurus. Sed ſic eſt affectus, uti video, erga me tuus, quem ob rabiem ejuſdem ægre noſti diſſimulare. Eſto, dixerim ego omnes Papas, omnes Epiſcopos, Vicarios, Rectoreſque omnes, per oſtium non intrantes, ſed aſcendentes aliunde, fures & latrones eſſe. Dum ſic dixi, ex introitu & aſcenſu, non ex perſonis & titulis, cum Chriſto ſum rem metitus. Hinc tu tua Minerva colligis, omnes Papas, omnes Epiſcopos, Vicarios, Rectoreſque omnes, ſimpliciter fures eſſe, ſaltem ſic me dixiſſe. Num juſta hic (mi frater) collectio? An non juſte in te quadret illud Pauli ad Romanos? Sic aiunt nos dicere, ſic male loquuntur de nobis ſed quorum damnatio juſta eſt (inquit:) & tamen juſtius videri poſſunt ex Paulo collegiſſe adverſarij, quam tu ex me. Jam ſi idem Dei verbum nunc quod prius, neque minus Deo gratum acceptumque, quiſquis interim Miniſter verbi fuerit, nonne & eadem damnatio calumniatores Miniſtri nunc manet quæ olim? Longe intereſt, dicas, omnes per oſtium non intrantes fures eſſe, & omnes ſimpliciter fures eſſe. Sed unde (quæſo) dum ego dico omnes per oſtium non intrantes fures eſſe, videor tibi dicere omnes ſimpliciter fures eſſe? niſi forte plerique omnes videntur tibi aliunde aſcendere, & non per oſtium intrare? Quod ſi ſenſeris, at nolito dicere ſi ſapis (ſapis autem plurimum) quod ſentis. Cum quanto enim id dixeris tuo periculo) ipſe videris. Et niſi id ſenſeris, cur, per Deum immortalem, ego non poſſum dicere omnes eſſe fures, qui per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde, quibuſcunque interim titulis ſplendeſcant, niſi videar tibi dicere ſtatim omnes ad unum fures eſſe; & tum quæ te potius cepit dementia, dum ſic colligis, ut plures fures quam paſtores colligendo eſſe feceris. Nam, velis nolis, verum eſt quod ego dixi, nempe quotquot per oſtium non intrant, ſed aliunde aſcendunt, fures & latrones eſſe, ſeu Papæ, ſeu Epiſcopi fuerint. Quare dum ſic in ipſo exorbitas limine, quorſum attinet reliqua examinare? Sed age, hoc tibi arridet plurimum, quod Phariſæi ſunt tam recte à Chriſto reprehenſi, & non palam, quomodo tum non diſplicebit è regione tibi acerbiſſima illa, ſimul & apertiſſima criminatio, in os & coram turba illis objecta, (Væ vobis Scribæ & Phariſæi hypocritæ) ubi nominati taxantur? Sed Chriſtus, inquis, Deus erat pervicaciam cordis conſpicatus. Tu vero homo patientium intuitor, non mentium rimator: Sum ſane homo (uti dicis) id quod citra tuam operam jam olim habeo exploratum: homo (inquam) ſum, non labem in alieno corde delitescentem, ſed vitam omnibus patentem & expoſitam intuitus, adeoque ex fructibus cognoſcens, quos Chriſtus admonuit ex fructibus cognoſcendos, ipſum quorundam vivendi genus libenter damnans: denique, quod in ſacris literis, ſacriſque interpretibus damnatum toties comperio, nihil id quidem moratus, quæcunque ipſum amplectuntur perſonæ: quod dum ego facio, neque cordium latebras ulterius penetro, nonne immerito abs te reprehendor? qui non homo mecum, ſed pluſquam homo es, dum mei animi emphaſim melius noſti per arrogantiam, quam egomet novi, utpote qui non ſat habes quæ dico noviſſe, ſed quæ ſentio nondum dicta noveris, abditiſſima cordis mei penitiſſime rimatus, ne non ſcire inte ipſum competeret, quod in me torquere molitus es; nimirum noli ante tempus judicare, noli condemnare, ut diſcas quam oportet mendacem non eſſe immemorem, ne proprio forſan gladio juguletur, & in foveam incidat ipſe, quam ſtruxerat alteri. Nam dum ego pronuncio fures eſſe, quotquot per oſtium non intrantes aſcendunt aliunde; tibi non verba ſolum audienti ſed & corculum meum contemplanti omnes ad unum fures eſſe pronuntio, excepto meipſo videlicet & illis meæ farinæ hominibus neſcio (inquis) quos. Sed quis illam fecit exceptionem niſi tu qui cognoſcens occulta cordium, ſic inquis, ſenſiſſe videris? Sed tibi ſic ſenſiſſe videor, cui & dixiſſe videor, quod (ut liquidiſſime conſtat) neutiquam dixi. Sed tibi peculiare eſt alios à cordis intuitu prohibere, ut ipſe intuearis ſolus quicquid eſt in corde, acie videlicet tam perſpicaci, ut videas in corde, quod in corde nondum eſt natum: id quod ibi facis, dum quod ego de eccleſia recte dixi, tu tuo more calumniaris inique, quaſi ego, quod ad uſum clavium attinet, æquaſſem omnes cum Petro, cum ne unum quidem verbum de clavium poteſtate ſit dictum; imo ne cogitatum quidem, neque Petri primatui derogatum, ut cujus nulla ſit facta mentio. Sed tu pro tuo candore ſic colligis, dum ego nil aliud quam admonui auditores eccleſiam Chriſti ſupra petram non ſuper arenam fundatam, ne mortua fide plus ſatis hæreant, tum perituri & portis inferorum fœdiſſime ceſſuri, ſed fidem operibus oſtendant, tum demum vitam æternam habituri. Quid ego minus quam omnes Chriſtianos, ut ego ſum, ſacerdotes dixerim eſſe? Sed oculatiſſimi ſunt invidi ad colligendum quod venantur. Nonne hic optimo jure gogor nonnihil chriſtianæ charitatis in tuo pectore deſiderari? qui dum neſcis confutare quod dico, miris modis mihi impingis quod poſſis confutare. Tu vero optime noſti quid ſentit Lutherus de eccleſia. Et ego non gravabor ſubſcribere, quid ſentit poſt multos alios Lyranus ſuper 16. Beſides theſe Latin Letters above expreſſed, other Letters alſo he wrote in Engliſh, as well to others, as namely to Sir Edward Baynton Knight, which Letters, becauſe they do contain much fruitful matter, worthy to be read and known, I thought here preſently to inſert, which albeit may ſeem ſomewhat prolix in reading; yet the fruit thereof I truſt ſhall recompence the length of them.

The Copy of a Letter ſent by Mr. Latimer, Parſon of Weſtkington, in the County of Wiltſhire, to Sir Edward Baynton Knight.

Salutem in Chriſto.

RIght worſhipful Sir, I recommend me unto your Maſterſhip with hearty thanks for your ſo friendly, ſo charitable, and ſo mindful remembrance of me ſo poor a Wretch. Whereas of late I received your Letters by Mr. Bonnam, perceiving therein both who be grieved with me, wherefore, and what behoveth me to do, in caſe I muſt needs come up, which your goodneſs towards me with all other ſuch like to recompence, whereas I my ſelf am not able, I ſhall not ceaſe to pray my Lord God, which both is able, and alſo doth indeed reward all them that favour the favourers of his Truth for his ſake; for the Truth is a common thing, pertaining to every man, for the which every man ſhall anſwer another day. And I deſire favour neither of your Maſterſhip, neither of any man elſe, but in truth, and for the truth, I take God to witneſs, which knoweth all. In very deed Mr. Chancellor did ſhew me that my Lord Biſhop of London had ſent Letters to him for me; and I made anſwer that he was mine Ordinary, and that both he might and ſhould reform me as far as I needed reformation, as well and as ſoon as my Lord of London. And I would be very loath (now this deep Winter) being ſo weak and ſo feeble (not only exerciſed with my old Diſeaſe in my head and ſide, but alſo with new, both the Chin[illegible] and the Stone) to take ſuch a journey; and though he might ſo do, yet he needed not, for he was not bound to do: notwithſtanding I ſaid, if he, to do my Lord of London pleaſure to my great diſpleaſure, would needs command me to go, I would obey his commandment, yea though it ſhould be never ſo great a grievance, and painful to me; with the which anſwer he was content, ſaying, he would certifie my Lord of London thereof, truſting his Lordſhip would be content with the ſame: but as yet I hear nothing from him. Mr. Chancellor alſo ſaid, that my Lord of London maketh as though he were greatly diſpleaſed with me, for that I did contemn his Authority, at my laſt being in London. Forſooth I preached in Abbe-Church, not certain then (as I remember) whether in his Dioceſs or no, intending nothing leſs than to contemn his Authority, and this I did not of mine own ſwinge, or by mine own procuration, but at the requeſt of honeſt Merchant men (as they ſeemed to me) whoſe names I do not know, for they were not of mine acquaintance before; and I am glad thereof for their ſakes, leſt if I knew them, I ſhould be compelled to utter them ſo, and their godly deſire to hear godly preaching, ſhould return to their trouble: for they required me very inſtantly, and to ſay the truth, even importunately. Whether they were of that Pariſh or no, I was not certain: But they ſhewed not only themſelves, but alſo many other to be very deſirous to hear me, pretending great hunger and thirſt of the Word of God, and Ghoſtly Doctrine. And upon conſideration, and to avoid all inconveniencies, I put them off, and refuſed them twice or thrice, till at the laſt they brought me word that the Parſon and Curate were not only content, but alſo deſired me, notwithſtanding that they certified him both of my name plainly, and alſo that I had not the Biſhops Seal to ſhew for me, but only a Licence of the Univerſity; which Curate did receive me, welcomed me, and when I ſhould go into the Pulpit, gave me the common benediction; ſo that I had not been alone uncharitable, but alſo churliſhly uncharitable, if I ſhould have ſaid nay. Now all this ſuppoſed to be truth (as it is) I marvel greatly how my Lord of London can alledge any contempt of him in me.

Firſt, He did never inhibit me in my life; and if he did inhibit his Curate to receive me, what pertaineth that to me, which neither did know thereof, nor yet made any ſuit to the Curate deceitfully, nor did it appear to me very likely that the Curate would ſo little have regarded my Lords inhibition, which he maintaineth ſo vigilantly, not knowing my Lords mind before. Therefore I conjectured with my ſelf, that either the Curate was of ſuch acquaintance with my Lord, that he might admit whom he would, or elſe (and rather) that it was a train and a trap laid before me, to the intent that my Lord himſelf, or other pertaining to him, was appointed to have been there, and to have taken me if they could in my Sermon: which conjecture both occaſioned me ſomewhat to ſuſpect thoſe men which deſired me, though they ſpeak never ſo fair and friendly, and alſo rather to go. For I preach nothing, but if it might be ſo, I would my Lord himſelf might hear me every Sermon I preach. So certain I am that it is truth, that I take in hand to preach. If I had with power of my friends (the Curate gain-ſaying and notwithſtanding) preſumed to have gone into the Pulpit, there had been ſomething wherefore to pretend a contempt. I preached in Kent alſo, at the inſtant requeſt of a Curate; yet hear I not that his Ordinary layeth any contempt to my charge, or yet doth trouble the Curate. I marvel not a little, how my Lord Biſhop of London, having ſo broad, wide, and large a Dioceſs committed mitted unto his Cure, and ſo peopled as it is, can have leiſure for preaching and teaching the Word of God, Opportunè, importunè, tempeſtivè, intempeſtivè, privatum, publicè, to his own Flock, inſtando, arguendo, exhortando, monendo, cum omni lenitate & doctrina, have leiſure (I ſay) either to trouble me, or to trouble himſelf with me, ſo poor a wretch, a ſtranger to him, and nothing pertaining to his Cure, but as every man pertaineth to every mans Cure, ſo intermixing and intermedling himſelf with another mans Cure, as though he had nothing to do in his own. If I would do as ſome men ſay my Lord doth, gather up my joyſe, as we call it, warily and narrowly, and yet neither preach for it in mine own Cure, nor yet otherwhere, peradventure he would nothing deny me. In very deed I did moniſh Judges and Ordinaries to uſe charitable equity in their Judgments towards ſuch as he accuſed, namely, of ſuch Accuſers, which be as like to hear and bewray, as other be to ſay amiſs, and to take mens words in the meaning thereof, and not to wreſt them in another ſenſe than they were ſpoken in: For all ſuch Accuſers and Witneſſes do falſe before God, as S. Hierom ſaith upon the 26th Chapter of S. Matthew. Nor yet do I accompt thoſe Judges well adviſed, which wittingly will give Sentence after ſuch Witneſſes, much leſs thoſe which procure ſuch Witneſſes againſt any man: Nor do I think Judges now adays ſo deeply confirmed in grace, or ſo impeccable, but that it may behoove and become Preachers, to admoniſh them to do well, as well as other kinds of men, both great and ſmall. And this I did, occaſioned of the Epiſtle which I declared, Rom. 6. wherein is this Sentence, Non eſtis ſub lege, ſed ſub gratia, Ye Chriſtian men that believe in Chriſt, are not under the Law. What a ſaying is this (quoth I) if it be not rightly underſtood, that is, as S. Paul did underſtand it? for the words ſound as though he would go about to occaſion Chriſtian men to break Law, ſeeing they be not under the Law: And what if the Pſeudapoſtles, Adverſaries to S. Paul, would have ſo taken them, and accuſed S. Paul of the ſame to my Lord of London? if my ſaid Lord would have heard S. Paul declare his own mind of his own words, then he ſhould have eſcaped, and the falſe Apoſtles put to rebuke; if he would have rigorouſly followed utcunque allegata & probata, and have given Sentence after relation of the Accuſers, then good St. Paul muſt have born a Faggot at Paul's Croſs, my Lord of London being his Judge. O, it had been a godly ſight to have ſeen S. Paul with a Faggot on his back, even at Paul's Croſs, my Lord of London Biſhop of the ſame, ſitting under the Croſs. Nay, verily I dare ſay, my Lord ſhould ſooner have burned him, for S. Paul did not mean that Chriſtian men might break Law, and do whatſoever they would, becauſe they were not under the Law: but he did mean, that Chriſtian men might keep the Law, and fulfil the Law, if they would, becauſe they were not under the Law, but under Chriſt, by whom they were divided from the tyranny of the Law, and above the Law, that is to ſay, able to fulfil the Law to the pleaſure of him that made the Law, which they could never do of their own ſtrength, and without Chriſt: ſo that to be under the Law, after S. Paul's meaning, is to be weak to ſatisfie the Law; and what could S. Paul do with all, though his Adverſaries would not ſo take it? But my Lord would ſay peradventure, that men will not take the Preachers words otherwiſe than they mean therein. Bona verba; as though S. Paul's words were not otherwiſe taken, as it appeareth in the third Chapter to the Romans, where he ſaith, Quod injuſtitia noſtra Dei juſtitiam commendat, that is to ſay, our unrighteouſneſs commendeth and maketh more excellent the righteouſneſs of God, which ſoundeth to many as though they ſhould be evil, that good ſhould come of it, and by unrighteouſneſs to make the righteouſneſs of God more excellent. So S. Paul was reported to mean; yet he did mean nothing ſo; but ſhewed the ineſtimable wiſdom of God, which can uſe our naughtineſs to the manifeſtation of his unſpeakable goodneſs; not that we ſhould do naughtily to that end and purpoſe. Now my Lord will not think (I dare ſay) that S. Paul was to blame that he ſpake no more circumſpectly, more warily, or more plainly, to avoid evil offence of the People; but rather he will blame the People, for that they took no better heed and attendance of Paul's ſpeaking, to the underſtanding of the ſame: yea, he will rather pity the People, which had been ſo long nuzled in the Doctrine of the Phariſees, and wallowed ſo long in darkneſs of mans Traditions, Superſtitions, and trade of Living, that they were unapt to receive the bright lightneſs of the Truth, and wholeſom Doctrine of God, uttered by S. Paul. Nor do I think that my Lord will require more circumſpection, or more convenience to avoid offence of Errours in me; than was in S. Paul, when he did not eſcape malevolous corrections, and ſlanderous reports of them that were of perverſe Judgments, which reported him to ſay whatſoever he appeared to them to ſay, or whatſoever ſeemed to them to follow of his ſaying: But what followeth? Sic aiunt nos dicere, ſic male loquuntur de nobis: ſo they report us to ſay, ſaith S. Paul; So they ſpeak evil of us: ſed quorum damnatio juſta eſt, but ſuch, whoſe damnation is juſt, ſaith he; and I think the damnation of all ſuch that evil report Preachers now adays, likewiſe juſt, for it is untruth now and then. Yea, Chriſt himſelf was miſreported, and falſly accuſed, both as touching his words, and alſo as concerning the meaning of his words. Firſt he ſaid, deſtruite, that is to ſay, deſtroy you; they made it poſſum deſtruere, that is to ſay, I can deſtroy: he ſaid Templum hoc, this Temple; they added manu factum, that is to ſay, made with hand, to bring it to a contrary ſenſe. So they both inverted his words, and alſo added unto his words, to alter his ſentence: for he did mean of the Temple of his Body, and they wreſted it to Solomon's Temple. Now I report me, whether it be a juſt fame raiſed up and diſperſed after this manner. Nay verily, for there be three manner of perſons which can make no credible information: Firſt, Adverſaries, Enemies: Secondly, Ignorant and without Judgment: Thirdly, Suſurrones, that is to ſay, whiſperers and blowers in mens ears, which will ſpew out in hudder mudder, more than they dare avow openly. The firſt will not, the ſecond cannot, the third dare not: therefore the relation of ſuch is not credible, and therefore they can make no fame lawful, nor occaſion any indifferent Judge to make Proceſs againſt any man; and it maketh no little matter what they be themſelves that report of any man, whether well or evil: for it is a great commendation to be evil ſpoken of, of them that be naught themſelves, and to be commended of the ſame, is many times no little reproach. God ſend us once all grace to wiſh well one to another, and to ſpeak well one of another. Me ſeems it were more comely for my Lord (if it were comely for me to ſay ſo) to be a Preacher himſelf, having ſo great a Cure as he hath, than to be a diſquieter and a troubler of Preachers, and to preach nothing at all himſelf. If it would pleaſe his Lordſhip to take ſo great a labour and pain at any time, as to come to preach in my little Biſhoprick at Weſtkingſton, whether I were preſent or abſent my ſelf, I would thank his Lordſhip heartily, and think my ſelf greatly bounden to him, that he of his charitable goodneſs would go ſo far to help to diſcharge me in my Cure, or elſe I were more unnatural than a Beaſt unreaſonable, nor yet would I diſpute, contend, or demand by what authority, or where he had authority ſo to do, as long as his predication were fruitful, and to the edification of my Pariſhioners. As for my Lord, he may do as it pleaſeth his Lordſhip. I pray God he do always as well as I would wiſh him ever to do: But I am ſure S. Paul, the true Miniſter of God, and faithful Diſpenſer of Gods Myſteries, and right Exemplar of all true and very Biſhops, ſaith in the firſt Chapter to the Philippians, that in his time ſome preached Chriſt for envy of him, thinking thereby ſo to grieve him withal, and as it were to obſcure him, and to bring his Authority into contempt, ſome of good will and love, thinking thereby to comfort him: Notwithſtanding (ſaith he) by all manner of ways, and after all faſhions, whether it be of occaſion or of truth, as ye would ſay for Truths ſake, ſo that Chriſt be preached and ſhewed, I joy and will joy: ſo much he regarded more the glory of Chriſt, and promotion of Chriſts Doctrine, to the edification of Chriſtian ſouls, than the maintenance of his own authority, reputation and dignity, conſidering right well (as he ſaid) that what authority ſoever he had, it was to edification, and not to deſtruction. Now I think it were no reproach to my Lord, but very commendable, rather to joy with St. Paul, and be glad that Chriſt be preached quovis modo, yea, though it were for envy, that is to ſay, in diſdain, deſpite and contempt of his Lordſhip (which thing no man well adviſed will enterpriſe or attempt) then when the preaching cannot be proved juſtly, to demand of the Preacher auſterely, as the Phariſees did of Chriſt, qua authoritate hæc facis, aut quis dedit tibi iſtam authoritatem? As my authority is good enough, and as good as my Lord can give me any, yet I would be glad to have his alſo, if it would pleaſe his Lordſhip to be ſo good a Lord unto me. For the Univerſity of Cambridge hath authority Apoſtolick to admit twelve yearly, of the which I am one: and the Kings Highneſs, God ſave his Grace, did decree that all admitted of Univerſities ſhould preach thorow out all his Realm as long as they preached well, without diſtrain of any man, my Lord of Canterbury, my Lord of Dureſm, with ſuch other not a few, ſtanding by, and hearing the Decree, nothing gainſaying it, but conſenting to the ſame. Now to contemn my Lord of Londons Authority, were no little fault in me; ſo no leſs fault might appear in my Lord of London to contemn the Kings Authority and Decree, yea ſo godly, ſo fruitful, ſo commendable a Decree, pertaining both to the edification of Chriſtian ſouls, and alſo to the regard and defence of the Popiſh grace and authority Apoſtolick. To have a Book of the King not inhibited, is to obey the King, and to inhibit a Preacher of the Kings admitted, is it not to diſobey the King? Is it not one King that doth inhibit and admit, and hath he not as great authority to admit as to inhibit? He that reſiſteth the Power, whether admitting or inhibiting, doth he not reſiſt the Ordinance of God? We low Subjects are bound to obey Powers, and their Ordinances: and are not the higheſt Subjects alſo, who ought to give us enſample of ſuch obedience? As for my preaching it ſelf, I truſt in God, my Lord of London cannot rightfully blame it, nor juſtly reprove it, if it be taken with the circumſtance thereof, and as I ſpake it, or elſe it is not my preaching, but his that falſly reporteth it, as the Poet Martial ſaid to one that depraved his Book:

Latimer admitted by the Univerſity of Cambridge to preach.

Quem recitas meus eſt, O Fidentine, libellus:
Sed male cum recitas, incipit eſſe tuus.

But now I hear ſay that my Lord of London is informed, and upon the ſaid Information hath informed the King, that I go about to defend Bilney, and his cauſe, againſt his Ordinaries and his Judges, which I enſure is not ſo: for I had nothing to do with Bilney, nor yet with his Judges, except his Judges did him wrong; for I did nothing elſe but moniſh all Judges indifferently to do right; nor am I altogether ſo fooliſh as to defend the thing which I knew not. It might have become a Preacher to ſay as I ſaid, though Bilney had never been born. I have known Bilney a great while, I think much better than ever did my Lord of London: for I have been his Ghoſtly Father many a time; and to tell you the truth, what I have thought always in him, I have known hitherto few ſuch ſo prompt and ready to do every man good after his power, both friends and foe, noyſom wittingly to no man, and towards his enemy ſo charitable; ſo ſeeking to reconcile them, as he did, I have known yet not many; and to be ſhort, in ſum, a very ſimple good Soul, nothing fit or meet for this wretched world, whoſe blind faſhion and miſerable ſtate (yea far from Chriſts Doctrine) he could as evil bear, and would ſorrow, lament, and bewail it as much as any man that ever I knew: As for his ſingular learning, as well in holy Scripture, as in all other good Letters, I will not ſpeak of it. Notwithſtanding, if he either now of late, or at any time attempted any thing contrary to the obedience which a Chriſtian man doth owe either to his Prince or to his Biſhop, I neither do nor will allow and approve that, neither in him, nor yet in any other man: we be all men, and ready to fall; wherefore he that ſtandeth, let him beware he fall not. How he ordered or miſordered himſelf in judgment, I cannot tell, nor will I meddle withal; God knoweth, whoſe judgments I will not judge. But I cannot but wonder, if a man living ſo mercifully, ſo charitably, ſo patiently, ſo continently, ſo ſtudiouſly and vertuouſly, and killing his old Adam, that is to ſay, mortifying his evil affections, and blind motions of his heart ſo diligently, ſhould dye an evil death, there is no more, but let him that ſtandeth, beware that he fall not: for if ſuch as he ſhall dye evil, what ſhall become of me, ſuch a wretch as I am? But let this go, as little to the purpoſe, and come to the point we muſt reſt upon. Either my Lord of London will judge my outward man only, as it is ſaid, Omnes vident quæ foris ſunt, or elſe he will be my God, and judge mine inward man, as it is ſaid, Deus autem intuetur cor: If he will have to do only with mine outward man, and meddle with mine outward Converſation, how that I have ordered my ſelf toward my Chriſtian Brethren, the Kings Liege People, I truſt I ſhall pleaſe and content both my Lord God, and alſo my Lord of London: for I have preached and teached but according to holy Scripture, holy Fathers, and ancient Interpreters of the ſame, with the which I think my Lord of London will be pacified: for I have done nothing elſe in my preaching, but with all diligence moved my Auditors to Faith and Charity, to do their duty, and that that is neceſſary to be done. As for things of private devotion, mean things, and voluntary things, I have reproved the abuſe, the ſuperſtition of them, without condemnation of the things themſelves, as it becometh Preachers to do: which thing, if my Lord of London will do himſelf (as I would to God he would do) he ſhould be reported (no doubt) to condemn the uſe of ſuch things, of covetous men which have damage, and find leſs in their boxes by condemnation of the abuſe, which abuſe they ſaid rather ſhould continue ſtill, than their profit ſhould not continue (ſo thorny be their hearts.) If my Lord will needs coaſt and invade my inward man, will I, nill I, and break violently into my heart, I fear me I ſhall either diſpleaſe my Lord of London, which I would be very loath, or elſe my Lord God, which I will be more loath: not for any infidelity, but for ignorance, for I believe as a Chriſtian man ought to believe: but peradventure my Lord knoweth, and will know many things certainly, which (perchance) I am ignorant in, with the which ignorance, though my Lord of London may if he will be diſcontent, yet I truſt my Lord God will pardon it, as long as I hurt no man withal, and ſay to him with diligent ſtudy, and daily prayer, Paratum cor meum Deus, paratum cor meum, ſo ſtudying, preaching, and tarrying the pleaſure and leiſure of God: And in the mean ſeaſon, Acts 8. as Apollo did, when he knew nothing of Chriſt, but Baptiſmum Johannis, teach and preach mine, even Chriſtian that, and no farther than I know to be true. There be three Creeds, one in my Maſs, another in my Mattins, the third common to them that neither ſay Maſs, nor Mattins, nor yet know what they ſay when they ſay the Creed: and I believe all three with all that God hath left in holy Writ, for me and all other to believe: yet I am ignorant in things which I truſt hereafter to know, as I do now know things in which I have been ignorant heretofore: ever learn, and ever to be learned, to profit with learning, with ignorance not to annoy. I have thought in times paſt, that the Pope, Chriſts Vicar, hath been Lord of all the world as Chriſt is, ſo that if he ſhould have deprived the King of his Crown, or you of the Lordſhip of Bromeham, it had been enough; for he could do no wrong. Now I might be hired to think otherwiſe; notwithſtanding I have both ſeen and heard Scripture drawn to that purpoſe. I have thought in times paſt, that the Popes diſpenſations of Pluralities of Benefices, and abſence from the ſame, had diſcharged conſciences before God: faraſmuch as I have heard, Ecce vobiſcum ſum, & qui vos audit, bended to coroborate the ſame. Now I might be eaſily intreated to think otherwiſe, &c.

Bilney commended.

No man ſo old but he may learn.

I have thought in times paſt that the Pope could have ſpoiled Purgatory at his pleaſure with a word of his mouth; now learning might perſwade me otherwiſe, or elſe I would marvel why he would ſuffer ſo much money to be beſtowed that way, which ſo needful is to be beſtowed otherwiſe, and to deprive us of ſo many Patrons in Heaven as he might deliver out of Purgatory, &c. I have thought in times paſt, that if I had been a Frier, and in a Cowl, I could not have been damned, nor afraid of death, and by occaſion of the ſame, I have been minded many times to have been a Frier, namely, when I was ſore, ſick, and diſeaſed: Now I abhor my ſuperſtitious fooliſhneſs, &c. I have thought in times paſt, that divers Images of Saints could have holpen me, and done me much good, and delivered me of my diſeaſes: Now I know that one can help as much as another. And it pitieth mine heart, that my Lord, and ſuch as my Lord is, can ſuffer the People to be ſo craftily deceived. It were too long to tell you what blindneſs I have been in, and how long it were e're I could forſake ſuch folly, it was ſo corporate in me: but by continual Prayer, continual ſtudy of Scripture, and oft communing with men of more right judgment, God hath delivered me, &c. Yea, men think my Lord himſelf hath thought in times paſt, that by Gods Law a man might marry his Brothers wife, which now both dare think and ſay contrary: and yet this his boldneſs might have chanced, in Pope Julius's days, to ſtand him either in a fire, or elſe in a faggot. Which thing deeply conſidered, and pondered of my Lord, might ſomething ſtir him to charitable Equity, and to be ſomething remiſs toward men, which labour to do good as their power ſerveth with knowledge, and do hurt to no man with their ignorance: for there is no greater diſtance, than between Gods Law, and not Gods Law; nor is it ſo, or ſo, becauſe any man thinketh it ſo, or ſo: but becauſe it is ſo, or ſo indeed, therefore we muſt think it ſo, or ſo, when God ſhall give us knowledge thereof: for if it be indeed either ſo or not, it is ſo, or not ſo, though all the world hath thought otherwiſe theſe thouſands years, &c.

and

And finally as ye ſay, the matter is weighty, and ought ſubſtantially to be looked upon, even as weighty as my life is worth; but how to look ſubſtantially upon it, otherwiſe know not I, than to pray my Lord God day and night, that as he hath imboldened me to preach his truth, ſo he will ſtrengthen me to ſuffer for it, to the edification of them which have taken by the working of him fruit thereby, and even ſo I deſire you, and all other that favour me for his ſake, likewiſe to pray: for it is not I (without his mighty helping hand) that can abide that brunt; but I have truſt that God will help me in time of need, which if I had not, the Ocean Sea, I think, ſhould have divided my Lord of London and me by this day. For it is a rare thing for a Preacher to have favour at his hand which is no Preacher himſelf, and yet ought to be. I pray God that both he and I may both diſcharge our ſelves, he in his great Cure, and I in my little, to Gods pleaſure, and ſafety of our ſouls, Amen. I pray you pardon me, that I write no more diſtinctly, nor more truly, for my head is out of frame, that it would be too painful for me to write it again; and if I be not prevented, ſhortly I intend to make merry with my Pariſhioners this Chriſtmas, for all the ſorrow, leſt perchance I never return to them again: and I have heard ſay, that a Doe is as good in Winter, as a Buck in Summer.

A Letter of Sir Edward Baynton Kt. anſwering to the Letter of Mr. Latimer, ſent to him before.

The copy of Sir Edward Baynetons Letter to Mr. Latimer.

MAſter Latimer, after hearty recommendations; I have communicated the effect of your Letters to divers of my Friends, ſuch as for Chriſtian Charity (as they ſay) rather deſire in you a reformation, either in your opinion (if it ſwerve from the truth) or at the leaſt in your manner and behaviour, in as much as it giveth occaſion of ſlander and trouble, in let of your good purpoſes, than any other inconvenience to your perſon or good name. And foraſmuch as your ſaid Letter miſliketh them in ſome part, and that I have ſuch confidence in your Chriſtian breaſt, as in my judgment ye will conformably and gladly both hear, that may be reformed in you, and alſo (as it is worthy) ſo knowledge and confeſs the ſame: I have therefore deſired them to take the pain to note their minds in this Letter which I ſend to you, as aggregate of their ſayings, and ſent from me your aſſured friend and favourer, in that that is the very truth of Gods Word: wherein nevertheleſs, as I truſt you your ſelf will temper your own judgment, and in a ſoberneſs affirm no truth of your ſelf, which ſhould divide the Unity of the Congregation in Chriſt; and the received truth agreed upon by holy Fathers of the Church, conſonant to the Scripture of God, even ſo whatſoever ye will do therein (as I think ye will not do otherwiſe than ye ſhould do) I being unlearned, and not of the knowledge to give ſentence in this alteration and contention, muſt rather of good congruence ſhew my ſelf in that you diſagree with them, readier to follow their Doctrine in truth, than yours, unleſs it may pleaſe Almighty God to inſpire and confirm the hearts of ſuch people to reſtifie the ſame in ſome honeſt number, as ought to induce me to give credence unto them.

These friends of Mr. Baynton ſeem to be ſome Popiſh Prieſts, and enemies to the Goſpel, as Tempil, Watſon, Sharwood, Hatherdine, &c.

The Papiſts will not have unity diſturbed. Papiſts coloured with authority of holy Fathers.

Only God knoweth the certain truth, which is communicated to us, as our capacity may comprehend it by faith, but that it is per ſpeculum in ænigmate. And there hath been qui zelum Dei habuerunt; ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam. Among which I repute not you, but to this purpoſe I write it, that to call this or that truth, it requireth a deep and profound knowledge, conſidering that to me unlearned, that I take for truth may be otherwiſe, not having ſenſus exercitatos, as S. Paul ſaith, ad diſcernendum bonum & malum: and it is ſhewed me, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which cauſeth diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, is not of God, by the Doctrine of S. John in his Epiſtle, where he ſaith, Omnis qui confitetur Chriſtum in carne, &c. ex Deo eſt. And like as the Word of God hath always cauſed diſſention among men unchriſtened, whereupon hath enſued and followed Martyrdom to the Preacher, ſo in Chriſts Congregation, among them that profeſs Chriſts Name, In uno Domino, uno Baptiſmate, & una fide, they that preach and ſtir rather Contention than Charity, though they can defend their ſaying, yet their teaching is not to be taken as of God, in that it breaketh the chain of Chriſtian Charity, and maketh diviſion in the people, congregate and called by God into an unity of Faith and Baptiſm. But for this point I would pray to God, that not only in the truth may be agreement, but alſo ſuch ſoberneſs and uniform behaviour uſed in teaching and preaching, as men may wholly expreſs (as they may) the Charity of God, tending only to the union and love of us all, to the profit and ſalvation of our ſouls.

Mr. Baynton will follow the moſt number.

Note the proceeding of the Popes Church, which would not have the people certain of Gods truth and religion.

Error and falſe Doctrine would fain lye ſtill in peace, and not to be ſtirred.

Unity in the Lord, in Baptiſm, in Faith.

The chain of Chriſtian Charity.

The anſwer of Mr. Latimer to the Letter of Sir Edward Baynton above prefixed.

Anſwer of Mr. Latimer to Mr. Baynetons Letter.

RIght worſhipful Sir, and my ſingular good Maſter, ſalutem in Chriſto Ieſu, with due commendation and alſo thanks for your great goodneſs towards me, &c. And whereas you have communicate my laſt Letters to certain of your friends, which rather deſire this or that in me, &c. what I think therein I will not now ſay; not for that there could be any peril or danger in the ſaid Letters (well taken) as far as I can judge, but for that they were raſhly and unadviſedly ſcribled, as ye might well know both by my excuſe, and both by themſelves alſo, though none excuſe had been made. And beſides that, ye know right well, that whereas the Bee gathereth honey, even there the Spinner gathereth venome, not for any diverſity of the flower, but for divers natures in them that ſuck the flower: As in times paſt, and in the beginning, the very truth, and one thing in it ſelf, was to ſome offence, to ſome fooliſhneſs, to other otherwiſe diſpoſed, the wiſdom of God. Such diverſity was in the redreſs of hearers thereof.

The Bee, The Spinner.

Every thing as it is taken.

But this notwithſtanding, there is no more but either my writing is good, or bad. If it be good, the communicating thereof to your Friends cannot be hurtful to me; if it be otherwiſe, why ſhould you not communicate it to them, which both could and would inſtruct you in the truth, and reform my errour? Let this paſs, I will not contend: Had I wiſt cometh ever out of ſeaſon. Truly I were not well adviſed if I would not either be glad of your inſtruction, or yet refuſe mine own reformation, but yet it is good for a man to look e're he leap, and God forbid that ye ſhould be addict and ſworn to me ſo wretched a fool, that you ſhould not rather follow the Doctrine of your Friends in truth, ſo great learned men as they appear to be, then the opinions of me, having never ſo Chriſtian a breaſt.

Had I wiſt.

Where-

Anno 1555.

Wherefore do as you will: for as I would not if I could, ſo I cannot if I would, be noyſome unto you, but yet I ſay, I would my Letters had been unwritten, if for none other cauſe, at leaſtway, in as much as they cauſe me to more writing, an occupation nothing meet for my mad head: And as touching Points which in my foreſaid Letters miſlike your Friends, I have now little leaſure to make an anſwer thereto, for the great buſineſs that I have in my little Cure, I know not what other men have in their great Cure, ſeeing that I am alone without any Prieſt to ſerve my Cure, without any Scholar to read unto me, without any Book neceſſary to be looked upon, without learned men to come and counſel withal. All which things other have at hand abundantly, but ſomething muſt be done, howſoever it be. I pray you take it in good worth, as long as I temper my own judgment, affirming nothing with prejudice of better. Firſt ye miſlike, that I ſay I am ſure that I preach the truth, ſaying in reproof of the ſame, that God knoweth certain truth. Indeed God alone knoweth all certain truth, and God alone knoweth it as of himſelf, and none knoweth certain truth but God, and thoſe which he taught of God, as ſaith S. Paul, Deus enim illis patefecit: And Chriſt himſelf, Erunt omnes docti à Deo: And your Friends deny not but that certain truth is communicated to us, as our capacity may comprehend it by faith, which if it be truth, as it is, than there ought no more to be required of any man, but according to his capacity; now certain it is, that every man hath not like capacity, &c.

Example of a true diligent Paſtor.

Mr. Latimer unfurniſhed without outward help.

Mr Latimer blamed for ſaying he was ſure of the truth which he preached.

As God alone knoweth all truth, ſo ſome truth he revealeth to be certain to his ſervant's

It is no preſumption in a Preacher, being certain of that which he preacheth, to ſhew it to the people.

But as to my preſumption and arrogancy; either I am certain or uncertain that it is truth that I preach. If it be truth, why may not I ſay ſo, to encourage my hearers to receive the ſame more ardently, and enſue it more ſtudiouſly? If it be uncertain, why dare I be ſo bold to preach it? And if your friends, in whom you truſt ſo greatly, be Preachers themſelves, after their Sermon, I pray you ask them whether they be certain and ſure that they taught you the truth or no, and ſend me word what they ſay, that I may learn to ſpeak after them. If they ſay they be ſure, ye know what followeth: If they ſay they be unſure, when ſhall you be ſure, that have ſo doubtful Teachers and unſure? And you your ſelf, whether are you certain or uncertain that Chriſt is your Saviour, and ſo forth of other Articles that ye be bounden to believe? or whether be ye ſure or unſure, that Civil Ordinances be the good works of God, and that you do God ſervice in doing of them, if ye do them for a good intent? If ye be uncertain, take heed he be your ſure friend that heareth you ſay ſo, and then with what conſcience do ye doubt; Cum quicquid non eſt ex fide, peccatum ſit? But contrary ſay you, God alone knoweth certain truth, and ye have it but per ſpeculum in ænigmate; and there have been qui zelum Dei habuerunt, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam: And to call this or that truth, it requireth a deep knowledge, conſidering that to you unlearned, that you take for truth may be otherwiſe, not having ſenſus exercitatos (as Paul ſaith) ad diſcernendum bonum & malum, as ye reaſon againſt me, and ſo you do beſt to know ſurely nothing for truth at all, but to wander meekly hither and thither, omni vento doctrinæ, &c. Our knowledge here, you ſay, is but per ſpeculum ænigmate: What then? Ergo, it is not certain and ſure.

Every true Chriſtian ought to be certain of his faith.

The doubting Doctrine of the Catholicks.

Arguments.

I deny your Argument by your leave; yea, if it be by Faith, as ye ſay, it is much ſure, Quia certitudo fidei eſt maxima certitudo: Becauſe the certainty of faith is the moſt ſureſt certainty, as Duns and other School Doctors ſay: that there is a great diſcrepance between certain knowledge and clear knowledge: for that may be of things abſent that appear not, this requireth the preſence of the object, I mean of the thing known, ſo that I certainly and ſurely know the thing which I perfectly believe, though I do not clearly and evidently know it. I know your School ſubtilties as well as you, which diſpute as though enigmatical knowledge, that is to ſay, dark and obſcure knowledge, might not be certain and ſure knowledge, becauſe it is not clear, manifeſt, and evident knowledge; and yet there have been (ſay they) qui zelum Dei habuerunt, ſed non ſecundum ſcientiam, which have had a zeal, but not after knowledge. True it is, there have been ſuch, and yet be too many to the great hinderance of Chriſts glory, which nothing doth more obſcure, than an hot zeal accompanied with great authority without right judgment. There have been alſo, Qui ſcientiam habuerunt abſque zelo Dei, qui veritatem Dei in injuſtitia detinentes plagis vapulabunt multis, dum voluntatem Domini cognoſcentes, nihil minus quam faciunt: i. Which have had knowledge without any zeal of God, who holding the verity of God in unrighteouſneſs, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes, while they knowing the will of God, do nothing thereafter. I mean not among Turks and Sarazens that be unchriſtened, but of them that be chriſtened. And there have been alſo that have loſt Scientiam Dei, id eſt, ſpiritualem divini verbi ſenſum, quem prius habuerunt: i. The ſpiritual knowledge of Gods Word which they had before, becauſe they have not enſued after it, nor promoted the ſame, but rather with their mother wits have impugned the wiſdom of the Father, and hindered the knowledge thereof, which therefore hath been taken away from them, Ut juſtificetur Chriſtus in ſermonibus ſuis, & vincat cum judicatur, threatning Matth. 13. Ei vero, qui non habet, etiam quod habet, id eſt, quod videtur habere, auferetur ab eo; cum abuti habito, vel non bene uti, ſit non habere, nec non ſit verum illud quoque, non habituram, videlicet ſapientiam in corpore peccatis ſubdito, qui adhuc etſi carnaliter ſapiant plus ſatis, at ſtat ſententia, nempe carnalem & Philoſophicam Scripturarum intelligentiam, non eſſe ſapientiam Dei, quæ à ſapientibus abſconditur, parvulis revelatur: i. To him that hath not, that alſo which he hath, that is, that which he ſeemeth to have, ſhall be taken from him: when as to abuſe that which a man hath, or not to uſe it well, is as not to have it. And alſo ſeeing it is true, that Gods wiſdom will not dwell in a body ſubject to ſin, albeit he abound in carnal wiſdom too much: yet the ſame carnal and philoſophical underſtanding of Gods Scriptures, is not the wiſdom of God which is hid from the wiſe, and is revealed to little ones. And if to call this or that truth, requireth a deep and profound knowledge, then either every man hath a deep and profound knowledge, or elſe no man can call this or that truth: and it behoveth every Preacher to have ſo deep and profound knowledge, that he may call this or that truth, which this or that he taketh in hand to preach for the truth, and yet he may be ignorant and uncertain in many things, both this and that, as Apollo was: but which things, whether this or that, he will not attempt to preach for the truth. And as for my ſelf, I truſt in God, I may have ſenſus exercitatos, well enough, ad diſcernendum bonum & malum: Senſes exerciſed to diſcern good and evil in thoſe things which without deep and profound knowledge in many things I preach not, yea there be many things in Scripture in which I cannot certainly diſcern bonum & malum, I mean verum & falſum, not with all the exerciſe that I have in Scripture, nor yet with the help of all Interpreters that I have, to content my ſelf and other in all ſcrupuloſity, that may ariſe: but in ſuch I am wont to wade no further into the ſtream, then that I may either go over, or elſe return back again, having ever reſpect, not to the oſtentation of my little wit, but to the edification of them that hear me, as far forth as I can, neither paſſing mine own, nor yet their capacity.

Every Preacher ought to be ſure of the truth. There be many truths whereof a good man may well be ignorant. There be many things in Scripture in the profundities whereof a man may wade too far.

And ſuch manner of Arguments might well ſerve the Devil contra puſillanimes, to occaſion them to wander and waver in the faith, and to be uncertain in things in which they ought to be certain: or elſe it may appear to make and ſerve againſt ſuch Preachers which will define great ſubtilties and high matters in the Pulpit, which no man can be certain and ſure of by Gods Word to be truth, ne ſenſus quidem habens ad diſcernendum bonum & malum exercitatiſſimos; as whether, if Adam had not ſinned, we ſhould have had Stockfiſh out of Iſland: how many Larks for a penny if every Star in the Element were a flickering Hobby: How many years a man ſhall lye in Purgatory for one ſin, if he buy not plenty of the oyl that runneth over our Lamps to ſlake the ſin withal, and ſo forget Hell which cannot be ſlaked, to provide for Purgatory.

Againſt Preachers which take upon them to define great ſubtilties and high matters in the Pulpit. Vain ſubtilties and queſtions to be declined. Simple and plain preaching of faith, and of the fruits thereof.

Such argumentation (I ſay) might appear to make well againſt ſuch Preachers, not againſt me, which ſimply and plainly utter true faith and the fruits of the ſame, which be the good works of God, quæ præparavit Deus ut in eis ambularemus: i. which he hath prepared for us to walk in, every man to do the thing that pertaineth to his office and duty in his degree and calling, as the Word appointeth, which thing a man may do with ſoberneſs, having ſenſus ad diſcernendum bonum & malum, vel mediocriter exercitatos.

Certain knowledge. Clear knowledge. Mr. Latimer not ignorant of the School ſubtilties.

Anno 1555.

tos. For it is but fooliſh humility, willingly to continue always infantulus in Chriſto & infirmitate: i. An Infant ſtill in Chriſt, and in Infirmity: In reproof of which it was ſaid, Facti eſtis opus habentes lacte non ſolido cibo. For S. Paul ſaith not, Eſtote humiles, ut non capiatis. For though he would not that we ſhould think arrogantly of our ſelves, and above that, that it becometh us to think of our ſelves, but ſo to think of our ſelves, ut ſimus ſobrii ac modeſti, yet he biddeth us ſo to think of our ſelves, ut cuique Deus partitus eſt menſuram fidei: i. As God hath diſtributed to every one the meaſure of faith. For he that may not with meekneß think in himſelf what God hath done for him, and of himſelf as God hath done for him, how ſhall he, or when ſhall he give due thanks to God for his gifts? And if your friends will not allow the ſame, I pray you enquire of them whether they may cum ſobrietate & modeſtia, be ſure they preach to you the Truth, and whether we may, cum ſobrietate & modeſtia, follow Saint Paul's bidding, where he ſaith unto us all, Nolite fieri pueri ſenſibus, ſed malitia infantes eſtote: i. Be not children in underſtanding, but in maliciouſneß be infants. God give us all grace to keep the mean, and to think of our ſelves neither too high nor too low, but ſo that we may reſtore unto him, qui peregre profectus eſt, his gifts again cum uſura, that is to ſay, with good uſe of the ſame, ſo that ædificemus invicem with the ſame, ad gloriam Dei, Amen.

A mean between too high and too low.

For my life, I truſt in God that I neither (by Gods grace) ſhall, neither in ſoberneß, nor yet in drunkenneß, affirm any truth of my ſelf, therewith intending to divide that unity of the Congregation of Chriſt, and the received Truth agreed upon by the holy Fathers of the Church conſonant to the Scripture of God, though it be ſhewed you never ſo often, that an opinion or manner of teaching, which cauſeth diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, is not of God, by the Doctrine of S. John in his Epiſtle, where he ſaith, Omnis qui confitetur Ieſum Chriſtum in carne, ex Deo eſt: i. Every one that confeſſeth Chriſt in the fleſh, is of God. Firſt, Not every thing whereupon followeth diſſention, cauſeth diſſention, as I would that they ſhewed you that, would alſo ſhew you, whether this opinion, that a man may not marry his brothers wife, be of God or of men: if it be of men, then as Gamaliel ſaid, diſſolvetur; if it be of God, as I think it is, and perchance your friends alſo, quis poteſt diſſolvere niſi qui videbitur Deo repugnare? i. Who can diſſolve it, but ſhall ſeem to repugn againſt God? And yet there be many, not Heathens, but in Chriſtendom, that diſſent from the ſame, which could bear full evil to hear ſaid unto them, Vos ex parte Diaboli eſtis. So that ſuch an opinion might ſeem to ſome to make a diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, ſaving that they may ſay perchance with more liberty than other, that an occaſion is ſometime taken and not given, which with their favour I might abuſe for my defence, ſaving that, non omnibus licet in hac temporum iniquitate.

Not every thing whereupon diſſention cometh is the cauſe of diſſention.

He meaneth the Pope and his Papiſts, which could not abide the diſſolving of the Marriage between K. Henry and his Brothers wife.

Occaſion may be taken where none is given.

The Galathians having for Preachers and Teachers the falſe Apoſtles, by whoſe teaching they were degenerate from the ſweet liberty of the Goſpel into the ſour Bonds of Ceremonies, thought themſelves peradventure a Chriſtian Congregation, when S. Paul did write his Epiſtle unto them, and were in a quiet trade under the dominion of maſterly Curats, ſo that the falſe Apoſtles might have objected to S. Paul that his Apoſtleſhip was not of God, foraſmuch as there was diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation by occaſion thereof, while ſome would renue their opinions by occaſion of the Epiſtle, ſome would opinari, as they were wont to do, and follow their great Lords and Maſters, the falſe Apoſtles, which were not heathen and unchriſtianed, but chriſtianed, and high Prelates of the Profeſſors of Chriſt. For your friends I know right well what Eraſmus hath ſaid in an Epiſtle ſet before the Paraphraſes of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, which Eraſmus hath cauſed no ſmall diſſention with his Pen in a Chriſtian Congregation, in as much as many have diſſented from him, not only in Cloiſters (men more than chriſtned men) of high perfection, but alſo at Paul's Croſs, and S. Mary Spittle, beſides many that with no ſmall zeal have written againſt him, but not without anſwer.

The Church of the Galathians.

Eraſmus in his Epiſtle ſet before the Paraphraſe, in 1 Cor.

And I would fain learn of your friends, whether that S. Hieroms writing were of God, which cauſed diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, as it appeareth by his own words in the Prologue before the Canonical Epiſtles, which be theſe: Et ut Virgo Chriſti Euſtochium, dum à me impenſius Scripturæ veritatem inquiris, meam quodam modo ſenectutem invidorum dentibus vel morſibus corrodendam apponis, qui me falſarium corruptoremq; Scripturarum pronunciant: ſed ego in tali opere nec illorum invidentiam pertimeſco, nec Scripturæ veritatem poſcentibus denegabo. I pray you what were they that called S. Hierom falſarium, aud corrupter of Scripture, and for envy would have bitten him with their teeth? unchriſtian, or chriſtian? What had the Unchriſtian to do with Chriſtian Doctrine? They were worſhipful Fathers of a Chriſtian Congregation, men of much more hotter ſtomachs then right judgment, of a greater authority then good charity: but S. Hierom would not ceaſe to do good for the evil ſpeaking of them that were naught, giving in that an enſample to us of the ſame; and if this diſſention were in S. Hieroms time, what may be in our time? de malo in pejus ſcilicet.

Hierom in Prologo ſuper Canon. Epiſt.

Hierom noted of ſome to be a falſifier and a corrupter of the Scripture.

Worſhipful Fathers of greater authority than of good charity.

And I pray you what mean your Friends by a Chriſtian Congregation? All thoſe (trow ye) that have been chriſtianed? But many of thoſe be in worſe condition, and ſhall have greater damnation than many unchriſtianed. For it is not enough to a Chriſtian Congregation that it of God, to have been chriſtianed: but it is to be conſidered what we promiſe when we be chriſtianed, to renounce Satan, his Works, his Pomps: Which thing if we buſie not our ſelves to do, let us not crack that we profeß Chriſts name in a Chriſtian Congregation, in uno baptiſmo, i.in one Baptiſm.

It is not enough to be chriſtianed, but to keep our promiſe made when we be chriſtianed.

Unity in Baptiſm, is not enough.

And where they add in uno Domino, i. in one Lord: I read in Matth. 17. Non omnis qui dicit, Domine, Domine, &c. i. Not every one that ſaith Lord, Lord, &c. And in Luke the Lord himſelf complaineth and rebuketh ſuch Profeſſors and Confeſſors, ſaying to them, Cur dicitis, Domine, Domine, & non facitis quæ dico? i. Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not that I bid you? Even as though it were enough to a Chriſtian man, or to a Chriſtian Congregation to ſay every day, Domine, Dominus noſter, and to ſalute Chriſt with a double Domine. But I would your friends would take the pains to read over Chryſoſtom ſuper Matthæum, hom. 49. cap. 24. to learn to know a Chriſtian Congregation if it will pleaſe them to learn at him. And where they add, in una fide, i. in one faith, S. James ſaith boldly, Oſtende mihi fidem ex operibus; i. Shew me thy faith by thy works. And S. Hierom, Si tamen credimus, inquit, opere veritatem oſtendimus: i. If we believe, we ſhew the truth in working. And the Scripture ſaith, Qui credit Deo, attendit mandatis: i. He that believeth God, attendeth to his Commandments: And the Devils do believe to their little comfort. I pray God to ſave you and your friends from that believing and Congregation, and from that faithful company.

To prevent unity under the title of one Lord, is not enough.

To be in unity of faith, except the faith be found, is not enough.

Therefore all this toucheth not them that be unchriſtianed, but them that be chriſtianed, and anſwer not to their Chriſtendom. For S. Hierom ſheweth how true Preachers ſhould order themſelves, when evil Prieſts and falſe Preachers, and populus ab his deceptus; i. the People that be by them deceived, ſhould be angry with them for preaching the Truth, Tom. 5. in Hieremiam cap. 26. exhorting them to ſuffer death for the ſame, of the evil Prieſts and falſe Preachers, and the people deceived of them, which evil Prieſts and falſe Preachers with the people deceived, be chriſtianed as well as other: and I fear me that S. Hierom might appear to ſome Chriſtian Congregation, as they will be called, to write ſeditiouſly, to divide the unity of a great honeſt number confeſſing Chriſt, in uno baptiſmate, uno Domino, una fide, ſaying, populus qui ante ſub magiſtris conſopitus erat, ibit ad montes, non illos quidem qui vel leviter tacti fumigant, ſed montes veteris & novi Teſtamenti, Prophetas, Apoſtolos, & Evangeliſtas, & cum ejuſmodi montium lectione verſatus, ſi non invenerit doctores (meſſis enim multa, operarii autem pauci) tunc & populi ſtudium comprobabitur, quo fugerit ad montes, & magiſtrorum deſidia coarguetur. Tom. 6. in Naum. c. 30. i. The people which before were brought aſleep by their Maſters, muſt go up to the Mountains, not ſuch Mountains which ſmoak when they are touched, but to the Mountains of the Old and New Teſtament, the Prophets, Apoſtles, and Evangeliſts. And when thou art occupied with reading in theſe Mountains, if then thou find no Inſtructors, (for the Harveſt is great, and the Workmen be few) yet ſhalt

How true Preachers ſhould order themſelves, when the wicked Prieſts be againſt them.

the diligent ſtudy of the people be fleeing to the Mountains, and the ſloathfulneſs of the Maſters ſhall be rebuked.

I do marvel why our Chriſtian Congregations be ſo greatly grieved that Lay-people would read Scripture, ſeeing that S. Hierom alloweth and approveth the ſame, which compareth not here the unchriſtianed to the chriſtianed, but the Lay-people chriſtianed to their Curats chriſtianed, under the which they have been rocked and locked aſleep in a ſubtil trade a great while full ſoundly, though now of late they have been waked, but to their pain, at the leaſt way to the pain of them that have wakened them with the Word of God; and it is properly ſaid of S. Hierom to call them Maſters and not Servants, meaning that Servants teach not their own Doctrine, but the Doctrine of their Maſter Chriſt, to his glory. Maſters teach not Chriſts Doctrine, but their own, to their own glory; which Maſterly Curats cannot be quiet till they have brought the people aſleep again: but Chriſt the very true Maſter ſaith, Vigilate, & orate, ne intretis in tentationem. Non cogitationes meæ cogitationes veſtræ, neque viæ meæ viæ veſtræ; dicit Dominus: and there have been, qui cogitaverunt conſilia, quæ non potuerunt ſtabilire; i. which have gone about counſels, which they could not eſtabliſh. I pray God give our people grace ſo to wake, ut ſtudium illorum comprobetur, and our Maſters ſo to ſleep, ut non deſidia illorum coarguatur. For who is ſo blind that he ſeeth not how far our Chriſtian Congregation doth gainſay S. Hierom, and ſteaketh after another faſhion? God amend that is amiſs; for we be ſomething wide I wis.

But now your Friends have learned of S. John, that omnis qui confitetur Ieſum Chriſtum in carne, ex Deo eſt: i. Every one that confeſſeth Jeſus Chriſt in the fleſh, is of God: And I have learned of S. Paul, that there have been, not among the Heathen, but among the Chriſtians, qui ore confitentur, factis autem negant: i. which confeſs Chriſt with their mouth, and deny him with their acts: So that S. Paul ſhould appear to expound S. John, ſaving that I will not affirm any thing as of my ſelf, but leave it to your Friends to ſhew you utrum qui factis negant Chriſtum & vita, ſint ex Deo necne per ſolam oris confeſſionem: for your Friends know well enough by the ſame S. John, qui ex Deo eſt non peccat: and there both have been, and be now too many, Qui ore tenus confitentur Chriſtum veniſſe in carne: i. Which with mouth only confeſs Chriſt to be come in the fleſh; but will not effectually hear the Word of God by conſenting to the ſame, notwithſtanding that S. John ſaith, Qui ex Deo eſt, verbum Dei audit, vos non auditis quia ex Deo non eſtis: and many ſhall hear nunquam novi vos: i. I never knew you, which ſhall not only be chriſtianed, but alſo ſhall prophetare, and do puiſſant things in nomine Chriſti: And S. Paul ſaid there ſhould come Lupi graves qui non parcerent gregi: i. Ravening Wolves which will not ſpare the flock, meaning it of them that ſhould confiteri Chriſtum in carne in their lips, and yet uſurp by ſucceſſion the Office, which Chriſt calleth Pſeudo-prophetas, i. falſe Prophets, and biddeth us beware of them, ſaying, They ſhall come in veſtimentis ovium, i. in ſheeps cloathing, and yet they may wear both Satten, Silk and Velvet, called afterwards ſervi nequam, non paſcentes, ſed percutientes conſervos, edentes & bibentes cum ebriis, habituri tandem portionem cum hypocritis: i. Naughty Servants, not feeding, but ſmiting their Fellow-ſervants, eating and drinking with the drunken, which ſhall have their portion with Hypocrites. They are called ſervi, Servants I trow, Quod ore confitentur Chriſtum in carne; nequam vero, quia factis negant eundem, non dantes cibum in tempore, dominium exercentes in gregem: i. Becauſe they confeſs Chriſt in the fleſh: and naughty they are called, becauſe they deny him in their deeds, not giving meat in due ſeaſon, and exerciſing Maſterſhip over the Flock. And yet your Friends reaſon as though there could none bark and bite at true Preachers, but they that be unchriſtianed, notwithſtanding that S. Auguſtine, upon the ſame Epiſtle of John, calleth ſuch Confeſſors of Chriſt, qui ore confitentur, & factis negant, Antichriſtos; a ſtrange name for a Chriſtian Congregation: And though S. Auguſtine could defend his ſaying, yet his ſaying might appear not to be of God, to ſome mens judgment, in that it breaketh the chain of Chriſts Charity, ſo to cauſe men to hate Antichriſtianiſmum, Antichriſts, according to the Doctrine of S. Paul, Sitis odio perſequentes quod malum eſt: i. Hate that is evil; and ſo making diviſion, not between chriſtianed and unchriſtianed, but between Chriſtians and Antichriſtians, when neither Pen nor Tongue can divide the Antichriſtian from their blind folly. And I would you would cauſe your Friends to read over S. Auguſtine upon the Epiſtle of S. John, and tell you the meaning thereof, if they think it expedient for you to know it, as I remember it is Tractatu 3. but I am not ſure nor certain of that, becauſe I did not ſee it ſince I was at Cambridge; and here I have not S. Auguſtine's Works to look for it, but well I wot, that there he teacheth us to know the Chriſtians from the Antichriſtians, which both be chriſtianed, and both confeſs, Ieſum eſſe Chriſtum, if they be asked the queſtion: and yet the one part denieth him in very deed. But to know whether, Non linguam, ſed facta attendamus, & vivendi genus, num ſtudeamus officia vocationes præſtare annon ſtudeamus, immo perſuaſi forte ſumus non neceſſe eſſe ut præſtemus, ſed omnia in primitivam Eccleſiam & tempora præterita, &c. quaſi nobis ſat ſit dominari, & ſecularibus negotiis nos totos volvere, ac voluptatibus & pompæ inhiare: i. Let us not ſtand upon our talks, but attend to our doings and converſation of life, whether we, not only do not put our endeavour thereto, but alſo perſwade our ſelves as though it were not neceſſary for us to accompliſh ſuch things, &c. but that it is enough to bear rule and authority over them, and to beſtow our ſelves wholly upon Secular matters, pleaſures, and pomp of this world. And yet we will appear, vel ſoli ex Deo eſſe; ſed longe aliter Chriſtum confitentur, qui confitendo ex Deo eſſe comprobantur.

And yet as long as they miniſter the Word of God, or his Sacraments, or any thing that God hath ordained to the ſalvation of Mankind, wherewith God hath promiſed to be preſent, to work with the miniſtration of the ſame to the end of the world, they be to be heard, to be obeyed, to be honoured for Gods Ordinance ſake, which is effectual and fruitful, whatſoever the Miniſter be, though he be a Devil, and neither Church nor Member of the ſame, as Origen ſaith, and Chryſoſtom, ſo that it is not all one to honour them, and truſt in them, S. Hierom ſaith: But there is required a judgment, to diſcern when they miniſter Gods Word and Ordinance of the ſame, and their own, leſt peradventure we take chalk for cheeſe, which will edge our teeth, and hinder digeſtion. For as it is commonly ſaid, The blind eateth many a fly, as they did which were perſwaded à principibus Sacerdotum ut peterent Barrabbam, Ieſum autem crucifigerent: i. Of the High Prieſts, to ask Barrabbas, and to crucifie Jeſus: and ye know that to follow the blind Guides, is to come into the pit with the ſame. And will you know, ſaith S. Auguſtine, how apertly they reſiſt Chriſt, when men begin to blame them for their miſliving, and intolerable ſecularity and negligence? they dare not for ſhame blaſpheme Chriſt himſelf, but they will blaſpheme the Miniſters and Preachers of whom they be blamed,

Therefore, whereas ye will pray for agreement both in the Truth, and in uttering of the Truth, when ſhall that be, as long as we will not hear the Truth, but diſquiet with crafty conveyance the Preachers of the Truth, becauſe they reprove our evilneſs with the Truth? And, to ſay the truth, better it were to have a deformity in preaching, ſo that ſome would preach the Truth of God, and that which is to be preached, without cauponation and adulteration of the word, (as Lyranus ſaith in his time few did, what they do now adays, I report me to them that can judge) than to have ſuch an uniformity, that the ſilly people ſhould be thereby occaſioned to continue ſtill in their lamentable ignorance, corrupt judgment, ſuperſtition and idolatry, and eſteem things as they do all, prepoſterouſly, doing that, that they need not to do, leaving undone that they ought to do, for lack or want of knowing what is to be done, and ſo ſhew their love to God, not as God biddeth (which ſaith, Si diligitis me, præcepta mea ſervate: i. If ye love me, keep my Commandments. And again, Qui habet præcepta mea & facit ea, hic eſt qui diligit me: i. He that knoweth my Precepts, and doth them, he loveth me,) but as they bid, Qui quærunt, quæ ſua ſunt, non quæ Ieſu Chriſti: i. Which ſeek their own things, not Chriſts: as though to tythe Mint were more than judgment, faith, and mercy.

Anno 1555.

Aug. in Joan. Tract. 3. Both Chriſtians and Antichriſtians are called the name of Chriſt.

In the people is required a judgment to diſcern, whether they took of their Miniſters chalk for cheeſe.

The blind eateth many a fly. Intolerable ſecularity and negligence in Church-men Better is in the Church a deform diſgracement, ſo that Chriſt be truly preached, than uniform ignorance agreeing in idolatry.

And

Anno 1555.

The ſtate of Curates what it is.

And what is to live in ſtate of Curates, but that he taught which ſaid, Petre amas me? Paſce, paſce, paſce; Peter loveſt thou me? Feed, feed, feed; which is now ſet aſide, as though to love were to do nothing elſe, but to wear Rings, Myters and Rochets, &c. And when they err in right living, how can the people but err in loving, and all of the new faſhion, to his diſhonour that ſuffered his paſſion, and taught the true kind of loving, which is now turned to piping playing, and curious ſinging, which will not be reformed (I trow) niſi per manum Dei validam. And I have both Saint Auguſtine and Saint Thomas, with divers other, that lex is taken not only for Ceremonies, but alſo for Rules, where it is ſaid, Non eſtis ſub lege, though your friends reprove the ſame. But they can make no diviſion in a Chriſtian Congregation. And whereas both you and they would have a ſoberneſs in our Preaching, I pray God ſend it unto us, whatſoever ye mean by it. For I ſee well, whoſoever will be happy, and buſie with væ vobis, he ſhall ſhortly after come coram nobis.

The true honour of Chriſt turned to piping playing and ſinging.

He that will be buſie with væ vobis, let him look ſhortly for coram nobis.

And where your friends think that I made a lye, when I ſaid that I have thought in times paſt that the Pope had been Lord of the World, though your friends be much better learned than I, yet I am ſure that they know not what either I think, or have thought better than I, juxta illud, Nemo novit quæ ſunt hominis, &c. as though better Men than I have not thought ſo, as Bonifacius (as I remember) Octavus, the great Learned Man John of the Burnt Tower; Preſbiter Cardinalis in his Book where he proveth the Pope to be above the Councel General, and Special, where he ſaith that the Pope is Rex Regum, and Dominus Dominantium, i. King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and that he is, Verus Dominus totius orbis, jure, licet non facto: i. The true Lord of the whole World by good right, albeit in fact he be not ſo; and that Conſtantinus did but reſtore his own unto him, when he gave unto him Rome, ſo that in propria venit, as Saint John ſaith Chriſt did, & ſui eum non receperunt: i. He came unto his own, and his own received him not: and yet I hear not that any of our Chriſtian Congregations have reclaimed againſt him, until now of late diſſention began. Who be your friends I cannot tell; but I would you would deſire them to be my good Maſters, and if they will do me no good, at the leaſt way do me no harm; and though they can do yon more good than I, yet I am ſure I would be as loath to hurt you as they, either with mine opinions, manner of Preaching, or writing.

Johannes de turre Cremata

The Pope great Mr. Lord and King over all the World.

And as for the Popes high Dominion over all, there is one Raphael Maruphus in London, an Italian, and in times paſt a Merchant of diſpenſations, which I ſuppoſe would die in the quarrel, as Gods true Knight, and true Martyr. As touching Purgatory; and worſhipping of Saints, I ſhewed to you my mind before my Ordinary: and yet I marvelled ſomething, that after private Communication had with him, ye would (as it were) adjure me to open my mind before him, not giving me warning before, ſaving I cannot interpret your evil doings towards me; and yet neither mine Ordinary, nor you diſallowed the thing that I ſaid, and I looked not to eſcape better than Doctor Crome but when I have opened my mind never ſo much, yet I ſhall be reported to deny my Preaching, of them that have belyed my Preaching, as he was: Sed opus eſt magna patientia ad ſuſtinendas calumnias malignantis Eccleſiæ: i. I ſhall have need of great patience to bear the falſe report of the Malignant Church.

The Popes Dominion.

Purgatory. Worſhipping of Saints.

Sir, I have had more buſineſs in my little Cure, ſince I ſpake with you, what with ſick folks, and what with Matrimonies, than I have had ſince I came to it, or than I would have thought a Man ſhould have in a great Cure. I wonder how Men can go quietly to Bed, which have great Cures and many, and yet peradventure are in none of them all. But I pray you to tell none of your friends that I ſaid ſo fooliſhly, leſt I make a diſſention in a Chriſtian Congregation, and divide a ſweet and a reſtful union, or tot quot, with Hæc requies mea in ſeculum ſeculi. Sir, I had made an end of this ſcribling, and was beginning to write it again more truly and more diſtinctly, and to correct it, but there came a Man of my Lord of Farleys, with a Citation to appear before my Lord of London in haſt, to be puniſhed for ſuch exceſſes as I committed at my laſt being there, ſo that I could not perform my purpoſe; I doubt whether ye can read it as it is. If ye can, well be it: if not, I pray you ſend it me again, and that you ſo do, whether you can read it or not. Jeſus mercy, what a World is this, that I ſhall be put to ſo great labour and pains, beſides great coſts, above my power, for preaching of a poor ſimple Sermon? But I trow our Saviour Chriſt ſaid true, Oportet pati, & ſic intrare: tam periculoſum eſt in Chriſto pie vivere velle: i. I muſt needs ſuffer, and ſo enter: ſo perillous a thing it is to live vertuouſly with Chriſt. Yea in a Chriſtian Congregation. God make us all Chriſtians, after the right faſhion, Amen.

A publick and Authentick Inſtrument of the Biſhops, for the aboliſhing, and inhibiting of the Scripture, and divers other Books to be read in Engliſh, in the time of King Henry the eighth. 1531.

A writing of the Biſhops againſt Engliſh Books.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Be it known to all and ſingular true and faithful People, to whom theſe preſent Letters teſtimonial, or this preſent publick and authentick Inſtrument ſhall come, or ſhall ſee, read, hear or underſtand the ſame, and whom this underwritten ſhall or may teach, or appertain in any manner of wiſe in time to come. William by the ſufferance of Almighty God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all the Realm of England, ſendeth greeting in our Lord God everlaſting. We ſignifie unto you all, and let you well wit and know by theſe preſents, that where the King our Soveraign Lord, hearing of many Books in the Engliſh Tongue, containing many deteſtable errours, and damnable opinions printed in parts beyond the Seas, to be brought into divers Towns, and ſundry parts of this his Realm of England, and ſown abroad in the ſame, to the great decay of our faith Catholick, and perilous corruption of his people, unleſs ſpeedy remedy were briefly provided, his Highneſs willing evermore to employ all his ſtudy and mind in the high degree which Almighty God hath called him unto, to the Wealth of his Subjects, that they might live not only in tranquillity and peace, but alſo to be kept pure and clean of all contagion and wrong opinions in Chriſts Religion: Conſidering alſo that he being Defender of the Faith, would be full loath to ſuffer ſuch evil ſeed ſown amongſt his people, and ſo take root, that it might overgrow the Corn of the Catholick Doctrine, before ſprung in the Souls of his Subjects, for the repelling of ſuch Books, calling unto him of his great goodneſs, and gracious diſpoſition, not only certain of the chief Prelates and Clerks of his Realm, but alſo of each Univerſity a certain Number of the chief Learned Men of them, propoſed ſuch of the Books, as his Grace had ready: therefore unto them to be read, requiring to hear in that behalf their Advice and Judgment of them: who both by great diligence and mature deliberation, peruſing over the ſaid Books, found in them many errours and hereſies, both deteſtable and damnable, being of ſuch a ſort, that they were like briefly to corrupt a great part of his people (if they might be ſuffered to remain in their hands any ſpace) gathering alſo out of them many great errours, and peſtilent hereſies, and noting them in writing, to the intent to ſhew for what cauſe they reputed the ſaid Books damnable, of which hereafter out of each Book gathered, many do enſue. Albeit many more there be in the ſaid Books, which Books totally do ſwarm full of Hereſies, and deteſtable Opinions.

Chriſt offered up our iniquities, as a Sacrifice to his Father, fol. 4. page 1.

Sin cannot condemn us, for our ſatisfaction is made in Chriſt which died for us, fol. 4. page 1.

I will ſhew you an evident Argument and reaſon, that thou majeſt know without doubt, who is Antichriſt,

All

Anno 1555.

All they, that do purſue are Antichriſts, the Pope, Biſhops, Cardinals, and their adherents do purſue: Therefore, the Pope, Biſhops, and Cardinals; and their adherents are Antichriſts. I wene our Sillogiſmus be well made, fol. 9. page 2.

I think verily, that ſo long as the ſucceſſours of the Apoſtles were perſecuted and martyred, there were good Chriſtian Men and no longer, fol. 10. page 1.

It is impoſſible, that the word of the Croſs ſhould be without Affliction and Perſecution, fol. 10. page 1.

That the Apoſtles did curſe ever any Man, truly we cannot read in Scripture, for Chriſt commanded that we ſhould bleſs thoſe that curſed them, fol. 11. page 10.

They are ignorant and evil that do apply Antichriſt to one perſon, for he calleth Antichriſt the whole Body and multitude of wicked Men, fol. 13. page 2.

By works, ſuperſtitions and Ceremonies, we decay from the faith, which alone doth truly juſtifie and make holy, fol. 15. page 1.

If our moſt Holy Father had theſe Laws, Mattins, Prayers, and other free and according to the Goſpel (God left us all equal) we ſhould have had none of theſe innumerable ſins, for where is no Law there is no tranſgreſſion, fol. 28. page 2.

The abuſion of the Maſs, with all his ſolemnities, with vigiles, year minds, foundations, burials, and all the buſineſs that is done for the dead, is but a Face, and a Cloak of Godlineſs, and deceit of the people, they were good works, rather for the dead, then for the quick, fol. 24. page 1. and 2.

To keep and obſerve one day to faſt, and another to abſtain, to forbear ſuch a meat upon the faſting day to deſerve Heaven thereby is a wicked face and cloak, and againſt Paul fol. 29. page 2.

The multiplication of Holy days, of Feaſts of Corpus Chriſti, of Viſitation, and of our Lady, &c. is a wicked face and colour, and indeed fooliſh, unprofitable and vain, fol. 30. page 1.

Keeping of virginity and chaſtity of Religion is a deviliſh thing, fol. 30. page 1.

Worſhipping of reliques is a proper thing and a cloak of advantage againſt the precept of God, and nothing but the affection of Men, fol. 30. page 2. and 31. page 1.

The firſt wo that the Church hath received of the Pope, with help of Saint Thomas is Univerſities, defenſe of free will, moral vertues, and natural philoſophy called the headed Cerberus fol. 35. page 2.

There is but one ſpecial office, that pertaineth to thine orders and that is to Preach the Word of God, 36. page 1.

The Temple of God is not ſtones and wood, neither in the time of Paul was there any houſe which was called the Temple of God, 37. page 2.

He that faſteth no day, that ſayeth no Mattins and doth none of the precepts of the Pope ſinneth not, if he think that he doth not Sin, 43. page 2.

Chriſt ordained the Sacrament of the Altar, only to nouriſh faith of them that live, but the Pope maketh it a good work, and a Sacrifice to be applied both to quick and dead, fol. 48. page 2.

Theſe ſigns (loquitur de miraculis in peregrinationibus & viſionibus) are not to the encreaſe of the Faith and Goſpel: for they are rather againſt the Faith and Goſpel, and they are the operation of Sathan and lying ſigns, fol. 49. page 1.

The people of Chriſt doth nothing, becauſe it is commanded, but becauſe it is pleaſant and acceptable unto them, fol. 63. page 1.

All things neceſſary are declared in the new Teſtament, but no Man is compelled, but according to their own will; Therefore Chriſt teacheth Mathew 16. That a Rebellion ſhould not be killed but avoided, 63. page 1. and 2. and 66.

Contra omnes ritus & ceremonias in Miſſa pluſquam inſane, 68. page 1.

Chriſt ordained that there ſhould be no Sin, but unbelief, infidelity, no juſtice but faith, 69. page 1.

No labour is now a days more tedious then ſaying of Maſs and Mattins, &c. which before God are nothing but grievous Sins, 70. page 1. and 2.

The Sins of Manaſſes and other wicked Kings Sacrificing their own Children are but light and childiſh offences to theſe; The curſed Sacrifice of Gentiles may not be compared to ours, we are ſeven times worſe gentiles then we were before we knew Chriſt, 70. page 2.

It were better to receive neither of the parties of the Sacrament of the Altar, then the one alone, 73. page 1.

The Law of the Pope that commandeth every Man to communicate together upon one day, is a moſt cruel Law, conſtraining Men to their own deſtruction, 73. page 2.

The New Teſtament of Chriſt will not ſuffer any Law of compulſion, but only of councel and exhortation, 74. page 2.

The moſt ſpiritual Man of all, if he confeſs his Sins to a Prieſt ſinneth: for he ſhould confeſs againſt his will. For this ſentence ſtandeth firm and ſtable, he that doth a thing againſt his will, doth it not, and compelled ſervice pleaſeth not God, 75. page 1.

The Spirit would, that nothing ſhould be done, but that which is expreſly rehearſed in Scripture, 81. page 1.

I doubt not, but Saint Barnard, Francis, Dominick, and many other Holy Men and Women erred, as concerning Maſſes, Mattins, &c. fol. 82. page 2.

Saint Thomas de Aquino favoureth nothing of the Spirit of God, 83. page 1.

The Pope did condemn the truth of the Word of God openly, at Conſtance in John Huſſe, perſevering unto this day in the ſame ſtubborneſs, 86. page 2.

The errours and Hereſies contained in the Book called, The Sum of the Scripture.

THe Water of the font hath no more vertue in it then hath any other Water.

The Water of Baptiſm lyeth not in hallowed Water, or in other outward thing, but only in faith. 6. page 1.

Men ſhould not ſeek their health in good works, but all only in Faith and Grace. page 2.

The Water of Baptiſm is nothing but a ſign that we muſt be under the ſtandard of the Croſs, 12. page 2.

God-Fathers and God-Mothers be bound to help them, that they be put to School, that they may underſtand the Goſpel, and the Epiſtles of Saint Paul, 15. page 2.

We be all equally bound to know the goſpel and Epiſtles of Paul, 15. page 1.

We think that when we believe that God is God, and can ſay our Creed, that we have the Faith that a Chriſtian Man is bound to have: but ſo doth the Devil believe, 17. pag. 2.

To believe that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt be one God, is not the principal that we muſt believe: our Faith doth not lye principally in that: for ſo believeth the Devil, 18. page 1.

We have as much right and as great to Heaven as Chriſt. 19. page 1.

If we believe that God hath promiſed us Everlaſting Life, it is impoſſible that we ſhould periſh, 20. pag. 1. and 2.

If thou canſt ſurely and ſtedfaſtly believe in God he will hold his promiſe, for he hath bound himſelf to us, and by his promiſe he oweth us Heaven in caſe that we believe him. 21. page 2.

A lively and ſtedfaſt Faith and truſt in God may bring us to Heaven. 22. page 1.

All they err that thinketh they ſhall be ſaved when they have done many good works. 25. pag. 2. All Chriſtly Glory is ours, 27. pag. 1.

We need not labour for to be Chriſts Heirs, and Sons of God, and to have Heaven, for we have all theſe things already, ibidem.

We need not to labour by our good works to get Everlaſting Life: for we have it already, we be all juſtified, we be all the Children of God. 28. page 2.

By Faith Men are ſure to be ſaved, but if God had ſaid, whoſoever do ſuch or ſuch works ſhall be ſaved, we ſhould ever have been vncertain. 35. page 2. 36. page 1.

All that thinketh that the good works helpeth any thing, or profit any thing to get the gift of Salvation they Blaſpheme againſt God, and rob God of his honour, 28. pag. 2.

If

If we be circumciſed, that is to ſay, if we put any truſt in works Chriſt ſhall not help us. ibidem.

We deſerve nothing of God. 30. page 2.

We deſerve not everlaſting life by our good works: for God hath promiſed it unto us before that we began to do good. 40. page 2.

We muſt love death and more deſire to dye then to fear death. 36. page 1.

All Theologians are abuſed, that ſaith that hope proceedeth out of good works, 40. page 2.

To ſerve God in a tediouſneſs, or for fear of hell, or for the joyes of Heaven, is but ſhadows of good works, and ſuch ſervice doth not pleaſe God 41. page 1.

Every Chriſtian man muſt keep Gods Commandments by love, and not by hope to get for his ſervice everlaſting Life, 42. page 1.

The Jews kept the Commandments, and the Law of God, yet they could not come to Heaven, 43. page 2.

If works might have ſaved Abraham, Iſaack and Jacob, David have been ſaved before the Nativity of Chriſt, 44. page 1.

God made Men his Children and his Heirs, while we were his Enemies, 44. page 2.

A Man muſt do his diligence to keep his heritage of God, and labour to entertain it, ibidem.

A Chriſtian Man perceiving his own Sins ſhould think and ſay to God: I am certain that thou wilt not damn me, and yet thou maiſt do it righteouſly, 46. page 1.

Men truſting in their good works, are like to the theef on the left ſide, and are ſuch Men as commeth to the Church daily, keepeth holy-days and faſting days, and heareth Maſſes, and theſe people be ſooneſt damned, and this is one of the greateſt errours in Chriſtendom, to think that his good works ſhall help to his ſalvation, 47.

It were better never to have done good works, and ask mercy therefore, then to do good works, and think that for them God is bound to a Man by promiſe 48. page 1.

We can ſhew no more honour to God, then faith and truſt in him, 48. page 2.

When we Sin, we miniſh not the glory of God ibidem.

All the danger in our Sins, is the evil example that we give to our Neighbour, ibidem.

Our Lord demandeth nothing but the Heart, 49.

When our Lord hath our heart, he regardeth not whether we faſt, pray, hear Maſs, or whether we wear blew habit or gray, ibidem.

All outward things are indifferent before God, 49.

When our Hearts be ruled in God, according to the goſpel, all is one, what thing ſoever we do, ibidem.

Faith without good works is no little, nor no feable faith, but it is no faith, 50. page 1.

Every Man doth as much as he believeth, 50. page 2.

We cannot be without motions of evil deſires: but we muſt mortifie them in reſiſting them, 52. page 2.

God commandeth us to exerciſe works of mercy: all other works in the Church be founded by avarice not commanded by God, &c. ibidem.

All very Chriſtianity lieth in love of our neighbours for God and not in faſting, keeping of holy days, watching, praying, and ſinging, long prayers daily, and all day hearing Maſs, roving in pilgrimage, &c. 52. page 1. & 2.

Many Doctors in Theologia, and not only common people believeth that it is a part of a Chriſtian Faith to believe that Jeſus Chriſt hath lived here in Earth, 53. page 2. 54. page 1.

He that doth good againſt his will he doth evil 56. page 1. 2.

No Man is righteous but that fulfilleth the Commandments with joyful Hearts, 57. page 1.

No Man doth more then he is bound to do, and therefore no Man may make other partakers of their good works, 59. page 1.

Chriſt hath gotten Heaven by his paſſion, but that right hath he no need of, but hath granted it to all them that believe in his promiſes. 59. page 1.

If God had promiſed us Heaven for our good works, we ſhould ever be ſure of our Salvation. 59. page 1.

Be our Sins never ſo great, that it ſeemeth impoſſible to us to be ſaved, yet without any doubt we ſhall believe to be ſaved, ibidem.

The ſalvation of a Chriſtian Man lyeth not in this Life, but rather endeth: for we cannot be ſaved but by death, and in this Life is no profit, 60. page. 1. Anno 1555.

It is but folly and infidelity to weep for death of our friends, 61. page 2.

It is a great Sin before God to ordain where thou wilt be buried, or what ſtone thou wilt have on thy Tomb, all is one before God, to be buried in the Church, or in any other place, 61. page 2.

In times paſſed, all that lived after the Goſpel were Monks, and gave them to that life, 62. page 2.

Firſt Monks were Helias, Heliſeus, the Sons of Jonadab, 63. page 1.

The Monks after our Saviours aſcenſion unto S. Benedict and Gregories days made no vows nor profeſſion: they might, eat, drink, faſt, pray, when they liſt. They had no certain Maſſes, nor howers to ſing, daily, 62. page 2.

What is now the Life of Religion, but a ſuperſtitious ſubjection unto certain vain Ceremonies? 66. page 1.

If a Man vow to live chaſt, and in poverty in a Monaſtery, then if he perceive that in the Monaſtery he liveth worſe then he did before, as in fornication and theft, then he may leave the Cloyſter and break his vow without Sin, 71. page 1.

Saint Auguſtine holdeth them for Hereticks, that ſaith that Religious Men ſhould not labour with their hands, 81. page 1.

Bodily labour is commanded to all perſons, ibid.

It is abomination to make ſumptuous Monaſteries, Chappels, Altar-clothes, 81. page 2.

If thou love thy Wife becauſe ſhe is thy Wife, that is no love before God: but thou ſhalt love her, becauſe ſhe is thy Siſter in God, 83. page 1.

It is nothing but all incredulity to run with pilgrimage, and ſeek God in one certain place, which is like mighty in all places, 87. page 1.

Men ſhould ſee that their Children come to Church to hear the Sermon, 89. page 1.

Four manner of people, or four parts of people liveth and are fed by one part, that is to ſay, by Citizens, Artificers and Husbandmen, which labour and getteth their own expences, and the expences of the other 4. parties, of Prieſts, Monks, of Lord Councellors, old People and Children, of Men of War, Theeves, Murtherers, Ruffines, common people, and that getteth nothing, but ſpendeth all, 92. page 2.

Thou ſhalt not count at night how much Money thou haſt gained 97. page 2.

Thou ſhalt not vex or grieve by Juſtice, or otherwiſe the poor that oweth unto thee: for thou maiſt not do it without Sin, 97. page 2.

The good Chriſtian ſhall not defend themſelves by juſtice in no manner for any manner of wrong that they ſuffer, but recommend all to the good will of God, 98. page 1.

He that is rich, and liveth of his rents may not uſe to over-ſpend his goods as he will, but thy goods belong as well unto the poor as to thee, 68. page 2.

God hath not given Riches to Rich Men for to boaſt and brag therewith; Nor to make great chear, neither to make themſelves Lords, but to the intent that they ſhould be ſervants unto all the World, 101. page 1.

It is not true that a Rich Man doth gain his goods, nor that he is Lord of his own goods, nor that he may not uſe them at his pleaſure, 101. page 2.

A Man ſhall be reproved for no other thing at the day of Judgment, but for forgetting of the poor, 101. page 2.

Making of Churches, and foundations of Maſſes, Chaunteries and Chappels, are rather invented by covetous mind of Men, then otherwiſe, 101. page 2.

There be two ſorts of people: one is the Kingdom of God, to which belongeth all true Chriſtian people, and in this Kingdom Chriſt is King and Lord, and it is impoſſible in this Kingdom, that is to ſay among very true Chriſtian people, that the Sword of Juſtice temporal ſhould have ought to do, 104, page 1. & 2.

There is another ſort of people belongeth to the World, and they be unrighteous, and they had need of the ſword of temporal Juſtice, 105. page 1.

No Man is under the ſecular power, but they that be of the Chriſtian Eſtate, & out of Gods Kingdom, 106. p. 1. & 2.

Jeſus

Anno 1555.

Jeſus Chriſt hath not ordained in his ſpiritual Kingdom, which is all true Chriſtians, any ſword: for he himſelf is their King and Governor, without ſword, or without outward Law, 108. page 2.

Chriſtian Men amongſt themſelves have nought to do with the ſword nor with the Law, for that is to them neither needful or profitable. The ſecular ſword belongeth not to Chriſts Kingdom, for in it is none but good and juſt, 109. page 2.

The Goſpel maketh all true Chriſtian men ſervants to all the World, 101. page 1.

Chriſt ſaith that no Man ſhall reſiſt evil, nor ſue any Man at the Law, 110. page 2.

The Goſpel is written for all Perſons, Eſtates, Prince, Duke, Pope, Emperour. 112. page 2.

When Judges hath hope that an evil doer will amend, they muſt be always merciful, as Chriſt was to the Woman taken in advoutry. The temporal Law muſt obey the Goſpel, and them that we may amend by warning, we ſhall not correct them by juſtice, 113. page 2.

A true Chriſtian Man never plaineth to the injury that men do unto him, 114. page 1.

By the Goſpel Chriſtian Men ought not to have ſuit and parties among them, 114. page 2.

The obedience of a Chriſtian Man to temporal power is, as Chriſt was obedient to temporal puiſſance, and payed tribute Money, not becauſe that he ought it, but becauſe he would not offend: ſo muſt a Chriſtian Man do: But when Lords ask nought, thou oughteſt them nought before God, 116. page 2.

Men of War are not allowed by the Goſpel, the Goſpel knoweth Peace and not War, 117. page 1.

Doctors that ſay that War is a thing reaſonable or good, underſtandeth not the Words of the Goſpel, or of Saint John. Ibidem.

Saint John praiſed not War by his word, but rather forbad it, as teacheth all the Goſpel. 118. page 1.

Some Texts of Canon-Law ſuffereth War, but the teaching of Chriſt forbiddeth all Wars. Nevertheleſs, when a City is beſieged, or a Country invaded, the Lord of the Country is bound to put his Life in jeopardy for his Subjects, ibid.

So a Lord may uſe horrible War charitably and chriſtianly, 119. page 1.

A Servant ſhould not be ſorry that his Maſter will not ſuffer him to hear Maſs, nor come to the Church, for God careth not what thing we do, nor in what place, 121. page 2.

Out of the Book of Beggers.

THere be many Men of great Liturature and Judgment, that for the love they have unto the Church, and unto the Commonwealth, have not feared to put themſelves into the greateſt infamy that may be in the objection of all the World, yea in the peril of death, to declare their opinion in this matter, which is that there is no Purgatory, but it is a thing invented by the covetuouſneſs of the Spirituality, only to tranſlate all Kingdoms from other Princes unto them: and that there is not one word ſpoken of it in all Holy Scripture: God took Enoch away, that is to ſay, he departed out of this World like other Men, Primo male vertit, nam ſcriptura dicit tranſtulit, non abſtulit deinde falſum eſt, quod addit: nam ad Hæbreos undecimo legitur, fide Enoch tranſlatus eſt, ne videret mortem & non inveniebatur, quia tranſtulit illum dominus eccleſiaſtice, Enoch placuit Deo & tranſlatus eſt in Paradiſum, ut det gentium ſapientiam.

Davids good intent, and Matthews, in building the Temple, were nought: Et quid eſt quod dicit, 30 Reg. 2. quia cogitaſti in corde tuo ædificare domum nomine meo feciſti, hoc ipſum mente pertractus & ob illum propoſitus videtur David, illud præmii à Deo tuliſſe, & ejus filij in regno ei ſuccederent.

Out of the Primer.

HE putteth in the Book of ſeven Pſalms, but he leaveth out the whole Letany, by which it appeareth his erroneous opinion againſt praying to Saints.

He hath left out all the Hymns and Anthems of our Lady, by which appeareth his erroneous opinions againſt praying to our Lady.

The ungodly and erronious ſaying contained in an Engliſh work, inſcribed an expoſition upon the 7. Chap. of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians.

WHoſoever in himſelf doth not feel this Godly thing, this gift of chaſtity, but doth feel incontinency, to him, I ſay, a commandment is given that he may be married, fol. 2.

Hereof doth follow that no perſon may make a vow or promiſe to live chaſt or ſingle, and that none is bound to keep any ſuch vows, but rather to break them: And he that ſhall obſerve them, it is damnable; and by the Law of God already condemned, fol. eodem.

The touching of Women, ſome perſons have compaſſed much ſtreightly, ſo that they dare not touch a Womans hand or skin, moreover they imagined many, both Statutes and Ceremonies, to keep them from company of Women, as they thought that built Abbies, but how fortunately that hath come to paſs, what place thereby hath been given to Sathan, it were horrible to be ſpoken of, ibidem.

He that is compelled outwardly to abſtain from Women, and is inwardly full of luſt, is a diſſembler, and it is double letchery, fol. 3.

Mark what Soul-ſlayers they be that provoke fooliſh youth to a vow of chaſtity, compelling them to nouriſh inwardly hidden malice, fol. eodem.

All other evils may be ſuffered with a mean Conſcience.

This cannot ſo be endured, this can be holpen by no medicine, but by marriage,

It is good for a Man not to touch a Woman; this word good is not underſtood of merit and deſerving afore God, as though an unmarried Man were better afore him, then the married, like as Saint Jerome hath expounded this text; for it concerneth only faith, and no deed or work, but it is ſpoken of temporal quietneſs of this Life, ſo that the virgin and maid hath much more joy and tranquility, fol. 4.

Chaſtity is a good thing, if luſt and incontinency make it not ſo common a thing as we have hitherto uſed to do, and yet do, but all amiſs; but the Apoſtle will, that univerſally all Men be conjugal: but all the Biſhops ſince his time hath deſtroyed this godly Ordinance, when they babble and rail in Pulpits, changing this word quiſque into quidam, fol. 6.

Men ought to ſtint of their ſtatutes making, for a better ſtatute can none be then this, that men without any reſpect of time uſe their Wife, not to exempt certain days as they have which we call Vigils, and Women conceived, fol. 8.

Faſting is a meaſurable uſage of meats, and drinks; Prayer is a crying, ſigh, deſire and mourning, fol. 9.

No Man ought to enforce and compel Men to faſting and prayer as they hitherto by Laws have done, fol. 11.

Before God, all things are like and equal, fol. 12.

Abominable they do Sin which make Nunns ſwell in pride, when they babble, that their Religion is more precious then Matrimony, and then feign that they ſhall have a Crown or Garland of Gold, ſo maketh them arrogant, wicked, unfaithful; Chaſtity is a gift of God, and therefore can no Man neither promiſe, nor vow, nor keep it, fol. 13.

The Sects of all them that are called Religious, and of all manner of Shavelings, are falſly called the Spiritual Orders: for Matrimony like as in very deed, ſo it ought to be called the ſpiritual ſtate before other orders worldly and ſecular; Matrimony is of all other the higheſt Religion and moſt ſpiritual eſtate.

Matrimony is as Gold, the ſpiritual eſtate as Dung; the Spirit and ſuch ſpiritual eſtates have no more agrement then Chriſt and Belial, the Day and the Night, the Spirit and the Fleſh, Faith and our Senſes or Reaſon, fol. 17.

Their prayer, their ſinging, doing their ſpiritual works, for ſo much as they have not the very Word of God to confirm them, God cannot be pleaſed with them, fol. 18.

Dico autem non nuptis & viduis, &c. Of this we have gathered that Paul had a Wife, and here he ſpeaketh only of Widows; a Wife which either was dead, or for a time

time left him for the Gospels sake, but the other Apostles led about their Wives, fol. 19.

By Testimony of Scriptures, all the Apostles and all the Bishops Successours were married, fol. 2.

Saint Paul sayth, that he ought to be chosen for to be a Bishop that is the Husband of one Wife.

Seeing ye choose not married Men to be Bishops, either Christ must be a fool and unrighteous which so did choose, or you Antichrists and deceivers.

You put away universally marriage from Priests contrary unto God, to nature, to season, to right, only of presumption without all manner of cause, fol. 21.

There is no Sin, ne mischief in all the World so manifold, that can let a Man from Priesthood, but godly Matrimony, fol. 32.

Wicked traditions and Laws and ungracious constitutions letteth Bigamy from Priesthood.

What other thing is it to say, that a Priest should not marry, then to say, that a Man should not be a Man? fol. 23.

The Body of a Christian Man must as well nourish seed, and beget Children and multiply, as the Body of Birds, Beasts and other lively things.

Every Man, as willeth Saint Paul, needeth to go to Matrimony, necessity so requireth, fol. 25.

This dare I be bold to say, that where is one chast, there ought more then an hundred thousand to live married, fol. 26.

Saint Jerome which extolleth chastity with most highest, but most perilous lauds, nevertheless confesseth, that he could not tame his Flesh; he belonged to the number of them that belonged to Matrimony, Such example shalt thou find in a Book De vitis Patrum, fol. 27.

To keep a young Man in Cloister to live chast, is as much as to offer a Child to Moloch, there to be burned, fol. 28.

If the one would be at one, and the other will not, the party that would be reconciled to love, may marry another, though the other be alive, fol. 23.

Whosoever doth not expel faith, is by reason of the same harmless, pure, clean, holy, profitable, fol. 35.

Infants be holy and clean, though they have not received Baptism, because their Parents be holy and clean.

The wretched Laws of the Pope bindeth unmarried persons to abide, other the coming again of the other, that was his mate and that under pain (O presumption, O shamles boldness!) of damnation, fol. 38.

To help a Man to God, or let a Man from God, cometh only of faith and unbelief, fol. 43.

Pretio empti estis, &c. a general proverb, or fit sentence against all humane Laws and traditions: he sheweth what liberty is granted by the doctrine of Christ, and how that faith maketh all states and things equal, fol. 47.

Christ with his precious Blood hath redeemed and delivered us from all Sins and Laws, so that no longer any Law can bind us in Conscience, fol. 48.

All exteriour things before God, are free, and that a Christian Man may use them according to his appetite either leaving or taking.

Thou owest nothing unto God, but faith and confession; by confession I mean not the whispering of Sins into the Priests ear, ne yet thy confession of thy Sins to God: but with Saint Paul if thou confess with thy Mouth that Jesus is Christ, and believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from death, thou shalt be saved: in all other things, he giveth thee liberty of thine own will, thou mayst do all things without jeopardy of Conscience, God careth not as concerning for himself, though thou didst forsake thy Wife, run from thy Lord or Master, and shouldst break all manner of covenants, that thou makest with all men, but for that thou art bound to thy neighbour, fol. 49.

Thou canst not perish or be damned whatsoever thing thou shalt outwardly either do, or else leave undone: we ow nothing unto any Man, save love only.

In Cloisters and Monasteries they do against faith, God, liberty, and Gods ordinances; They shall occupy seats appointed for them in the deep dungeon of Hell, fol. 52.

By this is overthrown the Deviliſh Doctrine of the brainless and doting Doctors and Preachers of the Devil, which do forge singular coronets for Nuns and Virgins; in Heaven only faith hath it, fol. 53. Anno 1555.

Reading, founding of Organs, singing amongst religious be superstitious; and among them, the service and honour of God is suppressed and convinced, fol. 54.

Where the Apostles here are better, it is to be understood of goodness in this World, fol. 6.

The jolly and cruel Tirants and soul Murtherers that shuty up youth in Cloisters.

ALl which great errours, and pestilent Heresies being contagious and damnable with all the Books containing the same with the translation also of Scripture corrupted by William Tindal, as well in the Old Testament as in the New, and all other Books in English containing such errour, the Kings Highness present in person, by one whole advice and assent of the Prelates and Clerks, as well of the Universities, as of all other assembled together, determined utterly to be repelled, rejected, and put away out of the hands of his people and not to be suffered to go abroad among his Subjects; And his Highness willeth further that his pleasure and determination should be notified, by Preachers abroad unto the people as well for putting away of all such Books, as reading, retaining, or having hereafter of any other like, delivering unto certain Preachers, the form of a writing to be published in effect unto the people in their Sermons, whereof the form here followeth, willing them in all his Realm to publish the same.

Here followeth the bill in English to be published by the Preacher.

IT is the Office and duty of every Preacher and teacher of the Word of God, not only to shew and declare unto his audience that which might be profitable and wholesom for the wealth of their Souls, to be followed and taken, but also to note and signifie unto them such things as be dangerous and contagious, to the intent they might be avoided and eschewed, and also as near as they can judge who be Teachers and Authours of the same; this example we have of our Saviour Christ, where he sayeth, Attendite à falsis Prophetis, &c. Saint Paul likewise many times giveth warning to such as he wrot unto, that they should beware of the false Apostles, that in his absence went about to corrupt the Doctrine that he had taught them being present. Wherefore considering that it hath pleased the Kings Highness like a noble, and a vertuous Prince, tendering not only the present Bodily Wealth and Tranquillity of all his Subjects, for his and the Worldly commodity and benefit, but most chiefly regarding the Wealth of their Souls and their due order towards God thereby to deserve and attain immortal glory, to assemble and call together the chief personages of his Prelates, and a great number of learned Men of both Universities, charging and commanding them for the discharge and exoneration of his Conscience, to find, read, examine, and discuss the contents of such Books as be now spread abroad within this his Graces Realm in the English Tongue concerning the Points and Articles of our Faith, and after their Learning and Conscience to make relation unto his Highness, whether the same Books be expedient and profitable for his people, to the direction and ordering of their Conscience and Soul, or else contagious and pestiferous for the same: And whether the Opinions contained in them, were agreeable to Gods Word and Doctrine or no, for us much as the said Congregation and assembly had free Liberty and Licence granted unto every Man to say as his Conscience and Learning served him without any reproof or blame to be imputed or arrected for any thing to be spoken there, whose person soever it touched, or any necessity to agree to the more part, but only to say that his own Learning and Conscience could maintain and justifie; After mature Deliberation and Consultation had, it was there by a whole consent, no Man repugning or gain-saying determined and agreed that the Books now being abroad in the English Tongue contain false traditions and corrupt Doctrine, farr discrepant from the true Sense of the Gospel and Catholick understanding of Scripture, only perſwading pernicious Hereſies to the deſtruction of the Souls of good Chriſtian men, and that the certainty hereof, I can report unto you of mine own knowledge, being one of the ſaid aſſembly and hearing and ſeeing the ſaid Opinions read, declared and examined, and by the true ſenſe and meaning of Gods learning reproved and rejected: I think therefore my duty is, taking upon me the office of a Preacher, following the example of our Maſter Chriſt and Saint Paul as is aforeſaid to warn and admoniſh you by the words of Chriſt, as I ſpake before: Attendite a falſis Prophetis, &c. And take heed of your ſelf that ye be not infected by the contagion and infection of ſuch Pſeudo-Apoſtles as have in our Engliſh Tongue, ſet forth Books to ſeduce you from the true knowledge of Gods Laws, and bring you by their falſe interpretations of Scripture into the deteſtable and abominable Hereſies to the deſtruction of our Souls, wherefore you that have the Books called the obedience of a Chriſtian man: the ſum of Scripture; the Revelation of Antichriſt; the ſupplication of Beggars; Mammona iniquitatis; the Matrimony of Tindal; the New Teſtament in Engliſh, of the tranſlation which is now printed, and ſuch other Books in Engliſh, the Authors whereof either dare not, or do not put to their names, be pernicious Books; deteſt them, abhor them, keep them not in your hands, deliver them to the Superiours ſuch as call for them: And if by reading them heretofore, any thing remaineth in your breaſts of that teaching, either forget it, or by information of the Truth expel it and purge it, to the intent that ye being ſo purified and cleanſed of that contagious Doctrine and peſtiferous traditions may be fit and apt to receive, and retain the true Doctrine und underſtanding of Chriſts Laws to the comfort and edification of your Souls; thus I move and exhort you in God to do, this is your duty to do.

The Prelates of the Church having the cure and charge of your Souls ought to compel you, and your Prince to puniſh and correct you not doing of the ſame, unto whom as Saint Paul ſaith, the Sword is given by Gods ordinance for that purpoſe; ye ſhall alſo farther underſtand, that the Kings Highneſs, foraſmuch as it was reported unto him that there is engendred an Opinion in divers of his ſubjects, that it is his Graces duty to cauſe the ſcripture of God to be tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue to be communicate unto the People, and that the Prelates, and alſo his Highneſs do wrong in hindering of the ſame, his Highneſs therefore willed every man there preſent in the ſaid aſſembly, freely and frankly to ſhew and open unto him what might be proved, and conferred by Scripture, and holy Doctors in that behalf, to the intent that his Highneſs (as he there openly proteſted) might conform himſelf thereunto, minding to do his duty towards his People, as, he would they ſhould do their duties towards him: In which matter, after the Scripture declared, holy Doctors and Authors alledged, and read, and all things ſaid, which might be on both ſides and for both parts ſpoken, deduced, and brought forth, finally it appeared, that the having of the whole Scripture in Engliſh is not neceſſary to Chriſtian men, but that without having any ſuch Scripture, endeavouring themſelves to do well, and to apply their minds to take and follow ſuch Leſſons as the Preacher teacheth them, and ſo learned by his mouth, may as well edifie ſpiritually in their Souls, as if they had the ſame Scriptures in Engliſh. And like as the having of Scriptures in the vulgar Tongue, and in the common Peoples hands, hath been by both holy Fathers of the Church heretofore in ſome times thought meet and convenient, ſo at another time, it hath been thought to holy Fathers not expedient to bee communicate amongſt them, wherein for as much as the Kings Highneſs, by the advice and deliberation of his Council, and the agreement of the great Learned men thinketh in his Conſcience, that the divulging of the Scripture at this time in the Engliſh Tongue, to be committed to the People, conſidering ſuch peſtilent Books, and ſo evil Opinions, as be now ſpread amongſt them, ſhould rather be to their further confuſion and deſtruction, then the edification of their Souls, and that as holy Doctors teſtifie, upon ſuch like conſiderations, the ſemblable hath been done in times paſt, it was thought there in that aſſembly to all and ſingular in that Congregation, that the Kings Highneſs, and the Prelates in ſo doing and not ſuffering the Scripture to be divulged and communicate in the Engliſh Tongue unto the People, at this time doth well. And alſo I think and judge the ſame, exhorting, and moving you; that in Conſideration his Highneſs did there openly ſay and proteſt that he would cauſe the New Teſtament to be, by Learned men faithfully and purely tranſlated into the Engliſh Tongue, to the intent he might have it in his hands, ready to be given to his People, as he might ſee their manners and behaviour meet, apt, and convenient to receive the ſame, that ye will ſo deteſt theſe pernicious Books, ſo abhor theſe Hereſies, and new Opinions, ſo decline from arrogancy of knowledge and underſtanding of Scripture after your fantaſies, and ſhow your ſelf in cunning and reaſoning, ſo ſober, quiet, meet and temperate, as all fear of miſuſing the gift of Scripture taken away ye may appear ſuch in your princes eyes, and eyes of your Prelates, as they ſhall have no juſt cauſe to fear any ſuch danger; perſwading unto your ſelf in the mean time without grudging or murmuring the very Truth, which is this, that we cannot require or demand Scripture to be divulged in the Engliſh Tongue, otherwiſe then upon the diſcretion of the Superiours, ſo as whenſoever they think in their Conſcience it may do you good, they may and do well, to give it unto you: And whenſoever it ſhall be ſeen otherwiſe unto them, they do amiſs in ſuffering you to have it. Of and upon the which Decree, order and determination above recited his gracious Highneſs being in perſon in the Chappel, called the old Chappel, which ſometime was called, St. Edwards Chamber, ſate on the Eaſt-ſide of the Parliament Chamber, within his Graces pallace at Weſtminſter, upon the 24. day of May, the year of our Lord God 1530. and in the two and twentieth year of his raign called before his Grace the three Notaries here under written, and then and there in the preſence of all the Perſonages there aſſembled and gathered together, willed and required the ſaid three Notaries to make publick and authentick inſtruments, and us to ſet thereunto our Seal accordingly in and for witneſs, and perpetual memory and monument of this his Graces deſire, order and determination, and of all and ſingular the premiſſes, and all the perſonages then and there being preſent, to teſtifie the ſame, and bear Record and teſtimony thereupon: In witneſs of all, and ſingular the premiſſes, We William Archbiſhop, Primate and Legate aforeſaid, have commanded and obtained theſe preſent Letters teſtimonial, or preſent publick or authentick Inſtrument, containing therein the order, decree, and determination above-ſaid, to be made, and to be ſubſcribed, and conſigned by the hands of the Notaries hereafter named, and to be ſealed with our own Seal. All which premiſſes have been done in manner and form above ſpecified, then and there being preſent the noble perſonage of Thomas Moor Knight, great Chancellor of England, our Reverend Brother in Chriſt Cutbert, by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of Durham; and worſhipful perſonages, Maſter Steven Gardiner Secretary, Maſter Richard Samſon, Dean of the Chappel, Doctor of Law, Maſter Richard Wolman, Maſter of the Requeſt, Maſter John Bell, Councellor, Doctors of the holy Decrees, Maſter Nicholas Wilſon the Kings Confeſſor; Maſter Richard Duck, Arch-deacon of Wiltſhire, Doctors of Divinity; Mr. John Oliver, Maſter Edmund Steward, Doctors of the Law, Chaplains to our ſaid Soveraign Lord the Kings Grace, Maſter Richard Mawdly, Maſter William Mortimer, Maſter Edward Crome, Maſter Edward Wiggen, Doctors alſo of Divinity; Maſter Robert Carter, Maſter Edward Leighton, Maſter Hugh Latimer, and Maſter William Latimer and Roger Tilſon Maſters of Art in both the Univerſities above-ſaid with many more learned men of the ſaid Univerſities, in a great number aſſembled then and there together witneſs to the premiſſes required and exhibited: Theſe being premiſed, now let us ſee the anſwer of Maſter Latimer again to this foreſaid Teſtimonial or Inſtrument of the Biſhops, in a Letter which the ſaid Latimer wrote to King Henry the ſame time in that behalf.

Here followeth a Letter of Mr. Latimer written to King Henry the Eighth upon this occaſion. Ye heard before of two ſundry Proclamations, ſet out by the Biſhops in the name of King Henry the one in the year 1531, and the other ſet out An. 1546. In the which Proclamations, being authorized by the Kings name, were inhibited all Engliſh Books, either containing or tending to any matter of the Scripture. Where alſo we have expreſſed at large the whole Catalogue of all the Errors and Hereſies, which the ſaid Biſhops falſly have excerpted, and maliciouſly imputed to godly Writers, with their places and quotations above aſſigned in the place aforeſaid. Now Mr. Latimer growing in ſome favour with the King, and ſeeing the great decay of Chriſts Religion by reaſon of theſe Proclamations, and touched therefore with the zeal of Conſcience, directeth unto King Henry this Letter hereunder enſuing, thereby intending by all means poſſible to perſwade the Kings mind to ſet open again the freedom of Gods holy Word amongſt his Subjects. The Copy and tenour of this Letter here followeth.

The Letter of Mr. Latimer written to King HENRY, for the reſtoring again of the free liberty of reading the holy Scriptures.

To the moſt Mighty Prince, King of England, HENRY the Eighth, Grace, Mercy, and Peace from God the Father, by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Another Letter of M. Latimer to K. Henry, Auguſt. ad Caſalanum, Chryſoſt.

THe holy Doctor St. Auguſtine, in an Epiſtle which he wrote to Caſalanus, ſaith, that he which for fear of any Power hideth the Truth, provoketh the wrath of God to come upon him: for he feareth men more than God. And according to the ſame, the holy man St. John Chryſoſtom ſaith, that he is not only a traytor to the Truth, which openly for truth teacheth a lye; but he alſo which doth not freely pronounce and ſhew the truth that he knoweth. Theſe Sentences (moſt redoubted King) when I read now of late, and marked them earneſtly in the inward parts of mine heart, they made me ſore afraid, troubled, and vexed me grievouſly in my Conſcience, and at the laſt drave me to this ſtrait, that either I muſt ſhew forth ſuch things as I have read and learned in Scripture, or elſe be of that ſort that provoke the wrath of God upon them, and be traytors unto the Truth: the which thing rather than it ſhould happen, I had rather ſuffer extreme puniſhment.

M. Latimer touched in Conſcience to write to the King.

What it is to be a traytor to Truth.

For what other thing is it to be a traytor unto the Truth, than to be a traytor and a Judas unto Chriſt, which is the very truth, and cauſe of all truth? the which ſaith, that whoſoever denieth him here before men, he will deny him before his Father in Heaven. The which denying ought more to be feared and dread, than the loſs of all temporal goods, honour, promotion, fame, priſon, ſlander, hurts, baniſhments, and all manner of torments and cruelties, yea, and death it ſelf, be it never ſo ſhameful and painful. But alas, how little do men regard thoſe ſharp ſayings of theſe two holy men? and how little do they fear the terrible Judgment of Almighty God? and ſpecially they which boaſt themſelves to be Guides and Captains unto other, and challenging unto themſelves the knowledge of holy Scripture, yet will neither ſhew the Truth themſelves (as they be bound) neither ſuffer them that would. So that unto them it may be ſaid, that which our Saviour Chriſt ſaid to the Phariſees, Matt. 23. Wo be unto you Scribes and Phariſees, which ſhut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, and neither will you enter in your ſelves, neither ſuffer them that would to enter in. And they will, as much as in them lieth, debar, not only the Word of God, which David calleth, a light to direct and ſhew every man how to order his affections and luſts, according to the Commandments of God, but alſo by their ſubtile wilyneſs they inſtruct, move, and provoke in a manner, all Kings in Chriſtendom, to aid, ſuccour, and help them in this their miſchief; and eſpecially in this your Realm they have ſo blinded your Liege People and Subjects with their Laws, Cuſtoms, Ceremonies, and Banbury Gloſſes, and puniſhed them with Curſings, Excommunications, and other corruptions, (corrections, I would ſay,) and now at the laſt when they ſee that they cannot prevail againſt the open Truth (which the more it is perſecuted, the more it increaſeth by their tyranny) they have made it treaſon to your noble Grace to have the Scripture in Engliſh.

The ſubtile wilyneſs and practices of the Phariſees.

Here I beſeech your Grace to pardon me a while, and patiently to hear me a word or two; yea, though it be ſo that, as concerning your high Majeſty and Regal Power whereunto Almighty God hath called your Grace, there is as great difference between you and me, as between God and Man: For you be here to me and to all your Subjects, in Gods ſtead, to defend, aid and ſuccour us in our right, and ſo I ſhould tremble and quake to ſpeak to your Grace. But again, as concerning that you be a mortal man, in danger of ſin, having in you the corrupt nature of Adam, in the which all we be both conceived and born: ſo have you no leſs need of the merits of Chriſts paſſion for your ſalvation, than I and other of your Subjects have, which be all Members of the myſtical Body of Chriſt. And though you be an higher Member, yet you muſt not diſdain the leſſer. For as S. Paul ſaith, Thoſe Members that be taken to be moſt vile, and had in leaſt reputation, be as neceſſary as the other, for the preſervation and keeping of the body. This, moſt gracious King, when I conſidered, and alſo your favourable and gentle nature, I was bold to write this rude, homely, and ſimple Letter unto your Grace, truſting that you will accept my true and faithful mind even as it is.

Pſal. 5. Epheſ. 2. Kings ſtand as much in need of Chriſts Paſſion, as any inferiour Subject. Rom. 12. 1 Cor. 2. Epheſ. 4. 1 Cor. 12.

Firſt, and before all things, I will exhort your Grace to mark the life and proceſs of our Saviour Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, in preaching and ſetting forth of the Goſpel, and to note alſo the words of our Maſter Chriſt, which he had to his Diſciples when he ſent them forth to preach his Goſpel, and to theſe have ever in your mind the golden Rule of our Maſter Chriſt; The tree is known by the fruit. For by the diligent marking of theſe, your Grace ſhall clearly know and perceive who be the true followers of Chriſt, and teachers of his Goſpel, and who be not. And concerning the firſt, all Scripture ſheweth plainly that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſts life was very poor.

Matth. 7.

The Rule of Chriſt.

Begin at his birth, and I beſeech you, who ever heard of a poorer, and ſo poor as he was? It were too long to write how poor Joſeph and the bleſſed Virgin Mary took their journey from Nazareth toward Bethelem, in the cold and froſty Winter, having no body to wait upon them, but he both Maſter and Man, and ſhe both Miſtreſs and Maid. How vilely, thinks your Grace, were they intreated in the Inns and Lodgings by the way? and in how vile and abject place was this poor Maid, the Mother of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, brought to Bed, without company, light, or any other thing neceſſary for a woman in that plight? was not here a poor beginning, as concerning this world? Yes truly. And according to this beginning was the proceſs and end of his life in this world, and yet he might by his godly power have had all the goods and treaſures of this world at his pleaſure, when and where he would.

The poverty of Chriſts life expreſſed.

But this he did to ſhew us, that his Followers and Vicars ſhould not regard and ſet by the riches and treaſures of this world, but after the ſaying of David we ought to take them, which ſaith thus; If riches, promotions, and dignity happen to a man, let him not ſet his affiance, pleaſure, truſt, and heart upon them. So that it is not againſt the poverty in ſpirit, which Chriſt preacheth in the Goſpel of St. Matthew, Chapter 5. to be rich, to be in dignity and in honour, ſo that their hearts be not fixed and ſet upon them, ſo much, that they neither care for God nor good men. But they be enemies to this poverty in ſpirit, have they never ſo little, that have greedy and deſirous minds to the goods of this world, only becauſe they would live after their own pleaſures and luſts. And they alſo be privy Enemies (and ſo much the worſe) which have profeſſed, as they ſay, wilful poverty, and will not be called worldly men, and they have Lords Lands, and Kings Riches, yea, rather than they would loſe one jot of that which they have, they will ſet debate between King and King, Realm and Realm, yea, between the King and his Subjects, and cauſe Rebellion againſt the Temporal Power, to the which our Saviour Chriſt himſelf obeyed, and paid Tribute, as the Goſpel declareth; unto whom the holy Apoſtle S. Paul teacheth every Chriſtian man to obey. Yea, and beſide all this, they will curſe and ban, as much as in them lieth, even into the

The poor condition of Chriſts life, is an example to us to caſt down our pride, not to ſet by riches.

It is not againſt the poverty of the ſpirit, to be rich.

the deep pit of hell, all that gain-ſay their appetite, whereby they think their goods, promotions, or dignities ſhould decay.

Your Grace may ſee what means and craft the ſpiritualty (as they will be called) imagine, to break and withſtand the acts which were made in your Graces laſt Parliament againſt their ſuperfluities. Wherefore they that thus do, your Grace may know them not to be true followers of Chriſt. And although I named the ſpiritualty to be corrupt with this unthrifty ambition; yet I mean not all to be faulty therein, for there be ſome good of them. Neither will I that your Grace ſhould take away the goods due to the Church, but take away all evil perſons from the goods, and ſet better in their ſtead.

Ambition of the ſpiritualty.

I name nor appoint no perſon nor perſons, but remit your Grace to the rule of our Saviour Chriſt, as in Matthew the ſeventh Chapter, By their fruits you ſhall know them. As touching the words that our Saviour Chriſt ſpake to his Diſciples when he ſent them to preach his Goſpel, they be read in Matthew the fifteenth Chapter, where he ſheweth, that here they ſhall be hated and deſpiſed of all men Worldly, and brought before Kings and Rulers, and that all evil ſhould be ſaid by them, for their preaching ſake, but he exhorteth them to take patiently ſuch perſecution by his own example, ſaying, It becometh not the ſervant to be above the Maſter. And ſeeing they called me Belzebub, what marvel is it, if they call you deviliſh perſons and Hereticks. Read the fourteenth Chapter of St. Matthews Goſpel, and there your Grace ſhall ſee that he promiſed to the true Preachers no Worldly promotions or dignity, but perſecution and all kinds of puniſhment, and that they ſhould be betrayed even by their own Brethren and Children. In John alſo he ſaith, In the World ye ſhall have oppreſſion and the World ſhall hate you: but in me you ſhall have peace. And in the tenth Chapter of S. Matthews Goſpel ſaith our Saviour Chriſt alſo, Lo I ſend you forth as ſheep among Wolves. So that the true Preachers go like Sheep harmleſs, and be perſecuted, and yet they revenge not their wrong, but remit all to God; ſo far is it off that they will perſecute any other but with the Word of God only, which is their weapon. And ſo this is the moſt evident token that our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt would that his Goſpel and the Preachers of it ſhould be known by, that it ſhould be deſpiſed among thoſe Worldly wiſemen, and that they ſhould repute it but fooliſhneſs, and deceivable Doctrin, and the true Preachers ſhould be perſecuted and hated, and driven from Town to Town, yea, and at the laſt loſe both goods and life.

Chriſt promiſeth no promotion, but perſecution to his followers.

John 16.

Gods Word only is the weapon of ſpiritual Paſtors.

And yet they that did this preſecution, ſhould think that they did well, and a great pleaſure to God. And the Apoſtles remembring this leſſon of our Saviour Chriſt, were content to ſuffer ſuch perſecutions, as you may read in the Acts of the Apoſtles and the Epiſtles. But we never read that they ever perſecuted any man. The Holy Apoſtle Saint Paul ſaith, That every man that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhould ſuffer perſecution. And alſo he ſaith further in the Epiſtle written to the Philippians in the firſt Chapter, That it is not only given to you to believe in the Lord, but alſo to ſuffer perſecution for his ſake.

The Apoſtles were perſecuted but never perſecutors.

Wherefore take this for a ſure concluſion, that there, where the Word of God is truly preached there is perſecution, as well of the hearers, as of the teachers: and whereas is quietneſs and reſt in Worldly pleaſure, there is not the truth. For the World loveth all that are of the World, and hateth all things that are contrary to it. And to be ſhort, S. Paul calleth the Goſpel, the word of the Croſs, the word of puniſhment. And the Holy Scripture doth promiſe nothing to the favourers and followers of it in this World, but trouble, vexation, and perſecution, which theſe Worldly men cannot ſuffer, nor away withal.

Perſecution a ſure mark of true preaching. The Word of the Croſs.

Therefore pleaſeth it your good grace, to return to this golden rule of our Maſter and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which is this, By their fruits you ſhall know them. For where you ſee perſecution, there is the Goſpel, and there is the truth; and they that do perſecute, be void and without all truth; not caring for the clear light, which (as our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt ſaith in the third Chapter of S. Johns Goſpel) is come into the World, and which ſhall utter and ſhew forth every mans works. And they whoſe works be naught, dare not come to this light, but go about to ſtop it and hinder it, letting as much as they may, that the Holy Scripture ſhould not be read in our Mother tongue, ſaying that it would cauſe Hereſie and inſurrection, and ſo they perſwade, at the leaſt way they would fain perſwade your Grace to keep it back. But here mark their ſhameleſs boldneſs, which be not aſhamed, contrary to Chriſts Doctrin, to gather figs of thorns, and grapes of buſhes, and to call light darkneſs, and darkneſs light, ſweet ſowre, and ſowre ſweet, good evil, and evil good, and to ſay, that that, which teacheth all obedience, ſhould cauſe diſſention and ſtrife: but ſuch is their belly wiſedom, wherewith they judge and meaſure every thing, to hold and keep ſtill this wicked Mammon, the goods of this World, which is their God, and hath ſo blinded the eyes of their hearts, that they cannot ſee the clear light of the ſacred Scripture, though they babble never ſo much of it.

Crafty pretenſes of the Prelates to ſtop the reading of Holy Scripture.

Belly wiſedom.

But as concerning this matter, other men have ſhewed your Grace their minds, how neceſſarie it is to have the Scripture in Engliſh. The which thing alſo your Grace hath promiſed by your laſt Proclamation: the which promiſe I pray GOD that your gracious Highneſs may ſhortly perform, even to day before to morrow. Nor let the wickedneſs of theſe Worldly men detain you from your godly purpoſe and promiſe. Remember the ſubtile Worldly wiſe Counſellors of Hammon the Sone of Naas, King of the Ammonites, which when David had ſent his Servants to comfort the young King for the death of his Father, by crafty imaginations counſelled Hammon, not only not to receive them gently, but to entreat them moſt ſhamefully and cruelly, ſaying, That they came not to comfort him, but to eſpie and ſearch his land, ſo that afterward they bringing David word how every thing ſtood, David might come and conquer it. And they cauſed the young King to ſhear their heads, and to cut their coats by the points, and ſent them away like fools; whom he ought rather to have made much of, and to have entreated them gently, and have given them great thanks and rewards. Oh wretched Counſellors; But ſee what followed of this carnal and Worldly wiſedom. Truly nothing but deſtruction of all the whole Realm, and alſo of all them that took their parts.

Perſwaſion to let the Scripture be read in Engliſh.

Sinifter Counſell about Princes.

Wicked policy turned to his own deſtruction.

Therefore good King, ſeeing that the right David, that is to ſay, our Saviour Chriſt hath ſent his Servants, that is to ſay, his true Preachers, and his own word alſo to comfort our weak and ſick Souls, let not theſe Worldly men make your Grace believe that they will cauſe inſurrections and Hereſies, and ſuch miſchiefs as they imagine of their own mad brains, leſt that he be avenged upon you and your Realm, as was David upon the Ammonites, and as he hath ever been avenged upon them which have obſtinately withſtood and gainſaid his word. But peradventure they will lay this againſt me, and ſay that experience doth ſhew, how that ſuch men as call themſelves followers of the Goſpel regard not your Graces commandment, neither ſet by your Proclamation, and that was well proved by thoſe perſons which of late were puniſhed in London for keeping ſuch books as your Grace had prohibited by Proclamation: and ſo like as they regarded not this, ſo they will not regard or eſteem other your Graces laws, ſtatutes, or ordinances. But this is but a craftie perſwaſion. For your Grace knoweth that there is no man living, ſpecially that loveth Worldly promotion, that is ſo fooliſh, to ſet forth, promote, or inhaunce his enemies, whereby he ſhould be let of his Worldly pleaſures and fleſhly deſires: but rather he will ſeek all the wayes poſſible that he can, utterly to confound, deſtroy, and put him out of the way. And ſo as concerning your laſt Proclamation, prohibiting ſuch books, the very true cauſe of it, and chiefe Counſellors (as men ſay, and of likelihood it ſhould be) were they, whoſe evil living and cloaked hypocriſie theſe books uttered and diſcloſed: And howbeit that there were three or four, that would have had the Scripture to go forth in Engliſh, yet it happened there, as it is evermore ſeen, that the moſt part overcometh the better, and ſo it might be that theſe men did not take this Proclamation as yours, but as theirs ſet forth in your name, as they have done many times more, which hath put this your Realm in great hinderance and trouble, and brought it in great penury,

Under the preteence of inſurrections and Hereſies, the Prelates ſtop the liberty of Chriſts Goſpel.

Objection prevented and anſwered.

The cauſe and cauſes of the Kings Proclamation againſt the reading of Scripture books in Engliſh.

He meaneth of Cranmer Cromwel, and one or two mo, againſt whom the B. of Winchester and his faction did prevail.

A practice of Prelates to convey their own Proclamations under the Kings Name and Authority:

Anno 1555.

He meaneth of the Pope, which went about to drive K. Henry out of his kingdom, and that not without ſome adherents neer about the King.

and more would have done, if GOD hath not mercifully provided to bring your Grace to knowledge of the falſhood and privy treaſon, which their head and Captain was about; and be you ſure not without adherents, if the matter be duly ſearched. For what marvel is it, that they being ſo nigh of your Counſel, and ſo familiar with your Lords, ſhould provoke both your Grace and them to prohibit theſe books, which before by their own Authority have forbidden the New Teſtament, under pain of everlaſting damnation: for ſuch is their manner, to ſend a thouſand men to hell, ere they ſend one to God, and yet the new Teſtament (and ſo I think by the other) was meekely offered to every man that would and could, to amend it, if there were any fault.

The cauſe of inſurrections is falſly laid upon Engliſh books, but rather is to be layd upon the Popes pardons.

Moreover, I will ask them the cauſes of all inſurrections, which have been in this Realm heretofore. And whence is it that there be ſo many Extortioners, Bribers, Murderers, and Theeves, which daily do not break only your Graces Laws, ordinances, and ſtatutes, but alſo the laws and Commandments of Almighty God? I think they will not ſay theſe books, but rather their pardons which cauſeth many a man to ſin in truſt of them. For as for thoſe malefactors which I now rehearſed, you ſhall not find one amongſt a hundred, but that he will cry out both of theſe books, and alſo of them that have them, yea and will be glad to ſpend the good which he hath wrongfully gotten, upon Fagots to burn both the Books, and them that have them.

Extortioners, Bribers, Theeves, be greateſt enemies to the Goſpel to be in Engliſh.

The froward life of the Goſpellers, is not to be laid to the Goſpel.

And as touching theſe men that were lately puniſhed for theſe books, there is no man, I hear ſay, that can lay any word or deed againſt them that ſhould ſound to the breaking of any of your Graces Laws, this only except, if it be yours, and not rather theirs. And be it ſo that there be ſome that have theſe books, that be evil, unruly and ſelf willed perſons, not regarding Gods Laws, nor Mans, yet theſe books be not the cauſe thereof, no more than was the bodily preſence of Chriſt and his words the cauſe that Judas fell, but their own froward mind and carnal wit, which ſhould be amended by the vertuous example of living of their Curates, and by the true expoſition of the Scripture. If the Lay People had ſuch Curates, that would thus do their office, neither theſe books, nor the Devil himſelf could hurt them to go out of frame, ſo that the lack of good Curates is the deſtruction and cauſe of all miſchief. Neither do I write theſe things becauſe that I will either excuſe theſe men lately puniſhed, or to affirm all to be true written in theſe books, which I have not all read, but to ſhew that there cannot ſuch inconvenience follow of them, and ſpecially of the Scripture as they would make men believe ſhould follow.

Lack of good Curats, is the cauſe of all miſchief in the Realm.

And though it be ſo that your Grace may by other books and namely by the Scripture it ſelf, know and perceive the hypocrite wolves clad in Sheeps cloathing, yet I think my ſelf bound in Conſcience to utter unto your Grace ſuch things as GOD put in my mind to write. And this I do (God ſo judge me) not for hate of any perſon or perſons living, nor for that I think the Word of GOD ſhould go forth without perſecution, if your Grace had commanded that every man within your Realm ſhould have it in his Mothers tongue. For the Goſpel muſt needs have perſecution unto the time that it be preached thorowout all the World, which is the laſt ſign that Chriſt ſhewed to his Diſciples ſhould come before the day of Judgement: ſo that if your Grace had once commanded that the Scripture ſhould be put forth, the Devil would ſet forth ſome wile or other to perſecute the truth. But my purpoſe is, for the love that I have to GOD principally, and the glory of his Name, which is only known by his Word, and for the true allegeance that I owe unto our Grace, and not to hide in the ground of my heart the talent given me of God, but to chaffer it forth to other, that it may increaſe to the pleaſure of GOD, to exhort your Grace to avoyd and beware of theſe miſchievous flatterers, and their abominable ways and Counſels.

The Goſpel will not go forth without perſecution, though the K would permit the reading thereof to be free. The laſt ſign before the judgment day, is that the Goſpel ſhould be preached thorow the World.

M. Latimer chaffereth forth his talent. He meaneth this belike by Sir. Tho. More, who for the Biſhops pleaſure ſet his pen againſt the Goſpel.

And take heed whoſe Counſels your Grace doth take in this matter: for there be ſome that for fear of loſing of their Worldly worſhip and honour, will not leave of their opinion, which raſhly, and that to pleaſe men withal by whom they had great promotion they took upon them to defend by writing, ſo that now they think that all their felicitie, which they put in this life, ſhould be marred and their wiſdom not ſo greatly regarded, if that which they have ſo ſlanderouſly oppreſſed ſhould be now put forth and allowed. But alas, let theſe men remember Saint Paul, how fervent he was againſt the truth (and that of a good zeal) before he was called; he thought no ſhame to ſuffer puniſhment, and great perſecutions for that which before he deſpiſed and called Hereſie. And I am ſure that their living is not more perfect than St. Pauls was, as concerning the outward works of the law, before he was converted.

S. Paul a good example for all perſecutors to follow.

Alſo the King and Prophet David was not aſhamed to forſake his good intent in building of the Temple, after that the Prophet Nathan had ſhewed him that it was not the pleaſure of God that he ſhould build any Houſe for him; and notwithſtanding that Nathan had before allowed and praiſed the purpoſe of David, yet he was not aſhamed to revoke and eat his words again, when he knew that they were not according to Gods will and pleaſure.

K. Davids good example for all kings to ſubmit their intents and purpoſes to Gods word.

Wherefore they be ſore drowned in Worldly Wiſdom, that think it againſt their worſhip to knowledge their Ignorance; whom I pray to God that your Grace may eſpie, and take heed of their Worldly Wiſdom, which is fooliſhneſs before God, that you may do that God commandeth, and not that ſeemeth good in your own ſight without the Word of God, that your Grace may be found acceptable in his ſight, and one of the members of his Church, and according to the office that he hath called your Grace unto, you may be found a faithful Miniſter of his gifts, and not a defender of his faith, for he will not have it defended by man or mans power, but by his word only, by the which he hath evermore defended it, and that by a way far above mans power or reaſon, as all the ſtories of the Bible make mention.

By Nathan we may learn not to be aſhamed to call back our words when we know Gods pleaſure to be otherwiſe.

Wherefore, gracious King, remember your ſelf, have pitie upon your Soul, and think that the day is even at hand when you ſhall give account of your office, and of the Blood that hath been ſhed with your ſword. In the which day that your Grace may ſtand ſtedfaſtly, and not be aſhamed, but be clear and readie in your reckoning, and to have (as they ſay) your Quietus eſt, ſealed with the Blood of our Saviour Chriſt which only ſerveth at that day, is my daily prayer to him that ſuffered death for our ſins, which alſo praieth to his Father for grace for us continually. To whom be all honour and praiſe for ever, Amen. The Spirit of God preſerve your Grace. Anno Domini 1530 1. die Decembris.

Divers things in this letter of Mr. Latimer to the King to be conſidered.

In this Letter of Mr. Latimer to the King above prefixed, many things we have to conſider: Firſt, his good Conſcience to God, his good will to the King, the dutie of a right Paſtor unto truth, his tender care to the common wealth, and ſpecially to the Church of Chriſt. Further, we have to conſider the abuſe of Princes Courts, how Kings many times be abuſed with flatterers and wicked Counſellers about them, and ſpecially we may note the ſubtle practices of Prelates, in abuſing the name and authoritie of Kings, to ſet forth their own malignant proceedings. We may ſee moreover, and rather marvel at in the ſaid Letter, the great boldneſs and divine ſtoutneſs in this man, who as yet being no Biſhop, ſo freely and plainly without all fear of Death, adventuring his own life to diſcharge his Conſcience, durſt ſo boldly to ſo mighty a Prince, in ſuch a dangerous caſe, againſt the Kings Law and Proclamation ſet out in ſuch a terrible time take upon him to write, and to admoniſh that, which no Counſellor durſt once ſpeak unto him in defence of Chriſts Goſpel. Whoſe example if the Biſhops and Prelates of this Realm, for their parts likewiſe in like caſes of neceſſity would follow (as indeed they ſhould) ſo many things perad venture would not be ſo out of frame as they be, and alſo for lack that the Officers of Gods Word do not their duty:

The heavenly courage of Mr. Latimer in diſcharging his Conſcience.

Finally, this moreover in the ſaid Letter is to be noted, how bleſſedly Almighty God wrought with his faithful Servants bold adventure, and wholeſom Counſel, though it did not prevail through the iniquity of the time, yet notwithſtanding God ſo wrought with his Servant in doing his duty, that no danger, nor yet diſpleaſure roſe to him thereby, but rather thanks and good will of the Prince; for not long after the ſame he was advanced by the King to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, as is above declared.

The King well pleaſed with the plainneſs of M. Latimer.

Seeing Maſter Latimer was ſo bold and plain with the King (as is afore ſpecified) no great marvel if he did uſe the like freedom and plainneſs toward other meaner perſons in admoniſhing them of their miſorder, eſpecially if any ſuch occaſion were given, where truth and equity required his defence againſt injury and oppreſſion. For example whereof we have another Letter of his, written to a certain Juſtice of the Peace in Warwickſhire, who as he is long ſince departed, ſo he ſhall be here unnamed. The Letter although it may ſeem ſomewhat long and tedious; yet I thought here not to overpaſs the ſame for divers and ſundry reſpects: Firſt, that the vertue and faithful Conſcience of this good Paſtor may appear more at large; alſo for that all other Biſhops and Paſtors by this example may learn with like zeal and ſtomach to diſcharge their duty and Conſcience in reforming things amiſs, and in powdering with the Salt of Gods Word the ſores of the People. Which thing if every Biſhop for his part within his Dioceſs had done in King Edwards days, in redreſſing ſuch corruption of that time with like diligence as this man did, verily I ſuppoſe that the perſecution of Queen Mary had not ſo plagued the Realm as it did: but whereas never a man almoſt liveth in due order, and yet never a Biſhop will ſtirr to ſeek redreſs, what can become of the Realm? Item, another reſpect is, becauſe of the Juſtices and all other placed in room and office, which may take heed hereby, not to abuſe their Authority to tread down truth, and bear down poor men with open wrong through extortion or partiality: And finally, that all injurious oppreſſors whatſoever, by the ſaid Letter may take ſome fruit of wholeſome admonition. What the argument and occaſion was of this Letter, I ſhewed before. The tenor and purport thereof, as it was written to the Gentleman, is this as followeth.

Example for Biſhops, and all good Paſtors to follow.

Warning to Juſtices of Peace.

A fruitfull Letter of Mr. Latimer, written to a certain Gentleman.

A Letter of M. Latimer to a certain Gentleman.

RIght Worſhipful, ſalutem in Domino. And now, Sir I underſtand, that you be in great admirations at me, and take very grievouſly my manner of writing to you, adding thereunto that you will not bear it at my hand, no, not if I were the beſt Biſhop in England, &c.

Ah Sir! I ſee well I may ſay as the common ſaying is, Well, I have fiſhed and caught a Frog; brought little to paſs with much ado. You will not bear it with me, you ſay. Why Sir? what will ye do with me? You will not fight with me, I trow. It may ſeem unſeemly for a Juſtice of Peace to be a breaker of peace; I am glad the doting time of my fooliſh youth is gone and paſt. What will you then do with me, in that you ſay you will not bear it at my hand? What hath my hand offended you? Perchance you will convent me before ſome Judge, and call me into ſome Court. Deus bene vertat. Equidem non recuſo judicium allum. Accuſemus invicem, ut emendemus alius alium in nomine Domini. Fiat juſtitia in judicio. i. God turn it to good. I refuſe no judgment. Let us accuſe one another, that one of us may amend another, in the Name of the Lord. Let juſtice proceed in judgment. And then and there, do beſt, have beſt, for club half penny. Or peradventure ye will ſet pen to paper, and all to rattle me in a Letter, wherein confuting me you will defend your ſelf and your Brother againſt me. Now that would I ſee, quoth long Robin, ut dicitur vulgariter. Non potero ſane non vehementer probare ejuſmodi induſtriam, i. I cannot chuſe but muſt allow ſuch diligence. For ſo ſhould both your integrities and innocencies beſt appear, if you be able to defend both your own proceedings, and your Brothers doings in this matter to be upright. Et ego tum juſtis rationibus victus, libenter cedam, culpam humiliter confeſſurus, i. And then will I gladly give place, confeſſing my fault humbly, as one conquered with juſt reaſons. But I think it will not be. But now firſt of all let me know what it is that ye will not bear at my hand? What have I done with my hand? What hath my hand treſpaſſed you? Forſooth, that can I tell, no man better: For I have charitably moniſhed you in a ſecret Letter, of your ſupper dealing, and ſuch like misbehaviour. O quam grave piaculum; i. What a ſore matter is this? And will ye not bear ſo much with me? Will ye not take ſuch a ſhew of my good will towards you, and toward the ſaving of your Soul at my hand? Oh Lord God, who would have thought that Mr. N. had been ſo impudent, that he would not bear a godly monition for the wealth of his Soul? I have in uſe to commit ſuch treſpaſs many times in a year with your betters by two or three degrees, both Lords and Ladies, and the beſt of the Realm, and yet hitherto I have not heard that any of them have ſaid in their diſpleaſure, that they will not bear it at my hand. Are you yet to be taught what is the office, liberty, and priviledge of a Preacher? What is it elſe, but even arguere mundum de peccato, i. to rebuke the World of ſin, without reſpect of perſons: Quod quidem ipſum eſt ipſius Spiritus ſancti peculiare in eccleſia munus & officium, ſed non niſi per Prædicatores legitimos exequendum, i. Which thing undoubtedly is the peculiar office of the Holy Ghoſt in the Church of God, ſo that it be practiſed by lawful Preachers. You could but ill bear (belike) to hear your fault openly reproved in the Pulpit, which cannot bear the ſame in a ſecret ſealed up Letter, written both friendly, charitably, and truely; Niſi forte acriter reprehendere peccata, ſit jam omni charitate, amicitia, veritate carere, i. Unleſs perhaps to rebuke ſin ſharply, be now to lack all charity, friendſhip, and truth. But Maſter N. if you will give me leave to be plain with you, I fear me you be ſo plunged in Worldly purchaſings, and ſo drowned in the manifold dreggs of this deceivable World, that I ween you have forgotten your Catechiſm. Read therefore again the opening of the firſt Commandment, and then tell me whether you of me, or I of you have juſt cauſe to complain; &c.

As may well appear by his Letter ſent to the King before.

Item Sir, you ſaid further, that I am wonderfully abuſed by my neighbour, &c. How ſo, good Mr. N.? Wherein? Or how will you prove it to be true, and when? So you ſaid, that he had abuſed you, and given you wrong information; but the contrary is found true by good teſtimony of M. Chamber, which heard as well as you what my neighbour ſaid, and hath teſtified the ſame, both to you, and againſt you, full like himſelf. Mr. N. to forge and feign (which argueth an ill cauſe) that is one thing; but to prove what a man doth ſay, that is another thing. As though you were priviledged to out-face poor men, and bear them in hand what you liſt, as may ſeem to make ſome maintenance for your naughty cauſe. Truſt me, Mr. N. I was but a very little acquainted with my neighbour when this matter began; but now I have found him ſo conformable to honeſty, upright in his dealings, and ſo true in his talk, that I eſteem him better than I do ſome other whom I have perceived and found otherways. For I will flatter no man, nor yet claw his back in his folly, but eſteem all men as I find them, allowing what is good, and diſallowing what is bad: In omnibus hominibus ſive amicis ſive inimicis, juxta præceptum Paulinum, à filiis hujus ſeculi in pretio non habitum: Sitis, odio, inquit, proſequentes quod malum eſt, adhærentes autem ei quod bonum eſt: Neque bonum malum, nec malum bonum in gratiam hominum affirmemus unquam, id quod filii hujus ſeculi vulgò faciunt, ut eſt videre ubique, i. Among all men, either Friends or enemies, according to Pauls precept, not eſteemed of the Children of this World; Hate you, ſaith he, that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good. And let us not any time for the favour of men, call good evil, and evil good, as the Children of this World are commonly wont to do, as it is every where to be ſeen. And now what manner of man do you make me, Maſter N. when you note me to be ſo much abuſed by ſo ignorant a man, ſo ſimple, ſo plain, and ſo farr without all wrinkles? Have I lived ſo long in this tottering World, and have I been ſo many ways turmoiled and toſſed up and down, and ſo much as it were ſeaſoned with the powder of ſo many experiences to and fro, to be now ſo farr bewitched and alienated from my wits, as though I could not diſcern cheeſe from chalk, truth from falſhood, but that every ſilly Soul, and baſe witted man might eaſily abuſe me to that enterpriſe he liſted at his pleaſure? Well, I ſay not nay, but I may be abuſed. But why do you not tell me how your Brother abuſed me, promiſing before me and many more, that he would ſtand to your awardſhip, and now doth deny it? Why do you not tell me, how thoſe two falſe faithleſs wretches abuſe me, promiſing alſo to abide your award, and do it not? Yea, why do you not tell me, how you your ſelf have abuſed me, promiſing me to redreſs the injury and wrong that your Brother hath done to my neighbour, and have not fulfilled your promiſe? Theſe notable abuſes be nothing with you, but only you muſt needs burthen me with my neighbours abuſing me, which is none at all, as far forth as ever I could perceive, ſo God help me at my need. For if he had abuſed me as you and others have done, I ſhould be ſoon at a point with him, for any thing further doing for him,&c.

M. Latimer flattereth no man.

Item, Sir, you ſaid further, that I ſhall never be able to prove that either your Brother, or the two Tenants agreed to ſtand to your award, &c. No Sir, Mr. N. you ſay belike as you would have it to be, or as your Brother with his adherents have perſwaded you to think it to be, ſo inducing you to do their requeſt to your own ſhame and rebuke, if you perſevere in the ſame, beſide the peril of your Soul, for conſenting, at leaſt way, to the maintenance by falſhood of your Brothers iniquity. For in that you would your awardſhip ſhould take none effect, you ſhew your ſelf nothing inclinable to the redreſs of your Brothers unright dealing with an honeſt poor man, which hath been ready at your requeſt to do you pleaſure with his things, or elſe he had never come into this wrangle for his own goods with your Brother.

Bolſtring of falſhood and iniquity. Brother ought not to bear with Brother, to bear down right and truth, eſpecially being a Juſtice.

Ah Maſter N. what manner of man do you ſhew your ſelf to be? or what manner of Conſcience do you ſhew your ſelf to have? For firſt as touching your Brother you know right well that Sir Thomas Coking with a Letter of his own hand-writing, hath witneſſed unto your Brothers agreement; which Letter he ſent to me unſealed, and I ſhewed the ſame to my neighbour, and other more ere I ſealed it, and perchance have a Copy of the ſame yet to ſhew. With what Conſcience then can you ſay that I ſhall never be able to prove it? Shall not three men upon their Oaths make a ſufficient proof, trow you? Vel ipſo Dicente Domino; In ore duorum vel trium, &c. i., The Lord himſelf ſaying in the mouth of two or three, &c. Yea, you think it true, I dare ſay, in your Conſcience, if you have any Conſcience, though I were in my grave, and ſo unable to prove any thing. And as for the two Tenants, they be as they be, and I truſt to ſee them handled according as they be; for there be three men yet alive, that dare ſwear upon a Book, that they both did agree. But what ſhould we look for at ſuch mens hands, when you your ſelf play the part you do? Verum vivit adhuc Deus, qui videt omnia, & judicat juſte, &c. i. But God is yet alive, which ſeeth all, and judgeth juſtly.

Corrupt Tenants.

Item Sir, you ſaid yet further, that the Juſtices of Peace in the Country think you very unnatural, in taking part with me before your Brother, &c. Ah Maſter N. what a ſentence is this to come out of your mouth? For partaking is one thing, and miniſtring of juſtice is another thing; and a worthy miniſter of juſtice will be no partaker, but one indifferent between party and party. And did I require you to take my part, I pray you? No, I required you to miniſter juſtice between your Brother and my Neighbour, without any partaking with either other. But what manner of Juſtices be they, I pray you, which would ſo fain have you to take part naturally with your Brother, when you ought and ſhould reform and amend your Brother? as you your ſelf know, no man better. What? Juſtices? no, Jugglers you might more worthily call ſuch as they be, than Juſtices. Be they thoſe Juſtices which call you unnatural, for that you will not take your Brothers part againſt all right and Conſcience, whom you had picked out and appointed to have the final hearing and determining of my Neigbours cauſe, after your ſubſtantial and final award making? Verily I think no leſs. Forſooth he is much beholding to you, and I alſo for his ſake. Is that the wholeſom counſel that you have to give your poor Neighbours in their need? Indeed you ſhew your ſelf a worthy Juggler: Oh, I would have ſaid a Juſticer, among other of your juggling and partaking Juſtices. Deum bonum! i. O good God! what is in the world? Marry Sir, my Neighbour had ſpun a fair thred, if your partaking Juſtices through your good counſel had had his matter in ordering and finiſhing. I pray God ſave me and all my Friends, with all Gods flock, from the whole fellowſhip of your ſo natural and partaking Juſtices, Amen.

Were not here good ſort of Juſtices, trow you?

Juſtices turned to Jugglers.

Partaking Juſtices.

Anno 1555.

Lord God! who would have thought that there had been ſo many partaking Juſtices, that is to ſay, unjuſt Juſtices in Warwickſhire, if Maſter N. himſelf one of the ſame order (but altogether out of order) and therefore knoweth it beſt, had not told us the Tale? But theſe call you, you ſay, very unnatural, &c. And why not rather, I pray you, too much natural? For we read, De natura duplici, integra & corrupta. Illa erat juſtitiæ plena: hæc niſi reparata, ſemper manet injuſta, injuſtitiæ fructus alios poſt alios paritura, i. Of a double nature, ſound and corrupt. That was full of Juſtice: this, unleſs it be reſtored, abideth always unjuſt, bringing forth the fruits of wickedneſs one after another: So that he that will not help his Brother, having a juſt cauſe in his need, may be juſtly called unnatural, as not doing juxta inſtinctum naturæ, ſive integræ, ſive reparatæ, i. according to the inſtinct of nature, either as it was at the beginning, or as it was reſtored. But he that will take his Brothers part againſt right, as to ratifie his Brothers wrong deceiving, he is too much natural, tanquam ſequens ingenium ſive inclinationem naturæ corruptæ, contra voluntatem Dei, i. as one following the diſpoſition and inclination of corrupt nature againſt the will of God; and ſo to be natural may ſeem to be Cater-couſin, or Couſin-germain with, to be Diabolical.

I fear me we have too many Juſtices that be too much natural, to their own periſhment both Body and Soul. For worthy Juſtices having ever the fear and dread of God before their eyes, (quales ſunt pauciores apud nos, quam vellem, i. Of which ſort we have a fewer amongſt us, than I would) will have no reſpect at all in their Judgments and proceedings, ad propinquitatem ſanguinis, i. to vicinity of Blood; but altogether ad dignitatem & æquitatem cauſæ, ut quod juſtum eſt ſemper judicent intuitu Dei, non quod injuſtum eſt intuitu hominum; of which number I pray God make you one, Amen. Juſtus eſt (ſaith John) qui facit juſtitiam. At qui facit peccatum (id quod facit, quiſquis injuſte facit in gratiam & favorem ullius hominis) ex Diabolo eſt. i. He is juſt that doth Juſtice. But he that ſinneth (as they all do, which do unjuſtly for favour and pleaſure of men) is of the Devil (ſaith he) of which ſort all our partaking and natural Juſtices be with all their partiality and naturality. Quare dignum & juſtum eſt, that as many as be ſuch Juſtices, juſte priventur munere, & amplius quoque plectantur pro ſui quique facinoris quantitate, ut vel ſic tandem abſcindantur, tanquam nati in incommodum reipublicæ noſtræ, qui nos conturbant, cum adjuvare debeant, i. Be juſtly deprived of their offices, and further alſo be puniſhed, according to the quantity or quality of their Crime, ſo that by that means they may be cut off, as men born and bred to the hurt and detriment of the Common-wealth, which trouble us, when they ought to help us, Amen.

Quare ſeponite juſtitiam, & ſequimini naturam, as your Naturals and Diabolicals would have you to do, that is, even as juſt as Germains Lips, which came not together by nine mile, Ut vulgo dicunt, &c.

Item Sir, finally and laſt of all you added theſe words following: Well, quoth you, let Mr. Latimer take heed how he meddleth with my Brother, for he is like to find as crabbed and as froward a piece of him, as ever he found in his life, &c. Ah Sir? and is your Brother ſuch an one as you ſpeak of indeed? Merciful God! what a commendation is this for one Brother to give another? Eſtne ejuſmodi gloriatio tua, mi amice? i. Is this your glorying my Friend? And were it not poſſible, trow you, to make him better? It is written, Vexatio dat intellectum, i. Vexation giveth underſtanding. And again, Bonum mihi, Domine, quod humiliaſti me, i. It is good, O Lord, that thou haſt humbled me. At leaſt way, I may pray to God for him as David did for ſuch like, Ad hunc modum; Chamo & fræno maxillas eorum conſtringe, qui non approximant ad te, i. After this ſort; Bind faſt Aſſes with bridle and ſnaffle, that they approach not near unto thee. In the mean ſeaſon, I would I had never never known either of you both; for ſo ſhould I have been without this inward ſorrow of my heart, to ſee ſuch untowardlineſs of you both to godlineſs; for I cannot be but heavy-hearted, to ſee ſuch men ſo wickedly minded. Well, let us ponder a little better your words, where you ſay, I ſhall find him as crabbed and as froward a-piece, &c. Mark well your own words. For by the tenor of the ſame it plainly appeareth, that you confeſs your Brothers cauſe wherein he ſo ſtiffly ſtandeth, to be unjuſt and very naught. For he that ſtandeth ſo ſtiffly in a good quarrel and a juſt cauſe, as many good men have done, is called a faſt man, a conſtant, a truſty man. But he that is ſo obſtinate and untractable in wickedneſs and wrong doing, is commonly called a crabbed and froward piece, as you name your Brother to be.

Wherefore knowing ſo well your Brothers cauſe to be ſo naughty, why have you not endeavoured your ſelf, as a worthy Juſtice, to reform him accordingly, as I required you, and you promiſed me to do, now almoſt twelve months ago, if not altogether. Summa Summarum, Maſter N. if you will not come off ſhortly, and apply your ſelf thereunto more effectually hereafter, then you have heretofore, be you well aſſured therof, I ſhall detect you to all the Friends that I have in England, both high and low, as well his crabbedneſs and frowardneſs, as your colourable ſupportation of the ſame; that I truſt I ſhall be able thereby either to bring you both to ſome goodneſs, or at leaſt way I ſhall ſo warn my Friends and all honeſt hearts to beware of your illneſs, that they ſhall take either no hurt at all, or at leaſt way leſs harm by you through mine advertiſement; in that, knowing you perfectly, they may the better avoid and ſhun your Company. You ſhall not ſtay me, Maſter N. no though you would give me all the lands and goods you have, as rich as you are noted to be. Ego nolo tam juſtam cauſam derelinquere, ego nolo peccatis alienis in hac parte communicare, i. I will not forſake ſuch a juſt cauſe, neither will I communicate with other mens ſins. For whether it be per deteſtabilem ſuperbiam, i. by deteſtable pride: whether per abominabilem avaritiam, i. by abominable avarice: or by both two linked together, it is no ſmall iniquity to keep any poor man ſo long from his right and duty ſo ſtiff-neckedly and obſtinatly, or, whether ye will, crabbedly and frowardly. And what is it then any manner of ways to conſent to the ſame? You know, I trow, Maſter N. Furtum quid ſit, nempe, quoviſmodo auferre vel retinere alienam rem invito Domino, ut quidam definiunt. Si fur ſit qui ſic palam facit, quis erit qui facientem probat, tutatur, propugnat, vel quibuſcunque ambagibus ſuffulcit? ideſt. What theft is, that is, to take or detain by any manner of way another mans good againſt his will that is the owner, as ſome define it. If he be a thief that ſo doth openly, what ſhall he be that approveth him which is the doer, defendeth, maintaineth, and ſupporteth him by any manner of colour? Conſider with your ſelf good Maſter N. Quid ſit opprimere & fraudare in negotio fratrem, i. What it is to oppreſs, and to defraud your Brother in his buſineſs, and what followeth thereof. It is truly ſaid, Non tollitur peccatum, niſi reſtituatur ablatum, i. The ſin is not forgiven, except the thing be reſtored again that is taken away. No reſtitution, no ſalvation; which is as well to be underſtood, de rebus per fraudes, technas, & dolos, ut de rebus per manifeſtum furtum & latrocinium partis, i. Of things gotten by fraud, guile, and deceit, as of things gotten by open theft and robbery. Wherefore let not your Brother, Maſter N. by cavillation continue in the Devils poſſeſſion. I will do the beſt I can, and wreſtle with the Devil, omnibus viribus, to deliver you both from him. I will leave no one ſtone unmoved to have both you and your Brother ſaved. There is neither Archbiſhop nor Biſhop, nor yet any learned man neither in Univerſities or elſewhere, that I am acquainted withal, that ſhall not write unto you, and in their writing by their learning confute you. There is no godly man of Law in this Realm that I am acquainted withal, but they ſhall write unto you, and confute you by the Law. There is neither Lord nor Lady, nor yet any noble Perſonage in this Realm, that I am acquainted withal, but they ſhall write unto you, and godly threaten you with their Authority.

Godly threats of M. Latimer to ſave the Soul of his Friend.

I will do all this; yea, and kneel upon both my knees before the Kings Majeſty, and all his honourable Council, with moſt humble petition for your reformation, rather than the Devil ſhall poſſeſs you ſtill, to your final damnation. So that I do not deſpair, but verily truſt, one way or other, to pluck both you and alſo your crabbed Brother, as crabbed as you ſay he is, out of the Devils claws, maugre the Devils heart.

Theſe premiſſes well conſidered, look upon it, good Maſter N. that we have no further ado: Gods plague is preſently upon us; therefore let us now diligently look about us, and in no wiſe defend, but willingly reknowledge and amend whatſoever hath been amiſs. Theſe were the capital points of your talk, as I was informed, after you had peruſed that may nipping and unpleaſant Letter? and I thought good to make you ſome anſwer to them, if perchance I might ſo move you, the rather to call your ſelf to ſome better remembrance, and ſo more earneſtly apply your ſelf to accompliſh and perform what you have begun and promiſed to do, namely, the thing it ſelf, being of ſuch ſort, as appeareth tendeth both to your worſhip, and alſo to Gods high pleaſure.

Thus, lo, with a mad head, but yet a good will, after long ſcribling I wot not well what (but I know you can read it, and comprehend it well enough) I bid you moſt heartily well to fare in the Lord, with good health, and long life to Gods pleaſure, Amen. From Baxſterley the 15 of June.

During the time that the ſaid Maſter Latimer was Priſoner in Oxford, we read not of much that he did write, beſides his Conference with Dr. Ridley, and his proteſtation at the time of his diſputation. Otherwiſe, of Letters we find very few or none that he did write to his Friends abroad, ſave only theſe few lines, which he wrote to one Mrs. Wilkinſon of London, a godly Matron, and an exile afterward for the Goſpel ſake. Who ſo long as ſhe remained in England, was a ſingular Patroneſs to the good Saints of God, and learned Biſhops, as to Maſter Hooper, to the Biſhop of Hereford, to Maſter Coverdale, Maſter Latimer, Doctor Cranmer, with many other. The Copie and effect of which his Letter to Mrs. Wilkinſon here followeth.

A Letter ſent to Mrs. Wilkinſon of London Widow, from Mr. Hugh Latimer out of Bocardo, in Oxford.

IF the gift of a pot of Water ſhall not be in oblivion with God, how can God forget your manifold and bountiful gifts, when he ſhall ſay to you; I was in Priſon, and you viſited me? God grant us all to do and ſuffer while we be here, as may be to his will and pleaſure, Amen.

Yours in Bocardo,
Hugh Latimer.

Touching the memorable acts and doings of this worthy man, among many other this is not to be neglected, what a bold enterprize he attempted, in ſending to King Henry a Preſent, the manner whereof is this. There was then, and remaineth ſtill an old cuſtom received from the old Romans, that upon New-years day being the firſt day of January, every Biſhop with ſome handſom New-Years gift ſhould gratifie the King; and ſo they did, ſome with gold, ſome with ſilver, ſome with a purſe full of money, and ſome one thing, ſome another: but Mr. Latimer being Biſhop of Worceſter then, among the reſt, preſented a New Teſtament for his New-years gift, with a napkin having this poſie about it, Fornicatores & adulteros judicabit Dominus.

New-years gift ſent to King Henry.

And thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the whole life, both of M. Ridley, and of M. Latimer, two worthy doers in the Church of Chriſt, ſeverally and by themſelves ſet forth and deſcribed, withal their doings, writings diſputations, ſufferings, their painful travels, faithful preachings, ſtudious ſervice in Chriſts Church, their patient impriſonment, and conſtant fortitude in that which they had taught, with all other their proceedings from time to time, ſince their firſt ſpringing years, to this preſent time and month of Queen Mary, being

B. Ridley and M. Latimer brought forth to examination.

tober. being the month of October, Anno 1555. In the which month they were brought forth together, to their final examination and execution. Wherefore as we have heretofore declared both their Lives ſeverally and diſtinctly one from the other; ſo now joyntly to couple them both together, as they were together both joyned in one ſociety of Cauſe and Martyrdom, we will by the grace of Chriſt proſecute the reſt that remaineth concerning their latter examination, degrading, and conſtant ſuffering, with the order and manner alſo of the Commiſſioners, which were Mr.White Biſhop of Lincoln, Mr. Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, with others; and what were their Words, their Objections, their Orations there uſed, and what again were the Anſwers of theſe men to the ſame as in the proceſs here followeth to be ſeen.

Mr.White Biſh. of Lincoln, M.Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, the Popes Deputies.

The order and manner of the Examination of Dr.Ridley, and Mr. Latimer had the 30th day of September, 1555.

The laſt examination of M. Ridley and M.Latimer.

FIrſt, after the appearing of Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury before the Popes Delegate, and the Queens Commiſſioners in St.Maries Church at Oxford, about the 12. day of September, whereof more ſhall be ſaid (by the Lords grace) when we come to the death of the ſaid Archbiſhop; ſhortly after, upon the 28. of the ſaid month of September, was ſent down to Oxford another Commiſſion from Cardinal Pool Legate à latere, to John White Biſhop of Lincoln, to Dr. Brooks Biſhop of Glouceſter, and to D.Holyman Biſhop of Briſtow.

The effect of the Cardinals Commiſſion ſent down to Oxford.

The contents and vertue of which Commiſſion was, that the ſaid John of Lincoln, James of Glouceſter, and John of Briſtow, they, or two of them ſhould have full power and authority, to aſcite, examine and judge Mr.Hugh Latimer, and Maſter Dr. Ridley, pretenced Biſhops of Worceſter and London, for divers and ſundry erroneous Opinions, which the ſaid Hugh Latimer and Nicholas Ridley did hold and maintain in open Diſputations had in Oxford, in the months of May, June, and July, in the year of our Lord 1554. as long before in the time of perdition, and ſince. The which Opinions if the named Perſons would now recant, giving and yielding themſelves to the determination of the Univerſal and Catholick Church, planted by Peter in the bleſſed See of Rome, that then they deputed Judges, by the ſaid authority of their Commiſſion, ſhould have power to receive the ſaid penitent Perſons, and forthwith miniſter unto them the reconciliation of the holy Father the Pope; but if the ſaid Hugh Latimer, and Nicholas Ridley would ſtoutly and ſtubbornly defend and maintain theſe their erroneous Opinions and Aſſertions, that then the ſaid Lords by their Commiſſion ſhould proceed in form of Judgment, according to the Law of Hereticks, that is, degrading them from their promotion and dignity of Biſhops, Prieſts, and all other Eccleſiaſtical Orders, ſhould pronounce them as Hereticks; and therefore clean cut them off from the Church, and ſo yeild them to receive puniſhments due to all ſuch Hereſie and Schiſm.

D.Ridley and M.Latimer aſcited to appear the laſt of September.

Wherefore the laſt of September the ſaid two perſons, Nicholas Ridley and Hugh Latimer, were aſcited to appear before the ſaid Lords, in the Divinity School at Oxford, at eight of the Clock. At what time thither repaired the Lords, placing themſelves in the high Seat, made for publick Lectures and Diſputations, according to the uſage of that School, being then fair ſet, and trimmed with Cloth of Tiſſue, and Cuſhions of Velvet: and after the ſaid Lords were placed and ſet, the ſaid Latimer and Ridley were ſent for: and firſt appeared Maſter Dr.Ridley, and anon Mr.Latimer. But becauſe it ſeemed good ſeverally to examine them, Mr.Latimer was kept back until Dr. Ridley was throughly examined. Therefore, ſoon after the coming of Dr. Ridley into the School, the Commiſſion was publiſhed by an appointed Notary, and openly read. But Dr.Ridley ſtanding bareheaded, humbly expecting the cauſe of that his appearance, eſtſoons as he had heard the Cardinal named, and the Popes Holineſs, put on his Cap. Wherefore after the Commiſſion was publiſhed, in form and ſenſe above ſpecified, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſpake in ſenſe following.

Biſh.Ridley putteth on his Cap, at the hearing of the Popes name.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, although neither I, neither my Lords here, in reſpect of our own perſons do look for Cap or Knee, yet becauſe we bear and repreſent ſuch perſons as we do, that is my Lord Cardinals Grace, Legate à latere to the Popes Holineſs, as well in that he is of a notable Parentage (and therewith Mr. Ridley moved his Cap with lowly obeyſance) deſcending from the Regal Blood, as in that he is a man worthy to be reverenced with all humility, for his great knowledge and learning, noble vertues, and godly life, and eſpecially in that he is here in England Deputy to the Popes Holineſs, it ſhould have becomed you at this name to have uncovered your head. Wherefore except you will of your own ſelf take the pains to put your hand to your head, and at the nomination, as well of the ſaid Cardinal, as of the Popes Holineſs, uncover the ſame, leſt that this your contumacy, exhibited now before us, ſhould be prejudicial to the ſaid moſt reverend Perſons (which thing we may in no caſe ſuffer) you ſhall cauſe us to take the pain, to cauſe ſome man to pluck off your Cap from you. To whom Mr.Ridley making his petition for licence, anſwered:

Anno 1555.

The words of the Biſhop of Lincoln to Dr. Ridley for not putting off his Cap.

Ridley. As touching that you ſaid (my Lord) that you of your own perſons deſire no Cap nor Knee, but only require the ſame, in conſideration that you repreſent the Cardinal Graces perſon, I do you to wit, and thereupon make my proteſtation, that I did put off my Cap at the naming of the Cardinals Grace, neither for any contumacy that I bear towards your own perſons, neither for any derogation of honour toward the Lord Cardinals Grace. For I know him to be a man worthy of all humility, reverence, and honour, in that he came of the moſt Regal Blood, and in that he is a man indued with manifold graces of learning and vertue, and as touching theſe vertues and points, I with all humility (therewith he put of his Cap, and bowed his Knee) and obeyſance that I may, will reverence and honour his Grace; but in that he is Legate to the Biſhop of Rome (and therewith put on his Cap) whoſe uſurped Supremacy, and abuſed Authority I utterly refuſe and renounce, I may in no wiſe give any obeyſance or honour unto him, leſt that my ſo doing and behaviour might be prejudicial to mine Oath, and derogation to the verity of Gods Word: and therefore that I might not only by confeſſion profeſs the verity in not reverencing the renounced Authority, contrary to Gods Word, but alſo in geſture, in behaviour, and all my doings expreſs the ſame, I have put on my Cap, and for this conſideration only; and not for any contumacy to your Lordſhips, neither contempt of this worſhipful Audience, neither derogation of any honour due to the Cardinal his Grace, both for his noble Parentage, and alſo his excellent qualities, I have kept on my Cap.

Answer of D.Ridley to the Biſhop of Lincoln.

D.Ridley reverenceth the perſon of the Cardinal, but not his Legacy.

D.Ridley oweth not reverence to the Pope.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, you excuſe your ſelf of that, with the which we preſſed you not, in that you proteſt you keep on your Cap, neither for any contumacy towards us, (which look for no ſuch honour of you) neither for any contempt of this Audience: which although juſtly they may, yet (as I ſuppoſe) in this caſe do not require any ſuch obeyſance of you; neither in derogation of any honour due to my Lord Cardinals Grace, for his Regal deſcent (at which word Mr.Ridley moved his Cap) and excellent qualities; for although in all the premiſſes honour be due, yet in theſe reſpects we require none of you, but only in that my Lord Cardinals Grace is here in England, Deputy of the Popes Holineſs (at which word the Lords and others put off their Caps, and Mr.Ridley put on his) and therefore we ſay unto you the ſecond time, that except you take the pains your ſelf, to put your hand to your head, and put off your Cap, you ſhall put us to the pain, to cauſe ſome man to take it from you, except you alledge ſome infirmity and ſickneſs, or other more reaſonable cauſe, upon the conſideration whereof we may do as we think good.

D.White Biſhop of Lincoln repliech again.

Putting off Caps at the naming of the Pope.

Ridley. The premiſſes I ſaid only for this end, that it might as well appear to your Lordſhips, as to this worſhipful Audience, why and for what conſideration I uſed ſuch kind of behaviour, in not humbling my ſelf to your Lordſhips with Cap and Knee: and as for my ſickneſs, I thank my Lord God, that I am as well at eaſe, as I was this long ſeaſon; and therefore I do not pretend that which is not, but only this, that it might appear by this my behaviour, that I acknowledge in no point that uſurped Supremacy of Rome, and therefore contemn and utterly deſpiſe all authority coming from him. In taking off my Cap, do as it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhips, and I ſhall be content.

D.Ridley anſwereth.

and

The uſurped Supremacy of Rome defied.

D. Ridleys Cap pluckt off by force.

Then the Biſhop of Lincoln, after the third admonition, commanded one of the Beadles (that is an Officer of the Univerſity) to pluck his Cap from his head. M, Ridley bowing his head to the Officer, gently permitted him to take away his Cap.

After this the Biſhop of Lincoln in a long Oration exhorted Mr. Ridley to recant, and ſubmit himſelf to the Univerſal Faith of Chriſt, in this manner.

Lincoln. Mr. Ridley, I am ſure you have ſufficiently pondered with your ſelf the effect of this our Commiſſion with good adviſement, conſidering both points thereof, how that Authority is given to us, if you ſhall receive the true Doctrine of the Church (which firſt was founded by * Peter at Rome immediately after the death of Chriſt, and from him by lineal ſucceſſion hath been brought to this our time) if you will be content to renounce your former Errours, recant your heretical and ſeditious Opinions, content to yield your ſelf to the undoubted Faith, and Truth of the Goſpel, received and always taught of the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church, the which the King and Queen, all the Nobles of this Realm, and Commons of the ſame, all Chriſtian People have and do confeſs, you only ſtanding alone by your ſelf: You underſtand and perceive, I am ſure, that Authority is given us to receive you, to reconcile you and upon due penance to adjoyn and aſſociate you again into the number of the Catholicks and Chriſts Church, from the which you have ſo long ſtraied, without the which no man can be ſaved, the which thing I and my Lords here, yea and all, as well Nobles and Commons of this realm moſt heartily deſire, and I for my part (wherewith he put off his Cap) moſt earneſtly exhort you to do.

* Nay the Faith of Chriſt may be proved to have been at Rome in Tiberius time before Peter came there.

Remember (Mr. Ridley) it is no ſtrange Country whither I exhort you to return. You were once one of us, you have taken degrees in the School. You were made a Prieſt, and became a Preacher, ſetting forth the ſame Doctrine which we do now. You were made Biſhop according to our Laws; and to be ſhort, it is not ſo long agone, ſince you ſeparated your ſelf from us, and in the time of Hereſie became a ſetter forth of that deviliſh and ſeditious Doctrine which in theſe later days was preached amongſt us. For at what time the new Doctrine of † only Faith began to ſpring, the Council willing to win my Lord Chancellor, ſent you to him (I then being in my Lords houſe unknown as I ſuppoſe to you) and after you had talked with my Lord ſecretly, and were departed, immediately my Lord declared certain points of your talk, and means of your perſwaſion, and amongſt other this was one, that you ſhould ſay, (†) Tuſh my Lord, this matter of juſtification is but a trifle, let us not ſtick to condeſcend herein to them; but for Gods love my Lord, ſtand ſtoutly in the verity of the Sacrament: for I ſee they will aſſault that alſo. If this be true (as my Lord is a man credible enough in ſuch a matter) hereby it is declared of what mind you were then, as touching the Truth of the moſt bleſſed Sacrament.

Though the Country of Rome be not ſtrange, yet the Doctrine of Rome is ſtrange.

† Another untruth in Biſhop White, for only Faith, is no new Doctrine.

* The words of D. Ridley falſly reported.

Alſo in a Sermon of yours at Pauls Croſs, you as effectually and as Catholickly ſpake of that bleſſed Sacrament, as any man might have done, whereby it appeareth that it is no ſtrange thing, nor unknown place whereunto I exhort you. I wiſh you to return thither from whence you came: that is together with us to acknowledge the Church of God, wherein no man may err, to acknowledge the Supremacy of our moſt reverend Father in God the Popes Holineſs, which (as I ſaid) lineally taketh his deſcent from Peter, upon whom Chriſt promiſed before his death, to build his Church; the which ſupremacy or prerogative, the moſt ancient Fathers in all ages, in all times did acknowledge: and here he brought a place or two out of the Doctors, but eſpecially ſtayed upon a ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, which writeth in this manner, Totus orbis Chriſtianus in tranſmarinis, & longe remotis terris Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubjectus eſt, i. All the Chriſtian Countries beyond the Sea are ſubject to the Church of Rome. Here you ſee, Mr. Ridley, that all Chriſtendom is ſubject to the Church of Rome. What ſhould ſtay you therefore to confeſs the ſame with St. Auſtin, and the other Fathers.

The Biſhop of Lincoln perſwadeth D. Ridley to return to the Popes Church.

Dubitatur utrum hæc forma verborum ſit Auguſtini.

Then Mr. Ridley deſired his patience, to ſuffer him to ſpeak ſomewhat of the premiſſes, leſt the multitude of things might confound his memory; and having grant thereunto, he ſaid in this manner:

Ridley. My Lord, I moſt heartily thank your Lordſhip, as well for your gentleneſs, as alſo for your ſobriety in talk, and for your good and favourable zeal in this learned exhortation, in the which I have marked eſpecially three points, which you uſed to perſwade me to leave my Doctrine and Religion, which I perfectly know and am throughly perſwaded to be grounded not upon mans imagination and decrees, but upon the infallible Truth of Chriſts Goſpel, and not to look back, and to return to the Romiſh See, contrary to mine Oath, contrary to the Prerogative and Crown of this Realm, and eſpecially (which moveth me moſt) contrary to the expreſſed Word of God.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to the Biſh. of Lincoln.

Three Points noted in the Biſhop of Lincolns Oration.

The firſt point is this, that the See of Rome taking his beginning from Peter, upon whom you ſay Chriſt hath builded his Church, hath in all ages lineally from Biſhop to Biſhop been brought to this time.

1. The See of Rome founded upon Peter.

Secondly, that even the holy Fathers from time to time have in their writings confeſſed the ſame.

2. The See of Rome confirmed by old Doctors.

Thirdly, that in that I was once of the ſame Opinion, and together with you I did acknowledge the ſame.

3. D. Ridley once of the ſame See.

Firſt, as touching the ſaying of Chriſt, from whence your Lordſhip gathereth the foundation of the Church upon Peter, truly the place is not ſo to be underſtood as you take it, as the circumſtance of the place will declare. For after that Chriſt had asked his Diſciples whom men judged him to be, and they had anſwered, that ſome had ſaid he was a Prophet, ſome Helias, ſome one thing ſome another, then he ſaid, Whom ſay ye that I am? Then Peter ſaid, I ſay that thou art Chriſt, the Son of God. To whom Chriſt anſwered, I ſay Tu es Petrus, & ſuper hanc petram ædificabo Eccleſiam meam, i. Thou art Peter, and upon this ſtone I will build my Church; that is to ſay, upon this ſtone, not meaning Peter himſelf, as though he would have conſtituted a mortal man, ſo frail and brickle a foundation of his ſtable and infallible Church; but upon this Rock-ſtone, that is, this confeſſion of thine, that I am the Son of God, I will build my Church. For this is the foundation and beginning of all Chriſtianity, with word, heart, and mind to confeſs that Chriſt is the Son of God. Whoſoever believeth not this, Chriſt is not in him; and he cannot have the mark of Chriſt printed in his forehead, which confeſſeth not that Chriſt is the Son of God.

The Church not builded upon Peter.

The Church builded upon Faith, not upon any perſon.

Therefore Chriſt ſaid unto Peter, that upon this Rock, that is, upon this his confeſſion, that he was Chriſt the Son of God, he would build his Church; to declare, that without this Faith no man can come to Chriſt: ſo that this belief, that Chriſt is the Son of God is the foundation of our Chriſtianity, and the foundation of our Church. Here you ſee upon what foundation Chriſts Church is built, not upon the frailty of man, but upon the ſtable and infallible Word of God.

The words of Chriſt to Peter in Matth. 16. expounded. Faith is the foundation of the Church.

Now as touching the lineal deſcent of the Biſhops in the See of Rome, true it is, that the Patriarchs of Rome in the Apoſtles time, and long after, were great maintainers and ſetters forth of Chriſts glory, in the which above all other Countries and Regions there eſpecially was preached the true Goſpel, the Sacraments were moſt duly miniſtred; and as before Chriſts coming it was a City ſo valiant in proweſs, and martial affairs, that all the world was in a manner ſubject to it, and after Chriſts Paſſion, divers of the Apoſtles there ſuffered perſecution for the Goſpels ſake: ſo after that the Emperors, their hearts being illuminated, received the Goſpel, and became Chriſtians, the Goſpel there, as well for the great power and dominion, as for the fame of the place, flouriſhed moſt, whereby the Biſhops of that place were had in more reverence and honour, moſt eſteemed in all Councils and Aſſemblies, not becauſe they acknowledged them to be their Head, but becauſe the place was moſt reverenced and ſpoken of, for the great power and ſtrength of the ſame. As now here in England, the Biſhop of Lincoln in Seſſions and Sittings hath the Prehemnence of the other Biſhops, not that he is the Head and Ruler of them; but for the dignity of the Biſhoprick Lineal deſcent of the Biſhop of Rome.

Why the Biſhops of Rome have been more eſteemed than the Biſhops of other Cities.

(and

Anno 1555.

The Prerogative that the Doctors give to the See of Rome, and for what cause.

(and therewith the People smiled.) Wherefore the Doctors in their Writings have spoken most reverently of this See of Rome, and in their writings preferred it, and this is the Prerogative which your Lordship did rehearse the ancient Doctors to give to the See of Rome.

The See of Rome, so long as it continued in found Doctrine, was worthy to be reverenced.

Semblably, I cannot, nor dare not but commend, reverence, and honour the See of Rome, as long as it continued in the promotion, and setting forth of Gods glory, and in due preaching of the Gospel, as it did many years after Christ. But after that the Bishops of that See, seeking their own pride, and not Gods honour, began to set themselves above Kings and Emperours, challenging to them the title of Gods Vicars, the dominion and supremacy over all the world, I cannot but with St. Gregory a Bishop of Rome also, confess that the Bishop of that place is the very true Antichrist, whereof St. John speaketh by the name of the Whore of Babylon, and say with the said St. Gregory; he that maketh himself a Bishop over all the world, is worse than Antichrist.

The Bishop of Rome proved to be Antichrist.

The place of S. Austin answered.

Now whereas you say St. Augustine should seem not only to give such a Prerogative, but also Supremacy to the See of Rome, in that he saith, all the Christian world is subject to the Church of Rome, and therefore should give to that See a certain kind of subjection: I am sure that your Lordship knoweth, that in St. Austins time there were four Patriarchs, of Alexandria, Constantinople, Antioch, and Rome, which Patriarchs had under them certain Countries; as in England the Archbishop of Canterbury hath under him divers Bishopricks in England and Wales, to whom he may be said to be their Patriarch. Also your Lordship knoweth right well, that at what time St. Austin wrote this Book, he was then Bishop in Affrica. Farther you are not ignorant, that between Europe and Affrica lieth the Sea called Mare Mediterraneum, so that all the Countries in Europe to him which is in Affrica may be called Transmarinæ, Countries beyond the Sea. Hereof St. Austin saith, Totus orbis Christianus in transmarinis & longe remotis terris, Ecclesiæ Romanæ subjectus est. i. All the Christian Countries beyond the Seas and far Regions, are subject to the See of Rome. If I should say all Countries beyond the Sea, I do except England, which to me now being in England, is not beyond the Sea. In this sense St. Austin saith, All the Countries beyond the Sea are subject to the See of Rome, declaring thereby that Rome was one of the Sees of the four Patriarchs, and under it Europe, by what subjection I pray you? only for a preheminence, as we here in England say, that all the Bishopricks in England are subject to the Archbishopricks of Canterbury and York.

Four Patriarchs in the Church in Austins time.

Countries beyond the Sea subject to Rome, how and in what respect.

Rome may be Mother of Churches, and yet not supream Head of Churches.

For this preheminence also the other Doctors (as you recited) say, that Rome is the Mother of Churches, as the Bishoprick of Lincoln is Mother to the Bishoprick of Oxford, because the Bishoprick of Oxford came from the Bishoprick of Lincoln, and they were both once one, and so is the Archbishoprick of Canterbury Mother to the other Bishopricks which are in her Province. In like sort the Archbishoprick of York is Mother to the North-Bishopricks; and yet no man will say, that Lincoln, Canterbury or York, is supream Head to other Bishopricks; neither then ought we to confess the See of Rome to be supream Head, because the Doctors in their Writings confess the See of Rome to be Mother of Churches.

Now where you say, I was once of the same Religion which you are of, the truth is, I cannot but confess the same. Yet so was St. Paul a persecutor of Christ. But in that you say, that I was one of you not long agone, in that I doing my message to my Lord of Winchester, should desire him to stand stout in that gross opinion of the Supper of the Lord; in very deed I was sent (as your Lordship said) from the Council to my Lord of Winchester, to exhort him to receive also the true confession of Justification; and because he was very refractorious, I said to him, Why, my Lord, what make you so great a matter herein? You see many Anabaptists rise against the Sacrament of the Altar; I pray you, my Lord, be diligent in confounding of them: for at that time my Lord of Winchester and I had to do with two Anabaptists in Kent. In this sense I willed my Lord to be stiff in the defence of the Sacrament against the detestable errors of Anabaptists, and not in the confirmation of that gross and carnal Opinion now maintained.

D. Ridley falsly charged to preach Transubstantiation at Pauls-Cross.

In like sort, as touching the Sermon which I made at Pauls-Cross, you shall understand that there were at Pauls, and divers other places, fixed railing Bills against the Sacrament, terming it Jack of the Box, the Sacrament of the Halter, Round Robbin, with such like unseemly terms; for the which causes, I to rebuke the unreverend behaviour of certain evil disposed persons, preached as reverendly of that matter as I might, declaring what estimation and reverence ought to be given to it, what danger ensued the misthandling thereof, affirming in that Sacrament to be truly and verily the Body and Blood of Christ, effectually by grace and spirit: which words the unlearned understanding not, supposed that I had meant of the gross and carnal being which the Romish Decrees set forth, that a Body having life and motion, should be indeed under the shapes of Bread and Wine.

Dr. Ridley mistaken in his Sermon.

With that the Bishop of Lincoln somewhat interrupting him, said:

Linc. Well, Mr. Ridley, thus you wrest places to your own pleasure; for whereas S. Augustine saith, that the whole Christian world is subject to the See of Rome without any limitation, and useth these words, In transmarinis, & longe remotis terris, only to express the latitude of the Dominion of the See of Rome, willing thereby to declare that all the world, yea Countries far distant from Rome, yet nevertheless are subject to that See, yet you would wrest it, and leave it only to Europe. I am sure ye will not deny, but that Totus mundus is more than Europe.

Lincoln again replieth.

Rid. Indeed, my Lord, if St. Austin had said simpliciter totus mundus, and not added in transmarinis, it had been without limitation; but in that he said, Totus mundus in transmarinis partibus, all the Countries beyond the Seas, he himself doth limit the universal proposition, declaring how far he meant by totus mundus.

D. Ridley again answereth to the words of Austin.

The Bishop not staying for his answer, did proceed, saying:

Linc. Well, if I should stay upon this place, I could bring many more places of the Fathers for the confirmation thereof; but we have certain instructions, according to the which we must proceed, and came not hither to dispute the matter with you, but only to take your answers to certain Articles, and used this in the way of disputation, in the which you interrupted me; wherefore I will return thither again.

Lincoln returneth again to his Oration.

Ye must consider that the Church of Christ lieth not hidden, but is a City on the Mountain, and a Candle on the Candlestick. Ponder with your self, that the Church of Christ is Catholica, Catholick, which is deduced of κατὰ ὅλον, that is, per omnia: so that Christs Church is universally spread throughout the world, not contained in the * alligation of places, not comprehended in the circuit of England, not contained in the compass of Germany and Saxony, as your Church is.

* And why then do you alligate it to the City of Rome?

Wherefore (Mr. Ridley) for Gods love be ye not singular; acknowledge with all the Realm the Truth, it shall not be (as you alledge) prejudicial to the Crown; for the King and Queen their Majesties have renounced that usurped Power taken of their predecessors, and justly have renounced it. For I am sure you know that there are two Powers, the one declared by the Sword, the other by the Keys. The Sword is given to Kings and Rulers of Countries; the Keys were delivered by Christ to Peter, and of him left to all the Successors. As touching our goods, possession and lives, we with you acknowledge us subjects to the King and Queen, who hath the temporal Sword; but as concerning matters of Religion, as touching Gods quarrel and his Word, we acknowledge another Head: and as the King and the Queen their Highness do in all the worldly affairs justly challenge the Prerogative and Primacy, so in Spiritual and Ecclesiastical matters they acknowledge themselves not to be Heads and Rulers, but members of Christs Body. Why therefore should ye stick at that matter, the which their Majesties have forsaken and yielded.

Two Powers, of the Keys, and of the Sword.

England, how subject to the King, and how to the Pope.

Where-

Anno 1555.

B. Ridley exhorted to ſubmit himſelf the Pope.

Wherefore (Mr. Ridley) you ſhall not onely not do injury to the Crown, and be prejudicial to their Majeſties honour, in acknowledging with all Chriſtendom the Popes Holineſs to be ſupreme Head of Chriſts Church here militant in earth, but do a thing moſt dilectable in their ſight, and moſt deſired of his Holineſs. Thus if you will do, revoking together all your errours, acknowledging with the reſidue of the Realm the common and the publick fault, you ſhall do that all men moſt heartily deſire; you ſhall bring quietneſs to your Conſcience, and health to your Soul; then ſhall we with great joy, by the Authority committed to us from the Cardinals Grace, receive you into the Church again, acknowledging you to be no longer a rotten, but a lively member of the ſame: but if you ſhall ſtill be ſingular, if you ſhall ſtill and obſtinately perſevere in your errours, ſtubbornly maintaining your former Hereſies, then we muſt againſt our will, according to our Commiſſion, ſeparate you from us, and cut you off from the Church, leſt the rottenneſs of one part in proceſs of time putrifie and corrupt the whole body, then muſt we confeſs and publiſh you to be none of ours; then muſt we yield you up to the temporal Judges, of whom, except it otherwiſe pleaſe the King and Queens Highneſs, you muſt receive puniſhment by the Laws of this Realm, due for Hereticks.

Fear of puniſhment for before him.

Wherefore, Mr. Ridley, conſider your ſtate, remember your former degrees, ſpare your body, eſpecially conſider your Soul, which Chriſt ſo dearly bought with his precious Blood, do not you raſhly caſt away that which was precious in Gods ſight; enforce not us to do all that we may do, which is not onely to publiſh you to be none of us, to cut you off from the Church: we do not, nor cannot condemn you to die (as moſt untruely hath been reported of us) but that is the temporal Judges * Office; we onely declare you to be none of the Church, and then muſt you, according to the tenour of them, and pleaſure of the Rulers, abide their determination, ſo that we, after that we have given you up to the temporal Rulers, have no further to do with you.

* But that office you your ſelves have aſſigned unto them.

But I truſt (Maſter Ridley) we ſhall not have occaſion to do that we may. I truſt you will ſuffer us to reſt in that point of our Commiſſion, which we moſt heartily deſire, that is, upon recantation and repentance to receive you, to reconcile you, and again to adjoyn you to the Unity of the Church.

Then Maſter Ridley, with often interruption, at length ſpake.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to Lincoln.

Ridley. My Lord, I acknowledge an unſpotted Church of Chriſt, in the which * no man can err, without the which no man can be ſaved, the which is ſpread thorowout all the World, that is, the Congregation of the faithful; neither do I alligate or bind the ſame to any one place, as you ſaid, but confeſs the ſame to be ſpread thorowout all the World; and where Chriſts Sacraments are duely miniſtred, his Goſpel truely preached and followed, there doth Chriſts Church ſhine as a City upon an hill, and as a candle in the candleſtick: but rather it is ſuch as you that would have the Church of Chriſt bound to a place, which appoint the ſame to Rome, that there and no where elſe is the foundation of Chriſts Church. But I am fully perſwaded that Chriſts Church is every where founded, in every place where his Goſpel is truely received, and effectually followed. And in that the Church of God is in doubt, I uſe herein the wiſe Counſel of Vincentius Lyrinenſis, whom I am ſure you will allow, who giving precepts how the Catholick Church may be in all Schiſms and Hereſies known, writeth in this manner: When (ſaith he) one part is corrupted with Hereſies, then preferr the whole World before that one part; but if the greateſt part be infected, then preferr antiquity.

* He meaneth, in which general errour can be finally.

The Church tyed to no place.

The Catholicks do bind the Church to a certain place, and that onely to Rome.

The Proteſtants bind the Church to no one certain place but follow the confeſſion of the Word.

The counſel of Lyrinenſis, what Church to follow.

The greateſt part of chriſtianity infected with the Church of Rome, and in what points.

In like ſort now, when I perceive the greateſt part of Chriſtianity to be infected with the poyſon of the See of Rome, I repair to the uſage of the Primitive Church, which I find clean contrary to the Popes decrees; as in that the Prieſt receiveth alone, that it is made unlawful to the Laity to receive in both kinds, and ſuch like: Wherefore it requireth, that I preferr the Antiquity of the Primitive Church, before the Novelty of the Romiſh Church.

Lincoln. Maſter Ridley, theſe faults which you charge the See of Rome withal, are indeed no faults. For firſt, it was never forbid the Laity, but that they might, if * they demanded, receive under both kinds. You know alſo, that Chriſt after his reſurrection, at what time he went with his Apoſtles to Galilee, opened himſelf by breaking of Bread. You know that Saint Paul after his long ſayling towards Rome brake Bread, and that the Apoſtles came together in breaking of Bread, which declareth that it is not unlawful to miniſter the Sacrament under the form of Bread onely: and yet the Church had juſt occaſion to decree, that the Laity ſhould receive in one kind onely, thereby to take away an opinion of the unlearned, that Chriſt was not wholly both Fleſh and Blood under the form of Bread. Therefore to take away their opinion, and to eſtabliſh better the Peoples Faith, the Holy Ghoſt in the Church thought fit to decree, that the Laity ſhould receive onely in one kind; and it is no news for the Church upon juſt conſideration to alter Rites and Ceremonies. For you read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, that Saint Paul writing to certain of the Gentiles, which had received the Goſpel, biddeth them to abſtain à ſuffocato & ſanguine, from things ſtifled, and from Blood, ſo that this ſeemeth to be an expreſs commandment; yet who will ſay but that it is lawful to eat bloodings? how is it lawful, but by the permiſſion of the Church,

* the Behemian. required that and were ſhent for their labour.

Great reaſons of the Catholicks to prove the Communion under one kind.

Argument. The Church did abrogate the precept of the Apoſtles of ſtrangled and bloodings: Ergo, the Church likewiſe hath Authority touching the miniſtration under both kinds.

Anſwer. The precept of the Apoſtles was but for a time, and for a purpoſe, by little and little to win the Jews.

Ridley. My Lord, ſuch things as St. Paul enjoyned to the Gentiles for a ſufferance, by a little and little to win the Jews to Chriſt, were onely commandments of time, and reſpected not the ſucceſſors: but Chriſts Commandment, Do this (that is, that which he did in remembrance, which was not to miniſter in one kind onely) was not a commandment for a time, but to perſevere to the Worlds end.

But the Biſhop of Lincoln, not attending to this anſwer, without any ſtay proceeded in this Oration.

So that the Church ſeemeth to have Authority by the Holy Ghoſt, whom Chriſt ſaid he would ſend after his aſcenſion, which ſhould teach the Apoſtles all truth, to have power and juriſdiction to alter ſuch points of the Scripture, ever reſerving the foundation: but we came not, as I ſaid before, in this ſort to reaſon the matter with you, but have certain inſtructions miniſtred unto us, according to the tenour of the which we muſt proceed, propoſing certain Articles, unto the which we require your anſwer directly, either affirmatively, or negatively to every of them, either denying them or granting them without farther diſputations or reaſoning; for we have already ſtretcht our inſtructions, in that we ſuffered you to debate and reaſon the matter, in ſuch ſort as we have done: the which Articles you ſhall hear now, and to morrow at eight of the clock in Saint Maries Church we will require and take your anſwers; and then according to the ſame proceed: and if you require a copy of them, you ſhall have it, pen, ink, and paper, alſo ſuch books as you ſhall demand, if they be to be gotten in the Univerſity.

The Articles.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. Nos Iohannes Lincoln, Iacobus Gloceſt. & Iohannes Briſtol, Epiſcopi. per reverendiſſ. Dominum Reginaldum miſeratione divina S. Mariæ in Coſmedin, &c.

Articles jointly and ſeverally miniſtred to D. Ridley and M. Latimer by the Popes deputie.

1. We do object to thee Nicholas Ridley, and to thee Hugh Latimer, jointly and ſeverally, firſt, that thou Nicholas Ridley in this high Univerſity of Oxford, Anno 1554. in the months of April, May, June, July, or in ſome one or more of them haſt affirmed, and openly defended and maintained, and in many other times and places beſides, that the true and natural Body of Chriſt, after the Conſecration of the Prieſt, is not really preſent in the Sacrament of the Altar.

2. Item, that in the year and months aforeſaid thou haſt publickly affirmed and defended, that in the Sacrament of the Altar remaineth ſtill the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine.

3. Item, that in the ſaid year and months thou haſt openly affirmed, and obſtinately maintained, that in the Maſs is no propitiatory ſacrifice for the quick and the dead.

4. Item,

4. Item, that in the year, place, and months aforeſaid, theſe the foreſaid aſſertions ſolemnly had been condemned, by the ſcholaſtical cenſure of this ſchool, as Hereticall and contrary to the Catholick Faith, by the worſhipful Mr. Doctor Weſton, Prolocutor then of the Convocation Houſe, as alſo by other learned men of both the Univerſities.

5 Item, that all and ſingular the premiſſes be true, notorious, famous, and openly known by publick fame, as well to them neer hand, and alſo to them in diſtant places far off.

Examination upon the ſaid Articles.

ALl theſe Articles I thought good here to place together, that as often as hereafter rehearſall ſhall be of any of them, the Reader may have recourſe hither, and peruſe the ſame, and not to trouble the ſtory with ſeveral repetitions thereof.

B. Ridley examined upon the Articles aforeſaid.

Lincoln. After theſe Articles were read, the Biſhops took Counſel together. At the laſt the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid; Theſe are the very ſame Articles which you in open diſputation here in the Univerſity did maintain and defend. What ſay you unto the firſt? I pray you anſwer affirmatively, or negatively.

Ridley. Why, my Lord, I ſuppoſed your gentleneſs had been ſuch, that you would have given me ſpace untill to morrow, that upon good adviſement I might bring a determinate anſwer.

Linc. Yea, Mr. Ridley, I mean not that your anſwers now ſhall be prejudicial to your anſwers to morrow. I will take your anſwers at this time, and yet notwithſtanding it ſhall be lawful to you to add, diminiſh, alter, and change of theſe anſwers to morrow what you will.

The Catholicks promiſe fair, but they perform nothing.

Rid. Indeed, in like manner at our laſt diſputations I had many things promiſed, and few performed. It was ſaid, that after diſputations I ſhould have a copy thereof, and licenſe to change mine anſwers, as I ſhould think good. It was meet alſo that I ſhould have ſeen what was written by the Notaries at that time. So your Lordſhip pretended great gentleneſs in giving me a time; but this gentleneſs is the ſame that Chriſt had of the high Prieſt. For you, as your Lordſhip ſaith, have no power to condemn me, neither at any time to put a man to death: ſo in like ſort the high Prieſts ſaid, that it was not lawful for them to put any man to death, but committed Chriſt to Pilate, neither would ſuffer him to abſolve Chriſt, although he ſought all the means therefore that he might. Then ſpake Doctor Weſton, one of the audience.

The high prieſts had not power to put Chriſt to death but they had power to commit him to Pilate, neither would they ſuffer him to abſolve Chriſt.

Weſt. What? do you make the King Pilate?

D. Weſton ſhooteth his bolt.

Rid. No, Mr. Doctor; I do but compare your deeds with Caiaphas his deeds and the high Prieſts, which would condemn no man to death, as ye will not, and yet would not ſuffer Pilate to abſolve and deliver Chriſt.

Linc. Mr. Ridley, we mind not but that you ſhall enjoy the benefit of anſwering to morrow, and will take your anſwers now as now, to morrow you ſhall change, take out, add, and alter what you will. In the mean ſeaſon we require you to anſwer directly to every Article, either affirmatively or negatively.

The proteſtation of D. Ridley.

Rid. Seeing you appoint me a time to anſwer to morrow, and yet will take mine anſwers out of hand: firſt, I require the Notaries, to take and write my proteſtation, that in no point I acknowledge your Authority, or admit you to be my Judges, in that point you are authorized from the Pope. Therefore whatſoever I ſhall ſay or do, I proteſt, I neither ſay it, neither do it willingly, thereby to admit the Authority of the Pope; and if your Lordſhip will give me leave, I will ſhew the cauſes, which move me thereunto.

Linc. No, Mr. Ridly, we have inſtructions to the contrary. We may not ſuffer you.

D. Ridley cannot be ſuffered to ſpeak.

Rid. I will be ſhort; I pray your Lordſhips ſuffer me to ſpeak in few words.

Linc. No, Maſter Ridley, we may not abuſe the hearers ears.

Rid. Why, my Lord, ſuffer me to ſpeak three words.

Linc. Well, Mr. Ridley, to morrow you ſhall ſpeak forty. The time is far paſt; therefore we require your anſwer determinately. What ſay you to the firſt Article? and thereupon rehearſed the ſame. Anno 1555.

Rid. My proteſtation alwayes ſaved, that by this mine anſwer I do not condeſcend to your Authority, in that you are Legate to the Pope, I anſwer thus: In a ſenſe the firſt Article is true, and in a ſenſe it is falſe; for if you take really for verè, for ſpiritually by grace and efficacy, then it is true that the natural Body and Blood of Chriſt is in the Sacrament vere & realiter, indeed and really; but if you take theſe tearms ſo groſly, that you would conclude thereby a natural Body having motion, to be contained under the forms of Bread and Wine, verè & realiter, then really is not the Body and Blood of Chriſt in the Sacrament, no more then the Holy Ghoſt is in the element of water in our Baptiſm. Becauſe this anſwer was not underſtood. The Notaries wiſt not how to note it; wherefore the Biſhop of Lincoln willed him to anſwer either affirmatively, or negatively, either to grant the Article, or to deny it.

The reall preſence in the Sacrament may have a double ſenſe. Equivocation in the word really. How the Body of Chriſt may be ſaid to be really, and how not really in the Sacrament.

Ridley. My Lord, you know that where any equivocation (which is a word having two ſignifications) is, except diſtinction be given, no direct anſwer can be made; for it is one of Ariſtotles fallacies, containing two queſtions under one the which cannot be ſatisfied with one anſwer. For both you and I agree herein, that in the Sacrament is the very true and natural Body and Blood of Chriſt, even that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which aſcended into Heaven, which ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father, which ſhall come from thence to judge the quick and the Dead, onely we differ in modo, in the way and manner of being: we confeſs all one thing to be in the Sacrament, and diſſent in the manner of being there. I being fully by Gods Word thereunto perſwaded, confeſs Chriſts natural Body to be in the Sacrament indeed by Spirit and grace, becauſe that whoſoever receiveth worthily that Bread and Wine, receiveth effectuouſly Chriſts Body, and drinketh his Blood, that is, he is made effectually partaker of his paſſion; and you make a groſſer kind of being, incloſing a natural, a lively, and a moving Body, under the ſhape or form of Bread and Wine.

2 Queſtions under.

The Papiſts & Proteſtants in granting the preſence do agree only in the manner of being they differ. How Chriſts Body is effectuouſly received in the Sacrament.

Now, this difference conſidered, to the queſtion thus I anſwer, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is the natural Body and Blood of Chriſt verè & realiter, indeed and really for ſpiritually by grace and efficacy; for ſo every worthy receiver receiveth the very true Body of Chriſt: but if you mean really and indeed, ſo that thereby you would include a lively and a movable Body under the forms of Bread and wine, then in that ſenſe is not Chriſts Body in the Sacrament really and indeed.

How Chriſt may be granted to be really in the Sacrament, and how not.

This anſwer taken and penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln propoſed the ſecond queſtion or Article. To whom he anſwered:

Rid. Alwayes my proteſtation referred, I anſwer thus: that in the Sacrament is a certain change, in that that Bread, which was before common Bread, is now made a lively preſentation of Chriſts Body, and not onely a figure, but effectuouſly repreſenteth his Body, that even as the mortal Body was nouriſhed by that viſible Bread, ſo is the internal Soul fed with the heavenly food of Chriſts Body, which the eyes of faith ſeeth, as the bodily eyes ſeeth onely Bread. Such a Sacramental mutation I grant to be in the Bread and Wine, which truely is no ſmall change, but ſuch a change as no mortal man can make, but onely that Omnipotency of Chriſts Word.

Whatchange is in the Sacramental Bread. Sacramental mutation. The ſubſtance of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament not changed.

Then the Biſhop of Lincoln willed him to anſwer directly, either affirmatively or negatively, without further declaration of the matter. Then he anſwered:

Rid. That notwithſtanding the Sacramental mutation of the which he ſpake, and all the Doctors confeſſed, the true ſubſtance and nature of Bread and wine remaineth: with the which the Body is in like ſort nouriſhed, as the Soul is by grace and Spirit with the Body of Chriſt. Even ſo in Baptiſm the Body is waſhed with the viſible water, & the Soul is cleanſed from all filth by the inviſible Holy Ghoſt, and yet the water ceaſeth not to be water, but keepeth the nature of water ſtill: In like ſort in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper the Bread ceaſeth not to be Bread.

Comparison between the Sacrament of the Communion and of Baptiſm.

Then

Anno 1555.

Then the Notaries penned, that he anſwered affirmatively to the ſecond Article. The Biſhop of Lincoln declared a difference between the Sacrament of the Altar and Baptiſm, becauſe that Chriſt ſaid not by the Water, this is the holy Ghoſt, as he did by the Bread; This is my Body.

What difference the Catholicks put between the Sacrament of the Communion and Baptiſm.

Then Mr. Ridley recited St. Auſtin which conferred both the Sacraments the one with the other: but the B. of Lincoln notwithſtanding thereupon recited the third Article, and required a direct anſwer. To whom Ridley ſaid?

Anſwer to the third Article.

Rid. Chriſt, as Saint Paul writeth, made one perfect ſacirifice for the ſins of the whole world, neither can any man reiterate that Sacrifice of his, and yet is the Communion an acceptable Sacrifice to God of praiſe and thankſgiving; but to ſay that thereby ſins are taken away (which wholly and perfectly was done by Chriſts paſſion, of the which the Communion is only a memory) that is a great derogation of the merits of Chriſts paſſion: for the Sacrament was inſtituted, that we receiving it, and thereby recogniſing and remembring his paſſion, ſhould be partakers of the merits of the ſame. For otherwiſe doth this Sacrament take upon it the office of Chriſts paſſion, whereby it might follow, that Chriſt died in vain.

Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Maſs is the derogation to Chriſts Paſſion.

The Notaries penned this his anſwer to be affirmatively. Then ſaid the Biſhop of Lincoln:

Unbloody ſacrifice.

Lin. Indeed as you alleadge out of Saint Paul, Chriſt made one perfect oblation for all the whole world, that is, that bloody ſacrifice upon the Croſs: yet nevertheleſs he hath left this ſacrifice, but not bloody, in the remembrance of that by the which ſins are forgiven; the which is no derogation of Chriſts paſſion.

Then recited the Biſhop of Lincoln the fourth Article. to the which Mr. Ridley anſwered:

Anſwer to the fourth Article.

Rid. That in ſome part the fourth was true, and in ſome part falſe; true, in that thoſe his aſſertions were condemned as Hereſies, although unjuſtly; falſe, in that it was ſaid they were condemned Scientia Scholaſtica, in that the diſputations were in ſuch ſort ordered, that it was far from any School Act.

This anſwer penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln rehearſed the fifth Article. To the which he anſwered:

Rid. That the premiſſes were in ſuch ſort true, as in theſe his anſwers he had declared. Whether that all men ſpake evil of them, he knew not, in that he came not ſo much abroad to hear what every man reported.

This anſwer alſo written of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid:

Dr. Ridley aſſigned to appear again the next day.

Linc. To morrow at eight of the Clock you ſhall appear before us in S. Maries Church, and then becauſe we cannot well agree upon your anſwer to the firſt Article (for it was long before he was underſtood) if it will pleaſe you to write your Anſwer, you ſhall have pen, ink, and paper, and Books, ſuch as you ſhall require; but if you write any thing ſaving your anſwers to theſe Articles, we will not receive it: ſo he charging the Mayor with him, declaring alſo to the Mayor that he ſhould ſuffer him to have a pen and ink, diſmiſſed Mr. Ridley, and ſent for Mr. Latimer, who being brought to the Divinity School, there tarried till they called for him.

Mr. Latimer appeareth before the Commiſſioners.

Mr. Latimer appeareth before the Deputies.

NOw after Mr. Ridley was committed to the Mayor, then the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded the Bayliffs to bring in the other Priſoner, who eftſoons as he was placed, ſaid to the Lords.

Lat. My Lords, if I appear again I pray you not to ſend for me until you be ready. For I am an old man, and it is great hurt to mine old age to tarry ſo long gazing upon the cold walls. Then the Biſhop of Lincoln.

Lin. Mr Latimer, I am ſorry you are brought ſo ſoon, although it is the Bayliffs fault, and not mine; but it ſhall be amended.

The order of Mr. Latimers apparel.

Then Mr. Latimer bowed his knee down to the ground, holding his hat in his hand, having a Kerchief on his head and upon it a night-Cap or two, and a great Cap (ſuch as Townſmen uſe, with two broad flaps to butten under the Chin) wearing an old thred-bare Briſtow Frize gown girded to his Body with a penny leather Girdle, at the which hanged by a long ſtring of leather his Teſtament, and his ſpectacles without caſe, depending about his neck upon his breſt. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln began on this manner.

The Oration of Lincoln to M. Latimer.

Linc. Mr. Latimer, you ſhall underſtand, that I and my Lords here have a Commiſſion from my Lord Cardinal Pools Grace, Legate a latere to this Realm of England, from our moſt reverend Father in God, the Popes Holineſs, to examine you upon certain Opinions and Aſſertions of yours, which you as well here openly in diſputations in the year of our Lord 1554, as at ſundry, and at divers other times did affirm, maintain, and obſtinately defend. In the which Commiſſion be ſpecially two points; the one which we muſt deſire you is, that if you ſhall now recant, revoke, and diſannul theſe your Errors, and together with all this Realm, yea all the world confeſs the Truth, we upon due repentance of you part ſhall receive you, reconcile you, acknowledge you no longer a ſtrayed ſheep, but adjoyn you again to the unity of Chriſt Church, from the which you in the time of Schiſm fell. So that it is no new place to the which I exhort you; I deſire you to return thither from whence you went.

But this Church then ſtandeth upon the Truth of Gods Word, and not upon the fantaſie of man.

Conſider, Mr. Latimer, that without the unity of the Church is no ſalvation; and in the Church can be no Errors. Therefore what ſhould ſtay you to confeſs that which all the Realm confeſſeth, to forſake that which the King and Queen their Majeſties have renounced, and all the Realm recanted: it was a common Error, and it is now of all confeſſed, It ſhall be no more ſhame to you, than it was to us all. Conſider, Mr. Latimer, that within theſe twenty years this Realm alſo with all the world confeſſed one Church, acknowledged in Chriſts Church an Head, and by what means and for what occaſion it cut off it ſelf from the reſt of Chriſtianity, and renounced that which in all times and ages was confeſſed, it is well known, and might be now declared upon what good foundation the See of Rome was forſaken, ſave that we muſt ſpare them that are dead, to whom the rehearſal would be opprobious: it is no uſurped Power, as it hath been termed, but founded upon Peter by Chriſt, a ſure foundation, a perfect builder, as by divers places, as well of the ancient Fathers, as by the expreſs Word of God may be proved.

How you ſpared the dead, your own acts can bear witneſs. The Popes Authority.

With that Mr. Latimer, which before leaned his head to his hand, began ſomewhat to remove his Cap and Kerchief from his ears.

The Biſhop proceeded, ſaying, For Chriſt ſpake expreſſly to Peter ſaying, Paſce oves meas; & rege oves meas, the which word doth not only declare a certain ruling of Chriſts Flock, but includeth alſo a certain preheminence and government; and therefore is the King called, Rex à regendo: ſo that in ſaying rege, Chriſt declared a power which he gave to Peter, which juriſdiction and power Peter by hand delivered to Clement, and ſo in all Ages hath it remained in the See of Rome. This, if you ſhall confeſs with us, and acknowledge with all the Realm your Errors and falſe Aſſertions, then ſhall you do that which we moſt deſire, then ſhall we reſt upon the firſt part of our Commiſſion, then ſhall we receive you, acknowledge you one of the Church, and according to the Authority given unto us, miniſter unto you, upon due repentance, the benefit of abſolution, to the which the King and Queen their Majeſties were not aſhamed to ſubmit themſelves, although they of themſelves were unſpotted, and therefore needed no reconciliation: yet leſt the putrifaction and rottenneſs of all the Body might be noyſom, and do damage to the head alſo, they (as I ſaid) moſt humbly ſubmitted themſelves to my Lord Cardinal his Grace, by him, as a Legate to the Popes Holineſs, to be partakers of the reconciliation. But if you ſhall ſtubbornly perſevere in your blindneſs, if you will not acknowledge your Errors, if you, as you now ſtand alone, will be ſingular in your Opinions, if by Schiſm and Hereſie you will divide your ſelf from your Church, then muſt we proceed to the ſecond part of the Commiſſion, which we would be loth to do, that is, not to condemn you, for that we cannot do (that the temporal Sword of the Realm, and * not we, will do) but to ſeparate you ποιμαίνειν, ſignifieth to feed, or to rule.

* Qui tradiderunt me tibi majus peccatum habent, ſaith Chriſt.

from us, acknowledge you to be none of us, to renounce you as no member of the Church, to declare that you are filius perditionis, a loſt Child, and as you are a rotten member of the Church, ſo to cut you off from the Church, and ſo to commit you to the temporal Judges, permitting them to proceed againſt you, according to the tenor of their Laws.

Perſwaſions uſed to Mr. Latimer to return to the unity of the Popes Church. Reaſons to perſwade the fleſh, but not to ſatiſfie Conſcience.

Therefore M. Latimer, for Gods love conſider your eſtate, remember you are a Learned man, you have taken degrees in the School, born the office of a Biſhop; remember you are an old man, ſpare your body, accelerate not your death, and ſpecially remember your Souls health, quiet of your Conſcience; conſider that if you ſhould die in this ſtate, you ſhall be a ſtinking ſacrifice to God; for it is the cauſe that maketh the Martyr, and not the death: conſider that if you die in this ſtate, you die without grace, for without the Church can be no ſalvation. Let not vain-glory have the upper hand, humiliate your ſelf, captivate your underſtanding, ſubdue your reaſon, ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the Church, do not force us to do all that we may do, let us reſt in that part which we moſt heartily deſire, and I, for my part (then the Biſhop put of his Cap) again with all my heart exhort you.

After the Biſhop had ſomewhat pauſed, then M. Latimer lift up his head (for before he leaned on his elbow) and asked whether his Lordſhip had ſaid; and the Biſhop anſwered, Yea.

Lat. Then will your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak a word or two?

Linc. Yea, Mr. Latimer, ſo that you uſe a modeſt kind of talk, without railing or taunts.

M. Latimer hath leave to ſit down.

Lat. I beſeech your Lordſhip, licence me to ſit down.

Linc. At your pleaſure, Mr. Latimer, take as much eaſe as you will.

Anſwer of M. Latimer to the B. of Lincoln.

Lat. Your Lordſhip gently exhorted me in many words to come to the unity of the Church. I confeſs (my Lord) a Catholick Church, ſpread throwout all the world, in the which no man may err, without the which unity of the Church no man can be ſaved: but I know perfectly by Gods Word, that this Church is in all the world, and hath not his foundation in Rome only, as you ſay; and me thought your Lordſhip brought a place out of the Scriptures to confirm the ſame, that there was a Juriſdiction given to Peter, in that Chriſt bade him regere, govern his People. Indeed, my Lord, St. Peter did well and truly his office, in that he was bid regere: but ſince the Biſhops of Rome have taken a new kind of regere. Indeed they ought regere, but how my Lord? not as they will themſelves: but this regere muſt be hedged in and ditched in. They muſt regere, but ſecundum Verbum Dei; they muſt rule, but according to the Word of God.

The univerſal Church hath not his foundation only in Rome. Argument. Chriſt bade Peter, regere, govern his People: Ergo, the Pope muſt play the Rex, to reign over Kings and Emperors.

Regere ſecundum verbum, turned to regere ſecundum voluntatem.

But the Biſhops of Rome have turned regere ſecundum Verbum Dei, into regere ſecundum voluntatem ſuam: they have turned the Rule according to the Word of God, into the Rule according to their own pleaſures, and as it pleaſeth them beſt: as there is a Book ſet forth which hath divers points in it, and amongſt other, this point is one, which your Lordſhip went about to prove by this word Regere, and the Argument which he bringeth forth for the proof of that matter, is taken out of Deuteronomy, where it is ſaid, If there ariſeth any controverſie among the People, the Prieſts, Levitici generis, of the order of Levi, ſhall decide the matter ſecundum Legem Dei, according to the Law of God; ſo it muſt be taken. This Book perceiving this Authority to be given to the Prieſts of the old Law, taketh occaſion to prove the ſame to be given to the Biſhops and other the Clergy of the new Law: but in proving this matter, whereas it was ſaid there, as the Prieſts of the order of Levi ſhould determine the matter according to Gods Law, that (according to Gods Law) is left out, and only is recited, as the Prieſts of the order of Levi ſhall decide the matter, ſo it ought to be taken of the People; a large Authority I enſure you. What gelding of Scripture is this? what clipping of Gods Coin? With the which terms the Audience ſmiled. This is much like the Regere which your Lordſhip talked of. Nay, nay, my Lords, we may not give ſuch Authority to the Clergy, to rule all things as they will. Let them keep themſelves within their Commiſſion. Now I truſt, my Lord, I do not rail yet.

Deut. 17. Clipping of Gods Scriptures by the Catholicks.

Anno 1555.

Lincoln. No, Mr. Latimer, your talk is more like taunts than railing: but in that I have not read the Book which you blame ſo much, nor know not of any ſuch, I can ſay nothing therein.

The Author of this Book was D. Brookes, which there was in the Commiſſion.

Lat. Yes, my Lord, the Book is open to be read, and is intituled to one which is Biſhop of Glouceſter, whom I never knew, neither did at any time ſee him to my knowledge. With that the People laughed, becauſe the Biſhop of Glouceſter ſate there in Commiſſion.

Then the Biſhop of Glouceſter ſtood up, and ſaid, it was his Book.

Lat. Was it yours, my Lord? indeed I knew not your Lordſhip, neither ever did I ſee you before, neither yet ſee you now, through the brightneſs of the Sun ſhining betwixt you and me. Then the Audience laughed again; and Mr. Latimer ſpake unto them, ſaying; Why, my Maſters, this is no laughing matter. I anſwer upon life and death, Væ vobis qui ridetis nunc, quoniam flebitis.

The B. of Lincoln commanded ſilence, and then ſaid:

Linc. Mr. Latimer, if you had kept your ſelf within your bounds, if you had not uſed ſuch ſcoffs and [illegible] this had not been done.

After this the Biſhop of Glouceſter ſaid in excuſing of his Book.

Brookes Biſhop of Glouceſter ſpeaketh.

Glouceſter. Mr. Latimer, hereby every man may ſee what learning you have.

Then M. Latimer interrupted him, ſaying:

Lat. Lo you look for learning at my hands which have gone ſo long to the Scool of oblivion, making the bare walls my Library, keeping me, ſo long in Priſon without Book, or pen and ink? and now you let me looſe to come and anſwer to Articles. You deal with me as though two were appointed to fight for life and death, and over night the one through friends and favour, is cheriſhed, and hath good counſel given him how to encounter with his enemy. The other, for envy or lack of friends, all the whole night is ſet in the Stocks. In the morning when they ſhall meet, the one is in ſtrength and luſty; the other is ſtark of his limbs, and almoſt dead for feebleneſs. Think you, that to run thorow this man with a Spear is not a goodly victory?

The Catholicks how unreaſonable they are in uſing of men.

But the Biſhop of Glouceſter interrupting his anſwer, proceeded, ſaying:

Gloc. I went not about to recite any places of Scripture in that place of my Book; for then if I had not recited it faithfully, you might have had juſt occaſion of reprehenſion: but I only in that place formed an Argument à majore, in this ſenſe; that if in the old Law the Prieſts had power to decide matters of Controverſie, much more then ought the Authority to be given to the Clergy in the new Law: and I pray you in this point what availeth their rehearſal, ſecundum legem Dei?

The Catholicks alledge the Scriptures, but take not all.

Lat. Yes, my Lord, very much. For I acknowledge Authority to be given to the Spiritualty to decide matter of Religion, and as my Lord ſaid even now, regere: but they muſt do it ſecundum Verbum Dei, and not ſecundum voluntatem ſuam, according to the Word and Law of God, and not after their own will, after their own imaginations and fantaſies.

The Biſhop of Glouceſter would have ſpoken more, ſaving that the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid, that they came not to diſpute with Mr. Latimer, but to take his determinate anſwers to their Articles, and ſo began to propoſe the ſame Articles which were propoſed to Mr. Ridley. But Mr. Latimer interrupted him, ſpeaking to the Biſhop of Glouceſter; Well, my Lord, I could wiſh more faithful dealing with Gods Word, and not to leave out a part, and ſnatch a part here, and another there, but to rehearſe the whole faithfully.

The proteſtation of M. Latimer.

But the Biſhop of Lincoln, not attending to this ſaying of Mr. Latimer, proceeded in the rehearſing the Articles in form and ſenſe as I declared before in the examination of the Articles, propoſed to Mr. Ridley, and required Mr. Latimers anſwer to the firſt. Then Maſter Latimer making his proteſtation, that notwithſtanding theſe his anſwers it ſhould not be taken that thereby he would acknowledge any Authority of the Biſhop of Rome, ſaying, that he was the King and Queen their Majeſties Subject, and not the Popes, neither could ſerve

Anno 1555.

ſerve two Maſters at one time, except he ſhould now renounce one of them; required the Notaries ſo to take his proteſtation, that whatſoever he ſhould ſay or do, it ſhould not be taken as though he did thereby agree to any Authority that came from the Biſhop of Rome.

1. Article.

Linc. The Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid, that his Proteſtation ſhould be ſo taken; but he required him to anſwer briefly, affirmatively, or negatively to the firſt Article, and ſo recited the ſame again: and Mr. Latimer anſwered as followeth.

The Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament received by the Spirit and grace Mr. Latimer againſt the groſs and carnal being of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

Lati. I do not deny (my Lord) that in the Sacrament by ſpirit and grace is the very Body and Blood of Chriſt, becauſe that every man, by receiving bodily that Bread and Wine, ſpiritually receiveth the Body and Blood of Chriſt, and is made partaker thereby of the merits of Chriſts Paſſion: but I deny that the Body and Blood of Chriſt is in ſuch ſort in the Sacrament, as you would have it.

Linc. Then Maſter Latimer, you anſwer affirmatively.

Lati. Yea, if you mean of that groſs and carnal being, which you do take.

The Notaries took his anſwer to be affirmatively.

2. Article.

Linc. What ſay you M. Latimer to the ſecond Article? and recited the ſame.

What [illegible] is in the Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, not [illegible] the nature but in the Dignity of repreſenting.

Lati. There is, my Lord, a change in the Bread and Wine, and ſuch a change as no power, but the Omnipotency of God can make, in that that which before was Bread, ſhould now have the dignity to exhibit Chriſts Body, and yet the Bread is ſtill Bread, and the Wine ſtill Wine: for the change is not in the nature, but in the dignity, becauſe now that which was common Bread hath the dignity to exhibit Chriſts Body: for whereas it was common Bread, it is now no more common Bread, neither ought it to be ſo taken, but as holy Bread ſanctified by Gods Word.

With that the Biſhop of Lincoln ſmiled, ſaying:

Linc. Lo Maſter Latimer, ſee what ſtedfaſtneſs is in your Doctrine. That which you abhorred and deſpiſed moſt, you now moſt eſtabliſh: for whereas you moſt failed at holy Bread, you now make your Communion holy Bread.

Lati. Tuſh, a ruſh for holy Bread. I ſay the Bread in the Communion is an holy Bread indeed.

But the Biſhop of Lincoln interrupted him, and ſaid:

Subſtance of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament unchanged.

Linc. O, ye make a difference between holy Bread and holy Bread, (with that the Audience laughed.) Well, Mr. Latimer, is not this your anſwer, that the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine remaineth after the words of Conſecration?

Difference between Chriſts holy Bread, and the Popes holy Bread.

Lati. Yes verily, it muſt needs be ſo. For Chriſt himſelf calleth it Bread, St. Paul calleth it Bread, the Doctors confeſs the ſame, the nature of a Sacrament confirmeth the ſame, and I call it holy Bread, not in that I make no difference betwixt your holy Bread and this, but for the holy office which it beareth, that is, to be a figure of Chriſts Body, and not only a bare figure, but effectually to repreſent the ſame.

So the Notaries penned his anſwer to be affirmatively.

3. Article.

Linc. What ſay you to the third queſtion? and recited the ſame.

Lati. No, no, my Lord, Chriſt made one perfect ſacrifice for all the whole world, neither can any man offer him again, neither can the Prieſt offer up Chriſt again for the ſins of man, which he took away by offering himſelf once for all (as St. Paul ſaith) upon the Croſs, neither is there any propitiation for our ſins, ſaving his Croſs only.

So the Notaries penned his anſwer to this Article alſo to be affirmatively.

4. Article.

Linc. What ſay you to the fourth, Mr. Latimer? and recited it. After the recital whereof, when Mr. Latimer anſwered not, the Biſhop asked him whether he heard him or no?

Lati. Yes, but I do not underſtand what you mean thereby.

Linc. Marry only this, that theſe your Aſſertions were condemned by Maſter Dr. Weſton as Hereſies; is it not ſo Mr. Latimer?

Lati. Yes, I think they were condemned. But how unjuſtly, he that ſhall be judge of all, knoweth.

So the Notaries took his anſwer to this Article alſo to be affirmatively.

5. Article.

Linc. What ſay you Mr. Latimer to the fifth Article? and recited it.

Lati. I know not what you mean by theſe terms. I am no Lawyer, I would you would propoſe the matter plainly.

Linc. In that we proceed according to the Law, we muſt uſe their terms alſo. The meaning only is this, that theſe your Aſſertions are notorious, evil ſpoken of, and yet common and frequent in the mouths of the People.

Lati. I cannot tell how much, nor what men talk of them. I come not ſo much among them, in that I have been ſecluded a long time. What men report of them I know not, nor care not.

This anſwer taken, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid:

Mr. Latimer aſſigned to appear the next day again.

Linc. Mr. Latimer, we mean not that theſe your Anſwers ſhall be prejudicial to you. To morrow you ſhall appear before us again, and then it ſhall be lawful for you to alter and change what you will. We give you reſpit till to morrow, truſting that after you have pondered well all things againſt to morrow, you will not be aſhamed to confeſs the truth.

Lati. Now, my Lord, I pray you give me licence in three words, to declare the cauſes why I have refuſed the Authority of the Pope.

Linc. Nay, Mr. Latimer, to morrow you ſhall have licence to ſpeak 40. words.

Lati. Nay, my Lords, I beſeech you to do with me now as it ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhips: I pray you let not me be troubled to morrow again.

Linc. Yes, Mr. Latimer, you muſt needs appear again to morrow.

Lati. Truly, my Lord, as for my part I require no reſpit, for I am at a point; you ſhall give me reſpit in vain: therefore I pray you let me not toruble you to morrow.

Linc. Yes, for we truſt, God will work with you againſt to morrow. There is no remedy, you muſt needs appear again to morrow at eight of the Clock in Saint Maries Church. And forthwith the Biſhop charged the Mayor with Mr. Latimer, and diſmiſſed him, and then brake up their Seſſion for that day, about one of the Clock at Afternoon.

Here followeth the ſecond Seſſion.

The next days Seſſion.

THe next day following (which was the firſt day of October) ſomewhat after eight of the Clock, the ſaid Lords repaired to St. Maries Church, and after they were ſet in a high Throne well trimmed with cloth of Tiſſue and Silk, then appeared Mr. Ridley, who was ſet at a framed Table a good ſpace from the Biſhops feet, which Table had a Silk-cloth caſt over it, the which place was compaſſed about with framed Seats in quadrate form, partly for Gentlemen which repaired thither (for this was the Seſſion-day alſo of Gaol-delivery) and Heads of the Univerſity to ſit, and partly to keep off the preſs of the Audience: for the whole Body, as well of the Univerſity as of the Town, came hither to ſee the end of theſe two Perſons. After Mr. Ridley's appearance, and the ſilence of the Audience, the Biſhop of Lincoln ſpake in manner following:

Dr. Ridley's appearance before the Deputies.

The words of M. White B. of Lincoln, to B. Ridley about his Cap.

Linc. Mr. Ridley, yeſterday when that we challenged you for not uncovering your head, you excuſed your ſelf of that whereof no man accuſed you, in ſaying you did not put on your Cap for any obſtinacy towards us, which as touching our own perſons deſired no ſuch obedience of you, but only in reſpect of them whoſe perſons we bear; neither (you ſaid) for any contempt that you bear to this worſhipful Audience, which although juſtly may, yet in this caſe require no ſuch humility of you; neither for any derogation of honor to my Lord Cardinals grace, in that he is deſcended from the Regal Blood, in that he is a man moſt Noble, both for his excellent qualities and ſingular Learning: for as touching thoſe points, you ſaid, you with all humilty would honor, reverence, and worſhip his Grace; but in that he is Legate to the

Anno 1555.

Capping again at the name of the Pope.

moſt reverend Father in God the Popes Holineſs (with that the Biſhop with all then preſent, put off their Caps, but M. Ridley moved not his) you ſaid you neither could, nor would by any means be induced to give him honor: but foraſmuch as this is the point as we told you yeſterdy, why we require honor and reverence of you, we tell you now as we did then, except you take the pains to move your Bonet, we will take the pains to cauſe your Bonet to be taken from you, except you pretend ſickneſs, as yeſterday you did not.

B. Ridley refuſeth to put off his Cap to the Pope, or to them which come from the Pope.

Rid. I pretend now none other cauſe, than I did yeſterday, that is, only that hereby it may appear that not only in word and confeſſion, but alſo by all my geſture and behaviour, in no point I agree or admit any authority or power that ſhall come from the Pope, and not for any pride of mind (as God is my judge) neither for contempt of your Lordſhips, or of this worſhipful Audience, neither for derogation of honor due to my Lord Cardinals grace as concerning thoſe points which your Lordſhip ſpake of, that is, his noble Parentage and ſingular graces in learning. And as for taking my Cap away, your Lordſhip may do as it ſhall pleaſe you; it ſhall not offend me, but I ſhall be content with your ordinance in that behalf.

Linc. Foraſmuch as you do anſwer now as you did yeſterday, we muſt do alſo as we did then, and forthwith one of his Beadles very haſtily ſnatched his Cap from his head.

After this the Biſhop of Lincoln began the Examination in ſenſe following.

The laſt examination of B. Ridley.

Linc. Maſter Ridley, yeſterday we took your anſwer to certain Articles, which we then propoſed unto you: but becauſe we could not be throughly ſatisfied with your anſwer then to the firſt Article, neither could the Notaries take any determinate anſwer of you, we (you requiring the ſame) granted you licence to bring your anſwer in writing, and thereupon commnded the Major that you ſhould have pen, paper and ink, yea any Books alſo that you would require, if they were to be gotten: we licenced you then alſo to alter your former anſwers this day at your pleaſure: Therefore we are come now hither, to ſee whether you are in the ſame mind now that you were in yeſterday, (which we would not wiſh) or contrary, contented to revoke all your former aſſertions, and in all points conſent to ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the univerſal Church, and I for my part moſt earneſtly exhort you (and therewith he put of his Cap) not becauſe my Conſcience pricketh me, as you ſaid yeſterday, but becauſe I ſee you a rotten member, and in the way of perdition.

The words of the B. of Lincoln.

Yeſterday I brought forth amongſt other St. Auſtin, to prove that authority hath always been given to the See of Rome, and you wreſted the words far contrary to St. Auſtins meaning, in that you would have totus mundus to be applied only to Europe, which is but the third part of all the world, whereas indeed the proceſs of St. Auguſtines words will not admit that your interpretation. For he ſaith not totus mundus Chriſtianus in tranſmarinis, &c. but firſt totus mundus Chriſtianus Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſubjectus eſt: all the Chriſtian world is ſubject to the Church of Rome, and afterward addeth, in tranſmarinis partibus, beyond the Sea, but only to augment the dominion of the See of Rome.

The place of S. Auſtin again repeated, Totus mundus.

Rid. But Mr, Ridley ſtill perſevered in his former anſwer, ſaying; I am ſure my Lord, you have ſome skill in Coſmography, in the which you ſhall underſtand that there is a Sea callled Mare mediterraneum, caſt between Europe, and Africa, in the which he meant Europe beyond the Sea, even as I ſhould ſay the whole world beyond the Sea, excepting England in the which I ſtand: and here many words were ſpent upon the interpretation of the ſame place of St. Auſtin.

Anſwer of D. Ridley to the place of S. Auſtin, as before.

Linc. After long diſceptation, the B. of Lincoln ſaid, that the meaning of St. Auguſtine might be known by the conſent of other the Doctors, and rehearſed divers.

How the Catholicks uſe to alledge the Doctors.

Rid. But M. Ridley required the rehearſal of the places, and to read the very words of the Doctors, ſaying, that perhaps thoſe which the Biſhop rehearſed, being proponed in other terms in the Doctors, would admit a contrary meaning and interpretation: but in that Book, out of the which the Biſhop rehearſed them, was none of the Doctors, but only the ſentences drawn out of the Doctors by ſome ſtudious man: he could not recite the very words of the Doctors.

A place of Cyrillus alleadged by Melanthon, Scripture Books burned at Oxford.

Linc. Then after, he came to Cyrillus, which (as he ſaid) made againſt M. Ridley in the Sacrament, even by Philip Melanthon his own alleadging in his common places, and forthwith called for Melanthon, but in vain, becauſe all ſuch Books were burned a little before, wherefore he paſſed it over.

Argumentum a contrario ſenſu ex Cyrillo contra Judæos.

Cyrillus alſo in another place, proving to the Jews that chriſt was come, uſeth this reaſon, Altars are erected in Chriſts name in Britain, and in far Countries: Ergo, Chriſt is come. But we may uſe the contrary, of that reaſon; Altars are plucked down in Britain: Ergo, Chriſt is not come. A good argument a contrariis. I will ſtand to it in the Scools by and by with any man. Ye ſee what a good argument this your Doctrine maketh for the Jews, to prove that Chriſt is not come.

Altars be erected in Chriſts remembrance in Britain. Ergo, Chriſt is come. Altars be now plucked down in Britain. Ergo, Chriſt is not come. Anſwer. This argument is not a ſenſu contrario of erecting of Altars in the Antecedent, and plucking down Altars in the conſequent, be not contrary. In the Antecedent, Cyril meaneth the the Table, or elſe the celebration of the Lords Supper in his remembrance. In the conſequent by plucking down of Altars, is meant the taking away of places and monuments ſerving not to the Lords Supper, but to Idolatry, whereby the true Table of the Lords Supper, in his remembrance may be erected again.

Dr. Ridley ſmiling, anſwered; your Lordſhip is not ignorant that this word Altare in the Scripture ſignifieth as well the Altar whereupon the Jews were wont to make their burnt Sacrifices, as the Table of the Lords Supper. Cyrillus meaneth there by this word Altare, not that the Jewiſh Altar, but the Table of the Lord, and by that ſaying (Altars are erected in Chriſts name, Ergo Chriſt is come) he meaneth that the communion is miniſtred in his remembrance, Ergo Chriſt is come: for the ſtrength of his argument is, becauſe the remembrance of a thing cannot be, except it ſelf be paſt: then could not all Countries celebrate the Communion in remembrance of Chriſts Paſſion, except Chriſt had been come and ſuffered. As for the taking down of the Altars, it was done upon juſt conſiderations, for that they ſeemed to come too nigh to the Jews uſage. Neither was the Supper of the Lord at any time better miniſtred, more duly received, than in thoſe latter days when all things were brought to the rites and uſage of the Primitive Church.

Linc. A goodly receiving I promiſe you, to ſet an Oyſter Table inſtead of an Altar, and to come from puddings at Weſtminſter to receive: and yet when your Table was conſtituted, you could never be content, in placing the ſame now Eaſt, now North, now one way, now another, until it pleaſed God of his goodneſs to place it clean out of the Church.

B. White blaſphemouſly calleth the Boord of the Lords Supper, an Oyſter-Table. The Articles read again to M. Ridley. B. Ridley not ſuffered to read his own anſwer.

Rid. Your Lordſhips unreverent terms do not elevate the thing. Perhaps ſome men came more devoutly from Puddings, than other men now do from other things.

Linc. As for that, M. Ridley, you ought to be judge of no man: but by this your reaſoning you cauſe us to ſtretch and inlarge our inſtructions. We came not to reaſon, but to take your determinate anſwers to our Articles, and eſtſoons he read the firſt Article in manner above ſpecified.

Now Mr. Ridley, what ſay you to the firſt Article? if you have brought your anſwer in writing, we will receive it: but if you have written any other matter, we will not receive it.

Rid. Then Mr. Ridley took a ſheet of Paper out of his boſom, and began to read that which he had written: but the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded the Beadle to take it from him. But he deſired licence to read it, ſaying that it was nothing but his anſwers, but the Biſhop would in no wiſe ſuffer him.

Rid. Why my Lord, will you require my anſwer, and not ſuffer me to publiſh it? I beſeech you my Lord, let the Audience bear witneſs in this matter. Your Lordſhips may handle it at your pleaſure: therefore let the Audience be witneſs to your doings.

Linc. Well, M. Ridley, we will firſt ſee what you have written, and then if we ſhall think it good to be read, you ſhall have it publiſhed; but except you will deliver it firſt, we will take none at all of you.

With that M. Ridley, ſeeing no remedy, delivered it to an Officer, which immediately delivered it to the Biſhop of Lincoln, who after he had ſecretly communicated it to the other two Biſhops, declared the ſenſe, but would not read it as it was written, ſaying, that it contained words of blaſphemy: therefore he would not fill the ears of the Audience therewithall, and ſo abuſe their patience:

Anno 1555.

patience, notwithſtanding Mr. Ridley deſired very inſtantly to have it publiſhed, ſaying, that except a line or two, there was nothing contained but the ancient Doctors ſaying for the confirmation of his aſſertions.

After the ſaid Biſhops had ſecretly viewed the whole, then the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid: In the firſt part, Mr. Ridley, is nothing contained but your proteſtation, that you would not have theſe your Anſwers ſo to be taken, as though you ſeemed thereby to conſent to the Authority or juriſdiction of the Popes Holineſs.

Rid. No, my Lord, I pray you read it out that the audience may hear it: but the Biſhop of Lincoln would in no wiſe, becauſe (he ſaid) there were contained words of blaſphemy.

1. Article. Then the Biſhop of Lincoln recited the firſt Article, and required Mr. Ridleys Anſwer to it. Then Mr. Ridley ſaid, that his Anſwer was there in writing, and deſired that it might be publiſhed: but the Biſhop would not read the whole, but here and there a piece of it So the Notaries took his Anſwer, that he referred him to his Anſwer in writing exhibited now, and alſo before at the time of diſputation, Mr. Doctor Weſton being Prolocutor.

2. Article. In like wiſe the Biſhop of Lincoln recited the ſecond Article, and required an anſwer, and Mr Ridley referred him to his anſwer in writing, exhibited now, and alſo before at the time of diſputation: and like Anſwers were taken to all the reſidue of the Articles.

Theſe anſwers in this manner rehearſed, taken and penned of the Notaries, the Biſhop of Gloceſter began an exhortation to move Mr. Ridley to turn.

The words of exhortation of Brooks B. of Gloucester to M. Ridley.

Glo. If yould once empty your ſtomach, captivate your ſenſes, ſubdue your reaſon, and together with us conſider what a feeble ground of your Religion you have, I do not doubt but you might eaſily be perduced to acknowledge one Church with us, to confeſs one Faith with us, and to believe one Religion with us. For what a weak and feeble ſtay in Religion is this I pray you? Latimer leaneth to Cranmer, Cranmer to Ridley, and Ridley to the ſingularity of his own wit: ſo that if you overthrow the ſingularity of Ridleys wit, then muſt needs the Religion of Cranmer and Latimer fall alſo. You remember well, Mr. Ridley, that the Prophet ſpeaketh moſt truly, ſaying; Væ, væ, Wo be to them which are ſingular and wiſe in their own conceits.

But you will ſay here, it is true that the Prophet ſaith: but how know you that I am wiſe in mine own conceit? Yes, Mr. Ridley, you refuſe the determination of the Catholick Church; you muſt needs be ſingular and wiſe in your own conceit, for you bring Scripture for the probation of your aſſertions, and we alſo bring Scriptures; you underſtand them in one ſenſe, and we in another. How will you know the truth herein? If you ſtand to your own interpretation, then you are ſingular in your own conceit: but if you ſay you will follow the minds of the Doctors and ancient Fathers, ſemblably you underſtand them in one meaning, and we take them in another; how will ye know the truth herein? If you ſtand to your own judgment, then are you ſingular in your own conceit, then can you not avoid the væ and wo which the Prophet ſpeaketh of.

Wherefore if you have no ſtay but the Catholick Church in matters of controverſie, except you will reſt upon the ſingularity and wiſdom of your own brain, if the Prophet moſt truly ſaith, væ, væ wo, wo be to them that are wiſe in their own conceit: then for Gods love, M. Ridley, ſtand not ſingular, be not you wiſe in your own conceit, pleaſe not your ſelf over much. How were the Arrians, the Manichees, Eutychians, with other divers Hereticks which have been in the Church, how I pray you were they ſuppreſſed and convinced? By reaſoning in diſputations? No truly, the Arrians had no more places of Scripture for the confirmation of their Hereſie, than the Catholicks for the defence of the Truth. How then were they convinced? only by the determination of the Church. And indeed except we do conſtitute the Church our foundation, ſtay, and judge, we can have no end of controverſies, no end of diſputations. For in that we all bring Scriptures and Doctors for the probation of our aſſertions, who ſhould be judge of this our controverſie? If we our ſelves, then be ſingular and wiſe in your own conceits, then cannot we avoid the wo that the Prophet ſpeaketh of.

The determination of the Church is only that, whereupon our Catholick men do ground their Faith.

It remaineth therefore that we ſubmit our ſelves to the determination and arbitrement of the Church, with whom God promiſed to remain to the worlds end, to whom he promiſed to ſend the Holy Ghoſt which ſhould teach it the Truth. Wherefore, M. Ridley, if you will avoid the wo that the Prophet ſpeaketh of, be not you wiſe in your judgment: if you will not be wiſe and ſingular in your own judgment, captivate your own underſtanding, ſubdue your reaſon, and ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the Church.

This is briefly the ſum of the Oration of the Biſhop of Glouceſter, by the which he endeavoured in many more words, amplifying and inlarging the matter eloquently with ſundry points of Rhetorick to move affections, to perſwade Mr. Ridley to recant and forſake his Religion.

A brief anſwer of B. Ridley to B. Brooks tale.

To whom Mr. Ridley anſwered in few words, that he ſaid moſt truly with the Prophet, wo be to him that is wiſe in his own conceit, but that he acknowledgeth no ſuch ſingularity in him, nor knew any cauſe why he ſhould attribute ſo much to himſelf. And whereas he ſaid Mr. Cranmer leaned to him, that was moſt untrue, in that he was but a young Scholar in compariſon of Mr. Cranmer: for at what time he was a young Scholar, then was Mr. Cranmer a Doctor, ſo that he confeſſed that Mr. Cranmer might have been his School-Maſter theſe many years. It ſeemed that he would have ſpoken more, but the B. of Glouceſter interrupted him ſaying:

Glo. Why Mr. Ridley, it is your own confeſſion, for Mr. Latimer at that time of his diſputation, confeſſed his learning to lie in Mr. Cranmers Books, and Mr. Cranmer alſo ſaid, that it was your doing.

B. Ridley could not for his Conſcience yield to the Popes Doctrine.

Linc. Likewiſe the B. of Lincoln with many words, and gently holding his Cap in his hand, deſired him to turn. But Mr. Ridley made an abſolute anſwer, that he was fully perſwaded, the Religion which he defended to be grounded upon Gods Word, and therfore without great offence towards God, great peril and damage of his Soul, he could not forſake his Maſter and Lord God, but deſired the Biſhop to perform his grant, in that his Lordſhip ſaid the day before, that he ſhould have licence to ſhew his cauſe why he could not with a ſafe Conſcience admit the Authority of the Pope: But the Biſhop of Lincoln ſaid, that whereas then he had demanded licence to ſpeak three words, he was contented then that he ſhould ſpeak forty and that grant he would perform.

D. Weſton ſhooteth his bolt.

Then ſtepped forth Doctor Weſton, which ſate by, and ſaid, why my Lord, he hath ſpoken four hundred already.

B. Ridley limitted no more but forty words to ſpeak.

Mr. Ridley confeſſed he had, but they were not of his perſcribed number, neither of that matter. The Biſhop of Lincoln bade him take his licence: but he ſhould ſpeak but forty, and he would tell them upon his fingers, and eftſoons Mr. Ridley began to ſpeak: but before he had ended half a ſentence, the Doctors ſitting by cried and ſaid, that his number was out, and with that he was put to ſilence.

Note, Reader, the extream dealing of the Papiſts.

After this the Biſhop of Lincoln, which ſate in the midſt, began to ſpeak as followeth.

Linc. Now I perceive, Mr. Ridley, you will not permit nor ſuffer us to ſtay in that point of our Commiſſion which we moſt deſired: for I enſure you, there is never a word in our Commiſſion more true than, dolentes & gementes. For indeed I for my part, I take God to witneſs, am ſory for you. Whereupon Mr. Ridley anſwered.

Rid. I believe it well my Lord, foraſmuch as one day it will be burdenous to your Soul.

Linc. Nay, not ſo Mr. Ridley, but becauſe I am ſory to ſee ſuch ſtubbornneſs in you, that by no means you may be perſwaded to acknowledg your Errors, and receive the Truth: but ſeeing it is ſo, becauſe you will not ſuffer us to perſiſt in the firſt, we muſt of neceſſity proceed to the other part of our Commiſſion. Therefore I pray you hearken what I ſhall ſay, and forthwith he did read the ſentence of Condemnation, which was written in a long proceſs: the tenor of which, becauſe it is ſufficiently already expreſſed before we thought meet in this place to omit, foraſmuch as they are rather words of Sentence of condemnation, read againſt B. Ridley.

courſe, than things deviſed upon deliberation. Howbeit indeed the effect was, that foraſmuch as the ſaid Nicholas Ridley did affirm, maintain, and ſtubbornly defend certain Opinions, Aſſertions and Hereſies, contrary to the Word of God, and the received Faith of the Church, as in denying the true and natural Body of Chriſt, and his natural Blood to be in the Sacrament of the Altar: Secondarily, in affirming the ſubſtance of Bread and Wine to remain after the words of the Conſecration: Thirdly, in denying the Maſs to be a lively ſacrifice of the Church for the quick and the dead, and by no means would be perduced and brought from theſe his Hereſies: they therefore the ſaid I. of Lincoln, James of Glouceſter, John of Briſtow,, did judge and condemn the ſaid Nicholas Ridley, as an Heretick, and ſo adjudged him preſently both by word, and alſo in deed to be degraded from the degree of a Biſhop, from Prieſthood and all Eccleſiaſtical Order; declaring moreover the ſaid Nicholas Ridley to be no member of the Church and therefore committed him to the Secular Powers, of them to receive due puniſhment according to the tenor of the temporal Laws: and further excommunicating him by the great excommunication.

The laſt Appearance and Examination of Mr. Latimer before the Commiſſioners.

The laſt appearance and examination of M. Latimer before the Commiſſioners.

THis ſentence being publiſhed by the Biſhop of Lincoln, Mr. Ridley was committed as a Priſoner to the Mayor, and immediately Mr. Latimer was ſent for: but in the mean ſeaſon the carpet or Cloth which lay upon the Table whereat Mr. Ridley ſtood, was removed, becauſe (as men reported) Mr. Latimer had never the degree of a Doctor, as Mr Ridley had. But eſtſoons as Mr Latimer appeared, as he did the day before, perceivin no Cloth upon the Table, he laid his hat, which was an old felt, under his elbows, and immediately ſpake to the Commiſſioners, ſaying.

Lati. My Lords, I beſeech your Lordſhips to ſet a better order here at your entrance: for I am an Old man, and have a very evil Back, ſo that the preſs of the multitude doth me much harm.

Linc. I am ſorry, Mr. Latimer, for your hurt. At your departure we will ſee to better order.

With that Mr. Latimer thanked his Lordſhip, making a very low courteſie. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln began on this manner.

The Biſhop of Lincolns words to M. Latimer.

Linc. Mr. Latimer, although yeſterday after we had taken your anſwers to thoſe Articles which we propoſed, we might have juſtly proceeded to Judgment againſt you, eſpecially in that you required the ſame, yet we having a good hope of your returning, deſiring not your deſtruction, but rather that you would recant, revoke your Errors, and turn to the Catholick Church, deferred farther proceſs till this day, and now according to the appointment, we have called you here before us, to hear whether you are content to revoke your Heretical aſſertions and ſubmit your ſelf to the determination of the Church, as we moſt heartily deſire, and I for my part, as I did yeſterday, moſt earneſtly do exhort you, or to know whether you perſevere ſtill the man that you were, for the which we would be ſorry.

It ſeemed that the Biſhop would have further proceeded, ſaving that Mr. Latimer interrupted him, ſaying.

M. Latimer ſhort with the Commiſſioners.

Lati. Your Lordſhip often doth repeat the Catholick Church, as though I ſhould deny the ſame. No, my Lord, I confeſs there is a Catholick Church, to the determination of which I will ſtand, but not the Church which you call Catholick, which ſooner might be termed Diabolick. And whereas you joyn together the Romiſh and Catholick Church, ſtay there I pray you. For it is one thing to ſay Romiſh Church, and another thing to ſay Catholick Church: I muſt uſe here in this mine Anſwer, the counſel of Cyprian, who at what time he was aſcited before certain Biſhops that gave him leave to take deliberation and counſel, to try and examine his Opinion, he anſwereth them thus: In ſticking and perſevering in the Truth, there muſt no counſel nor deliberation be taken. And again, being demanded of them ſitting in judgment, which was moſt like to be of the Church of Chriſt, whether he which was perſecuted, or they which did perſecute? Chriſt, ſaid he, hath foreſhewed, that he that doth follow him, muſt take up his Croſs, and follow him. Chriſt gave knowledge that the Diſciples ſhould have perſecution and trouble. How think you then my Lords, is it like that the See of Rome, which hath been a continual perſecutor, is rather the Church, or that ſmall flock which hath continually been perſecuted of it, even to death? Alſo the flock of Chriſt hath been but few in compariſon to the reſidue, and ever in ſubjection: which he proved beginning at Noahs time even to the Apoſtles.

The Catholick Church and the Romiſh Church be two things. Cyprians counſel, in truth no deliberation to be taken. M. Latimers queſtion to the Biſhops.

Linc. Your cauſe and St. Cyprians is not one, but clean contrary: for he ſuffered perſecution for Chriſts ſake and the Goſpel; but you are in trouble for your errors and falſe aſſertions, contrary to the Word of God, and the received Truth of the Church

Anno 1555.

Whether is more like, the See of Rome which perſecuteth, or the little Flock which is perſecuted, to be the true Church.

Lat. Mr. Latimer interrupting him, ſaid; Yes verily, my cauſe is as good as St. Cyprians: for his was for the Word of God, and ſo is mine.

The cauſe of the Martyrs of the Primitive time, and of the latter time all one.

But Lincoln goeth forth in his talk.

Alſo at the beginning and foundation of the Church, it could not be but that the Apoſtles ſhould ſuffer great perſecution. Further, before Chriſts coming, continually there were very few which truly ſerved God: but after his coming began the time of Grace, then began the Church to increaſe, and was cotinually augmented, until it came unto this perfection, and now hath juſtly that Juriſdiction which the unchriſtian Princes before by tyranny did reſiſt: there is a divers conſideration of the eſtate of the Church now in the time of Grace, and before Chriſts coming. But, Mr. Latimer, although we had inſtructions given us determinately to take your anſwer to ſuch Articles as we ſhould propoſe, without any reaſoning or diſputations, yet we hoping by talk ſomewhat to prevail with you, appointed you to appear before us yeſterday in the Divinity School, a place for diſputations. And whereas then notwithſtanding you had licence to ſay your mind, and were anſwered to every matter, yet you could not be brought from your Errors; We thinking that from that time ye would with good adviſement conſider your eſtate, gave you reſpit from that time yeſterday when we diſmiſſed you, until this time, and now have called you again here in this place, by your anſwers to learn whether you are the ſame man you were then or no? Therefore we will propoſe unto you the ſame Articles which we did then, and require of you a determinate anſwer, without further reaſoning, and eſtſoons recited the firſt Article.

The Church before Chriſts coming compared with it after his coming.

The Articles propounded again to M. Latimer.

Lat. Always my proteſtation ſaved, that by theſe mine Anſwers it ſhould not be thought that I did condeſcend and agree to your Lordſhips Authority, in that you are legaced by Authority of the Pope, ſo that thereby I might ſeem to conſent to his Juriſdiction: To the firſt Article I anſwer now as I did yeſterday, that in the Sacrament the worthy receiver receiveth the very Body of Chriſt, and drinketh his Blood by the Spirit and Grace. But after a corporal being, which the Romiſh Church preſcribeth, Chriſts Body and Blood is not in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine.

M. Latimer again anſwereth with proteſtation, as before.

The very Body of Chriſt received in the Sacrament by the ſpirit and grace.

The Notaries took his anſwer to be affirmatively. For the ſecond Article he referred himſelf to his anſwers made before.

Linc. After this the Biſhop of Lincoln recited the third Article, and required a determinate Anſwer.

Anſwer to the ſecond and third Articles.

Lati. Chriſt made one oblation and ſacrifice for the ſins of the whole world, and that a perfect ſacrifice; neither needeth there to be any other, neither can there be any other porpitiatorie ſacrifice.

The Notaries took his anſwer to be affirmatively.

In like manner did he anſwer to the other Articles, not varying form his anſwers made the day before.

After his Anſwers were penned of the Notaries, and the Biſhop of Lincoln had exhorted him in like ſort to recant as he did Mr. Ridley, and revoke his Errors and falſe Aſſertions, and Mr. Latimer had anſwered that he neither could, nor would deny his Maſter Chriſt, and his verity, the Biſhop of Lincoln deſired Mr. Latimer to hearken to him: and then, Mr. Latimer hearkning for ſome new matter and other talk, the Biſhop of Lincoln, read his condemnation, after the publication of the which the ſaid three Biſhops brake up their Seſſions, and diſmiſſed the Audience.

M. Latimer will not deny his Maſter Chriſt.

Condemnation read againſt M. Latimer.

But

Anno 1555.

The Papiſts falſe in their promiſes.

But M. Lat. required the Biſhop to perform his promiſe in ſaying the day before, that he ſhould have licence briefly to declare the cauſe why he refuſed the Popes Authority.

Linc. But the Biſhop ſaid that now he could not hear him, neither ought to talk with him.

M. Latimer appealeth to the next General Council truly called in the Lords name; but that Counſil is long a coming.

Then Mr. Latimer asked him, whether it were not lawful for him to appeal from this his judgment. And the Biſhop asked him again to whom he would appeal. To the next general Councel (quoth Mr. Latimer) which ſhall be truly called in Gods name. With that appellation the Biſhop was content: but he ſaid it would be a long ſeaſon before ſuch a convocation as he meant would be called.

Then the Biſhop committed Mr. Latimer to the Mayor, ſaying; now he is your Priſoner, Mr. Mayor. Becauſe the preſs of the People was not diminiſhed, each man looking for farther proceſs, the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded avoidance, and willed Mr. Latimer to tarry till the preſs were diminiſhed, leſt he ſhould take hurt at his egreſſion, as he did at his entrance. And ſo continued Biſhop Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, in durance till the 16. day of the ſaid month of October.

A Communication between Dr. Brooks, and Dr. Ridley, in Mr. Iriſh his Houſe, the 15. day of October, at which time he was degraded.

The talk between Dr. Brooks B. of Glouceſter, and D. Ridley, upon his Degradation.

IN the mean ſeaſon upon the 15. day in the morning, and the ſame year aboveſaid, the Biſhop of Glouceſter, Dr. Brooks, and the Vicechancellor of Oxford Dr. Marſhal, with divers other of the chief, and Heads of the ſame Univerſity, and many other more accompanying them, came unto Mr. Iriſh his Houſe then Mayor of Oxford, where Dr. Ridley late Biſhop of London was cloſe Priſoner. And when the Biſhop of Glouceſter came into the Chamber where the ſaid Dr. Ridley did lie, he told him for what purpoſe their coming was unto him, ſaying; that yet once again the Queens Majeſty did offer unto him, by them, her gracious mercy, if that he would receive the ſame, and come home again to the Faith which he was baptized in, and revoke his Erroneous Doctrine that he of late had taught abroad to the deſtruction of many. And further ſaid, that if he would not recant and become one of the Catholick Church with them, then they muſt needs (againſt their wills) proceed according to the Law, which they would be very loth to do, if they might otherwiſe. But ſaith he, we have been oftentimes with you, and have requeſted that you would recant this your fantaſtical and deviliſh Opinion, which hitherto you have not, although you might in ſo doing win many, and do much good. Therefore, good Mr. Ridley, conſider with your ſelf the danger that ſhall enſue both of Body and Soul, if that you ſhall ſo wilfully caſt your ſelf away in refuſing mercy offered unto you at this time.

No mercy to be had without conſenting to iniquity.

Anſwer of B. Ridley to B. Brook.

My Lord, quoth Dr. Ridley, you know my mind fully herein; and as for the Doctrine which I have taught, my Conſcience aſſureth me that it was ſound, and according to Gods Word (to his glory be it ſpoken) the which Doctrine, the Lord God being my helper, I will maintain ſo long as my Tongue ſhall wag, and breath is within my Body, and in confirmation thereof Seal the ſame with my Blood.

O worthy Champion of Chriſts Church.

With that their Caps went off, but D. Ridley held on his Cap.

Brook. Well, you were beſt, Mr. Ridley, not to do ſo but to become one of the Church with us. For you know this well enough, that whoſoever is out of the Catholick Church, cannot be ſaved: Therefore I ſay once again, that whiles you have time and mercy offered you, receive it, and confeſs with us the Popes Holineſs to be the chief Head of the ſame Church.

B. Ridley commanded to ſilence, when otherwiſe he could not be convinced.

Rid. I marvel that you will trouble me with any ſuch vain and fooliſh talk. You know my mind concerning the uſurped Authority of that Romiſh Antichriſt. As I confeſſed openly in the Schools, ſo do I now, that both by my behaviour and talk, I do no obedience at all unto the Biſhop of Rome, nor to his uſurped Authority, and that for divers good and godly conſiderations. And here Dr. Ridley would have reaſoned with the ſaid Brooks B. of Glouceſter, of the Biſhop of Romes Authority, but could not be ſuffered, and yet he ſpake ſo earneſtly againſt the Pope therein, that the Biſhop told him, if he would not hold his peace, he ſhould be compelled againſt his will. And ſeeing, ſaith he, that you will not receive the Queens mercy now offered unto you, but ſtubbornly refuſe the ſame, we muſt, againſt our wills, proceed according to our Commiſſion to degrading, taking from you the dignity of Prieſthood. For we take you for no Biſhop, and therefore we will the ſooner have done with you: ſo committing you to the Secular Power, you know what doth follow.

Rid. Do with me as it ſhall pleaſe God to ſuffer you, I am well content to abide the ſame with all my heart.

D. Ridley refuſeth to put on the Surpleſs.

Brook. put off your Cap, Mr. Ridley, and put upon you this Surpleſs.

Rid. Not I truly.

Brook. But you muſt.

Rid. I will not.

Brook. You muſt, therefore make no more ado but put this Surpleſs upon you.

Rid. Truly if it come upon me, it ſhall be againſt my will.

Brook. Will you not do it upon you?

Rid. No, that I will not.

Brook. It ſhall be put upon you by one or other.

Rid. Do therein as it ſhall pleaſe you, I am well contented with that, and more than that; the ſervant is not above his Maſter. If they dealt ſo cruelly with our Saviour Chriſt, as the Scripture maketh mention, and he ſuffered the ſame patiently, how much more doth it become us his Servants? and in ſaying of theſe words, they put upon the ſaid Dr. Ridley the Surpleſs, with all the Trinkets appertaining to the Maſs. And as they were putting on the ſame, Dr. Ridley did vehemently inveigh againſt the Romiſh Biſhop, and all that fooliſh apparel, calling him Antichriſt, and the apparel fooliſh and abominable, yea too fond for a vice in a play, inſomuch that Brooks was exceeding angry with him, and bade him hold his peace, for he did but rail. Dr. Ridley anſwered him again, and ſaid; So long as his Tongue and Breath would ſuffer him, he would ſpeak againſt their abominable doings, whatſoever happened unto him for ſo doing.

B. Ridley inveigheth againſt the B. of Rome and his fooliſh apparel. The Surpleſs here is called a fooliſh apparel.

Brook. Well, you were beſt to hold your peace, leſt your mouth be ſtopped. At which words one Edrige, the Reader then of the Greek lecture ſtanding by ſaid to Dr. Brooks: Sir, the Law is he ſhould be gagged, therefore let him be gagged. At which words Dr. Ridley looking earneſtly upon him that ſo ſaid, wagged his head at him, and made no anſwer again, but with a ſigh ſaid: Oh well, well, well.

M. Edridge giveth counſel, that B. Ridley ſhould be gagged.

So they proceeded in their doings, yet nevertheleſs Dr. Ridley was ever talking things not pleaſant to their ears, although one or other bade him hold his peace, leſt he ſhould be cauſed againſt his will.

Degrading of B. Ridley.

When as they came to that place whereas Dr Ridley ſhould hold the Chalice and the Wafer-cake (called the Singing-bread) they bade him hold the ſame in his hands. And Dr. Ridley ſaid, they ſhall not come in my hands: for if they do, they ſhall fall to the ground for all me. Then there was one appointed to hold them in his hand, while Biſhop Brooks read a certain thing in Latine, touching the degradation of Spiritual perſons according to the Popes Law.

Ridley would not let come in his hand the Chalice and Wafer-cake.

Afterward they put a Book in his hand, and withal read (as is before ſaid) a certain thing in Latin, the effect whereof was: We do take from you the office of preaching the Goſpel, &c. At which words Dr. Ridley gave a great ſigh, looking up towards Heaven, ſaying; O Lord God forgive them this their wickedneſs.

D. Ridley degraded from preaching.

And as they put upon him the Maſs-gear, ſo they began with the uppermoſt garment, in taking it away again, reading a thing in Latin, according to the order contained in the ſaid Book of the Popes Law. Now when all was taken from him, ſaving only the Surpleſs left on his back as they were reading and taking it away, Dr. Ridley ſaid unto them, Lord God, what Power be you of, that you can take from a man that which he never had? I was never ſinger in all my life, and yet you will take from me that which I never had.

So

All the glittering of Antichrists Kingdom consisteth in apish Toys.

So when all this their abominable and ridiculous degradation was ended very solemnly. Dr. Ridley said unto Doctor Brook, Have you done? If you have done, then give me leave to talk with you a little concerning these matters. Brooks answered and said; Mr. Ridley, we may not talk with you, you be out of the Church, and our Law is that we may not talk with any that be out of the Church. Then Mr. Ridley said; Seeing that you will not suffer me to talk, neither will vouchsafe to hear me, what remedy but patience? I refer my cause to my heavenly Father, who will reform things that be amiss, when it shall please him.

A praise of Bertram Book upon the Sacrament.

At which words they would have been gone, but Mr. Ridley said; My Lord, I would wish that your Lordship would vouchsafe to read over and peruse a little Book of Bertrams doings, concerning the Sacrament. I promise you, you shall find much good learning therin, if you will read the same with an indifferent judgment. Doctor Brooks made no answer to this, but would have been gone away. Then Mr. Ridley, said, Oh, I perceive that you cannot away with this manner of talk. Well, it boots not, I will say no more, I will speak of worldly affairs. I pray you therefore my Lord hear me, and be a mean to the Queens Majesty, in the behalf of a great many of poor men, and especially for my poor Sister and her Husband which standeth there. They had a poor Living granted unto them by me, whiles I was in the See of London, and the same is taken away from them, by him that now occupieth the same room, without all Law or Conscience.

Note the charity of the Papists.

Here I have a supplication to the Queens Majesty in their behalfs. You shall hear the same read, so shall you perceive the matter the better. Then he read the same, and when he came to the place in the supplication, that touched his Sister by name, then he wept, so that for a little space he could not speak for weeping. After that he had left off weeping, said; This is nature that moveth me. But I have now done, and with that read out the rest, and delivered the same to his Brother, commanding him to put it up to the Queens Majesty, and to sue, not only for himself, but also for such as had any Leases or Grants by him, and were put from the same by Dr. Boner, then Bishop of London. Whereunto Brooks said, indeed Mr. Ridley, your request in this supplication is very lawful and honest: therefore I must needs in Conscience speak to the Queens Majesty for them.

B. Ridleys Sister put from her Lease by B. Boner.

Rid. I pray you for Gods sake do so.

Brooks. I think your request will be granted, except one thing let it, and that is (I fear) because you do not allow the Queens proceedings, but obstinately withstand the same, that it will hardly be granted.

Rid. What remedy? I can do no more but speak and write. I trust I have discharged my Conscience therein, and Gods will be done.

Brook. I will do what lieth in me.

The Copy of this supplication written to the Queen here followeth.

Master Ridley to the Queens Majesty.

A Supplication of B. Ridley to Q. Mary in the behalf of certain poor mens Leases.

IT may please your Majesty for Christ our Saviours sake in a matter of Conscience (and now not for my self, but for other poor men) to vouchsafe to hear and understand this humble supplication. It is so (honourable Princes) that in the time whiles I was in the Ministry of the See of London, divers poor men, Tenants thereof, have taken new Leases of their Tenantries and holdings, and some have renewed and changed their old, and therefore have payed fines and sums of money, both to me, and also to the Chapter of Pauls, for the confirmation of the same.

This Bishop was D. Boner.

Now I say, that the Bishop which occupieth the same room now, will not allow the foresaid Leases, which must redound to many poor mens utter ruine and decay. Wherefore this is mine humble supplication unto your honourable Grace, that it may please the same for Christs sake to be unto the foresaid poor men their gracious Patroness and Defender, either that they may enjoy their foresaid Leases and years renewed, as I suppose when their matter shall be heard with Conscience, both justice, Conscience, and Equity shall require, for that their Leases shall be found (I trust) made without fraud or cunning, either of their part, or of mine, and always also the old Rents reserved to the See without any kind of damage thereof: or if this will not be granted, then that it may please your gracious Highness, to command that the poor men may be restored to their former Leases and years and to have rendred to them again such sums of money as they paid to me and to the Chapter-house for their Leases and years, so now taken from them. Which thing concerning the Fines paid to me, may be easily done, if it shall please your Majesty to command some portion of those goods which I left in my house when I fled in hope of pardon for my Trespass towards your Grace, which goods (as I have heard) be yet reserved in the same house. I suppose that half of the value of my Plate that I left in mine offices, and specially in an Iron-Chest in my bed-Chamber, will go nigh to restore all such Fines received, the true sums and parcels whereof are not set in their Leases: and therefore if that way shall please your Highness, they must be known by such ways and means, as your Majesty by the advice of men of wisdom and Conscience shall appoint: but yet for Christs sake I crave and most humbly beseech your Majesty of your most gracious pity and mercy, that the former way may take place.

If to succour the Widow and Fatherless, is pure and undefiled Religion, as S. James saith, then is Bo. and his Religion filthy and abominable, which doth such wrong to the Widow and Fatherless.

I have also a poor Sister that came to me out of the North, with three fatherless Children, for her relief, whom I married after to a Servant of mine own house: she is put out of that I did provide for them. I beseech your Honorable Grace, that her case may be mercifully considered, and that the rather, in contemplation that I never had of him, which suffered indurance at my entrance into the See of London, not one penny of his movable goods, for it was almost half a year after his deposition, afore I entered into that place: yea, and also if any were left, known to be his, he had licence to carry it away, or there for his use it did lie safe, as his Officers do know. I paid for the Lead which I found there, when I occupied any of it to the behoof of the Church, or of the house. And moreover, I had not only no part of his movable goods, but also (as his old Receiver, and then mine, called Mr. Stanton, can testifie) I paid for them towards his Servants common liveries and wages, after his deposition, 53 or 55 pounds, I cannot tell whether. In all these matters I beseech your Honorable Majesty to hear the advice of men of Conscience, and in especial the Archbishop of York. which for that he was continually in my house a year and more, before mine imprisonment, I suppose he is not altogether ignorant of some part of these things, and also his Grace doth know my Sister, for whose succour, and some relief, now unto your Highness I make most humble sute.

Notwithstanding these goodly and just requests, no justice could be had, until that now of late some of these shameful Injuries, by order of Law have been redressed.

The 16. of October, Anno 1555. N. R.

Anno 1555.

The life of M. Ridley such, as could not with any notorious crime be charged.

This Degradation being past, and all things finished, Doctor Brooks called the Bayliffs, delivering to them Mr. Ridley with this charge, to keep him safely from any man speaking with him, and that he should be brought to the place of Execution when they were commanded. Then Mr. Ridley in praising God, burst out with these words, and said; God I thank thee, and to thy praise be it spoken, there is none of you all able to lay to my charge any open or notorious Crime: for if you could, it should surely be laid in my lap, I see very well. Whereunto Brooks said, he played the part of a proud Pharisee, exalting and praising himself.

But Master Ridley said No, no, no, as I have said before, to Gods glory be it spoken. I confess my self to be a miserable wretched sinner, and have great need of Gods help and mercy, and do daily call and cry for the same: therefore I pray you have no such Opinion of me. Then they departed, and in going away, a certain Warden of a Colledge, of whose name I am not very sure, bade Dr. Ridley repent him, and forsake that erroneous Opinion. Whereunto M. Ridley said; Sir, repent you, for you are out of the Truth: and I pray God (if it be his blessed will) have mercy upon you, and grant you the understanding of his Word. Then the Warden being in a chafe thereat, said; I trust that I shall never be of your erroneous and devilish Opinion, either yet to be in that place whither you shall go. He is, saith he, the most obstinate and wilful man that ever I heard talk since I was born.

Dr. Ridley biddeth Gueſts to his marriage.

THe Night before he ſuffered, his Beard was waſhed and his Legs, and as he ſate at Supper, the ſame Night at Mr. Iriſhes (who was his Keeper) he bade his Hoſteſs, and the reſt at the Boord to his marriage: for, ſaith he, to morrow I muſt be married, and ſo ſhewed himſelf to be as merry as ever he was at any time before. And wiſhing his Siſter at his marriage, he asked his Brother ſitting at the Table, whether ſhe could find in her heart to be there or no: and he anſwered, Yea, I dare ſay, with all her heart: at which word he ſaid, He was glad to hear of her ſo much therein. So at this talk Miſtreſs Iriſh wept.

Mrs. Iriſh a great Papiſt before, weepeth for D. Ridley.

But Mr. Ridley comforted her, and ſaid, O Mrs. Iriſh, you love me not now, I ſee well enough; for in that you weep, it doth appear you will not be at my marriage, neither are content therewith. Indeed you be not ſo much my Friend, as I thought you had been. But quiet your ſelf, though my Breakfaſt ſhall be ſomewhat ſharp and painful, yet I am ſure my Supper ſhall be more pleaſant and ſweet, &c.

When they aroſe from the Table, his Brother offered him to watch all Night with him. But he ſaid, No, no, that you ſhall not. For I mind (God willing) to go to bed, and to ſleep as quietly to Night, as ever I did in my life. So his Brother departed, exhorting him to be of good cheer, and to take his Croſs quietly, for the reward was great, &c.

B. Ridley careleſs at his death.

The behaviour of Dr. Ridley and Mr. Latimer, at the time of their death, which was the 16. of October, 1555.

The order and manner of B. Ridley and M. Latimer going to the Stake.

UPon the North-ſide of the Town, in the Ditch over againſt Baily-College, the place of Execution was appointed: and for fear of any Tumult that might ariſe, to let the burning of them, the Lord Williams was commanded by the Queens Letters, and the houſholders of the City to be there aſſiſtant, ſufficiently appointed; and when every thing was in a readineſs, the Priſoners were brought forth by the Mayor and the Bayliffs.

Mr. Ridley had a fair black Gown furred, and faced with Foins, ſuch as he was wont to wear being Biſhop, and a Tippet of Velvet furred likewiſe about his neck, a Velvet Night-cap upon his head, and a Corner-cap upon the ſame, going in a pair of Slippers to the Stake, and going between the Mayor and an Alderman, &c.

After him came Mr. Latimer in a poor Briſtow freez Frock all worn, with his buttoned Cap, and a Kerchief on his head, all ready to the Fire, a new long Shroud hanging over his Hoſe down to the feet: which at the firſt ſight ſtirred mens hearts to rue upon them, beholding on the one ſide, the honour they ſometime had, and on the other, the calamity whereunto they were fallen.

D. Ridley and M. Latimer brought together to the Stake.

Mr. Doctor Ridley, as he paſſed toward Bocardo, looked up where Mr. Cranmer did lye, hoping belike to have ſeen him at the Glaſs-window, and to have ſpoken unto him. But then Mr. Cranmer was buſie with Frier Soto and his Fellows diſputing together, ſo that he could not ſee him through that occaſion. Then Mr. Ridley, looking back, eſpied Mr. Latimer coming after. Unto whom he ſaid, Oh, be ye there? Yea, ſaid Mr. Latimer, have after as faſt as I can follow. So he following a pretty way off, at length they came both to the Stake, the one after the other, where firſt Dr. Ridley entring the place, marvellouſly and earneſtly holding up both his hands, looked towards Heaven: then ſhortly after eſpying Mr. Latimer, with a wondrous chearful look he ran to him, imbraced and kiſſed him, and as they that ſtood near reported, comforted him, ſaying, Be of good heart, Brother, for God will either aſſwage the fury of the flame, or elſe ſtrengthen us to abide it.

The behaviour of D. Ridley and M. Latimer at the Stake.

With that went he to the Stake, kneeled down by it, kiſſed it, and effectually prayed, and behind him Mr. Latimer kneeled, as earneſtly calling upon God as he. After they aroſe the one talked with the other a little while, till they which were appointed to ſee the Execution removed themſelves out of the Sun. What they ſaid I can learn of no man.

Dr. Smith preaching at the burning of Biſh. Ridley and M. Latimer.

Then Dr. Smith, of whoſe Recantation in King Edwards time ye heard before, began his Sermon to them upon this Text of St. Paul, in the 13*th* Chapter of the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians; Si corpus meum tradam igni, charitatem autem non habeam, nihil inde utilitatis capio; this is, If I yield my Body to the fire to be burnt, and have not Charity, I ſhall gain nothing thereby. Wherein he alledged that the goodneſs of the cauſe, and not the order of death, maketh the holineſs of the perſon; which he confirmed by the examples of Judas, and and of a woman in Oxford that of late hanged her ſelf, for that they and ſuch like as he recited, might then be adjudged righteous, which deſperately ſundered their lives from their bodies, as he feared that thoſe men that ſtood before him would do. But he cried ſtill to the People to beware of them, for they were Hereticks, and died out of the Church. And on the other ſide, he declared their diverſities in opinions, as Lutherans, Oecolampadians Zuinglians, of which ſect they were he ſaid, and that was the worſt: but the old Church of Chriſt, and the Catholick faith believed farr otherwiſe. At which place they lifted up both their hands and eyes to heaven, as it were calling God to witneſs of the truth. The which countenance they made in many other places of his Sermon, whereas they thought he ſpake amiſs. He ended with a very ſhort exhortation to them to recant and come home again to the Church, and ſave their lives and Souls, which elſe were condemned. His Sermon was ſcant in all a quarter of an hour.

D. Smith raileth againſt the Martyrs.

Chriſts Congregation burdened with diverſity of opinions.

Doctor Ridley ſaid to Maſter Latimer, will you begin to anſwer the Sermon, or ſhall I? Maſter Latimer ſaid, begin you firſt I pray you. I will, ſaid Maſter Ridley.

D. Ridley ready to anſwer D. Smiths Sermon, but could not be ſuffered.

Then the wicked Sermon being ended, Doctor Ridley, and Mr. Latimer kneeled down upon their knees towards my Lord Williams of Tame, the Vice-chancellor of Oxford, and divers other Commiſſioners appointed for that purpoſe, which ſate upon a form thereby. Unto whom Mr. Ridley ſaid; I beſeech you my Lord, even for Chriſts ſake, that I may ſpeak but two or three words: and whileſt my Lord bent his head to the Mayor and Vice-chancellor, to know (as it appeared) whether he might give him leave to ſpeak, the Bayliffs and Doctor Marſhall Vice-chancellor, ran haſtily unto him, and with their hands ſtopped his mouth, and ſaid, Maſter Ridley, if you will revoke your erroneous opinions, and recant the ſame, you ſhall not onely have liberty ſo to do, but alſo the benefit of a ſubject, that is, have your life. Not otherwiſe, ſaid Maſter Ridley? No, quoth Doctor Marſhal: therefore if you will not ſo do, then there is no remedy but you muſt ſuffer for your deſerts. Well (quoth Mr. Ridley) ſo long as the breath is in my body, I will never deny my Lord Chriſt, and his known truth: Gods will be done in me. And with that he roſe up, and ſaid with a lowd voice, Well, then I commit our cauſe to Almighty God, which ſhall indifferently judge all.

D: Marſhal. Vice chancellor of Oxford, podpeth D. Ridleys mouth

B. Ridley committeth his cauſe to God.

To whoſe ſaying, Mr. Latimer added his old Poſie, Well, there is nothing hid but it ſhall be opened: and he ſaid, he could anſwer Smith well enough, if he might be ſuffered. Incontinently they were commanded to make them ready, which they with all meekneſs obeyed. Mr. Ridley took his gown and his * tippet, and gave it to his Brother in Law Mr. Shipſide, who all his time of impriſonment, although he might not be ſuffered to come to him, lay there at his own charges to provide him neceſſaries, which from time to time he ſent him by the Serjeant that kept him. Some other of his apparel that was little worth, he gave away, other the Bayliffs took.

Mr. Latimers words when he could not be ſuffered to anſwer D. Smith.

* This was no Popiſh tippet, but made onely to keep his neck warm.

He gave away beſides, divers other ſmall things to Gentlemen ſtanding by, and divers of them pitifully weeping, as to Sir Henry Lea he gave a new groat, and to divers of my Lord Williams Gentlemen, ſome napkins, ſome nutmegs, and races of Ginger, his Dial, and ſuch other things as he had about him, to every one that ſtood next him. Some plucked the points off his hoſe. Happy was he that might get any ragg of him.

B. Ridley giveth away his apparel and other gifts to the People about him.

Maſter Latimer gave nothing, but very quietly ſuffered his Keeper to pull off his hoſe, and his other array, which to look unto was very ſimple: and being ſtripped into his ſhrowd, he ſeemed as comely a perſon to them that were there preſent, as one ſhould lightly ſee; and whereas in his clothes he appeared a withered and crooked ſilly old man, he now ſtood bolt upright, as comely a father as one might lightly behold.

Mr. Latimer ſtanding at the ſtake in his ſhirt.

Then Maſter Ridley, ſtanding as yet in his truſs, ſaid to his Brother, It were beſt for me to go in my truſs ſtill. No, quoth his Brother, it will put you to more pain: and the truſs will do a poor man good. Whereunto Maſter Ridley ſaid: Be it, in the Name of God, and ſo unlaced himſelf. Then being in his ſhirt, he ſtood upon the foreſaid ſtone, and held up his hand and ſaid:

Oh heavenly Father, I give unto thee moſt hearty thanks, for that thou haſt called me to be a profeſſor of thee, even unto death, I beſeech thee Lord God take mercy upon this Realm of England, and deliver the ſame from all her enemies.

Anno 1555.

B. Ridley thanketh God for his Martyrdom and prayeth for England.

Then the Smith took a chain of Iron, and brought the ſame about both Doctor Ridleys, and Mr. Latimers middles: and as he was knocking in a ſtaple, Doctor Ridley took the chain in his hand, and ſhaked the ſame, for it did gird in his belly, and looking aſide to the Smith, ſaid; Good fellow, knock it in hard, for the fleſh will have his courſe. Then his Brother did bring him Gunpowder in a bag, and would have tied the ſame about his neck, Maſter Ridley asked what it was. His Brother ſaid, Gun-powder. Then ſaid he, I will take it to be ſent of God, therefore I will receive it as ſent of him. And have you any ſaid he, for my Brother, meaning Maſter Latimer? Yea Sir, that I have (quoth his Brother:) Then give it unto him (ſaid he) betime, leſt ye come too late. So his Brother went, and carried of the ſame Gun-powder unto Maſter Latimer.

Gun-powder given to the Martyrs.

In the mean time Doctor Ridley ſpake unto my Lord Williams, and ſaid; My Lord, I muſt be a ſuter unto your Lordſhip in the behalf of divers poor men, and ſpecially in the cauſe of my poor Siſter: I have made a ſupplication to the Queens Majeſty in their behalfs. I beſeech your Lordſhip for Chriſts ſake, to be a mean to her grace for them. My Brother here hath the ſupplication, and will reſort to your Lordſhip to certifie you hereof. There is nothing in all the World that troubleth my Conſcience (I praiſe God) this onely excepted. Whileſt I was in the See of London, divers poor men took leaſes of me, and agreed with me for the ſame. Now I hear ſay the Biſhop that now occupieth the ſame room, will not allow my grants unto them made, but contrary unto all law and Conſcience, hath taken from them their livings, and will not ſuffer them to injoy the ſame. I beſeech you my Lord, be a mean for them: you ſhall do a good deed, and God will reward you.

B. Ridleys ſute to the Lord of Tame, for leaſes of poor men.

B. Bonner taketh away the leaſes from poor men confirmed before by B. Ridley.

Then they brought a Faggot, kindled with fire, and laid the ſame down at D. Ridleys feet. To whom Mr. Latimer ſpake in this manner; Be of good comfort, Mr. Ridley, and play the man, we ſhall this day light ſuch a candle by Gods grace in England, as I truſt ſhall never be put out.

The Church lightned by the Martyrdom of Saints.

And ſo the fire being given unto them, when Doctor Ridley ſaw the fire flaming up towards him, he cried with a wonderful lowd voyce; In manus tuas, Domine, commendo ſpiritum meum: Domine recipe ſpiritum meum, and after repeated this later part often in Engliſh, Lord, Lord, receive my Spirit: Maſter Latimer crying as vehemently on the other ſide, O Father of Heaven receive my Soul: who received the flame as it were imbracing of it. After that he had ſtroaked his face with his hands, and as it were bathed them a little in the fire, he ſoon died (as it appeareth) with very little pain or none. And thus much concerning the end of this old and bleſſed Servant of God, Maſter Latimer, for whoſe laborious travels, fruitful life, and conſtant death, the whole Realm hath cauſe to give great thanks to Almighty God.

Mr. Latimers prayer and Martyrdom.

But Maſter Ridley by reaſon of the evil making of the fire unto him, becauſe the wooden faggots were laid about the goſs, and over high built, the fire burned firſt beneath, being kept down by the wood. Which when he felt, he deſired them for Chriſts ſake to let the fire come unto him, Which when his Brother in law heard, but not well underſtood, intending to rid him out of his pain (for the which cauſe he gave attendance) as one in ſuch ſorrow, not well adviſed what he did, heaped faggots upon him, ſo that he clean covered him, which made the fire more vehement beneath, that it burned clean all his neather parts, before it once touched the upper, and that made him leap up and down under the faggots, and often deſire them to let the fire come unto him, ſaying; I cannot burn. Which indeed appeared well: for after his legs were conſumed by reaſon of his ſtruggling through the pain (whereof he had no releaſe, but onely his contentation in God) he ſhewed that ſide toward us clean, ſhirt and all untouched with flame. Yet in all this torment he forgot not to call unto God ſtill, having in his mouth, Lord have mercy upon me, intermingling his cry, let the fire come unto me, I cannot burn. In which pains he laboured till one of the ſtanders-by with his bill pulled off the Faggots above, and where he ſaw the fire flame up, he wreſted himſelf unto that ſide. And when the flame touched the Gun-powder, he was ſeen ſtirr no more, but burned on the other ſide, falling down at Maſter Latimers feet. Which ſome ſaid, happened by reaſon that the chain looſed, other ſaid, that he fell over the chain by reaſon of the poiſe of his body, and the weakneſs of the neather limbs.

Some ſaid that before he was like to fall from the ſtake, he deſired them to hold him to it with their bills. However it was, ſurely it moved hundreds to tears, in beholding the horrible ſight. For I think there was none, that had not clean exiled all humanity and mercy, which would not have lamented to behold the fury of the fire ſo to rage upon their bodies. Signs there were of ſorrow on every ſide. Some took it grievouſly to ſee their deaths, whoſe lives they held full dear. Some pitied their perſons, that thought their Souls and no need thereof. His Brother moved many men, ſeeing his miſerable caſe, ſeeing (I ſay) him compelled to ſuch infelicity, that he thought then to do him beſt ſervice when he haſtened his end. Some cried out of the luck, to ſee his endeavour, who moſt dearly loved him, and ſought his releaſe, turn to his greater vexation, and increaſe of pain. But whoſo conſidered their preferments in time paſt, the places of honour that they ſometime occupied in this Common wealth, the favour they were in with their Princes, and the opinion of learning they had, could not chooſe but ſorrow with tears, to ſee ſo great dignity, honour and eſtimation, ſo neceſſary members ſometime accounted, ſo many godly vertues, the ſtudy of ſo many years, ſuch excellent learning, to be put into the fire, and conſumed in one moment. Well, dead they are, and the reward of this World they have already. What reward remaineth for them in Heaven, the day of the Lords Glory, when he cometh with his Saints, ſhall ſhortly I truſt, declare.

The lamenting hearts of the People at the Martyrdom of theſe two Saints.

Albeit I have deferred and put over many treatiſes, letters, and Exhortations, belonging to the ſtory of the Martyrs, unto the later appendix in the end of this volum; thinking alſo to have done the like with theſe Fare-wels and Exhortations following of B. Ridley, yet for certain purpoſes moving me thereunto, and eſpecially conſidering the fruitful admonitions, wholſome doctrine, and neceſſary exhortations contained in the ſame, I thought beſt here to beſtow, and conſequently to adjoyn the ſaid tractations of that learned Paſtor, with the life and Story of the Author. Whereof the two firſt be in a manner his farewels, the one to his kinſfolks, and generally to all the faithful of the number of Chriſts Congregation: the other more ſpecial to the priſoners, and baniſhed Chriſtians in the Goſpels cauſe: the third containeth a fruitful and a general admonition to the City of London, and to all other, with neceſſary precepts of Chriſtian office, as by the tenor of them here followeth in order to be ſeen.

A Treatiſe or Letter written by D. Ridley, inſtead of his laſt fare-well, to all his true and Faithful Friends in God, with a ſharp admonition withal unto the Papiſts.

The firſt fare-well of B. Ridley to his Friends.

AT the Name of Jeſus, let every knee bow, both of things in Heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, and let every tongue confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is the Lord, unto the glory of God the Father, Amen.

As a man minding to take a far journey, and to depart from his familiar Friends commonly and naturally hath a deſire to bid his Friends farewell before his departure: ſo likewiſe now I looking daily, when I ſhould be called to depart hence from you (O all ye my dearly beloved Brethren and Siſters in our Saviour Chriſt, that dwell here in this World) having alike mind towards you all (and bleſſed be God for ſuch time and leiſure, whereof I right heartily thank his heavenly goodneſs) to bid you all my dear Brethren and Siſters (I ſay in Chriſt) that dwell upon the earth, after ſuch manner as I can, Farewell.

Commendation of George Shipſide his Brother in law.

Farewel my dear Brother, Gorge Shipſide, whom I have ever found faithful, truſty, and loving in all ſtates and conditions, and now in the time of my Croſs, over all other to me moſt friendly & ſtedfaſt, and that which liked me beſt over all other things, in Gods cauſe ever hearty.

Farewel my dear Siſter Alice his Wife. I am glad to hear of thee, that thou doſt take Chriſts Croſs wich is laid now (bleſſed be God) both on thy back and mine, in good part. Thank thou God that hath given thee a godly and loving husband: ſee thou honour him and obey him, according to Gods Law. Honour thy Mother in Law his Mother, and love all thoſe that pertain unto him, being ready to do them good, as it ſhall lie in thy power. As for thy Children, I doubt not of thy husband, but that he which hath given him an heart to love and fear God, and in God them that pertain unto him, ſhall alſo make him friendly and beneficial unto thy Children, even as if they had been gotten of his own body.

To his Brother John Ridley.

Farewel my dearly beloved Brother John Ridley of the Waltoun, and you my gentle and loving Siſter Eliazbeth: whom beſides the natural league of amity, your tender love, which you were ſaid ever to bear towards me above the reſt of your Brethren, doth bind me to love. My mind was to have acknowledged this your loving affection, and to have acquitted with deeds, and not with words alone. Your Daughter Elizabeth I bid farewel, whom I love for the meek and gentle Spirit that God hath given her, which is a precious thing in the ſight of God.

To his Siſter in law of Unthank wife to Hugh his Brother.

Farewel my beloved Siſter of Unthank, with all your Children, Nephews and Nieces; Since the departing of my Brother Hugh, my mind was to have been unto them inſtead of their Father, but the Lord God muſt and will be their Father, if they would love and fear him, and live in the trade of his Law.

To his couſin M. Nicholas Ridley.

Farewel my welbeloved and worſhipful Couſins, Mr. Nich. Ridley of Willimountſwike, and your Wife, and I thank you for all your kindneſs ſhewed both to me, and alſo to all your own kinſfolk and mine. Good Couſin, as God hath ſet you in our ſtock, and kindred (not for any reſpect of your perſon, but of his abundant grace and goodneſs) to be as it were the Bell-weather to order and conduct the reſt, and hath alſo indued you with his manifold gifts of grace both Heavenly and Worldly above others: ſo I pray you good Couſin (as my truſt and hope is in you) continue and increaſe in the maintenance of the truth, honeſty, righteouſneſs, and all true godlineſs, and to the uttermoſt of your power, to withſtand falſhood, untruth, unrighteouſneſs, and all ungodlineſs which is forbidden and condemned by the Word and Laws of God.

To his couſin Ralph Whitfield.

Farewel my young Couſin Ralph Whitfield. Oh! your time was very ſhort with me. My mind was to have done you good, and yet you caught in that little time a loſs, but I truſt it ſhall be recompenced, as it ſhall pleaſe Almighty God.

To all his kindred.

Farewel all my whole Kindred and countreymen, farewel in Chriſt all together. The Lord, which is the ſearcher of ſecrets, knoweth that according to my hearts deſire, my hope was of late that I ſhould have come among you, and to have brought with me abundance of Chriſts bleſſed Goſpel, according to the duty of that office and miniſtery, whereunto among you I was choſen, named and appointed by the mouth of that our late peerleſs Prince, King Edward, and ſo alſo denounced openly in his Court, by his privy Council.

B. Ridley appointed to be B. of Durham.

Martyrdom, Gods ſingular and rare promotion.

I warn you all my welbeloved Kinſfolk and Countrymen, that ye be not amazed or aſtonied at the kind of my departure and diſſolution: for I enſure you, I think it the moſt honour that ever I was called unto in all my life: and therefore I thank my Lord God heartily for it, that it hath pleaſed him to call me of his great mercy unto this high honour, to ſuffer death willingly for his ſake, and his cauſe; unto the which honour he hath called the Holy Prophets, and dearly beloved Apoſtles, and his bleſſed choſen Martyrs. For know ye that I doubt no more, but that the cauſes wherefore I am put to death, are Gods cauſes, and the cauſes of the Truth, then I doubt that the Goſpel which John Wrote is the Goſpel of Chriſt, or that Pauls Epiſtles are the very Word of God. And to have a heart willing to abide, and ſtand in Gods cauſe, and and in Christs quarrel even unto death, I ensure thee (O man) it is an inestimable and an honourable gift of God, given onely to the true Elect, and dearly beloved Children of God and Inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven. For the Holy Apostle and also Martyr in Christs cause, Saint Peter, saith, If ye suffer rebuke in the Name of Christ, that is, in Christs cause, and for his truths sake, then are ye happy and blessed, for the glory of the Spirit of God resteth upon you. If for rebukes sake suffered in Christs Name, a man is pronounced, by the mouth of that Holy Apostle, blessed and happy: how much more happy and blessed is he that hath the grace to suffer death also? Wherefore, all ye that be my true lovers and Friends, rejoyce, and rejoyce with me again, and render with me hearty thanks to God our heavenly Father, that for his Sons sake my Saviour and Redeemer Christ, he hath vouchsafed to call me, being else without his gracious goodness, in my self but a sinful and vile wretch, to call me (I say) unto this high dignity of his true Prophets, of his faithful Apostles, and of his holy elect and chosen Martyrs, that is, to die and to spend this temporal life in the defence and maintenance of his eternal and everlasting truth.

1 Pet. 4.

A blessed thing to suffer death for Christ.

Ye know that be my country-men dwelling upon the borders, where (alas) the true man suffereth oftentimes much wrong at the theeves hand, if it chance a man to be slain of a thief (as it often doth there) which went out with his neighbour to help him to reserve his goods again; that the more cruelly he be slain, and the more stedfastly he stuck by his neighbour in the fight against the faith of the thief, the more favour and friendship shall all his posterity have for the slain mans sake, of all them that be true, as long as the memory of this fact, and his posterity doth endure: Even so ye that be my kinsfolk and country-men, know ye (howsoever the blind, ignorant, and wicked World hereafter shall rail upon my death, which thing they cannot do worse than their Fathers did, of the death of Christ our Saviour, of his Holy Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs:) know ye (I say) that both before God, and all them that be godly, and that truely know, and follow the Laws of God, ye have, and shall have by Gods Grace, ever cause to rejoyce, and to thank God highly, and to think good of it, and in God rejoyce of me your Flesh and Blood, whom God of his goodness hath vouchsafed to associate unto the blessed company of his Holy Martyrs in Heaven: and I doubt not in the infinite goodness of my Lord God, nor in the faithful fellowship of his elect and chosen People, but at both their hands in my cause, ye shall rather find the more favour and grace: for the Lord saith, that he will be both to them and theirs that love him, the more loving again in a thousand generations: the Lord is so full of mercy to them (I say) and theirs which do love him indeed. And Christ saith again, that no man can shew more love than to give his life for his Friend.

If it be a point of a faithful Friend to die with his Friend upon theeves for wordly goods, how much more then to die in Christs quarrel upon the enemies of his Church?

Deut. 7.

John 15.

Now also know ye, all my true lovers in God, my kinsfolk and country-men, that the cause wherefore I am put to death, is even after the same sort and condition, but touching more neer Gods cause, and in more weighty matters, but in the general kind all one: For both is Gods cause, both is in the maintenance of right, and both for the Common-wealth, and both for the weal also of the Christian Brother, although yet there is in these two no small difference, both concerning the enemies, the goods stoln, and the manner of the fight. For know ye all, that like as there when the poor man is robbed by the thief of his goods truely gotten (whereupon he and his houshold should live) he is greatly wronged, and the thief in stealing and robbing with violence the poor mans goods, doth offend God, doth transgress his Law, and is injurious both to the poor man, and to the Common-wealth: so I say, know ye that even here in the cause of my death, it is with the Church of England, I mean the Congregation of the true chosen Children of God in this Realm of England, which I knowledge not onely to be my neighbours, but rather the Congregation of my Spiritual Brethren and Sisters in Christ, yea, members of one body, wherein by Gods Grace, I am and have been grafted in Christ. This Church of England hath of late of the infinite goodness, and abundant grace of Almighty God, great substance, great riches of heavenly treasure, great plenty of Gods true sincere Word, the true and wholesome administration of Christs Holy Sacraments, the whole profession of Christs Religion, truely and plainly set forth in Baptism, the plain declaration and understanding of the same, taught in the Holy Catechism, to have been learned of all true Christians.

To die in any right whatsoever it be is to die in Gods cause.

To die in the truth against theeves, and to die for the truth against Christs enemies, compared.

Truth taught in the Church of England.

Anno 1555.

• The Church had also a true and sincere form and manner of the Lords Supper, wherein according to Jesus Christs own ordinance, and Holy Institution, Christs Commandments were executed and done. For upon the Bread and Wine set upon the Lords Table, thanks were given, the commemoration of the Lords death was had; the Bread, in the remembrance of Christs Body torn upon the Cross, was broken, and the cup in the remembrance of Christs Blood shed, was distributed, and both communicated unto all that were present and would receive them, and also they were exhorted of the minister so to do.

True ministration of the Lords Supper.

All was done openly in the vulgar tongue, so that every thing might be most easily heard, and plainly understood of all the People, to Gods high glory, and the edification of the whole Church. This Church had of late the whole divine services, all common and publick prayers ordained to be said and heard in the common Congregation, not onely framed and fashioned to the true vein of Holy Scripture, but also set forth according to the commandment of the Lord, and St. Pauls Doctrin for the Peoples edification, in their vulgar tongue.

Service in the vulgar tongue.

It had also holy and wholsome Homilies in commendation of the principal vertues, which are commended in Scripture: and likewise other Homilies against the most pernicious and capital vices that use (alas) to raign in this Realm of England. This Church had in matters of controversie, Articles so penned and framed after the Holy Scriptures, and grounded upon the true understanding of Gods Word, that in short time if they had been universally received, they should have been able to have set in Christs true Religion, and to have expelled many false errours and Heresies, wherewith this Church, alas, was almost overgon.

Homilies in the Church of England.

Articles set forth for matters of controversies.

But alas, of late into this spiritual possession of the Heavenly treasure of these godly riches, are entred in theeves, that have robbed and spoyled all this treasure away. I may well complain on these things, and cry out upon them with the Prophet saying, Deus, venerunt gentes in hæreditatem tuam, &c. Psal. 72. O Lord God, the Gentiles, Heathen Nations, are come into thy heritage: They have defiled thy Holy Temple, and made Jerusalem an heap of stones, that is, They have broken and beaten down to the ground thy Holy City. This Heathenish generation, these thieves be of Samaria, these Sabæi and Chaldæi, these robbers have rushed out of their dens, and have robbed the Church of England of all the foresaid Holy Treasure of God; they have carried it away, and overthrown it, and instead of Gods Holy Word, the true and right administration of Christs Holy Sacraments, as of Baptism, and others, they mixt their Ministery with mans fooliish fantasies, and many wicked and ungodly traditions withal.

In stead of the Lords Holy Table, they give the People with much solemn disguising a thing which they call their Mass, but indeed and in truth, it is a very masking and mockery of the true Supper of the Lord, or rather I may call it a crafty jugling, whereby these false thieves and juglers have bewitched the minds of the simple People, that they have brought them from the true worship of God, unto pernicious Idolatry, and make them to believe that to be Christ our Lord and Saviour, which indeed is neither God nor man, nor, hath any life in it self, but in substances is the creature of Bread and Wine, and in use of the Lords Table is the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood: and for this holy use, for the which the Lord hath ordained them in his Table, to represent unto us his blessed Body torn upon the Cross for us, and his Blood there shed, it pleased him to call them his Body and Blood: which understanding Christ declareth to be his true meaning, when he saith, Do this in remembrance of me. And again, Saint Paul.

Anno 1555.

likewiſe doth ſet out the ſame more plainly, ſpeaking of the ſame Sacrament, after the words of Conſecration, ſaying, As often as ye ſhall eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup, ye ſhall ſet forth (he meaneth with the ſame) the Lords Death until his coming again. And here again theſe Thieves have robbed alſo the People of the Lords Cup, contrary to the plain words of Chriſt, written in his Goſpel.

Luke 22. 1 Cor. 11.

The Lords Cup robbed.

Now for the common Publick Prayers which were in the Vulgar Tongue, theſe Thieves have brought in again a ſtrange Tongue, whereof the People underſtand not one word. Wherein what do they elſe, but rob the People of their Divine Service, wherein they ought to pray together with the Miniſter? And to pray in a ſtrange Tongue, what is it, but (as S. Paul calleth it) barbarouſneſs, childiſhneſs, unprofitable folly, yea, and plain madneſs.

Prayers turned into an unknown Tongue.

For the godly Articles of Unity in Religion, and for the wholeſom Homilies, what do theſe Thieves place in the ſtead of them, but the Popes Laws and Decrees, lying Legends, feigned Fables, and Miracles to delude and abuſe the ſimplicity of the rude People? Thus this robbery and theft is not only committed, nay, ſacriledge and wicked ſpoil of heavenly things, but alſo in the ſtead of the ſame, is brought in and placed the abominable deſolation of the Tyrant Antiochus, of proud Senacherib, of the ſhameleſs faced King, and of the Babylonical Beaſt. Unto this Robbery, this Theft and Sacriledge, for that I cannot conſent, nor (God willing) ever ſhall ſo long as the breath is in my Body, becauſe it is Blaſphemy againſt God, high Treaſon unto Chriſt our heavenly King, Lord, Maſter, and our only Saviour and Redeemer, it is plainly contrary to Gods Word, and to Chriſts Goſpel, it is the ſubverſion of all true Godlineſs, and againſt the everlaſting ſalvation of mine own Soul, and of all my Brethren and Siſters, whom Chriſt my Saviour hath ſo dearly bought, with no leſs price than with the effuſion and ſhedding forth of his moſt precious Blood: Therefore all ye my true lovers in God, my Kinſfolks and Country-men, for this cauſe (I ſay) know ye that I am put to death, which by Gods grace I ſhall willingly take, with hearty thanks to God therefore, in certain hope without any doubting, to receive at Gods hand again, of his free mercy and grace, everlaſting life.

Inſtead of Homilies the Popes Decrees ſet up.

The Popes Doctrine containeth Blaſphemy to God. Treaſon to Chriſt, is contrary to Gods Word, is a ſubverſion of true godlineſs, and deſtruction of mans ſoul.

Although the cauſe of the true man ſlain of the Thief, helping his Neighbour to recover his Goods again, and the cauſe wherefore I am to be put to death, in a generality is both one (as I ſaid before;) yet know ye that there is no ſmall difference. Theſe Thieves againſt whom I do ſtand, are much worſe than the Robbers and Thieves of the Borders. The Goods which they ſteal are much more precious, and their kinds of fight are far divers. Theſe Thieves are worſe (I ſay) for they are more cruel, more wicked, more falſe, more deceitful and crafty: for thoſe will but kill the Body, but theſe will not ſtick to kill both Body and Soul. Thoſe, for the general Theft and Robbery, be called, and are indeed Thieves and Robbers; but theſe, for their ſpiritual kind of robbery, are called Sacrilegi, as ye would ſay, Church-robbers. They are more wicked: for thoſe go about to ſpoil men of worldly things, worldly riches, gold and ſilver, and worldly ſubſtance; theſe go about in the ways of the Devil their Ghoſtly Father, to ſteal from the Univerſal Church, and particularly from every man, all heavenly Treaſure, true Faith, true Charity, and hope of Salvation in the Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, yea, to ſpoil us of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, of his Goſpel, of his heavenly Spirit, and of the heavenly heritage of the Kingdom of Heaven, ſo dearly purchaſed unto us, with the death of our Maſter and Saviour Chriſt. Theſe be the Goods and godly Subſtance whereupon the Chriſtian before God muſt live, and without the which he cannot live: Theſe Goods (I ſay) theſe Thieves, theſe Church-robbers go about to ſpoil us of. The which Goods, as to the Man of God, they excel and far paſs all worldly Treaſure; ſo to withſtand even unto the death ſuch Thieves as go about to ſpoil both us and the whole Church of ſuch Goods, is moſt high and honourable Service done unto God.

Comparison between Popiſh Perſecutors and ſtrong Thieves.

Popiſh Perſecutors when they are falſe Thieves, yet will they be called true Catholicks.

Theſe Church-robbers be alſo much more falſe, crafty, and deceitful than the Thieves upon the borders; for theſe have not the craft ſo to commend their Theft, that they dare avouch it; and therefore as acknowledging themſelves to be evil, they ſteal commonly upon the night, they dare not appear at Judgments and Seſſions, where Juſtice is executed; and when they are taken and brought thither, they never hang any man, but they be oft times hanged for their faults. But theſe Church-robbers can ſo cloak and colour their ſpiritual Robbery; that they can make People to believe falſhood to be truth, and truth falſhood, good to be evil, and evil good, light to be darkneſs, and darkneſs light, Superſtition to be true Religion, and Idolatry to be the true Worſhip of God, and that which is in Subſtance the Creature of Bread and Wine, to be none other Subſtance but only the Subſtance of Chriſt the living Lord, both God and Man: And with this their falſhood and craft, they can ſo juggle and bewitch the Underſtanding of the Simple; that they dare avouch it openly in Court and in Town, and fear neither hanging nor heading, as the poor Thieves of the Borders do; but ſtout and ſtrong like Nembroth; dare condemn to be burned in flaming fire, quick and alive, whoſoever will go about to bewray their falſhood.

The fight with ſpiritual Thieves is worſe than with temporal Thieves.

The kind of fight againſt theſe Church-robbers, is alſo of another ſort and kind, than is that which is againſt the Thieves of the Borders. For there the true men go forth againſt them with Spear and Launce, with Bow and Bill, and all ſuch kind of bodily Weapons as the true men have: but here, as the Enemies be of another nature, ſo the Watchmen of Chriſts Flock, the Warriors that fight in the Lords War, muſt be armed, and fight with another kind of Weapons and Armour. For here the Enemies of God, the Souldiers of Antichriſt, although the Battel is ſet forth againſt the Church by mortal men, being fleſh and blood, and nevertheleſs Members of their Father the Devil, yet for that their grand Maſter is the Power of Darkneſs, their Members are Spiritual Wickedneſs, wicked Spirits, Spirits of Errors, of Hereſies, of all Deceit and Ungodlineſs, Spirits of Idolatry, Superſtition and Hypocriſie, which are called of S. Paul, Principalities and Powers, Lords of the World, Rulers of the darkneſs of this World, and ſpiritual ſubtilties concerning heavenly things, therefore our Weapons muſt be fit and meet to fight againſt ſuch, not Carnal nor Bodily Weapons, as Spear and Launce, but Spiritual and Heavenly: we muſt fight againſt ſuch with the Armour of God, not intending to kill their Bodies, but their Errors, their falſe Craft and Hereſies, their Idolatry, Superſtition, and Hypocriſie, and to ſave (as much as lieth in us) both their Bodies and their Souls.

Epheſ.

And therefore as S. Paul teacheth us, we fight not againſt fleſh and blood, that is, we fight not with bodily Weapon to kill the man, but with the weapons of God to put to flight his wicked Errours and Vices, and to ſave both Body and Soul. Our Weapons therefore are Faith, Hope, Charity, Righteouſneſs, Truth, Patience, Prayer unto God, and our Sword wherewith we ſmite our Enemies, beat and batter and bear down all falſhood, is the Word of God. With theſe Weapons, under the Banner of the Croſs of Chriſt, we do fight, ever having our eye upon our grand Maſter, Duke and Captain, Chriſt; and then we reckon our ſelves to triumph and to win the Crown of everlaſting Bliſs, when induring in this Battel without any ſhrinking or yielding to the Enemies, after the example of our grand Captain Chriſt our Maſter, after the Example of his holy Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs, when (I ſay) we are ſlain in our mortal bodies of our Enemies, and are moſt cruelly and without all mercy murthered down like a many of Sheep. And the more cruel, the more painful, the more vile and ſpiteful is the kind of death whereunto we be put; the more glorious in God, the more bleſſed and happy we reckon (without all doubts) our Martyrdom to be.

Epheſ.

The Weapons of a Chriſtian Warriour.

And thus much, dear Lovers and Friends in God, my Country-men and Kinſfolk, I have ſpoken for your comfort, leſt of my death (of whoſe life you looked peradventure ſometimes to have had honeſty, pleaſures, and commodities) ye might be abaſhed or think any evil: whereas ye have rather cauſe to rejoyce (if ye love me indeed) for that it hath pleaſed God to call me to a greater honour and dignity, than ever I did enjoy before, either in Rocheſter, or in the See of London, or ever ſhould have had in the See of Durham, whereunto

Dr. Ridley named to the See of Durham

I was laſt of all elected and named: yea, I count it greater honour before God indeed to dye in his cauſe (whereof I nothing doubt) than is any earthly or temporal promotion or honour that can be given to a Man in this World. And who is he that knoweth the cauſe to be Gods, to be Chriſts quarrel, and of his Goſpel, to be the common weal of all the elect and choſen Children of God, of all the inheritors of the Kingdom of Heaven; who is he (I ſay) that knoweth this aſſuredly by Gods Word, and the teſtimony of his own Conſcience (as I through the infinite goodneſs of God, not of my ſelf, but by his Grace acknowledge my ſelf to do) who is he (I ſay) that knoweth this and both loveth and feareth God indeed and in truth, loveth and believeth his Maſter Chriſt and his bleſſed Goſpel, loveth his brotherhood, the choſen Children of God, and alſo luſteth and longeth for everlaſting life, who is he (I ſay again) that would not or cannot find in his heart in this cauſe to be content to die? The Lord forbid that any ſuch ſhould be that ſhould forſake this Grace of God. I truſt in my Lord God, the God of mercies and the Father of all comfort through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, that he which hath put this mind, will, and affection by his Holy Spirit in my heart, to ſtand againſt the face of the enemy in his cauſe, and to chuſe rather the loſs of all my Worldly Subſtance, yea and of my Life too, than to deny his known truth; that he will comfort me, aid me, and ſtrengthen me evermore even unto the end, and to the yielding up of my Spirit and Soul into his holy hands, whereof I moſt heartily beſeech his moſt holy ſacred Majeſty of his infinite Goodneſs and Mercy, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

The cauſe of Martyrs is the common cauſe of Chriſt, and of all his elect Saints.

Let no Man ſhrink to die in ſuch a bleſſed and common quarrel.

Now that I have taken my leave of my Countrimen and Kinſfolk, and the Lord doth lend me Life, and giveth me leiſure, I will bid my other good friends in God of other places alſo, farewel. And whom firſt or before other, then the Univerſity of Cambridge, where I have dwelt longer, found more faithful and hearty friends, received more benefits (the benefits of my natural Parents only excepted) than ever I did even in mine own native Country wherein I was born.

To his friends in Cambridge.

Farewel therefore (Cambridge) my loving Mother and tender Nurſe. If I ſhould not acknowledge thy manifold benefits, yea, if I ſhould not for thy benefits at the leaſt love thee again, truly I were to be accounted too ungrate and unkind. What benefits hadſt thou ever, that thou uſeſt to give and beſtow upon thy beſt beloved Children, that thou thoughteſt too good for me? Thou didſt beſtow on me all thy School degrees, the common Offices, the Chaplainſhip of the Univerſity, the Office of the Proctorſhip, and of a common Reader; and of thy private commodities and emoluments in Colledges, what was it that thou madeſt me not partner of? Firſt to be Scholar, then to be Fellow, and after my departure from thee, thou calledſt me again to a Maſterſhip of a Right Worſhipful Colledge. I thank thee, my loving Mother, for all this thy kindneſs, and I pray God that his Laws, and the ſincere Goſpel of Chriſt may ever be truly taught and faithfully learned in thee.

Benefits ſhewed to D. Ridley in Cambridge.

Pembroke-Hall in Cambridge. Commendation of Pembroke-Hall to be a ſetter forth ever of the Goſpel. D. Ridley learned the Epiſtles of Saint Paul and Peter without Book in Pembroke-Hall.

Farewel Pembroke Hall, of late mine own Colledge, my Cure and my charge: what caſe thou art in now God knoweth, I know not well. Thou waſt ever named ſince I knew thee, which is not thirty years ago, to be ſtudious, well learned, and a great ſetter forth of Chriſts Goſpel, and of Gods true Word; ſo I found thee, and, bleſſed be God, ſo I left thee indeed. Wo is me for thee mine own dear Colledge, if ever thou ſuffer thy ſelf by any means to be brought from that trade. In thy Orchard (the walls, buts, and trees, if they could ſpeak would bear me witneſs) I learned without Book almoſt all Pauls Epiſtles, yea, and I ween all the Canonical Epiſtles, ſave only the Apocalyps. Of which ſtudy, although in time a great part did depart from me, yet the ſweet ſmell thereof I truſt I ſhall carry with me into Heaven: for the profit thereof I think I have felt in all my Life time ever after, and I ween of late (whether they abide now or no, I cannot tell) there was that did the like. The Lord grant that this zeal and love toward that part of Gods Word, which is a key and true commentary to all the Holy Scripture, may ever abide in that Colledge ſo long as the World ſhall endure.

From Cambridge I was called into Kent by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, that moſt reverend Father and Man of God, and of him by and by ſent to be Vicar of Herne in Eaſt-Kent: Wherefore farewel Herne, thou worſhipful and wealthy pariſh, the firſt Cure whereunto I was called to Preach Gods Word. Thou haſt heard of my Mouth oft-times the Word of God Preached, not after the Popiſh trade, but after Chriſts Goſpel: Oh that the fruit had anſwered to the ſeed. And yet I muſt acknowledge me to be thy debtor for the doctrine of the Lords Supper, which at that time I acknowledge God had not revealed unto me: but I bleſs God in all that Godly vertue and zeal of Gods Word, which the Lord by Preaching of his Word did kindle manifeſtly both in the heart and in the Life and works of that Godly Woman there, my Lady Phines; the Lord grant that his word took like effect there in many other more.

The Godly Lady Phines in Hern Pariſh.

Farewel thou Cathedal Church of Canterbury, the Metropolitick See, whereof once I was a member. To ſpeak things pleaſant unto thee I dare not for danger of Conſcience, and diſpleaſure of my Lord God, and to ſay what lieth in my heart were now too much, and I fear were able to do thee now but little good. Nevertheleſs, for the friendſhip I have found in ſome there, and for charity ſake I wiſh thee to be waſhed clean of all Worldlineſs and ungodlineſs, that thou maiſt be found of God after thy name Chriſts-Church in deed and in truth.

To the Metropolitick See of Canterbury.

Farewel Rocheſter, ſometime my Cathedral See, in whom (to ſay the truth) I did find much gentleneſs and obedience, and I truſt thou wilt not ſay the contrary, but I did uſe it to Gods Glory and into thine own profit in God. Oh that thou hadſt and mightſt have continued and gone forward in the trade of Gods Law wherein I did leave thee; then thy charge and burden ſhould not have been ſo terrible and dangerous, as I ſuppoſe verily it is like to be (alas) in the latter day.

To the See of Rocheſter.

To Weſtminſter other advertiſement in God I have not now to ſay, then I have ſaid before to the Cathedral Church of Canterbury, and ſo God give thee of his Grace, that thou maiſt learn in deed and in truth to pleaſe him after his own Laws; and thus fare you well.

To Weſtminſter.

Oh London, London, to whom now may I ſpeak in thee, or whom ſhall I bid farewel? Shall I ſpeak to the Prebendaries of Pauls? Alas, all that loved Gods Word, and were the true ſetters forth thereof, are now (as I hear ſay) ſome burnt and ſlain, ſome exiled and baniſhed, and ſome holden in hard Priſon, and appointed daily to be put to moſt cruel death for Chriſts Goſpel ſake. As for the reſt of them, I know they could never brook me well, nor could I ever delight in them.

To the See of London.

Shall I ſpeak to the See thereof, wherein of late I was placed almoſt, and not fully by the ſpace of three years? But what may I ſay to it, being (as I hear ſay I am) depoſed and expulſed by judgment as unjuſt uſurper of that room. O judgment, judgment. Can this be juſt judgment to condemn the chief Miniſter of Gods Word, the Paſtor and Biſhop of the Dioceſs, and never bring him into judgment, that he might have heard what crimes were laid to his charge, nor ever ſuffer him to have any place or time to anſwer for himſelf? Thinkeſt thou that hereafter when true Juſtice ſhall have place, this judgment can ever be allowed either of God or Man? Well, as for the cauſe or whole matter of my depoſition, and the ſpoil of my goods which thou poſſeſſeſt yet, I refer it unto God which is a juſt judge; and I beſeech God, if it be his pleaſure, that that which is but my perſonal wrong, be not laid to thy charge in the latter day, this only I can pray for.

Biſhop Ridley depoſed from the See of London without right or judgment.

O thou now wicked and Bloody See, why doeſt thou ſet up again many Altars of Idolatry, which by the Word of God were juſtly taken away? Why haſt thou overthrown the Lords Table? Why doſt thou daily delude thy people, maſking in thy Maſſes in ſtead of the Lords Holy Supper, which ought to be common as well (ſaith Chryſoſtom, yea the Lord himſelf) to the People as to the Prieſt? How dareſt thou deny to the People of Chriſt, contrary to his expreſs Commandment in the Goſpel, his Holy Cup? Why bableſt thou to the People the Common-Prayer in a ſtrange Tongue, wherein

Anno 1555.

S. Paul commandeth in the Lords Name, that no man ſhould ſpeak before the Congregation, except it ſhould be by and by declared in their Common Tongue, that all might be edified? Nay, hearken thou whoriſh Bawd of Babylon, thou wicked Limb of Antichriſt, thou bloody Wolf, why ſlayeſt thou down, and makeſt havock of the Prophets of God? Why murthereſt thou ſo cruelly Chriſt's poor ſilly Sheep, which will not hear thy voice, becauſe thou art a Stranger, and will follow none other but their own Paſtor Chriſt his voice? Thinkeſt thou to eſcape, or that the Lord will not require the blood of his Saints at thy hands? Thy God, which is the work of thy hands, and whom thou ſayeſt thou haſt Power to make, that thy deaf and dumb God (I ſay) will not indeed, nor can (although thou art not aſhamed to call him thy Maker) make thee to eſcape the revenging hand of the High and Almighty God. But be thou aſſured, that the living Lord our Saviour and Redeemer, which ſitteth on the right hand of his Father in glory, he ſeeth all thy wicked ways and cruelty done to his dear Members, and he will not forget his holy Ones, and his hands (O thou whoriſh Drab) ſhalt thou never eſcape. Inſtead of my farewel to thee, now I ſay fye upon thee, fye upon thee filthy Drab, and all thy falſe Prophets.

The bloody See of London.

Bp. Ridleys propheſie upon the Epiſcopal See of London.

To the City of London.

Yet thou (O London) I may not leave thee thus. Although thy Epiſcopal See, now being joyned in league with the Seat of Satan, thus hath now both handled me and the Saints of God, yet I do not doubt, but in that great City there be many privy Mourners, which do daily mourn for that miſchief, the which never did nor ſhall conſent to that wickedneſs, but do deteſt and abhor it as the ways of Satan. But theſe privy Mourners here I will paſs by, and bid them farewel with their Fellows hereafter, when the place and occaſion ſhall more conveniently require. Among the worſhipful of the City, and ſpecially which were in Office of Majoralty, yea, and in other Cities alſo (whom to name now it ſhall not be neceſſary) in the time of my Miniſtery, which was from the latter part of Sir Rowland Hills's year, unto Sir George Barnes's year, and a great part thereof, I do acknowledge that I found no ſmall humanity and gentleneſs as me thought: but (to ſay the truth) that I do eſteem above all other for true Chriſtian kindneſs, which is ſhewed in Gods cauſe, and done for his ſake. Wherefore, O Dobs, Dobs, Alderman and Knight, thou in thy year didſt win my heart for evermore, for that honourable act, that moſt bleſſed work of God, of the erection and ſetting up of Chriſts holy Hoſpitals, and truly religious Houſes, which by thee, and through thee were begun. For thou like a man of God, when the matter was moved for the relief of Chriſts poor ſilly Members to be holpen from extream miſery, hunger, and famine, thy heart, I ſay, was moved with pity, and as Chriſts high honourable Officer in that cauſe, thou calledſt together thy Brethren the Aldermen of the City, before whom thou brakeſt the matter for the Poor; thou didſt plead their cauſe, yea, and not only in thine own perſon thou didſt ſet forth Chriſts cauſe, but to further the matter, thou broughteſt me into the Councel Chamber of the City before the Aldermen alone, whom thou hadſt aſſembled there together to hear me ſpeak what I could ſay, as an Advocate by office and duty, in the poor mens cauſe. The Lord wrought with thee, and gave thee the conſent of thy Brethren; whereby the matter was brought to the Common Council, and ſo to the whole Body of the City; by whom, with an uniform conſent, it was committed to be drawn, ordered, and deviſed by a certain number of the moſt wity Citizens and Politick, endued alſo with godlineſs, and with ready hearts to ſet forward ſuch a noble act, as could be choſen in all the whole City: and they like true and faithful Miniſters both to their City and their Maſter Chriſt, ſo ordered, deviſed, and brought forth the matter, that thouſands of ſilly poor Members of Chriſt, which elſe for extream hunger and miſery ſhould have famiſhed and periſhed, ſhall be relieved, holpen, and brought up, and ſhall have cauſe to bleſs the Aldermen of that time, the Common Council, and the whole Body of the City, but ſpecially thee, O Dobs, and thoſe choſen men, by whom this honourable work of God was begun and wrought, and that ſo long throughout all Ages, as that godly work ſhall endure; which I pray Almighty God may be ever unto the worlds end, Amen.

Commendation of Sir Rich. Dobs Alderman and Knight.

The erecting of the Hoſpital by Bp. Ridley and Sir Richard Dobs, Maior of London.

And thou, O Sir George Barnes, the truth is to be confeſſed to Gods glory, and to the good example of other, thou waſt in thy year not only a furtherer and continuer of that which before thee by thy Predeceſſor was well begun; but alſo didſt labour ſo to have perfected the work, that it ſhould have been an abſolute thing and perfect ſpectacle of true Charity and Godlineſs unto all Chriſtendom. Thine endeavour was to have ſet up an houſe of Occupations, both that all kind of Poverty, being able to work, ſhould not have lacked, whereupon profitably they might have been occupied to their own relief and to the profit and commodity of the Commonwealth of the City, and alſo to have retired thither the poor Babes brought up in the Hoſpitals, when they had come to a certain age and ſtrength, and alſo all thoſe which in the Hoſpitals aforeſaid had been cured of their Diſeaſes. And to have brought this to paſs, thou obtainedſt, not without great diligence and labour both of thee, and of thy Brethren, and of that godly King Edward, that Chriſtian and peerleſs Prince's hand, his Princely place of Bridewel, and what other things to the performance of the ſame, and under what condition it is not unknown. That this thine endeavour hath not had like ſucceſs, the fault is not in thee, but in the condition and ſtate of the time, which the Lord of his infinite mercy vouchſafe to amend when it ſhall be his gracious will and pleaſure.

Commendations of Sir George Barnes, Maior of London.

Bridewell obtained of K. Edward by Sir George Barnes to ſet poor people on work.

Farewel now all ye Citizens that be of God, of what ſtate and condition ſoever ye be. Undoubtedly in London ye have heard Gods Word truly preached. My hearts deſire and daily prayer ſhall be for you, as for whom, for my time, I know to my Lord God I am countable, that ye never ſwerve, neither for loſs of life nor worldly goods, from Gods holy Word, and yield unto Antichriſt: whereupon muſt needs follow the extream diſpleaſure of God, and the loſs both of your bodies and ſouls into perpetual damnation for evermore.

To the Citizens of London.

Now that I have gone through the places where I have dwelt any ſpace in the time of my Pilgrimage here upon Earth, remembring that for the ſpace of King Edward's Reign, which was for the time of mine Office in the Sees of London and Rocheſter, I was a Member of the higher Houſe of the Parliament; therefore (ſeeing my God hath given me leiſure, and the remembrance thereof) I will bid my Lords of the Temporalty farewel. They ſhall have no juſt cauſe (by Gods grace) to take it that I intend to ſay in ill part. As for the Spiritual Prelacy that now is, I have nothing to ſay to them, except I ſhould repeat again a great part of that I have ſaid before now already to the See of London. To you therefore my Lords of the Temporalty will I ſpeak, and this would I have you firſt to underſtand, that when I wrote this, I looked daily when I ſhould be called to the change of this life, and thought that this my writing ſhould not come to your knowledge, before the time of the diſſolution of my body and ſoul ſhould be expired; and therefore know ye, that I had before mine eyes only the fear of God, and Chriſtian Charity toward you, which moved me to write; for of you hereafter I look not in this world, either for pleaſure or diſpleaſure. If my talk ſhall do you never ſo much pleaſure or profit, you cannot promote me, nor if I diſpleaſe you, can ye hurt me of harm me, for I ſhall be out of your reach. Now therefore if you fear God, and can be content to hear the talk of him that ſeeketh nothing at your hands, but to ſerve God, and to do you good: hearken what I ſay. I ſay unto you as S. Paul ſaith to the Galathians; I wonder my Lords what hath bewitched you, that ye ſo ſuddenly are fallen from Chriſt unto Antichriſt, from Chriſts Goſpel unto mans Traditions, from the Lord that bought you, unto the Biſhop now of Rome. I warn you of your peril; be not deceived, except you will be found willingly conſenters unto your own death. For if you think thus; We are Lay-men, this is a matter of Religion, we follow as we are taught and led; if our Teachers and Governours teach us and lead us amiſs, the fault is in them, they ſhall bear the blame: My Lords, this is true (I grant you) that both the falſe Teachers, and the corrupt Governour, ſhall be puniſhed for the death of their Subject, whom they have faiſly taught and corruptly led, yea, and his blood ſhall be required at their hands: but yet nevertheleſs ſhall the Subject dye the death himſelf alſo, that is, he ſhall alſo be damned for his own ſin; for if the blind lead the blind, Chriſt ſaith, not the leader only, but he ſaith, both ſhall fall into the Ditch. Shall the Synagogue and the Senate of the Jews (trow ye) which forſook Chriſt, and conſented to his death, therefore be excuſed, becauſe Annas and Caiaphas, with the Scribes and Phariſees and their Clergy, did teach them amiſs? yea, and alſo Pilate their Governour and the Emperours Lieutenant by his tyranny, did without cauſe put him to death: Forſooth no my Lords, no. For notwithſtanding that corrupt Doctrine, or Pilates waſhing of his hands, neither of both ſhall excuſe either that Synagogue or Seigniory, or Pilate; but at the Lords hand, for the effuſion of that innocent blood, on the later day all ſhall drink of the deadly whip. Ye are witty, and underſtand what I mean; therefore I will paſs over this, and return to tell you how ye are fallen from Chriſt to his Adverſary the Biſhop of Rome.

Luke 6. Ignorance will not excuſe the temporalty being ſeduced in Religion.

The Lords of the Parliament be fallen from Chriſt to Chriſts enemy.

And leſt (my Lords) ye may peradventure think, thus barely to call the Biſhop of Rome Chriſts Adverſary, or (to ſpeak in plain tearms) to call him Antichriſt, that it is done in mine Anguiſh, and that I do but rage, and as a deſperate man, do not care what I ſay, or upon whom I do rail; therefore that your Lordſhips may perceive my mind, and thereby underſtand that I ſpeak the words of truth and ſobriety (as S. Paul ſaid unto Feſtus) be it known unto your Lordſhips all, that as concerning the Biſhop of Rome, I neither hate the Perſon nor the Place. For I enſure your Lordſhips (the living Lord beareth me witneſs, before whom I ſpeak) I do think many a good holy man, many Martyrs and Saints of God have ſit and taught in that place Chriſts Goſpel truly, which therefore juſtly may be called Apoſtolici, that is, true Diſciples of the Apoſtles, and alſo that Church and Congregation of Chriſtians to be a right Apoſtolick Church: yea, and that certain hundred years after the ſame was firſt erected and builded upon Chriſt, by the true Apoſtolical Doctrine taught by the mouths of the Apoſtles themſelves. If ye will know how long that was, and how many hundred years, to be curious in pointing the preciſe number of the years, I will not be too bold, but thus I ſay; So long and ſo many hundred years as that See did truly teach and preach that Goſpel, that Religion, exerciſed that Power, and ordered every thing by thoſe Laws and Rules which that See received of the Apoſtles, and (as Tertullian ſaith) the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and Chriſt of God, ſo long (I ſay) that See might well have been called Peter and Pauls Chair and See, or rather Chriſts Chair, and the Biſhop thereof Apoſtolicus, or true Diſciple and Succeſſour of the Apoſtles, and a Miniſter of Chriſt.

Acts 26.

Many good men in the See of Rome.

So long as the See of Rome followed the rules of the Apoſtles, it might be called Peters or Pauls Chair.

The Church received of the Apoſtles, the Apoſtles of Chriſt, Chriſt of God. Tertul.

But ſince the time that that See hath degenerated from the Trade of Truth and true Religion, the which it received of the Apoſtles at the beginning, and hath preached another Goſpel, hath ſet up another Religion, hath exerciſed another Power, and hath taken upon it to order and rule the Church of Chriſt by other ſtrange Laws, Canons, and Rules than ever it received of the Apoſtles, or the Apoſtles of Chriſt, which things it doth at this day, and hath continued ſo doing (alas, alas) of too too long a time; ſince the time (I ſay) that the ſtate and condition of that See hath thus been changed, in truth it ought of duty and of right to have the names changed both of the See and of the ſitter therein. For underſtand, my Lords, it was neither for the priviledge of the place or perſon thereof, that that See and Biſhops thereof were called Apoſtolick; but for the true trade of Chriſts Religion which was taught and maintained in that See at the firſt, and of thoſe godly men. And therefore as truly and juſtly as that See then, for that true trade of Religion, and conſanguinity of Doctrine with the Religion and Doctrine of Chriſts Apoſtles, was called Apoſtolick; ſo as truly and as juſtly for the contrariety of Religion, and diverſity of Doctrine from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, that See and Biſhop thereof, at this day both ought to be called, and are indeed Antichriſtian.

The See of Rome hath degenerated from the Apoſtles rules, and hath ſet up another Religion.

That is, hath exerciſed another power.

Hath ordained ſtrange laws.

If true doctrine make the See Apoſtolick, then contrary doctrine maketh the See to be Antichriſtian.

The See is the See of Satan, and the Biſhop of the ſame, that maintaineth the Abominations thereof, is Antichriſt himſelf indeed. And for the ſame cauſes this See at this day is the ſame which S. John calleth in his Revelation, Babylon, or the Whore of Babylon, and ſpiritual Sodoma and Egyptus, the Mother of Fornication, and of the Abominations upon the Earth. And with this Whore doth ſpiritually meddle, and lyeth with her, and committeth moſt ſtinking and abominable Adultery before God, all thoſe Kings and Princes, yea and all Nations of the Earth which do conſent to her Abominations, and uſe or practiſe the ſame; that is (of the innumerable multitude of them to rehearſe ſome for examples ſake) her Diſpenſations, her Pardons and Pilgrimages, her Invocation of Saints, her worſhipping of Images, her falſe counterfeit Religion in her Monkery and Prierage, and her Traditions, whereby Gods Laws are defiled; as her maſſing and falſe miniſtring of Gods Word and the Sacraments of Chriſt, clean contrary to Chriſts Word and the Apoſtles Doctrine, whereof in particular I have touched ſomething before in my talk had with the See of London, and in other Treatiſes more at large: wherein (if it ſhall pleaſe God to bring the ſame to light) it ſhall appear, I truſt by Gods grace, plainly to the man of God, and to him whoſe rule in judgment of Religion is Gods Word, that that Religion, that Rule and Order, that Doctrine and Faith which this Whore of Babylon, and the Beaſt whereupon ſhe doth ſit, maintaineth at this day with all violence of Fire and Sword, with Spoil and Baniſhment (according to Daniels Propheſie) and finally with all falſhood, deceit, hypocriſie, and all kind of ungodlineſs, are as clean contrary to Gods Word, as darkneſs is unto light, or light unto darkneſs, white to black, or black to white, or as Belial unto Chriſt, or Chriſt unto Antichriſt himſelf.

Apoc. 18. Daniel 7.

I know my Lords, and foreſaw when I wrote this, that ſo many of you as ſhould ſee this my writing, not being before endued with the Spirit of Grace and the Light of Gods Word, ſo many (I ſay) would at theſe my words Lord-like ſtamp and ſpurn, and ſpit thereat. But ſober your ſelves with patience, and be ſtill, and know ye that in my writing of this, my mind was none other, but in God (as the living God doth bear me witneſs) both to do you profit and pleaſure. And otherwiſe, as for your diſpleaſure, by that time this ſhall come to your knowledge, I truſt by Gods grace to be in the hands and protection of the Almighty, my heavenly Father and the living Lord, which is, (as S. John ſaith) the greateſt of all, and then I ſhall not need (I trow) to fear what any Lord, no nor what King or Prince can do unto me.

He ſpeaketh to the Lords temporal.

My Lords, if in times paſt ye have been contented to hear me ſometimes in matters of Religion before the Prince in the Pulpit, and in the Parliament Houſe, and have not ſeemed to have deſpiſed what I have ſaid (when as elſe if ye had perceived juſt occaſion, ye might then have ſuſpected me in my talk, though it had been reaſonable, either deſire of worldly gain, or fear of diſpleaſure) how hath then your Lordſhips more cauſe to hearken to my word, and to hear me patiently, ſeeing now ye cannot juſtly think of me, being in this caſe appointed to dye, and looking daily when I ſhall be called to come before the eternal Judge, otherwiſe but that I only ſtudy to ſerve my Lord God, and to ſay that thing which I am perſwaded aſſuredly by Gods Word ſhall and doth pleaſe him, and profit all them to whom God ſhall give grace to hear and believe what I do ſay? And I do ſay even that I have ſaid heretofore both of the See of Rome and of the Biſhop thereof, I mean after this their preſent ſtate at this day, wherein if ye will not belive the Miniſters of God, and true Preachers of his Word, verily I denounce unto you in Verbo Domini, except ye do repent betime, it ſhall turn to your confuſion, and to your ſmart on the later day. Forget not what I ſay my Lords, for Gods ſake forget not, but remember it upon your bed. For I tell you moreover, as I know I muſt be countable of this my talk, and of my ſpeaking thus, to the eternal Judge (who will judge nothing amiſs) ſo ſhall you be countable of your duty in hearing, and you ſhall be charged, if ye will not hearken to Gods Word, for not obeying to the truth. Alas my Lords, how chanceth this, that this matter is now anew again to be perſwaded unto you? Who would have thought of late, but your Lordships had been perswaded indeed sufficiently, or that ye could ever have agreed so uniformly with one consent to the abolishment of the usurpation of the Bishop of Rome? If that matter were then but a matter of policy wherein the Prince must be obeyed; how it is now made a matter wherein (as your Clergy saith now, and so saith the Popes Laws indeed) standeth the unity of the Catholick Church, and a matter of necessity of our salvation? Hath the time, being so short since the death of the two last Kings, Henry the Eighth, and Edward his Son, altered the nature of the matter? If it have not, but was of the same nature and danger before God then as it is now, and be now (as it is said by the Popes Laws, and the instructions set forth in English to the Curats of the Diocess of York) indeed a matter of necessity to salvation: how then chanced it, that ye were all (O my Lords) so light, and so little passed upon the Catholick Faith, and the unity thereof (without the which no man can be saved) as for your Princes pleasures, which were but mortal men, to forsake the unity of your Catholick Faith, that is, to forsake Christ and his Gospel? And furthermore, if it were both then, and now is so necessary to salvation, how chanced it also that ye, all the whole body of the Parliament agreeing with you, did not only abolish and expel the Bishop of Rome, but also did abjure him in your own persons, and did decree in your Acts great Oaths to be taken of both the Spiritualty and Temporalty, whosoever should enter into any weighty and chargeable Office in the Commonwealth? But on the other side, if the Law and Decree which maketh the Supremacy of the See and Bishop of Rome over the Universal Church of Christ, be a thing of necessity required unto Salvation by an Antichristian Law (as it is indeed) and such Instructions as are given to the Diocess of York, be indeed a setting forth of the Power of the Beast of Babylon, by the craft and fallhood of his false Prophets (as of truth, compared to Gods Word, and truly judged by the same; it shall plainly appear that they be) then my Lords never think other, but the day shall come when ye shall be charged with this your undoing of that, that once ye had well done, and with this your Perjury and Breach of your Oath, which Oath was done in judgment, justice, and truth agreeable to Gods Law. The Whore of Babylon may well for a time dally with you, and make you so drunken with the wine of her filthy Stews and Whoredom (as with her Dispensations and Promises of Pardon a pœna & culpa) that for drunkenness and blindness ye may think your selves safe. But be ye assured, when the living Lord shall try the matter by the fire, and judge it according to his Word, when all her Abominations shall appear what they be, then ye my Lords, (I give your Lordships warning in time) repent if ye will be happy, and love your own souls health, repent, I say, or else without all doubt, ye shall never escape the hands of the living Lord, for the guilt of your Perjury, and Breach of your Oath. As ye have banquetted and lain by the Whore in the Fornication of her whorish Dispensations, Pardons, Idolatry, and such like Abominations; so shall ye drink with her (except ye repent betime) of the Cup of the Lords Indignation and everlasting Wrath, which is prepared for the Beast, his false Prophets, and all their Partakers. For he that is partner with them in their Whoredom and Abominations, must also be partner with them of their Plagues, and in the latter day shall be thrown with them into the Lake burning with brimstone and unquenchable fire. Thus fare ye well, my Lords all. I pray God give you understanding of his blessed will and pleasure, and make you to believe and embrace the Truth, Amen.

If the unity of the Popes Church standeth upon necessity of Salvation, why did the Lords of this Realm abjure this unity in K. Henry and K. Edward days? If it be otherwise, why then do they perjure themselves, turning to it again.

Jerem. 6.

Another farewel to the Prisoners in Christ's Gospels cause, and to all them which for the same cause are exiled and banished out from their own Country, choosing rather to leave all worldly Commodity, than their Master Christ.

Another farewel of Bp. Ridley to the Prisoners, &c.

FArewel my dearly beloved Brethren in Christ, both ye my Fellow-prisoners, and ye also that be exiled and banished out of your Countries, because ye will rather forsake all worldly Commodity, than the Gospel of Christ.

Farewel all ye together in Christ; farewel and be merry, for ye know that the trial of your Faith bringeth forth patience, and patience shall make us perfect, whole and sound on every side, and such, after trial, (ye know) shall receive the Crown of Life, according to the Promise of the Lord made to his dear Beloved; let us therefore be patient unto the coming of the Lord. As the Husbandman abideth patiently the former and later rain for the encrease of his Crop, so let us be patient, and pluck up our hearts, for the coming of the Lord approacheth apace. Let us (my dear Brethren) take example of patience in tribulation of the Prophets, which spake likewise Gods Word truly in his Name. Let Job be to us an example of Patience, and the end which the Lord suffered, which is full of mercy and pity. We know, my Brethren, by Gods Word, that our Faith is much more precious than any corruptible Gold, and yet that is tried by the fire: even so our Faith is therefore tried likewise in tribulations, that it may be found, when the Lord shall appear, laudable, glorious, and honourable. For if we for Christs cause do suffer, that is grateful before God; for thereunto are we called, that is our state and vocation, wherewith let us be content. Christ we know suffered for us afflictions, leaving us an example that we should follow his footsteps; for he committed no sin, nor was there any guile found in his mouth: when he was railed upon, and all to be reviled, he railed not again: when he was evil intreated, he did not threaten, but committed the punishment thereof to him that judgeth aright.

James 5.

1 Pet. 1.
1 Pet. 2.

Let us ever have in fresh remembrance those wonderful comfortable Sentences spoken by the mouth of our Saviour Christ; Blessed are they which suffer Persecution for Righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. Blessed are ye when men revile you, persecute you, and speak all evil against you for my sake: rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven; for so did they persecute the Prophets which were before you. Therefore let us alway bear this in our minds, that if any incommodity do chance unto us for righteousness sake, happy are we whatsoever the world doth think of us. Christ our Master hath told us before hand, that the Brother should put the Brother to death, and the Father the Son, and the Children should rise against their Parents and kill them, and that Christs true Apostles should be hated of all men for his Names sake; but he that shall abide patiently unto the end, shall be saved.

Matth. 5.

Luke 21.

Let us then endure in all troubles patiently, after the example of our Master Christ, and be contented therewith, for he suffered being our Master and Lord: how doth it not then become us to suffer? For the Disciple is not above his Master, nor the Servant above his Lord. It may suffice the Disciple to be as his Master, and the Servant to be as his Lord. If they have called the Father of the Family, the Master of the Houshold, Beelzebub, how much more shall they call so them of his Houshold? Fear them not then (saith our Saviour) for all privities shall be made plain; there is now nothing secret, but it shall be shewed in light. Of Christs words let us neither be ashamed nor afraid to speak them; for so Christ our Master commandeth us, saying, That I tell you privily, speak openly abroad, and that I tell you in your ear, preach it upon the house top. And fear not them which kill the body, for the soul they cannot kill; but fear him which can cast both body and soul into hell fire.

Luke. 6.
Matth. 10.

Matth. 10.

Know ye that the heavenly Father hath ever a gracious eye and respect toward you, and a Fatherly providence for you, so that without his knowledge and permission nothing can do you harm. Let us therefore cast all our care upon him, and he shall provide that which shall be best for us. For if of two small Sparrows, which both are sold for a mite, one of them lighteth not on the ground without your Father, and all the hairs of our head are numbred, fear not them (saith our Master Christ) for ye are more worth than many small Sparrows. And let us not stick to confess our Master Christ for fear of danger, whatsoever it shall be, remembring the promise that Christ maketh, saying, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall I confess before my Father which is in Heaven: but whosoever shall deny me, him shall I likewise deny before my Father which is in Heaven. Christ came not to give unto us here a carnal amity, and a worldly peace, or to knit his unto the world in ease and peace,

Matth. 10.

To Confess Christ, and not to fear danger.

but rather to separate and divide from the World, and to joyn them unto himself: in whose cause we must, if we will be his, forsake Father and Mother, and stick unto him. If we forsake him or shrink from him for trouble or deaths sake, which he calleth his Cross; he will none of us, we cannot be his. If for his cause we shall lose our temporal lives here, we shall find them again, and enjoy them for evermore: but if in his cause we will not be contented to leave nor lose them here, then shall we lose them so, that we shall never find them again, but in everlasting death. What though our troubles here
2 Cor. 4. be painful for the time, and the sting of death bitter and unpleasant? yet we know that they shall not last, in comparison of Eternity, no not the twinkling of an eye, and that they patiently taken in Christs cause, shall procure and get us unmeasurable heaps of heavenly Glory, unto the which these temporal pains of death and troubles compared, are not to be esteemed, but to be rejoyced upon.
1 Pet. 3. Wonder not, saith S. Peter, as though it were any strange matter that ye are tried by the fire, he meaneth of tribulation, which thing, saith he, is done to prove you; nay, rather in that ye are Partners of Christs afflictions, rejoyce that in his glorious Revelation ye may rejoyce with merry hearts. If ye suffer rebukes in Christs Name, happy are ye, for the Glory and Spirit of God resteth upon you. Of them God is reviled and dishonoured, but of you he is glorified.

Let no man be ashamed of that he suffereth as a Christian, and in Christs cause; for now is the time that judgment and correction must begin at the House of God: and if it begin first at us, what shall be the end of those, think ye, which believe not the Gospel? And if the righteous shall be hardly saved, the wicked and the sinner, where shall he appear? Wherefore they which are afflicted according to the will of God, let them lay down and commit their souls to him by well doing, as to a trusty and faithful Maker. This, as I said, may not seem strange to us, for we know that all the whole Fraternity of Christs Congregation in this World is served with the like, and by the same is made perfect. For the fervent love
The causes why the Apostles so rejoyced in their Afflictions. that the Apostles had unto their Master Christ, and for the great commodities and increase of all godliness which they felt by their faith to insue of Afflictions in Christs cause, and thirdly for the heaps of heavenly joys which the same do get unto the godly, which shall endure in Heaven for evermore; for these causes (I say) the Apostles of their Afflictions did joy, and rejoyced in that they were had and accounted worthy to suffer contumelies and 1 Cor. 2. rebukes for Christs Name. And Paul, as he glorieth in the grace and favour of God, whereunto he was brought and stood in by faith; so he rejoyced in his Afflictions for the heavenly and spiritual profits which he numbred to rise upon them: yea, he was so far in love with that that the carnal man loatheth so much, that is, with Christs Cross, that he judged himself to know nothing else but Christ crucified; he will glory (he saith) in nothing else but in Christs Cross, yea, and he blesseth all those, as the only true Israelites and elect People of God with peace and mercy, which walk after that rule and after none other.

O Lord, what a wonderful Spirit was that that made
2 Cor. 11. Paul, in setting forth of himself against the vanity of Satans Pseudo-Apostles, and in his claim there, that he in Christs cause did excel and pass them all? What wonderful Spirit was that (I say) that made him to reckon up all his troubles, his labours, his beatings, his whippings and scourgings, his shipwracks, his dangers and perils by water and by land, his famine, hunger, nakedness, and cold, with many more, and the daily care of all the Congregations of Christ, among whom every mans pain
2 Tim. 2. The glory of Paul wherein it consisteth. did pierce his heart, and every mans grief was grievous unto him? O Lord, is this Paul's Primacy; whereof he thought so much good that he did excel other? Is not this Paul's saying unto Timothy his own Scholar? and doth it not pertain to whosoever will be Christs true
2 Tim. 2. Souldiers? Bear thou (saith he) affliction like a good Souldier of Jesus Christ. This is true: If we dye with him (he meaneth Christ) we shall live with him; if we suffer with him, we shall reign with him; if we deny him, he shall deny us; if we be faithless, he remaineth faithful, he cannot deny himself. This, Paul would have known to every body; for there is none other way to Heaven but Christ and his way: and all that will live godly in Christ, shall (saith S. Paul) suffer Persecution. By this way went to Heaven the Patriarchs, the Prophets, Christ our Master, his Apostles, his Martyrs, and all the godly since the beginning. And as it hath been of old, that he which was born after the flesh, persecuted him which was born after the spirit, for so it was in Isaac's time: so said S. Paul, it was in his time also. And whether it be so or no now, let the spiritual man, the self same man I mean, that is indued with the Spirit of Almighty God, let him be judge. Of the cross of the Patriarchs, as ye may read in their Stories, if ye read the Book of Genesis, ye shall perceive. Of others, S. Paul in few words comprehendeth much matter, speaking in a generality of the wonderful afflictions, death, and torments which the men of God in Gods cause, and for the Truths sake willingly and gladly did suffer. After much particular rehearsal of many, he saith, Other were racked and despised and would not be delivered, that they might obtain a better Resurrection. Other again were tried with mockings and scourgings, and moreover with Bonds and Imprisonment; they were stoned, hewn asunder, tempted, fell, and were slain upon the edge of the Sword, some wandred to and fro in Sheeps Pilches, in Goats Pilches, forsaken, oppressed, afflicted, such godly men as the world was unworthy of, wandring in Wildernesses, in Mountains, in Caves, and in Dens, and all these were commended for their faith. And yet they abide for us the servants of God, and for those their Brethren which are to be slain as they were for the Word of Gods sake, that none be shut out, but that we may all go together to meet our Master Christ in the air at his coming, and so to be in bliss with him in body and soul for evermore.

The way to Heaven is by Afflictions.

Heb. 11.

Therefore seeing we have so much occasion to suffer and to take afflictions for Christ's Names sake patiently, so many commodities thereby, so weighty causes, so many good examples, so great necessity, so pure promises
Heb. 12. of eternal life and heavenly joys of him that cannot lye: Let us throw away whatsoever might let us, all burden
Reasons to move us to patience under the Cross. of sin, and all kind of carnality, and patiently and constantly let us run for the best game in this race that is set before us, ever having our eyes upon Jesus Christ the Ring-leader, Captain, and Perfecter of our Faith, which for the joy that was set before him endured the Cross, not passing upon the Ignominy and shame thereof, and is set now at the right hand of the Throne of God. Consider this, that he suffered such strife of sinners against himself, that ye should not give over, nor faint in your minds. As yet Brethren we have not withstood unto death, fighting against sin. Let us never forget (dear Brethren) for Christs sake, that fatherly Exhortation of the wise man that speaketh unto us, as unto his Children, the godly wisdom of God, saying thus; My Son, despise
Prov. 3. not the Correction of the Lord, nor fall from him when thou art rebuked of him; for whom the Lord loveth, him doth he correct, and scourgeth every Child whom
Heb. 12. he receiveth. What Child is he whom the Father doth not chasten? If ye be free from Chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye Bastards and no Children. Seeing then, when as we have had carnal Parents which chastened us, we reverenced them, shall not we much more be subject unto our spiritual Father that we might live? And they for a little time have taught us after their own mind; but this Father teacheth us to our commodity, to give unto us his holiness. All chastisement for the present time appeareth not pleasant but painful; but afterward it rendreth the fruit of righteousness on them which are exercised in it. Wherefore let us be of good cheer (good Brethren) and let us pluck up our feeble Members that were fallen or began to faint, heart, hands, knees, and all the rest, and let us walk upright and streight, that no limping nor halting bring us out of the way. Let us look, not upon the things that be present, but with the eyes of our faith let us stedfastly behold the things that be everlasting in Heaven, and so choose rather in respect of that which is to come, with the chosen Members of Christ to bear Christs Cross, than for his short life time to enjoy all the riches, honours, and pleasures of the broad world. Why should we Christians fear death? Can death deprive us of Christ, which is all our comfort, our joy, and our life? Nay forsooth. But contrary, death shall deliver us from this mortal
2 Cor. 5. Body,

Anno 1555.

Body, which loadeth and beareth down the Spirit, that it cannot so well perceive heavenly things; in the which so long as we dwell, we are absent from God.

2 Cor. 5. 2 Cor. 5.

Wherefore understanding our state in that we be Christians; that if our mortal Body, which is our earthly house, were destroyed, we have a building, a house not made with hands; but everlasting in Heaven, &c. therefore we are of good cheer, and know that when we are in the Body, we are absent from God; for we walk by faith, and not by cleer sight. Nevertheless we are bold, and had rather be absent from the Body, and present with God. Wherefore we strive, whether we be present at home, and absent abroad, that we may always please him. And who that hath true faith in our Saviour Christ, whereby he knoweth somewhat truly what Christ our Saviour is, that he is the eternal Son of God, life, light, the wisdom of the Father, all goodness, all righteousness and whatsoever is good that heart can desire, yea infinite plenty of all these, above that that Mans heart can either conceive or think (for in him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead corporally) and also that he is given us of the Father, and made of God to be our wisdom, our righteousness, our holiness, and our redemption: who (I say) is he that believeth this indeed, that would not gladly be with his Master Christ? Paul for this knowledge coveted to have been loosed from the Body, and to have been with Christ, for that he counted it much better for himself, and had rather to be loosed than to live. Therefore these words of Christ to the thief on the Cross, that asked of him mercy, were full of comfort and solace: This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise. To die in the defence of Christs Gospel it is our bounden duty to Christ, and also to our neighbour. To Christ, for he died for us, and rose again that he might be Lord over all. And seeing he died for us, we also (saith Saint John) should jeopard, yea give our Life for our Brethren. And this kind of giving and losing, is getting and winning indeed: for he that giveth or loseth his Life thus, getteth and winneth it for evermore. Blessed are they therefore that die in the Lord, and if they die in the Lords cause, they are most happy of all. Let us not then fear death, which can do us no harm, otherwise than for a moment to make the Flesh to smart: but that our faith, which is surely fastned and fixed unto the Word of God, telleth us that we shall be anon after death in peace, in the hands of God, in joy, in solace, and that from death we shall go straight unto Life. For Saint John saith, He that liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die. And in another place, He shall depart from death unto Life. And therefore this death of the Christian is not to be called death, but rather a gate or entrance into everlasting life. Therefore Paul calleth it but a dissolution and resolution, and both Peter and Paul, a putting off this Tabernacle or dwelling house: meaning thereby the mortal Body, as wherein the Soul or Spirit doth dwell here in this World for a small time. Yea this my death may be called to the Christian, an end of all miseries. For so long as we live here, we must pass thorow many tribulations before we can enter in the Kingdom of Heaven. And now, after that death hath shot his bolt, all the Christian Mans enemies have done what they can; after that, they have no more to do. What could hurt or harm poor Lazarus that lay at the Rich Mans gate? His former penury and poverty? his misery, beggary, and horrible sores and sickness? For so soon as death had striken him with his dart, so soon came the Angels, and carried him straight up into Abrahams bosom. What lost he by death, who from misery and pain is let by the Ministery of Angels, into a place both of joy and solace.

ALas what misery is thy Church brought unto (O Lord) at this day? Where of late the Word of the Lord was truly Preached, was read and heard in every Town, in every Church, in every Village, yea and almost in every Honest Mans House, Alas now it is exiled and banished out of the whole Realm. Of late who was not taken for a lover of Gods Word, for a reader, for a ready hearer, and for a learner of the same? And now (alas) who dare bear any open countenance toward it, but such as are content in Christs cause, and for his words sake to stand to the danger and loss of all they have?

Of late there was to be found, of every age of every degree and kind of people, that gave their diligence to learn (as they could) out of Gods Word, the Articles of the Christian Faith, the Commandments of God, and the Lords Prayer: The Babes and young Children were taught these things of their parents, of their Masters, and weekly of their Curates in every Church: and the aged folk, which had been brought up in blindness, and in ignorance of those things, which every Christian is bound to know, when otherwise they could not, yet they learned the same by often hearing their Children, and servants repeating the same: but now (alas, and alas again) the false Prophets of Antichrist which are past all shame, do openly Preach in Pulpits unto the people of God, that the Catechism is to be counted heresie; whereby their old blindness is brought home again: for the aged are afraid of the higher powers, and the youth is abashed and ashamed, even of that which they have learned, though it be Gods Word, and dare no more meddle.

Of late in every Congregation throwout all England was made Prayer and Petition unto God, to be delivered from the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable enormities; from all false Doctrine and Heresie; and now alas, Sathan hath perswaded England by his falshood and craft, to revoke her old Godly Prayer, to recant the same, and provoke the fearful wrath and indignation of God upon her own pate.

The lamentable change of Religion in the Church.

Of late by straight Laws and Ordinances, with the consent of the Nobles and Commonalty, and full agreement and Counsel of the Prelates and Clergy, was banished hence the Beast of Babylon, with Laws (I say) and with oaths and all means that then could be devised for so godly a purpose: but now (alas) all these Laws are trodden under foot; the Nobles, the Commonalty, the Prelates and Clergy are quite changed, and all those Oaths, though they were made in Judgment, Justice and Truth, and the matter never so good, doth no more hold than a bond of rushes or of a barley straw, not publick perjury no more feareth them, than a shadow upon the wall.

Jerem. 4.

Of late it was agreed in England of all hands, according to Pauls Doctrine, and Christs Commandment (as Paul saith plainly) that nothing ought to be done in the Church, in the publick Congregation, but in that Tongue which the congregation could understand, that all might be edified thereby, whether it were Common Prayer, administration of the Sacraments, or any other thing belonging to publick ministry of Gods holy and wholesom Word: but (alas) all is turned upside down, Pauls Doctrine is put apart, Christs Commandment is not regarded: For nothing is heard commonly in the Church, but a strange Tongue, that the people doth nothing understand.

1 Cor. 14.

Ignorance in Prayer.

Of late all Men and Women were taught after Christs

Doctrine

Ignorance in Prayer.

doctrine, to pray in that Tongue which they could underſtand, that they might pray with Heart that which they ſhould ſpeak with their Tongue: Now (alas) the unlearned people is brought into that blindneſs again, to think that they pray, when they ſpeak with their Tongue they cannot tell what, nor whereof their hearts is nothing mindful at all, for that it can underſtand never awhit thereof.

Abuſe in the Lords Supper.

Of late the Lords Supper was duly Miniſtred and taught to be made common to all that are true Chriſtians with thankſgiving and ſetting forth of the Lords Death and Paſſion until his returning again, to judge both quick and dead: but now (alas) the Lords Table is quite overthrown, and that which ought to be common to all Godly, is made private to a few Ungodly, without any kind of thankſgiving, or any ſetting forth of the Lords Death at all, that the people is able to underſtand.

The Sacrament turned out of its right uſe and kind.

Of late all that were endued with the light and Grace of underſtanding of Gods holy Myſteries, did bleſs God which had brought them out of that horrible blindneſs and ignorance, whereby in times paſt being ſeduced by Sathans ſubtilties, they believed that the Sacrament was not the Sacrament, but the thing it ſelf whereof it is a Sacrament, that the Creature was the Creator, and that the thing which hath neither Life nor Senſe (alas ſuch was the horrible blindneſs) was the Lord himſelf, which made the Eye to ſee, and hath given all Senſes and Underſtanding unto Man: but now, alas, England is returned again like a Dogg to her own vomit and ſpuing, and is in worſe caſe than ever ſhe was: For it had been better never to have known the truth, than to forſake the truth once received and known: and now, not only that light is turned into darkneſs, and Gods Grace is received in vain, but alſo Laws of Death are made by high Court of Parliament, maſterfully to maintain by Sword, Fire, and all kind of violence that haynous Idolatry, wherein that adoration is given unto the liveleſs and dumb Creature, which is only due unto the everliving God: yea, they ſay they can, and do make of Bread both Man and God, by their Tranſubſtantiation. O wicked Men, and Sathans own Brood!

Idolatry in worſhipping the Creature for the Creator.

The Cup debarred from the miniſtration of the Lords Supper.

Of late was the Lords Cup at his Table diſtributed according to his own Commandment, by his expreſs words in the Goſpel, as well to the Laity as to the Clergy, which order Chriſts Church obſerved ſo many hundred years after, as all the Ancient Eccleſiaſtical Writers do teſtifie, without contradiction of any one of them, that can be ſhewed unto this day: but now (alas) not only the Lords Commandment is broken, his Cup is denied to his Servants, to whom he commandeth it ſhould be diſtributed, but alſo with the ſame is ſet up a new Blaſphemous kind of Sacrifice to ſatisfie and pay the price of Sins both of the dead and the quick, to the great and intolerable contumely of Chriſt our Saviour his Death and Paſſion, which was and is the one only ſufficient and everlaſting available ſacrifice ſatisfactory for all the elect of God, from Adam the firſt, to the laſt that ſhall be born in the end of the World.

Blaſphemous Sacrifice for Sin.

Deut. 5.

Of late the Commandment of God, Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven Image, nor any ſimilitude or likeneſs of any thing in Heaven above, or in Earth beneath, or in the Water under the Earth, thou ſhalt not bow down to them nor worſhip them: This Commandment of God, I ſay, was graven almoſt every where in Churches, was learned of every Body both young and old; whereupon Images that provoked the ſimple and ignorant people unto Idolatry, as the wiſe Man ſaith, were taken out of the Churches, and ſtraightly forbidden that none ſhould any where either bow down to them or worſhip them: but now (alas) Gods Holy Word is blotted and razed out of Churches, and ſtocks and ſtones are ſet up in the place thereof. God commanded his Word ſo to be ordered, that it might be had in continual remembrance at all times, and in every place: and on the other ſide he forbade Images and Idols ſo to be either made or ſet in any place, where any ſhould bow or worſhip them: but now (alas) that which God commanded is not paſſed upon, and that which he forbiddeth, is maſterfully maintained by fullhood and craft, and wickedly upholden.

Idolatry to ſtocks and ſtones.

Of late all Miniſters that were admitted to the publick Office and Miniſtry of Gods Holy Word, in their admiſſion made a ſolemn profeſſion before the Congregation, that they ſhould teach the people nothing, as doctrine neceſſary to attain eternal Salvation, but that which is Gods own Holy Word, or may be thereon grounded without any doubt; whereby vaniſhed and melted away of themſelves many vain, yea wicked traditions of Man, as wax before the fire: but now at one brunt they are revived, and are in full hope alſo to return again in as great ſtrength as ever they have been. And how can any Man look for any other thing, but when you have received the head, you muſt alſo receive the whole Body withal, or elſe how can the head abide? The head, under Sathan, of all miſchief is Antichriſt and his Brood, the ſame is he which is the Babylonical Beaſt. The Beaſt is he, whereupon the Whore ſitteth. The Whore is that City, ſaith John in plain words, which hath empire over the Kings of the Earth. This Whore hath a Golden Cup of abominations in her hand, whereof ſhe maketh to drink the Kings of the Earth, and of the Wine of this Harlot have of all nations drunk, yea and Kings of the Earth have lyen by this Whore, and Merchants of the Earth by vertue of her pleaſant Merchandiſe have been made rich.

Anno 1555.

The Whore of Babylon, with her Cup of abominations expounded. Apoc. 17.

Now what City is there in all the whole World, that when John wrote, ruled over the Kings of the Earth; or what City can be read of in any time, that of the City it ſelf challenged the Empire over the Kings of the Earth, but only the City of Rome, and that ſince the uſurpation of that See hath grown to her full ſtrength? And is it not read, that the Old and Ancient Writers underſtand Peters former Epiſtle to be written at Rome, and it to be called of him in the ſame Epiſtle in plain terms Babylon? By the Abominations thereof I underſtand all the whole trade of the Romiſh Religion, under the name and Title of Chriſt, which is contrary to the only Rule of all true Religion, that is, Gods Word. What Word of God hath that diveliſh Drabb for the maintenance of her manifold abominations, and to ſet to Sale ſuch Merchandiſe, wherewith (alas! the madneſs of Man) the wicked Harlot hath bewitched almoſt the whole World? Did not Peter the very true Apoſtle of Chriſt (of whom this ſtinking ſtrumpet beareth her ſelf ſo high, but falſely and without all juſt cauſe) did not he, I ſay, give all the World warning of her pelf and traſh, of her falſe Doctors and Apoſtles (for this Whore and Beaſt will be called Dominus Apoſtolicus, whoſoever ſay nay) after this manner in his latter Epiſtle? There was among the people in times paſt falſe Prophets, as there ſhall be among you in time to come falſe Teachers, which ſhall privily bring in peſtilent ſects, even denying the Lord which hath bought them and redeemed them, procuring to themſelves ſwift Damnation, and many ſhall follow their damnable ways, by whom the way of truth ſhall be railed upon, and through covetouſneſs by counterfeit tales or ſermons, they ſhall (ſaith Peter) make merchandiſe upon you, &c. And doth not John likewiſe in his Revelation, after he hath reckoned up a great rabblement of this Whores myſtical Merchandiſe, at the laſt (as though he would knit up all in plain words, without any miſt at all, ſetting out the Whores Merchandiſe) reckon up amongſt the reſt, and concludeth, ſaying; Et animas hominum, that is to ſay, and the Souls of Men too? Whereupon I pray you elſe roſe this true Proverb in Latin, Omnia Romæ venalia, All things for Mony are ſet to ſale at Rome? Was not that a worthy commendation of Chriſts Vicar in Earth, that was written of our Holy Father, one of the Alexanders, a Biſhop of Rome, thus I ween in Latin?

Vendit Alexander cruces, altaria, Chriſtum:
Vendere jure poteſt; emerat ille prius.

These two Verſes in Latine I have read thus of one tranſlated into Engliſh rime.

Alexander our Holy Father the Pope of Rome,
Selleth for Money both right and doom:
And all kind of holineſs the Holy Father doth not ſtick.
To ſet to ſale, ready money for to get.
And eke Chriſt himſelf he dare be bold,
To chop and change for Silver and Gold.
And why ſhould any think this to be ſore?
For what doth he ſell but that he bought before?

Verſes againſt Pope Alexander.

Anno 1555.

I grant these Verses to be light gear, and the Verse is but rude; but (alas) such Conditions were more wicked and lewd than any wit could express. If these had been but the faults of one or a few in number, they had been less pernicious, and might have been taken for personal crimes, and not to be imputed unto that See: but now (alas) the matter is more than evident to all that have godly understanding, that these Crimes be grounded upon Laws, be established by Custom, and set forth by all kind of wicked doctrine, falshood, and craft; and therefore now are not to be esteemed for any one mans, or a few mens personal crimes, but are now by laws, custom, and doctrine incorporated into that wicked See, and maketh indeed the body of the Beast whereupon the abominable Whore doth sit.

But you would know which be those Merchandises which I said this Whore setteth for to sell, for the which all her false Prophets, with all their juglings and crafty glosses cannot bring one jot of Gods Word. Surely, surely, they be not only all these abominations which are come into the Church of England already (whereof I have spoken somewhat before) but also an innumerable rabblement of abominations and wicked abuses, which now must needs follow; as Popish Pardons, Pilgrimages, Romish Purgatory, Romish Masses, Placebo and Dirige, with Trentals and Scala Cœli, Dispensations and Immunities from all godly Discipline, Laws and good Order, Pluralities, Unions, and Tot quots, with a thousand more. Now shall come in the flattering Friers and the false Pardoners, and play their old pranks and knavery as they were wont to do. Now shall you have (but of the See of Rome only, and that for money) canonizing of such Saints as have stood stout in the Popes cause, shrining of Reliques; and from any kind of wickedness (if you will pay well for it) clear Absolution a pœna & culpa, for thousands of years, yea, and at every poor Bishops hand and Suffragan, ye shall have hallowing of Churches, Chappels, Altars, Super-altars, Chalices, and of all the whole Houshold-stuff and Adornment which shall be used in the Church after the Romish guise, for all these things they must be esteemed of such high price, that they may not be done but by a consecrate Bishop only. O Lord, all these things are such as thy Apostles never knew. As for conjuring (they call it hallowing, but it is conjuring indeed) of water and salt, of christning of Bells, and such like things, what need I to speak? for every Priest that can but read, hath power (they say) not only to do that, but also hath such power over Christs Body, as to make both God and Man once at the least every day of a Wafer Cake.

Abominations and wicked abuses of the See of Rome declared.

After the rehearsal of the said Abominations, and remembrance of a number of many more, which (the Lord knoweth) irketh me to think upon, and were too long to describe; when I consider on the other side the eternal Word of God that abideth for ever, and the undefiled Law of the Lord which turneth the soul from all wickedness, and giveth wisdom unto the innocent Babes, I mean that milk that is without all guile, as Peter doth call it, that good Word of God, that Word of Truth which must be graven within the heart; and then is able to save mens souls; that wholsom Seed, not mortal, but immortal, of the eternal and everlasting God, whereby the man is born anew, and made the child of God, that Seed of God, whereby the man of God so being born, cannot sin, as John saith (he meaneth so long as that Seed doth abide in him) that holy Scripture which hath not been devised by the wit of man, but taught from Heaven by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, which is profitable to teach, to reprove, to correct, to instruct, and to give order in all righteousness, that the man of God may be whole and sound, ready to perform every good work: when (I say) I consider this holy and wholesom true Word that teacheth us truly our bounden duty towards our Lord God in every point, what his blessed will and pleasure is, what his infinite great goodness and mercy is, what he hath done for us, how he hath given us his own only dearly beloved Son to death for our Salvation, and by him hath sent us the revelation of his blessed will and pleasure, what his eternal Word willeth us both to believe, and also to do, and hath for the same purpose inspired the holy Apostles with the Holy Ghost, and sent them abroad into all the world, and also made them and other Disciples of Christ inspired by the same Spirit, to write and leave behind them the same things that they taught (which as they did proceed of the Spirit of Truth, so by the confession of all them that ever were endued with the Spirit of God, were sufficient to the obtaining of eternal Salvation:) and likewise when I consider that all that man doth profess in his regeneration when he is received into the holy Catholick Church of Christ, and is now to be accounted for one of the lively Members of Christs own Body, all that is grounded upon Gods holy Word; and standeth in the profession of that Faith, and obedience of those Commandments which are all contained and comprised in Gods holy Word: And furthermore, when I consider whom our Saviour Christ pronounceth in his Gospel to be blessed, and to whom Moses giveth his Benedictions in the Law, what ways the Law, the Prophets, the Psalms, and all holy Scriptures, both new and old, do declare to be the ways of the Lord, what is good for man to obtain and abide in Gods favour, which is that Faith that justifieth before God, and what is that Charity that doth pass and excel all, which be the properties of heavenly wisdom, and which is that undefiled Religion which is allowed of God, which things Christ himself calleth the weighty matters of the Law, what thing is that which is only available in Christ, and what knowledge is that that Paul esteemed so much, that he counted himself only to know, what shall be the manner of the extream judgment of the latter day, who shall judge, and by what he shall judge, and what shall be required at our hands at that fearful day, how all things must be tried by the fire, and that that only shall stand for ever which Christs words shall allow, which shall be the Judge of all flesh to give sentence upon all flesh, and every living soul, either of eternal damnation, or of everlasting salvation, from which sentence there shall be no place to appeal, no wit shall serve to delude, nor any power to withstand or revoke: When (I say) I consider all these things, and confer to the same again and again all those ways wherein standeth the substance of the Romish Religion (whereof I spake before) it may be evident and easie to perceive, that these two wayes, these two Religions, the one of Christ, the other of the Romish See, in these latter days be as far distant the one from the other, as light and darkness, good and evil, righteousness and unrighteousness, Christ and Belial. He that is hard of belief, let him note and weigh well with himself the places of holy Scriptures which be appointed in the Margent, whereupon this talk is grounded, and by Gods grace he may receive some light. And unto the Contemner I have nothing now to say, but to rehearse the saying of the Prophet Esay, which Paul spake to the Jews in the end of the Acts of the Apostles. After he had expounded to them the truth of Gods Word, and declared unto them Christ out of the Law of Moses and the Prophets, from morning to night all the day long, he said unto them that would not believe: Well (said he) spake the Holy Ghost unto our Fathers, saying, Go unto this people and tell them, ye shall hear with your ears, and not understand, and seeing you shall behold, and not see the thing: for the heart of this people is waxed gross and dull, and with their ears they are hard of hearing, and they have shut together their eyes, that they should not see, nor hear with their ears, nor understand with their hearts, that they might return, and I should heal them, saith the Lord God.

Note here that these Scriptures were written by Mr. Ridley in the Margent, but were not in the copy which we followed.

Acts 28.

The true word of God, and the office of the same declared.

Alas, England, alas, that this heavy Plague of God should fall upon thee. Alas my dearly beloved Country, what thing is it now that may do thee good? Undoubtedly thy plague is so great, that it is utterly uncurable, but by the bottomless mercy and infinite power of Almighty God. Alas my dear Country, what hast thou done, that thou hast provoked the wrath of God, and caused him to pour out his vengeance upon thee for thine own deserts? Canst thou be content to hear thy faults told thee? Alas, thou hast heard oft, and wouldst never amend. England, thy faults of all degrees and sorts of men, of Magistrates, of the Ministers, and of the common People, were never more plainly told since thou beardst that name, than thou didst hear them of late, even before the Magistrates in King Edwards days, but thou heardest them only, and didst amend never a whit.

For

For even of thy greatest Magistrates, some (the Kings Highness then, that innocent, that godly-hearted and peerless young Christian Prince excepted) evermore unkindly and ungently, against those that went about most busily, and most wholsomly to cure their sore backs, spurned privily, and would not spare to speak evil of them, even unto the Prince himself, and yet would they towards the same Preachers outwardly bear a jolly countenance and a fair face.

Cranmer and Ridley standing in the Duke of Somersets cause; Cranmer repugning against the spoil of the Church goods. Latimer, Bradford, Lever, Knox.

I have heard that Cranmer, and another whom I will not name, were both in high displeasure, the one for shewing his Conscience secretly, but plainly and fully in the Duke of Somersets cause, and both of late, but especially Cranmer for repugning, as they might, against the late spoyl of the Church goods, taken away only by commandment of the higher powers, without any Law or order of Justice, and without any request or consent of them to which they did belong. As for Latimer, Lever, Bradford, and Knox, their Tongues were so sharp, they ripped in so deep in their galled backs, to have purged them (no doubt) of that filthy matter that was festered in their hearts, of insatiable covetousness, of filthy carnality and voluptuousness, of intolerable ambition and pride, of ungodly loathsomness to hear poor Mens Causes, and to hear Gods Word, that these Men, of all other, these Magistrates then could never abide. Other there were very godly Men, and well learned, that went about by the wholesom Plaisters of Gods Word, howbeit after a more soft manner of handling the matter; but (alas) all sped alike. For all that could be done of all hands, their disease did not minish, but daily did increase, which (no doubt) is no small occasion in that state of the heavy plague of God that is poured upon England at this day. As for the common sort of other inferiour Magistrates, as Judges of the Laws, Justices of Peace, Sergeants, Common Lawyers, it may be truly said of them, as of the most part of the Clergy of Curates, Vicars, Parsons, Prebendaries, Doctors of the Law, Archdeacons, Deans, yea, and I may say, of Bishops also, I fear me, for the most part, (although I doubt not but God had, and hath ever, whom he in every state knew and knoweth to be his) but for the most part, I say, they were never perswaded in their hearts, but from the teeth forward, and for the Kings sake, in the truth of Gods Word, and yet all these did dissemble, and bear a Copy of a countenance, as if they had been found within.

The corrupt Life of Gospellers in K. Edwards time.

And this dissimulation Sathan knew well enough, and therefore desired; and hath ever gone about, that the high Magistrates by any manner of means might be deceived in matters of Religion; for then he being of Counsel with the dissimulation in the Worldly, knew well enough that he should bring to pass, and rule all even after his own will.

Hypocrisie a double evil.

Hypocrisie and Dissimulation S. Hierom doth call well a double wickedness; for neither it loveth the truth (which is one great evil) and also falsly it pretendeth to deceive the simple for another thing. This Hypocrisie and Dissimulation with God, in matters of Religion, no doubt, hath wholly also provoked the anger of God. And as for the common people, although there were many good; where they were well and diligently taught: yet (God knoweth) a great number received Gods true Word and high benefits with unthankful hearts. For it was great pity, and a lamentable thing to have seen in many places the people so loathsomly and unreligiously to come to the Holy Communion, and to receive it accordingly, and to the Common Prayers, and other divine Service, which were according to the true vein of Gods Holy Word, and in all points so godly and wholsomly set forth, in comparison of that blind zeal, and undiscreet devotion which they had aforetimes to those things, whereof they understood never one whit, nor could be edified by them any thing at all.

The slackness that was in that time to good works.

And again, as for our almsdeeds, which are taught in Gods Word, whereby we are certain that God is pleased with them and doth and will require such at our hands, which are a part of true Religion, as St. James saith, and such as he saith himself he setteth more by than by Sacrifice; as to provide for the Fatherless, Infants and Orphans, for the lame, aged and impotent poor needy folk, and to make publick provision that the poor that might labour, should have wherewith to labour upon, and so be kept from shameful beggary and stealing in these works: I say how way-ward were many, in comparison (I mean) of that great prodigality whereby in times past they spared not to spend upon flattering Friers, false pardoners, painting and guilding of stocks and stones, to be set up, and honoured in Churches, plainly against Gods Word? And yet because no place is to be defrauded of their just commendation, London, I must confess, for such godly works in Sir Richard Dobs, Knight, then Lord Major, his year began marvellous well: The Lord grant the same may so likewise persevere, continue, yea and increase, to the comfort and relief of the needy and helpless, that was so godly begun, Amen. Anno 1555.

Gods plague upon England justly deserved.

All these things do minister more matter of mourning and bewailing the miserable state that now is: for by this it may be perceived, how England hath deserved this just plague of God. And also it is greatly to be feared that those good things, whatsoever they were that had their beginning in the time when Gods word was so freely Preached, now with the exile and banishment of the same, will depart again.

But to return again to the consideration of this miserable state of Christs Church in England, and to leave farther and more exquisite searching of the causes thereof unto Gods secret and unsearchable judgments, let us see what is best now to be done for Christs little Flock. This is one maxim and principle in Christs Law; He that denieth Christ before Men, him shall Christ deny afore his Father and all his Angels in Heaven. And therefore every one that looketh to have by Christ our Saviour Everlasting Life, let him prepare himself so, that he deny not his Master Christ, or else he is but a cast-away, and a wretch, howsoever he be counted or taken here in the World.

He exhorteth to constant confession of Christ.

Now then seeing the Doctrine of Antichrist is returned again into this Realm, and the higher powers (alas) are so deceived and bewitched, that they are perswaded it to be truth, and Christs true Doctrine to be errour and heresie, and the Old Laws of Antichrist are allowed to return with the power of their Father again: what can be hereafter looked for, by reason, to the Man of God, and true Christian, abiding in this Realm but extream violence of death, or else to deny his Master? I grant the Hearts of Princes are in Gods hands, and whithersoever he will he can make them bow: and also that Christian Princes in Old Time use a more gentle kind of punishment, even to them which were Hereticks indeed, as degradation, and deposition out of their rooms and Offices, Exile and Banishment out of their Dominions and Countries; and also (as it is read) the true Bishops of Christs Church were sometime intercessors for the Hereticks unto Princes, that they would not kill them, as is read of Saint Augustine. But as yet Antichrists kingdom was not so erected at that time, nor is now accustomed so to order them that will not fall down and worship the Beast and his Image (but even as all the World knoweth) after the same manner that both John and Daniel hath prophesied before, that is, by violence of death; and Daniel declareth farther, that the kind of death accustomably should be by Sword, Fire, and Imprisonment.

Punishment of Hereticks more gentle in the Old Time how it was used.

Therefore if thou, O Man of God, dost purpose to abide in this Realm, prepare and arm thy self to die: for both by Antichrists accustomable Laws, and these prophesies, there is no appearance or likelihood of any other thing, except thou wilt deny thy Master Christ, which is the loss at the last both of Body and Soul unto everlasting death. Therefore my good Brother or Sister in Christ, whatsoever thou be, to thee that canst and maist so do, that counsel that I think is the best safeguard for thee, both for thy Body, and most surety for thy Souls health, is that which I shall shew thee hereafter. But first I warn thee to understand me to him or her, which be not in captivity, or called already to confess Christ, but are at liberty abroad.

Counsel given in these days of persecution on what to do.

My Counsel, I say, therefore is this, to fly from the plague, and get thee hence. I consider not only the subtilties of Sathan; and how he is able to deceive by his false perswasions (if it were possible) even the chosen of God, and also the great frailty, which is oftentimes more in a Man, than he doth know in himself, which in the time of temptation then will utter it ſelf: I do not only conſider theſe things, I ſay, but that our Maſter Chriſt, whoſe Life was and is a perfect rule of the Chriſtian Mans Life, that he himſelf avoided oftentimes the fury and madneſs of the Jews, by departing from the Country or place.

Paul likewiſe when he was ſaught in Damaſco, and the gates of the City were laid in wait for him, was conveighed by night, being let down in a basket out at a Window over the wall: and Helias the Prophet fled the perſecution of wicked Jeſabel: And Chriſt our Saviour ſaith in the Goſpel; When they perſecute you in one City, fly unto another: and ſo did many good, great, learned, and vertuous Men of God, which were great and ſtout Champions nevertheleſs, and ſtout confeſſors and maintainers of Chriſt and his truth, in due time and place. Of ſuch was the great Clerk Athanaſius. But this is ſo plain to be lawful by Gods Word, and Examples of holy Men, that I need not to ſtand in it.

Such as remained out of captivity Counſelled to void the Realm.

Having this for my ground, I ſay to thee, O Man of GOD, this ſeemeth to me to be the moſt ſure way for thy ſafeguard, to depart and flie far from the plague, and that ſwiftly alſo: for truly before GOD, I think, that the abomination that Daniel propheſied of ſo long before, is now ſet up in the holy place. For all the Doctrine of Antichriſt, his Laws, Rites, and Religion contrary to Chriſt, and ſo to the true ſerving and worſhipping of God, I underſtand to be that abomination: Therefore now is the time in England for thoſe words of Chriſt, Tunc inquit qui in Judæa ſunt, fugiant ad montes. Then (ſaith he) (mark this Chriſts (then) for truly I am perſwaded, and I truſt by the Spirit of God, that this (then) is commanded; Then (ſaith Chriſt) they that be in Jewry, let them flie into the Mountains, and he that is on the houſe top, let him not come down to take away any thing out of his houſe, and he that is abroad in the field, let him not return to take his cloaths. Wo be to the great-bellied Women, and to them that give ſuck; but pray (ſaith Chriſt) that your flight be not in winter, or on the Sabbath day.

The abomination of deſolation ſet up in England.

Theſe words of Chriſt are myſtical, and therefore had need of Interpretation. I underſtand all thoſe to be in Jewry ſpiritually, which truly confeſs one true living God, and the whole truth of his Word, after the doctrine of the Goſpel of Chriſt: Such as they whom Chriſt here biddeth, in the time of the Reign of Antichriſts abominations to flie unto the Mountains; which ſignifieth places of ſafeguard, and all ſuch things which are able to defend from the plague. That he biddeth him that is on the houſe top, not to come down, and him that is in the field, not to return to take with him his cloaths; he meaneth that they ſhould ſpeed them to get them away betime, leſt in their tarrying and trifling about working proviſion, they be trapped in the ſnare ere ever they be aware, and caught by the back, and for gain of ſmall worldly things, endanger and caſt themſelves into great perils of more weighty matters. And where he ſaith, Wo be to the great-bellied Women, and to them that give ſuck; Women great with Child and nigh to their lying down, and to be brought to bed, and not able to travel; and alſo thoſe Women, which are brought to bed, and now give their babes ſuck: By theſe therefore Chriſt ſpiritually underſtandeth all ſuch to be in extream danger, which this word (wo) ſignifieth: all ſuch, I ſay, as are ſo letted by any manner of means, that they no ways be able to flie from the plague. And where Chriſt ſaith, Pray you that your flight be not in the Winter, nor on the Sabbath day: In Winter, the common courſe of the year teacheth us, that the ways be foul, and therefore it is a hard thing then to take a far journey, for many incommodities, and dangers of the waies in that time of the year; and on the Sabbath day it was not lawful to journey, but a little way. Now Chriſt therefore meaning that we ſhould have need, both to ſpeed our journey quickly, which cannot be done in winter, for the incommodities of the waies, and alſo to go far, which cannot be done on the Sabbath day: he biddeth us therefore pray that our flight be not in the Winter, nor on the Sabbath day; that is, to pray that we may flie in time and alſo far enough from the danger of the plague. Now, the cauſes why we ſhould flie, follow in the ſame place of Saint Matthews Goſpel, which I now paſs over; thou maiſt read them there.

Chriſt commandeth to flie to the mountains.

And in the eighteenth Chapter of the Revelation, the Angel is ſaid to have cried mightily with a lowd voice; Fly my people out of Babylon, leſt you be infected with her faults, and ſo be made partners of her plagues: for her offences and ſins are grown ſo great, that they ſwell & are come unto the heavens: certainly the time doth approach, and the Lords day is at hand. Hear, I beſeech you, alſo holy Paul, that bleſſed Apoſtle, he plainly forbiddeth us, Ducere jugum cum incredulis, that is, To joyn or couple our ſelves with the unfaithful: for what followſhip can there be, ſaith he, of righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs, what company hath light with darkneſs, or what agreement hath Chriſt with Belial? or what part can the faithful have with the unfaithful? or how doth the Temple of God agree with Images or Idols? for you are the Temple of the living God: as God hath ſayd, I will walk and dwell in them; I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people: wherefore depart from amongſt them, and get you from them, ſaith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing: and I will receive you, and be to you in the ſtead of your Father, and you ſhall be unto me as my Sons and Daughters, ſaith the Almighty God. 2 Cor. 6.

This Counſel to depart the Realm, I do not marvel it doth ſeem to divers (even of them I mean that bear favour to God-ward) diverſly. Many (I truſt) that be learned ſhall think the counſel good. Others there be peradventure, that will think it rather a thing to be more tolerable, and that it may be indeed by Gods Word lawfully done, rather than to be Counſelled to be done, for they will peradventure ſay, we ſhould Counſel a Man alwaies to do that, which is beſt of all, and of moſt perfection: but boldly in Chriſts cauſe to ſpend a Mans Life, is beſt of all, and of moſt perfection, and to flie it may ſeem to ſmell of cowardlineſs. In many things, that which is beſt for one at ſometimes, is not beſt for all at all times, and it is not moſt perfection, nor meet for a Child to covet to run, before he can go. I will not make here a diſcourſe in this matter, what might here be objected, and what might be anſwered again; I leave that to the witty and eloquent Men of the World.

Counſel to depart the Realm.

Doubts whether to flie or to tarry debated.

This is my mind, which I would thou ſhouldſt know, O Man of God, as I would wiſh, and I do pray to Almighty GOD it may be, that every true Chriſtian, either Brother or Siſter (after they be called, and brought into the wreſtling place, to ſtrive in Chriſts cauſe for the beſt game, that is, to confeſs the truth of the Goſpel, and of the Chriſtian Faith, in hope of Everlaſting Life) ſhould not ſhrink, nor relent one inch, nor give back, whatſoever ſhall befall, but to ſtand to their tackle, and ſtick by it even unto death, as they will Chriſt ſhall ſtick by them at the latter day: ſo likewiſe I dare not wiſh nor counſel any, either Brother or Siſter, of their own ſwinge, to ſtart up into the ſtage, or to caſt themſelves either before, or farther in danger than time and need ſhall require: for undoubtedly when God ſeeth his time, and his pleaſure is, that his Glory ſhall be ſet forth, and his Church edified by thy death and confeſſion, means ſhall be found by his fatherly univerſal providence, that thou without thine own preſumptious provocation ſhalt be lawfully called, to do thy feat, and to play thy part. The miſerable end that one Quintus came unto, may be a warning, and a fearful example for all Men to beware of preſumption, and raſhneſs in ſuch things (as Euſebius writeth in Eccleſiaſt. Hiſtoria) for evermore.

Preſumptuous provocation and raſh running in danger forbidden. Euſeb. Eccle. Hiſt. lib. 4. c. 15.

But a third ſort of Men there be, which alſo will be counted favorers of Gods Word, and are (I fear) in number far more, and worſe to be perſwaded to that which is the Godly mean. I mean of ſuch as will peradventure ſay or think, that my former Counſel, which was to flie the infection of the Antichriſtian doctrine by departing out of the Realm, is more than needeth, and other waies and means may be found, both to abide, and alſo to be clear out of danger of the foreſaid plague. If that could be found, both to abide, and alſo to be clear out of danger of the foreſaid plague, truly agreeable to Gods Word, I would be as glad to hear it, God is my witneſs, as who is the other. Yes, peradventure will ſome ſay,

ſay, thus it may be: Thou mayſt keep thy ſelf, thy faith, and thy Religion cloſe to thy ſelf, and inwardly and privily worſhip God in Spirit and Truth, and outwardly ſee thou be no open medler, nor talker, nor tranſgreſſor of common order: ſo maiſt thou be ſuffered in the Common Wealth, and yet uſe thy Religion without offence of thy Conſcience. In other Countries ſomewhere this peradventure might be uſed, but in England what ſhall be, God wot: but it was never yet, ſo far as ever I have known or heard. And alſo how can it be, but either thou muſt tranſgreſs the common order, and the Romiſh Laws and Cuſtoms, which have been uſed in England, in the times paſt of Popery, and now (it is certain) they return again: I ſay, thou muſt either be a breaker of theſe Rites, Laws, and Cuſtoms, and ſo bewray thy ſelf, or elſe if thou be indeed a Man of GOD, thou ſhalt offend thy Conſcience: for in obſerving of them, thou ſhalt be compelled to break Gods Law, which is the rule of conſcience to the Man of God. For how canſt thou reſort every holy-day to the Church, and bare a face to worſhip the Creature for the Creator, as thou muſt do, and peradventure confeſs it too with thy Mouth, and to ſprinkle thy ſelf with the conjured Water.

Conſcience in Religion would not be diſſembled.

Thou muſt be contributor alſo to the charges of all their Popery, as of Books of Antichriſts ſervice, of lights of the Rood loft, of the Sepulchre for ſetting up and painting of Images (nay indeed of Idols) and thou muſt bear a face to worſhip them alſo, or elſe thou muſt be had by the back. Thou muſt ſerve the turn, to give the holy loaves as they call it, which is nothing elſe but a very mockery of the Lords Holy Table. Thou muſt be a contributor to the charges of all the diſguiſed apparel, that the Popiſh Sacrificing Prieſt, like unto Aaron muſt play his part in. Yea, when the pardoner goeth about, or the flattering Frier to beg for the maintenance of ſuperſtition, except thou do as thy neighbours do, look not long to live in reſt. If any of thy houſhold dye, if thou wilt not pay Money for ringing, and ſinging, for Requiem, Maſſes, Dirige, and commendations, and ſuch like trumpery of the Antichriſtian Religion, thinkeſt thou that thou ſhalt be reckoned for a Catholick Man, or for amicus Cæſaris? A hundred things more may be reckoned, and many of more weight, and of more evident ſuperſtition and idolatry, than ſome of theſe which I have now rehearſed, which God knoweth be ill enough: but theſe are enow to declare, and to ſet before thine eyes, the thing that I intend, that is, if thou abide and wilt dwell in England, thou muſt either do theſe, and many other more contrary to Gods Word, which forbiddeth not only the thing which is evil, but alſo ſaith, Ab omni ſpecie mali abſtinete vos, Abſtain from all things that have any appearance of evil; or elſe if thou wilt not do them, how thou canſt live in England in reſt ſafe from the ſtake, truly I cannot tell.

A hard dwelling in England for a good Man either without danger of Conſcience, or peril of Life.

But peradventure (as a Man is ready to find, and invent ſome colour to cloak his Conſcience, to do that thing that his heart deſireth) thou wilt ſay, though at anytime I ſhall be forced to do any of theſe things and ſuchlike, yet will I have no confidence in them, but outwardly with my body; I will keep mine heart unto God, and will not do that of mine own mind willingly neither, but to avoid another inconvenience: I truſt therefore God will hold me excuſed, for he ſhall have my heart: what can I do more?

O my friend, beware for Gods ſake, and know that the ſubtilties of Sathan are deep. He that is not able by Gods Word to perceive them, is heavily laden. Pray therefore with David; Lord let me not have a mind to invent excuſes to cloak my Sin: examine, my dear friend, theſe thy wily waies with the Word of GOD, and if they do agree, thou maiſt uſe them: if not, know, though they may ſeem never ſo fine and goodly, yet indeed they be of Sathans Brood. Gods Word is certain, that forbiddeth to worſhip the Creature for the Creator, for that is hainous Idolatry, and againſt the firſt Commandment of God, and it is alſo againſt the ſecond Commandment of the firſt table to bow down, or to worſhip unto any Images of God, or of any other thing: And Gods Word requireth not only the belief of the heart, but alſo the confeſſion of the Mouth: and to bear part of the charges, to the maintenance of things ungodly, what is that, but in thy ſo doing, a conſent to the thing done? Now conſenters and the doers Gods Word accounteth to be guilty both:

Invent not excuſes to cloak Sin.

Confeſſion of Mouth muſt go with belief of Heart.

And it is not lawful, by St. Pauls Doctrine, which was inſpired him by the Spirit of GOD, to do ill, that thereof the thing which is good may come. Anno 1555.

Thy heart, thou ſaiſt, God ſhall have, and yet wilt ſuffer thy Body to do the thing that God doth abhor. Beware O Man, take heed what thou ſaiſt; Man may be deceived, but no Man may deceive God, for he is called and is truly καρδιογνώστης, that is to ſay, the ſearcher of the Heart. Now, to give God thy Heart, is to give him thy whole Heart, to love him, to dread him, and to truſt in him above all other things. He that hath my Commandments, ſaith Chriſt, and obſerveth and keepeth them, it is he that loveth me: and to dread God above all other, is rather willingly to incur the danger and peril of all fearful things, than wittingly to do that thing which is contrary to his bleſſed will and Commandment; and to truſt in him above all things, is aſſuredly to truſt to his promiſe of his reward, and of his tuition, and of his goodneſs and mercy, and to preferr that above all things in the World, ſeem they never ſo ſtrong, ſo wiſe, or ſo good. Now, how canſt thou ſay truly, that GOD hath thy heart after this manner of ſort (which is to have thy heart indeed) when thy deeds do declare far another thing? Thy Body, O Man, is Gods, and all the parts thereof, even as thy Soul is: he made them both, and Chriſt with his Blood redeemed them both and is Lord of both, for he hath bought them both dearly; and dareſt thou ſuffer any part of either of them to do ſervice to Sathan? Surely in ſo doing, thou committeſt Sacrileadge and doſt rob God, thou defileſt the living Temple of the living God, if thou ſuffer thy Body to do Sathan ſervice. Do you not know (ſaith St. Paul) that your Body is a lively Temple of God? And may a Man then take and uſe any part thereof but in the Service of God? No ſurely, it is not lawful ſo to do for the Man of God, neither with Hand, Tongue, nor Feet, nor any part of the whole Body:

To truſt in God, what it is.

1 Cor. 3.

1 Cor. 6.

Doth not Paul command that to the Romans, which pertaineth to every Chriſtian Soul? As you have in times paſt, ſayth he, given your members to do ſervice unto uncleanneſs and wickedneſs, from one wickedneſs to another; ſo now give your members to do ſervice unto righteouſneſs, that you may be ſanctified. And I pray thee, good Brother, what doſt thou think it is to bear the mark of the Beaſt in the forehead, and in the hand that Saint John ſpeaketh of? I know we ought warily to ſpeak of Gods myſteries, which he ſhewed by the Spirit of prophecying to his ſervant John, yet to read them with reverence, and to pray for the ſame ſo much as God knoweth is neceſſary for our time to know, I think it neceſſary and good. Wherefore what I ſuppoſe is to bear the beaſts mark, I will tell thee, and commit the judgment of mine interpretation, as in all other things, to the Spiritual Man. I ſuppoſe he beareth the beaſt of Babylons mark in his forehead, which is not aſhamed of the beaſts waies, but will profeſs them openly to ſet forth his Maſter the beaſt of Abaddon. And likewiſe he beareth his mark in his head, that will and doth practiſe the works of the beaſt with his power and hand. And likewiſe I will not let to tell thee, what I think to be ſigned in the forehead for the ſervant of God is, whereof John alſo ſpeaketh, reckoning up many thouſands ſo to have been ſigned of every Tribe. I ſuppoſe he is ſigned in the forehead for the Servant of God, whom God hath appointed of his infinite goodneſs, and hath given him Grace and ſtrength ſtoutly to confeſs him, and his truth before the World. And to have Grace and Strength to confeſs Chriſt, and the Doctrine of the Croſs, and to lament and mourn for the abominations of Antichriſt, I ſuppoſe is to be ſigned with Tau, whereof Ezekiel the Prophet doth ſpeak. Thus I ſuppoſe theſe prophecies are ſpiritually to be underſtood: and to look for other corporal marks, to be ſeen in Mens foreheads, or in their hands, is nothing elſe but to look that there ſhould come ſome brute beaſt out of Babylon, or ſome Elephant, Leopard, Lyon, or Camel, or ſome other ſuch monſtrous beaſt with ten horns, that ſhould do all the wonderful things ſpoken in John; and yet of a beaſt ſpeaketh John, but I underſtand him ſo to be called, not for that he ſhall be any ſuch brute beaſt, but for that he is and ſhall be the Child of perdition, which for his cruelty and beaſtly manners, is well called a beaſt.

Rom. 6.

To bear the beaſts mark, what it is. Apoc. 13. 1300.

The

Anno 1555.

The literal taking of the Scripture made the Jews Infidels.

The carnal Jews knew there was a Promiſe made, that Helias ſhould come before Chriſt the Meſſias, the anointed of God, to prepare his ways; they knew alſo there was a Promiſe of Meſſias, that he ſhould come, and be a King, and Reign in the Houſe of David for evermore: but they underſtood all ſo groſly, and ſo carnally, that they neither knew Helias, nor Meſſias, when they came: for they looked for Helias to come down from Heaven in his own Perſon, and for Meſſias to come and reign in worldly pomp, power, riches, and glory, when as the propheſies of both were ſpiritually to have been underſtood: Of Helias, that he ſhould come not in Perſon, but in Spirit, that is, one that ſhould be indued with the ſpirit and gifts of grace of Helias, which was indeed John Baptiſt, as Chriſt himſelf did declare to his Apoſtles: And of Meſſias reign, all the Prophets were to be underſtood of the reign of his ſpiritual Kingdom over the Houſe of Jacob, and the true Iſraelites for evermore. And ſo by that their groſs and carnal underſtanding, they miſtook both Helias, and the true Meſſias, and when they came, knew neither of them both. So likewiſe, I fear me, nay it is certain, the world that wanteth the light of the Spirit of God (for the world is not able to receive him, ſaith John) neither doth, nor ſhall know the Beaſt, nor his Marks, though he rage cruelly, and live never ſo beaſtly, and though his marked men be in number like the Sand of the Sea. The Lord therefore vouchſafe to open the eyes of the blind with the light of grace, that they may ſee and perceive, and underſtand the words of God, after the mind of his Spirit. Amen.

The Popes marked men.

Here remain two Objections, which may ſeem weighty, and the which may peradventure move many not to follow the former counſel. The former reaſon is, A man will ſay, O Sir, it is no ſmall matter ye ſpeak of, to depart from a mans own Native Country into a ſtrange Realm. Many men have ſo great lets, as how is it poſſible that they can, or may do ſo? Some have Lands and Poſſeſſions, which they cannot carry with them: Some have Father, Mother, Wife, Children, and Kinſfolk, from whom to depart is as hard a thing (and all one almoſt) as to ſuffer death, and to go to a ſtrange Country that thou knoweſt not, neither the manner of the People, nor how thou maiſt away either with the People, or with the Country: or what a hard thing it is to live among a ſtrange People, whoſe tongue thou doſt not underſtand, &c.

Carnal Objections anſwered.

I grant here thou maiſt heap a number of worldly incommodities, which are ſurely very like to enſue the departure out of a mans own Native Country, I mean out of the whole Realm into a ſtrange Land: but what of all theſe, and a thouſand more of the like ſort? I will ſet unto them one ſaying of our Saviour Chriſt, which unto the faithful Child of God, and to the true Chriſtian, is able to countervail all theſe, yea, and to weigh them down. Chriſt our Saviour ſaith in Luke, If any come to me, and do not hate his Father and Mother, (he meaneth, and will not in his cauſe forſake his Father and Mother) his Wife, Children, and Brethren, yea and his life too, he cannot be my Diſciple: and whoſoever doth not bear my Croſs and come after me, he cannot be my Diſciple. And in the ſame place he declareth by the two Parables, one of a Builder, and the other of a King that is a Warriour, that every man that will not in Chriſts cauſe forſake all that ever he hath, he cannot be his Diſciple. Look the places who will; the matter is ſo plainly ſet forth, that no gloſſes, nor cloaking of Conſcience to the man of God, can ſerve to the contrary. Many places there be for the ſame purpoſe, for the imbracing of Chriſts Croſs, when Chriſt and his Cauſe layeth it upon our back; but this is ſo plain, that I need here to rehearſe no more.

Another worldly Objection anſwered.

This later Reaſon and Objection, whereof I ſpake before, is of more force, and includeth a neceſſity, which after the common ſaying, hath no Law, and therefore it is more hard to ſhape for it a good Anſwer. This may be objected of ſome, Alas Sir, I grant all theſe things do grieve me, and becauſe I underſtand they do not agree with Gods Word, which is the rule of my Conſcience, I loath either to look on them, or to hear them. But, Sir, alas I am an impotent man, an aged man, a ſick man, a lame man, or I have ſo many ſmall Infants, and a lame Wife, which all live by my labour, and by my proviſion: if I leave them they ſhall ſtarve, and I am not able to carry them with me, ſuch is my ſtate. Alas, Sir, what ſhall I do? And theſe cauſes may chance to ſome men of God, whereby either it ſhall be for them utterly impoſſible to depart the Country, or elſe in departing they ſhall be inforced to forſake ſuch in extream neceſſities, of whom both God and Nature hath committed unto them the care.

Alas, what counſel is here to be given? O lamentable ſtate! O ſorrowful heart! that neither can depart, and without extream danger and peril is not able to tarry ſtill. And theſe are they whom our Saviour Chriſt ſaw before ſhould be, and called them in his Propheſie of the later time, great-bellied or travelling Women, and Women that give, after they be brought to Bed, their ſmall Babes ſuck. Of the ſtate of ſuch as are not able to fly the infection of the peſtiferous plague of Antichriſts Abominations, Chriſt lamenting, and not curſing, ſaith, Wo be to the great bellied and travelling Women, and Women that give ſuck in thoſe days. For theſe, alas, my heart mourneth the more, the leſs I am able to give any comfortable counſel, but this; that always, as they look for everlaſting life, they abide ſtill in the confeſſion of his truth, whatſoever ſhall befall, and for the reſt, to put their truſt now wholly in God, which is able to ſave them againſt all appearance: And commonly in extremities, when all worldly comfort faileth, and the danger is at higheſt, then unto his he is wont, after his accuſtomed mercy, to be moſt ready to put his helping hand. Daniel God ſuffered to be caſt into the Den of Lyons, and the three Children into the hot burning Furnace, and yet he ſaved them all. Paul was plucked out of the mouth of the Lion (as he ſaith of himſelf) and in Aſia he was brought into ſuch trouble, that he looked for no other thing but for preſent death, and yet he that raiſed the dead to life again, did bring him out of all his troubles, & taught him and all other that be in troubles for Chriſts cauſe, not to truſt to themſelves, but in Almighty God.

A leſſon to truſt to the Lord, who is always a help in extremity of need.

Of Gods gracious aid in extream perils toward them that put their truſt in him, all Scripture is full both of old and new. What dangers were the Patriarchs oftentimes brought into, as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, but of all other Joſeph, and how mercifully were they delivered again? In what perils was Moſes when he was fain to fly for the ſafeguard of his life? And when was he ſent again to deliver the Iſraelites from the ſervile bondage? Not before they were brought into extream miſery. And when did the Lord mightily deliver his People from Pharaoh his Sword? Not before they were brought into ſuch ſtreights, that they were ſo compaſſed on every ſide (the main Sea on the one ſide, and the main Hoſt on the other) that they could look for none other (yea, what did they indeed elſe look for?) but either to have been drowned in the Sea, or elſe to have fallen on the edge of Pharaoh his Sword. Thoſe Judges, which wrought moſt wonderful things in the delivery of the people, were ever given when the people was brought to moſt miſery before, as Othoniel, Ehud, Samgar, Gedeon, Jephthe, Sampſon. And ſo was Saul endued with ſtrength and boldneſs from above, againſt the Ammonites, Philiſtines, and Amalekites, for the defence of the People of God. David likewiſe felt Gods help moſt ſenſibly ever in his extream Perſecutions. What ſhall I ſpeak of the Prophets of God, whom God ſuffered ſo oft to be brought into extream perils, and ſo mightily delivered them again; as Helias, Jeremy, Daniel, Micheas, and Jonas, and many other, whom it were but too long to rehearſe and ſet out at large? And did the Lord uſe his Servants otherwiſe in the New Law after Chriſts Incarnation? Read the Acts of the Apoſtles, and you ſhall ſee no. Were not the Apoſtles caſt into Priſon, and brought out by the mighty hand of God? Did not the Angel deliver Peter out of the ſtrong Priſon, and bring him out by the Iron Gates of the City, and ſet him free? And when I pray you? Even the ſame night before Herod appointed to have brought him to Judgment to have ſlain him, as he had a little before killed James the brother of John. Paul and Silas, when after they had been ſore ſcourged, and were put into the inner Priſon, and there were laid faſt in the Stocks, I pray you what appearance was there that the Magiſtrates ſhould [illegible] come the next day themſelves to the [illegible] be content, and to depart in peace? [illegible] Paul, that he ſhould be ſafely conducted out of [illegible]

Examples of Gods ready help in extream perils.

Examples of Gods deliverance.

and brought to Felix the Emperours Deputy, when as both the High Prieſt, the Phariſees, and Rulers of the Jews had conſpired to enquire Judgment of Death againſt him, he being faſt in Priſon, and alſo more than forty men had ſworn each one to another, that they would neither eat nor drink, until they had ſlain Paul? A thing wonderful, that no reaſon could have invented, or man could have looked for: God provided Paul his own Siſters Son, a young man, that diſappointed that Conſpiracy, and all their former Conjuration. The manner how the thing came to paſs, thou maiſt read in the Three and twentieth of the Acts. I will not be tedious unto thee with the rehearſal thereof.

Now to deſcend from the Apoſtles to the Martyrs that followed next in Chriſts Church, and in them likewiſe to declare how gracious our good God ever hath been to work wonderfully with them which in his cauſe have been in extream perils, it were matter enough to write a long Book. I will here name but one man and one woman, that is, Athanaſius the great Clerk and godly man ſtoutly ſtanding in Chriſts Cauſe againſt the Arrians, and that holy woman Blandina, ſtanding ſo conſtantly in all extream pains, in the ſimple Confeſſion of Chriſt. If thou wilt have examples of more, look and thou ſhalt have both theſe, and an hundred more, in Eccl. Hiſtoria of Euſebius, and in Tripartita Hiſtoria.

But for all theſe Examples, both of holy Scripture, and of other Hiſtories, I fear me the weak man of God, incumbred with the frailty and infirmity of the fleſh, will have now and then ſuch thoughts and quaumes (as they call them) to run over his heart, and to think thus: All theſe things which are rehearſed out of the Scripture I believe to be true, and of the reſt truly I do think well, and can believe them alſo to be true; but all theſe we muſt needs grant were ſpecial miracles of God, which now in our days are ceaſed, we ſee; and to require them at Gods hands, were it not to tempt God?

God worketh great miracles in our time, although every man doth not ſee them.

Welbeloved Brother, I grant ſuch were great wonderful works of God, and we have not ſeen many of ſuch miracles in our time, either for that our ſight is not clear (for truly God worketh with his, his part in all times) or elſe becauſe we have not the like faith of them for whoſe cauſe God wrought ſuch things, or becauſe, after that he had ſet forth the truth of his Doctrine by ſuch miracles then ſufficiently, the time of ſo many miracles to be done was expired withal. Which of theſe is the moſt ſpecial cauſe of all other, or whether there be any other, God knoweth; I leave that to God. But know thou this, my welbeloved in God, that Gods hand is as ſtrong as ever it was, he may do what his gracious pleaſure is, and he is as good and gracious as ever he was. Man changeth as the Garment doth: But God our heavenly Father is even the ſame now that he was, and ſhall be for evermore.

The world without doubt (this I do believe, and therefore I ſay) draweth towards an end, and in all Ages God hath had his own manner, after his ſecret and unſearchable wiſdom, to uſe his Elect, ſometimes to deliver them, and to keep them ſafe, and ſometimes to ſuffer them to drink of Chriſts cup, that is, to feel the ſmart, and to feel of the whip. And though the fleſh ſmarteth at the one, and feeleth eaſe in the other, is glad of the one, and ſore vexed in the other: yet the Lord is all one towards them in both, and loveth them no leſs when he ſuffereth them to be beaten, yea, and to be put to bodily death, than when he worketh wonders for their marvellous delivery. Nay, rather he doth more for them, when in anguiſh of the torments he ſtandeth by them, and ſtrengthneth them in their faith, to ſuffer in the confeſſion of the truth and his faith, the bitter pangs of death, than when he openeth the Priſon door and letteth them go looſe: for here he doth but reſpite them to another time, and leaveth them in danger to fall in like peril again; and there he maketh them perfect, to be without danger, pain, or peril, after that for evermore. But this his love towards them, howſoever the world doth judge of it, is all one, both when he delivereth, and when he ſuffereth them to be put to death. He loved as well Peter, and Paul, when (after they had, according to his bleſſed will, pleaſure and providence, finiſhed their courſes, and done their ſervices appointed them by him here in preaching of his Goſpel) the one was beheaded, and the other was hanged or crucified of the cruel Tyrant Nero, as the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory ſaith, as when he ſent the Angel to bring Peter out of Priſon, and for Pauls delivery he made all the doors of the Priſon to fly wide open, and the foundation of the ſame, like an Earth-quake, to tremble and ſhake. Anno 1555.

The Lords favour no leſs in adverſity than in proſperity.

Thinkeſt thou, O thou man of God, that Chriſt our Saviour had leſs affection to the firſt Martyr Stephen, becauſe he ſuffered his Enemies even at the firſt conflict to ſtone him to death? No ſurely, nor James John's brother, which was one of the three that Paul calleth Primates or Principals amongſt the Apoſtles of Chriſt. He loved him never a whit the worſe than he did the other, although he ſuffered Herod the Tyrants ſword to cut off his head. Nay, doth not Daniel ſay, ſpeaking of the cruelty of Antichriſts time, Et docti in populo docebunt plurimos, & ruent in gladio & in flamma, & in captivitate, & rapina dierum, &c. Et de eruditis ruent ut conflentur & eligantur, & dealbentur, &c. That is, and the Learned (he meaneth truly learned in Gods Law) ſhall teach many, and ſhall fall upon the ſword, and in the flame (that is, ſhall be burned in the flaming fire) and in captivity (that is, ſhall be in priſon, and be ſpoiled and robbed of their goods for a long ſeaſon.) And after a little in the ſame place of Daniel it followeth; and of the learned there be, which ſhall fall or be overthrown, that they may be known, tried, choſen, and made white; he meaneth, be bourniſhed and ſcoured anew, picked and choſen, and made freſh and luſty. If that then was foreſeen to be done to the godly learned, and for ſo gracious cauſes, let every one to whom any ſuch thing by the will of God doth chance, be merry in God and rejoyce, for it is to Gods glory, and to his own everlaſting wealth. Wherefore well is he that ever he was born, for whom thus graciouſly God hath provided, having grace of God, and ſtrength of the Holy Ghoſt to ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the height of the ſtorm. Happy is he that ever he was born, whom God his heavenly Father hath vouchſafed to appoint to glorifie him, and to edifie his Church by the effuſion of his blood. Dan. 11. Dan. ibid.

Martyrdom an high honour.

To dye in Chriſts cauſe is an high honour, to the which no man certainly ſhall or can aſpire, but to whom God vouchſafeth that dignity: for no man is allowed to preſume to take unto himſelf any office of honour, but he which is thereunto called of God. Therefore John ſaith well, ſpeaking of them which have obtained the victory by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of his Teſtimony, that they loved not their lives, even unto death. Apoc. 12.

And our Saviour Chriſt ſaith, He that ſhall loſe his life for my cauſe ſhall find it. And this manner of ſpeech pertaineth not to one kind of Chriſtians (as the worldly doth wickedly dream) but to all that do truly pertain unto Chriſt. For when Chriſt had called unto him the Multitude together with his Diſciples, he ſaid unto them (mark that he ſaid not this to the Diſciples and Apoſtles only, but he ſaid it to all) whoſoever will follow me, let him forſake or deny himſelf, and take up his Croſs and follow me: for whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it) he meaneth whoſoever will, to ſave his life, forſake or leave him and his truth) and whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my cauſe and the Goſpels ſake, ſhall ſave it. For what ſhall it profit a man if he ſhall win the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul, his own life? or what ſhall a man give to recompence that loſs of his own life, and of his own ſoul? Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and my words (that is, to confeſs me and my Goſpel) before this adulterous and ſinful Generation, of him ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy Angels. Know thou, O man of God, that all things are ordained for thy behoof, and to the furtherance of thee, towards thy ſalvation. All things, ſaith Paul, worketh with the good to goodneſs, even the Enemies of God, and ſuch kind of puniſhments whereby they go about to deſtroy them, ſhall be forced by Gods power, might, and fatherly providence, to do them ſervice. Matth. 16. Mark 8.

It is not as the wicked thinketh, that Poverty, Adverſity, Sickneſs, Tribulation, yea painful Death of the godly be tokens that God doth not love them; but even clean the contrary, as all the whole courſe of Scripture doth evidently declare: for then he would never have ſuffered his moſt dearly beloved the Patriarchs to have had ſuch troubles, his Prophets, his Apoſtles, his Martyrs, and and chief Champions and Maintainers of his Truth and Goſpel, ſo cruelly of the wicked to have been murdered and ſlain. Of the which ſome were racked (as the Apoſtle ſaith) and would not be delivered, that they might receive a better Reſurrection. Some were tried by mockings and ſcourgings, yea, moreover by bonds and impriſonment: they were ſtoned, they were hewen and cut aſunder, they were tempted, they were ſlain with the ſword, they wandred up and down in Sheeps skins and Goats skins, being forſaken, afflicted, and tormented, ſuch men as the world was not worthy to have, wandering in Wilderneſſes, in Mountains, in Dens and Caves of the Earth. All theſe were approved by the teſtimony of Faith, and received not the Promiſe, becauſe God did provide better for us, that without us they ſhould not be conſummated. They tarry for us now undoubtedly, longing for the day: but they are commanded to have patience yet (ſaith the Lord) a little while, until the number of their Fellowſervants be fulfilled, and of their Brethren which are yet to be ſlain, as they were.

Hebr. 11.

Now (thou O man of God) for our Lords ſake, let us not for the love of this life, tarry then too long, and be occaſion of delay of that glorious conſummation, in hope and expectation whereof they departed in the Lord, and the which alſo the living indued with Gods Spirit, ought ſo earneſtly to deſire and to groan for with all the Creatures of God. Let us all, with John the Servant of God, cry in our hearts unto our Saviour Chriſt, Veni Domine Ieſu, Come Lord Jeſus, come. For then when Chriſt, which is our life, ſhall be made manifeſt, and appear in glory, then ſhall the children of God appear what they be, even like unto Chriſt: for this our weak body ſhall be transfigured and made like unto Chriſts glorious body, and that by the power whereby he is able to ſubdue unto himſelf all things. Then, that which is now corruptible, ſhall then be made incorruptible: that which now is vile, ſhall be made glorious; that which is now weak, ſhall riſe then mighty and ſtrong; that which is groſs and carnal, ſhall be made fine and ſpiritual: for then we ſhall ſee and have the unſpeakable joy and fruition of the glorious Majeſty of our Lord even as he is.

Apoc. 22.

Who, or what then ſhall let us to jeopard, yea, to ſpend this life which we have here in Chriſt's cauſe? in our Lord God his cauſe? O thou therefore man of God, thou that art loaden, and ſo letted like unto a great-bellied Woman, that thou canſt not fly the plague, yet if thou luſt after ſuch things as I have ſpoken of, ſtand faſt whatſoever ſhall befal, in my Maſters cauſe: and take this thy letting to fly, for a calling of God to fight in thy Maſter Chriſt his cauſe. Of this be thou certain, they can do nothing unto thee, which thy Father is not aware of, or hath not foreſeen before: they can do no more than it ſhall pleaſe him to ſuffer them to do for the furtherance of his glory, edifying of his Church, and thine own ſalvation. Let them then do what they ſhall, ſeeing to thee (O man of God) all things ſhall be forced to ſerve, and to work with thee unto the beſt before God. O be not afraid, and remember the end.

Nothing happened without Gods foreſight.

All this which I have ſpoken for the comfort of the lamentable caſe of the man whom Chriſt called great-bellied Woman, I mean to be ſpoken likewiſe to the captive and priſoner in Gods cauſe: for ſuch I count to be as it were already ſummoned and preſſed to fight under the Banner of the Croſs of Chriſt, and as it were Souldiers allowed and taken up for the Lords Wars, to do their Lord and Maſter good and honourable ſervice, and to ſtick to him, as men of truſty ſervice in his cauſe, even unto death, and to think their life loſt in his cauſe, is to win it in eternal glory for evermore.

Therefore, now to conclude and make an end of this Treatiſe, I ſay unto all that love God our heavenly Father, that love Chriſt Jeſus our Redeemer and Saviour; that love to follow the ways of the Holy Ghoſt which is our Comforter and Sanctifier of all; unto all that love Chriſts Spouſe and Body, the true Catholick Church of Chriſt, yea, that love life and their own ſouls health; I ſay unto all theſe, hearken my dear Brethren and Siſters, all you that be of God, of all ſorts, ages, dignities, or degrees; hearken to the word of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt ſpoken to his Apoſtles, and meant to all his, in S. Matthews Goſpel, Fear not them which kill the body, for they cannot kill the ſoul; but fear him more which may deſtroy and caſt both body and ſoul into Hell fire. Are not two ſmall Sparrows ſold for a mite, and one of them ſhall not fall or light upon the ground without your Father? All the hairs of your head be numbred. Fear them not, you are much more worth than are the little Sparrows. Every one that confeſſeth me before men, him ſhall I likewiſe confeſs before my Father which is in Heaven. But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, I ſhall deny him likewiſe before my Father which is in Heaven.

Matth. 10.

The Lord grant us therefore of his heavenly grace and ſtrength, that here we may ſo confeſs him in this world amongſt this adulterous and ſinful Generation, that he may confeſs us again at the latter day before his Father which is in Heaven, to our glory and everlaſting comfort, joy, and ſalvation.

To our heavenly Father, to our Saviour and Redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, and to the Holy Ghoſt, be all glory and honour now and for ever, Amen.

Thus with the death and martyrdom of theſe two learned Paſtors and conſtant Souldiers of Chriſt, Mr. Latimer and Biſhop Ridley, you have divers of their Letters and other Writings of theirs expreſſed, with the Farewels alſo of Biſhop Ridley, wherein he took his leave of the world, taking his Journey to the Kingdom of Heaven. Divers and ſundry other Treatiſes of his remain alſo in my hand both in Latin and Engliſh, to be remembred by the leave of the Lord in time and place convenient.

The death and end of Stephen Gardiner Biſhop of Winchester.

The death of Step. Gardiner, enemy to Gods Word.

THe next Month after the burning of Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, which was the Month of November, Stephen Gardiner Biſhop and Chancellor, a man hated of God and all good men, ended his wretched life. Concerning the qualities, nature, and diſpoſition of which man, forſomuch as ſomewhat hath been declared before in the ſtory of King Edwards Reign, I ſhall need therefore the leſs now to ſtand greatly upon the ſame. Firſt, This Vipers Bird crept out of the Town of Bury in Suffolk, was brought up moſt part of his youth in Cambridge; his Wit, Capacity, Memory, and other Indowments of Nature were not to be complained of, if he had well uſed and rightly applyed the ſame; wherein there was no great want of Gods part in him, if he had not rather himſelf wanted to the goodneſs of his Gifts. Through this promptneſs, activity, and towardneſs of his, he profited not a little in ſuch Studies as he gave his head unto, as firſt in the Civil Law, then in Languages and ſuch other like, eſpecially in thoſe Arts and Faculties which had any proſpect to Dignity and Preferment to be hoped for. Beſides other ornaments or helps of Nature, Memory chiefly ſeemed in him very beneficial, rather than diligence of Study.

The vices of Winchester deſcribed.

To theſe gifts and qualities were joyned again his great or greater vices, which not ſo much followed him, as overtook him, not ſo much burdened him, as made him burdenous to the whole Realm. He was of a proud ſtomach, and high-minded, in his own opinion and conceit flattering himſelf too much; in wit, crafty and ſubtile, toward his Superiours flattering and fair ſpoken, to his Inferiors fierce, againſt his Equal ſtout and envious; namely, if in judgment and ſentence he any thing withſtood him, as appeared between the good L. Cromwel and him in the Reign of King Henry, being of like haughtineſs of ſtomach as the Poets write of Pelides, Cedere neſcius. Who, although he would give no place to men, yet notwithſtanding I wiſh he would have given place to truth, according as he ſeemed not altogether ignorant of that truth. What his knowledge was therein, it is evident, partly to underſtand as well by his Book De vera Obedientia, as alſo by his Sermon before King Edward; alſo by his Anſwers to the Council the ſame time, and moreover by his own words it may be gathered in ſundry places, as more plainly may appear by that which hereafter followeth.

Upon his Eſtimation and Fame he ſtood too too much, more than was meet for a man of his Coat and Calling, whoſe Profeſſion was to be crucified unto the world, which thing made him ſo ſtiff in maintaining that he had once begun to take upon him. I will not here ſpeak of that which hath been conſtantly reported to me touching the monſtrous making and miſhaped faſhion of his feet and toes, the nails whereof were ſaid not to be like to other mens, but to crook downward, and to be ſharp like the Claws of ravening Beaſts. What his Learning was in the Civil and Canon Law I have not to ſay: What it was in other Liberal Sciences and Arts, this I ſuppoſe, that neither his continuance in ſtudy, nor diligence of reading was ſuch (by reaſon of his too much intermedling in Princes matters) as could truly well merit unto him the title of a deep learned man. But what learning or cunning ſoever it was he had, ſo it fared in him, as it doth in Butchers, which uſe to blow up their fleſh: even ſo he with boldneſs and ſtoutneſs, and ſpecially with authority, made thoſe gifts that he had to appear much greater than they were in very deed. Whereunto, uſe, peradventure, alſo and experience abroad, brought no little helps, rather than either quickneſs of wit, or happineſs of education.

Winchester not worthy the title of a learned man

And as touching Divinity, he was ſo variable, wavering with time, that no conſtant cenſure can be given what to make of him. If his doings and writings were according to his Conſcience, no man can rightly ſay whether he was a right Proteſtant or Papiſt. If he wrote otherwiſe than he thought, for fear, or to bear with time, then was he a double deep diſſembler before God and man, to ſay, and unſay, to write and unwrite, to ſwear and forſwear ſo as he did. For firſt in the beginning of Queen Annes time, who was ſo forward or ſo buſie in the matter of the Kings Divorce as Stephen Gardiner, who was firſt ſent to Rome, and then to the Emperor with Edward Foxe, as chief Agent in the behalf of the Lady Anne? By whom alſo he was preferred to the Biſhoprick of Winchester, and Edward Boner was preferred to the Biſhoprick of London. Again, at the aboliſhing of the Pope, who ſo ready to ſwear, or ſo vehement to write againſt the Pope as he, as not only by his Sermons, but alſo by his Book De Obedientia may appear? In which Book De Obedientia, leſt any ſhould think him drawn thereunto otherwiſe than by his own conſent, he plainly declareth, how not raſhly nor upon a ſudden, but upon a long deliberation and advertiſement in himſelf about the matter, he at length uttered his judgment: Whereof read before. And moreover, ſo he uttered his judgment in writing againſt the uſurped Supremacy of the Pope, that coming to Louane afterward, he was there accounted for a perſon excommunicate and a Schiſmatick, inſomuch that he was not permitted in their Church to ſay Maſs; and moreover, in their publick Sermons they openly cried out againſt him. Whereof read hereafter following.

The mutability of Ste. Gardiner in Religion.

Touching the doings of Winchester at Louane, read the Letter of Driander to Criſpine.

And thus long continued he firm and forward, ſo that who but Winchester during all that time and reign of Queen Anne? After her deceaſe that time by little and little carried him away, till at length the emulation of Cromwel's eſtate, and eſpecially (as it ſeemeth) for his ſo much favouring of Boner (whom Winchester at that time in no caſe could abide) made him an utter Enemy both againſt him, and alſo his Religion: till again in King Edwards days, he began a little to rebate from certain points of Popery, and ſomewhat to ſmell of the Goſpel, as both by his Sermon before King Edward, as alſo by his ſubſcribing to certain Articles, may appear: and this was an half turn of Stephen Gardiner from Popery again to the Goſpel, and (no doubt) he would have further turned, had not the unluckey decay of the Duke of Somerſet clean turned him away from true Divinity, to plain Popery; wherein he continued a cruel Perſecutor to his dying day.

The firſt turning of Winchester from the Goſpel, and why?

Another half turn from Popery to the Goſpel. Winchester turned to a full Papiſt.

And thus much concerning the Trade and Profeſſion of Stephen Gardiners Popiſh Divinity. In which his Popiſh Trade, whether he followed more true judgment, or elſe time, or rather the ſpirit of Ambition and Vain-glory, it is doubtful to ſay, and ſo much the more doubtful, becauſe in his doings and writings a man may ſee him not only contrary to himſelf, but alſo in ſome points contrary to other Papiſts. And furthermore, where he agreeth with them, he ſeemeth therein not ſo much to follow his own ſenſe, as the mind and meaning of Pereſius; out of whoſe Book the greateſt part of Winchester's Divinity ſeemeth to be borrowed.

Winchester never conſtant in himſelf, nor agreeing with other Papiſts.

A great part of Winchesters Divinity is to be found in Pereſius.

And therefore as in the true knowledge of Gods holy Word and Scripture he appeareth no body; ſo in his pen and ſtyle of writing no leſs far is he from commendation, than he is from all plainneſs and perſpicuity. In whoſe obſcure and perplex kind of writing, although peradventure ſome ſenſe may be found with ſome ſearching, yet ſhall no Reader find any ſweetneſs in his reading. Anno 1555.

Winchesters ſtile unpleaſant.

What moved him to be ſo ſturdy againſt Mr. Cheek, and Sir Thomas Smith, for the Greek pronunciation, others may think what they pleaſe: I ſpeak but what I think, that ſo he did, for that he ſaw it a thing rather newly begun, than truly impugned. Such was the diſpoſition of that man (as it ſeemeth) that of purpoſe he ever affected to ſeem to be a Patron of old Cuſtoms, though they were never ſo rotten with age. Amongſt other matters, this one thing I cannot but marvel at in my mind, when I ſee how proudly he braggeth, and vainly vaunteth himſelf (as well in his Letters to the Lord Protector, and others of King Edwards Council, as alſo in his long matter articulated and exhibited by him unto the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and other the Kings Commiſſioners) of the high favour he had of the noble King of famous memory, King Henry the Eighth, when indeed nothing was leſs true; neither did the King leſs favour any of his Council, than him, affirming very often, that he greatly ſuſpected the ſaid Biſhop to be a ſecret maintainer of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped Authority, and a ſtout diſturber and hinderer of his proceedings in reformation of Religion. And therefore he did ſo much diſlike him, that he did not only mind (if the Lord had ſent his Highneſs longer life) to have uſed the extremity of Law againſt him, upon very ſore and juſt matter of old, committed by him (and yet not taken away by any pardon) commanding thereupon often the Lord Paget, then his Secretary, to keep ſafe certain writings which he had againſt him; but alſo commanded that he ſhould be put clean out of his laſt Will and Teſtament, not ſuffering him either to be any of his Executors, or elſe in any caſe of his Sons Council, no, although he were earneſtly intreated to the contrary by ſundry of the Lords, and others of his Highneſſes Council, ſaying, he was a wilful, troubleſom, and headſtrong man, and not meet to be about his Son, or to have any thing to do by his will. Now amongſt other cauſes that moved the King thus to ſuſpect his fidelity towards his godly proceedings in Religion, I find this to be one. It pleaſed his Majeſty after his aboliſhing of the Biſhop of Romes uſurped Authority (amongſt other Embaſſages to forreign Princes) to ſend the ſaid Biſhop of Winchester, and Sir Henry Knevet Knight, as joynt Ambaſſadours to the Emperour, being then at a Diet or Council at Ratiſbone, appointing alſo Sir John Barkley, Sir William Blunt, Knights, and Mr. Andrew Bainton Eſquire (his Highneſs's Servants) to give their attendance upon the ſaid Sir Henry Knevet, for the more honouring of his Embaſſage. It happened alſo at that time, that Sir Henry Knevet entertained into his ſervice (as Steward of his Houſhold) one William Wolfe, who had in the ſame place and room before ſerved Sir Thomas Wyat Knight, the Kings former Ambaſſadour there, and by that means had good acquaintance in thoſe parts, as well in the Emperours Court, as elſewhere. This Wolfe, towards the latter end of the Diet or Council, happened to walk (as often he did) towards the Emperours Palace to hear ſome news, where he met with one Lodovico, an Italian Merchant of Banker, one of his old Acquaintance. Who, ſuppoſing the ſaid Wolfe to have attended upon the Biſhop of Winchester, (not knowing of any other joynt Ambaſſadour) required Wolfe for old acquaintance, to do him a pleaſure; whereunto he willingly granted. Whereupon Ludovico ſhewed him, that the Popes Legate, or Ambaſſadour to the Emperour (which was Cardinal Contarene) departing the day before towards Rome, and having no leiſure to end his buſineſs himſelf, had put the ſaid Ludovico in truſt for the accompliſhing of them: and amongſt all other things he had eſpecially charged him that he ſhould repair to the Ambaſſadour of England, and require of him an anſwer of the Popes Letters, which the Legate did of late ſend unto him, addreſſed to him from Rome, and that upon the receipt thereof he ſhould ſend them after with all ſpeed; and therefore if his Lord Ambaſſadour would write by that Currior, he prayed Wolfe to tell him that it was time to write, for the Currior went away within a day or two. At this tale Wolfe being abaſhed, and yet partly gheſſing which Ambaſſadour he meant, thought it not meet to tell him whoſe Servant he was, but by other ſoothing talk perceived that he meant the Biſhop of Wincheſter. And to the end that Ludovico ſhould ſuſpect nothing, he anſwered him, that he being not the Ambaſſadours Secretary, could ſay little therein; howbeit he would not miſs to put his Secretary in remembrance of it: which thing Ludovick alſo deſired him to do, for that he had no other acquaintance with the Ambaſſadour, and ſo for that time they departed. This matter ſeeming to Wolfe of ſome importance, did ſtreightways reveal it to Sir Henry Knevet his Maſter: Who weighing alſo the greatneſs of the caſe, and what diſadvantage it were upon one mans ſo bare a report to attempt ought, in a place and time, whereby ſuch a perſon was to be touched, charged Wolfe well to adviſe himſelf, that no affect of hate, diſpleaſure, or other paſſion, did move him to diſcloſe this, but truth only. Wolfe replied, That he weighed well the weightineſs of the cauſe, meet, as to his own reſpect, to be paſſed over in ſilence, for avoiding of his private diſpleaſure, if duty of Allegiance bound him not otherwiſe. But Sir (quoth he) if you think not my hearing thereof, one to one, to be ſufficient, I warrant you to deviſe means, that ſome others of your Servants ſhall hear the like words at Ludovicks own mouth as well as I. Upon which talk Sir Henry Knevet deviſed which of his Servants he might uſe to that purpoſe, and at laſt reſted upon Mr. Thomas Chalenor his Secretary, becauſe he had the Italian Tongue. Not yet making him privy of any matter, but willed Wolfe to take him abroad with him as of his own private motion, for they were very familiar friends. Whereupon the next morning, being Sunday, Wolfe came to Chalenor's Chamber, and prayed him familiarly to go walk with him abroad to the Piazza, or Market-ſtead, which he gladly granting, ſo did, not knowing of any ſpecial cauſe why. When they came to the Piazza, over againſt the Emperors Palace, (near whereunto alſo the Popes Legate had lodged) and had there walked a while together, there came thither the ſaid Ludovico, and eſpying Wolfe, ſaluted him very friendly, and entred into talk about the Exchange, and ſundry other matters, Chalenor being ſtill with them. At laſt upon occaſion, they entred into like talk about the former Letters that the Ambaſſadour of England had received from Rome by the Popes Legate, of which Ludovico had in charge to receive an anſwer, affirming, that the Poſt did depart the next day, and therefore prayed Wolfe to put the Ambaſſadours Secretary in remembrance of them. Whereunto Wolfe anſwered, That he would willingly do it; but he did not well know which Ambaſſadour he meant, for that there were two: one, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the other, a Gentleman of the Kings Privy Chamber. To whom Ludovick replied, that he meant not the Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, but the Biſhop. By which talk, and much ſuch like (as upon the former day) Mr. Chaloner being moved (and not knowing yet of his Maſters and Wolfes purpoſe) after the departure of Ludovico from them, ſaid unto Wolfe, that Ludovick had had but homely talk with him, not to be paſſed over lightly, and therefore he would tell his Maſter of it. To whom Wolf anſwered, Do as you will, if you think any matter therein. And therefore at his return home, he told Sir Henry Knevet what ſpeech he had heard at Ludovicks mouth. Sir Henry Knevet being thus further aſcertained of the matter, opened the whole to Sir John Barkeley, Sir William Blunt, and to Mr. Bainton; who all agreed yet to make a farther trial thereof. And therefore deviſed that Wolfe ſhould procure Lodovick to bring certain Velvet, and other Silks, unto Sir Henry Knevets Lodging, as well for himſelf, as for the other Gentlemen; which that Afternoon he did accompliſh, and brought Ludovick unto Sir Henry, where alſo were the other Gentlemen: After they had a while viewed the Silks, and had had ſome talk about the prices, Wolf took occaſion again to ask Ludovick if Sir Henry were the Ambaſſadour of whom he was to demand an Anſwer of the Letters ſent by the Popes Legate? To whom the Merchant anſwered, No, it was not his Seigniory, but it was a Biſhop, tearming him Reverendiſſimo, whereby they eaſily perceived whom he meant. Sir Henry Knevet hereupon ſomewhat diſſembling the matter, entred into further talk thereabouts, whereby Ludovick opened as much in effect to them, as he had done before to Wolfe: but yet at laſt perceiving that as well Sir Henry, as alſo the other Gentlemen, did behold him ſomewhat firedly, he brake off his talk. Wherewith Sir Henry Knevet, making as though he had noted nothing, did lovingly diſmiſs him, praying him, that when he had received the Biſhops Letters, he would alſo repair to him for a Packet to an Engliſh Gentleman of his acquaintance at Millan; which he promiſed to do, and ſo departed again. When Sir Henry had thus made ſufficient trial of this matter, he forthwith wrote his Letters unto the Kings Majeſty, ſignifying unto him the whole at large, as he had learned. In the mean while Ludovick the next morning repaired unto the Biſhop of Wincheſters Lodging, to demand an anſwer of thoſe Letters the Legate had ſent unto him: but how he uſed himſelf, or whether he uttered the talk he had with Sir Henry Knevet and with Wolfe, whom he ſuppoſed at the firſt to be the Biſhops man, it is not certainly known. But the Biſhop perceiving that by miſtaking one for another (and in ſuppoſing Wolfe to be the Biſhops Servant) Ludovick had uttered all his Meſſage from the Legate unto Wolfe, and that thereby his practiſes would come to light; in great haſty rage, cauſed Ludovick to be ſtayed in his own houſe, while in the mean time himſelf went to Gravela, one of the Emperours Council, and ſo practiſed with him, that Ludovick was ſecretly committed unto Priſon, in the cuſtody of one of the Emperours Marſhals, ſo as he could be no more talked withal, all the time of their abode there. And then ſending in great haſte to Sir Henry Knevet to come and ſpeak with him (which he did) he fell into very hot ſpeech with him, ſaying, that he had poiſon in his diſh, and that a Knave was ſubborned to be his deſtruction; with many ſuch like words. Sir Henry told him again, how he underſtood it; and prayed him that Ludovick might be brought face to face, to be examined in both their Preſences. Which the Biſhop would in no caſe agree unto, affirming, that he had ſo declared the caſe to Gravela, being indifferent (as he thought) to them both, that he would not meddle with Ludovick, nor ſpeak with him: but that the Emperours Council ſhould examine him, and try what he was, for him. To whom Sir Henry Knevet again very earneſtly objected, That he marvelled that the Biſhop, in matter touching the Kings Majeſty, their Maſter, would uſe the aid or means of Gravela, a forreign Princes Miniſter, to make him privy of their queſtion. But ſay and do what he could, he would never come to the ſpeech of Ludovick any more ever after. Whereupon there roſe great and long controverſies between them (both writing Letters unto the King about that matter) until at laſt the Kings Majeſty perceiving his Affairs otherwiſe to ſlack thereby, wrote unto them both that they ſhould lay all thoſe things under foot, and joyn together in his Service as before; which they did accordingly. But howſoever this matter was afterward ſalved here with the Kings Majeſty, as either by the death of Sir Henry Knevet (which I think was not long after) or by other friends the Biſhop had here at home, I know not: yet Wolfe, who within two months after died of a long cough of the Longues, upon his Death-bed did again affirm the Premiſſes to be moſt true; and therefore in the preſence of Sir Henry Knevet, and divers other of his Servants, he proteſted, that he had not invented, ſought, or procured this at Ludovicks hands, for any malice or diſpleaſure born to the Biſhop, but only for diſcharge of his faith and duty unto the Kings Majeſty, deſiring that the ſame his Proteſtation might be inſerted in the end of his laſt Will and Teſtament, which was then preſently done, and thereunto he ſet his hand.

Now, whether this was the matter that the King moved ſo often Mr. Secretary Paget (being after Lord Keeper) to keep ſafe as ſore matter againſt the Biſhop, I know not; but yet it appears by ſome Depoſitions of the Nobility, and others, in the Proceſs againſt him had in King Edwards days, that the Kings Majeſty, Henry 8. had this matter ever in his mind: for in every general pardon that he granted by Parliament after this practice, he did ſtill except all Treaſons committed beyond the Seas; meaning thereby, as it was ſuppoſed, that the Biſhop ſhould not take any beneſit by any general pardon, if at any time his Majeſty would call him to accompt: and therefore all things well weighed, he had ſmall cauſe to vaunt of his great favour he had with King Henry his Maſter. Howbeit, it ſeemeth he was brought into this fools Paradiſe by the Lord Paget; who (as he himſelf reporteth in his Depoſitions) in his Meſſages from the King to the ſaid Biſhop, deluded him, telling him much otherwiſe than the King had ſpoken, and concealing always the Kings hard ſpeeches againſt him, which thing puffed up this vain glorious Thraſo not a little. All which premiſſes appear more at large by the Depoſitions of the Nobles and others, examined in the long Proceſs againſt him in King Edwards reign, as appears in our firſt Edition of Acts and Monuments, from page 804. unto the end of that Proceſs, in that Book at large mentioned.

But whoſoever he was, ſeeing he is now gone, I refer him to his judge, to whom he ſhall ſtand or fall. As concerning his death, and manner thereof, I would they which were preſent thereat would teſtifie to us what they ſaw. This we have all to think, that his death happened ſo opportunely, that England hath a mighty cauſe to give thanks to the Lord therefore: not ſo much for the great hurt he had done in times paſt in perverting his Princes, in bringing in the ſix Articles, in murdering Gods Saints, in defacing Chriſts ſincere Religion, &c. but alſo and eſpecially for that he had thought to have brought to paſs in murdering alſo our noble Queen that now is. For whatſoever danger it was of death, that ſhe was in, it did (no doubt) proceed from the bloody Biſhop, who was the cauſe thereof. And if it be certain which we have heard, that her Highneſs being in the Tower, a Writ came down from certain of the Council, for her Execution, it is out of controverſie, that wily Wincheſter was the only Dædalus and framer of that Engine, who (no doubt) in that one day had brought this whole Realm into woful ruin, had not the Lords moſt gracious Counſel, through Mr. Bridges, then the Lieutenant, coming in haſte to the Queen, certified her of the matter, and prevented Achitophel's bloody deviſes. For the which, thanks be to the ſame our Lord and Saviour, in the Congregation of all Engliſh Churches, Amen.

Mr. Bridges, Lieutenant, the Lords Organ in ſaving the Lady Elizabeths life.

Of things uncertain, I muſt ſpeak uncertainly, for lack of fuller information, or elſe peradventure they be in the Realm that can ſay more than here I have expreſſed. For as Boner, Story, Thornton, Harpsfield, Dunning, with other, were occupied in putting the poor Branches of Gods Saints to death: ſo this Biſhop for his part bent all his deviſes, and had ſpent all his powder in aſſailing the Root, and in caſting ſuch a Platform (as he himſelf in words at his death is ſaid to confeſs) to build his Popery upon, as he thought ſhould have ſtood for ever and a day. But (as I ſaid before) of things uncertain I can ſpeak but uncertainly. Wherefore as touching the manner and order of his death, how rich he died, what words he ſpake, what little repentance he ſhewed, whether he died with his tongue ſwoln and out of his mouth, as did Thomas Arundel, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or whether he ſtunk before he died, as Cardinal Wolſey did, or whether he died in deſpair, as Latomus and others did, &c. All this I refer either to their reports of whom I heard it, or leave it to the knowledge of them which know it better.

Tho. Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury

Notwithſtanding, here by the way, touching the death of this foreſaid Biſhop, I thought not to over-paſs a certain hear-ſay, which not long ſince came to me by information of a certain worthy and credible Gentlewoman, and another Gentleman of the ſame name and kindred, which Mrs. Munday, being the Wife of one Mr. Munday, Secretary ſometime to the old Lord Thomas, Duke of Northfolk, a preſent witneſs of this that is teſtified, thus openly reported in the houſe of a worſhipful Citizen, bearing yet office in this City, in words and effect as followeth. The ſame day, when as Biſhop Ridley and Mr. Latimer ſuffered at Oxford, being about the 19. day of October, there came into the Houſe of Stephen Gardiner, the old Duke of Norfolk, with the foreſaid Mr. Munday his Secretary above named, reporter hereof. The old aged Duke there waiting and tarrying for his Dinner; the Biſhop being not yet diſpoſed to dine, deferred the time to 3 or 4. of the Clock at Afternoon. At length, about 4. of the Clock cometh his Servant poſting in all poſſible ſpeed from Oxford, bringing intelligence to the Bp. what he had heard and ſeen: of whom the ſaid Biſhop diligently inquiring the truth of the matter, and hearing by his man, that fire moſt certainly was ſet unto them, cometh out rejoycing to the Duke; Now, ſaith he, let us go to dinner. Whereupon, they being ſet down, meat immediately was brought, and the Biſhop began merrily to eat. But what followed? The bloody Tyrant had not eaten a few bits, but the ſudden ſtroke of Gods terrible hand fell upon him in ſuch ſort, as immediately he was taken from the Table, and ſo brought to his Bed, where he continued the ſpace of 15 days in ſuch intolerable anguiſh and torments, that all that mean while, during the 15 days, he could not avoid by Urine, or otherwiſe, any thing that he received: whereby his body being miſerably inflamed within (who had inflamed ſo many good Martyrs before) was brought to a wretched end. And thereof, no doubt, as moſt like it is, came the thruſting out of his tongue from his mouth ſo ſwoln and black, with the inflamation of his body. A ſpectacle worthy to be noted and beholden of all ſuch bloody burning Perſecutors.

Anno 1555.

But to proceed farther in the ſequel of our ſtory: I could name the man (but I abſtain from names) who being then preſent, and a great doer about the ſaid Wincheſter, reported to us concerning the ſaid Biſhop, that when Dr. Day, Biſhop of Chicheſter, came to him, and began to comfort him with words of Gods promiſe, and with the free Juſtification in the Blood of Chriſt our Saviour, repeating the Scriptures to him; Wincheſter hearing that, What my Lord (quoth he) will you open that Gap now? then farewel altogether. To me, and ſuch other in my caſe, you may ſpeak it, but open this Window to the People, then farewel altogether.

Moreover, what Dr. Boner then ſaw in him, or what he heard of him, and what words paſſed between them about the time of this extremity, betwixt him and him be it. If Boner did there behold any thing which might turn to his good example, I exhort him to take it, and to beware in time, as I pray God he may. Here I could bring in the frivolous Epitaph which was made of his death, deviſed of a Papiſt for a Popiſh Biſhop: but I pretermit it, and inſtead thereof I have here inferred certain gatherings out of his Sermons, Words, and Writings, wherein may appear firſt, what an earneſt and vehement Enemy he was to the Pope, if he would have been conſtant in himſelf; then how inconſtantly he varied from himſelf; and thirdly, how, he ſtanding upon a ſingularity of his own wit, varied alſo from other Papiſts in certain points. In the gathering whereof although there be ſome pains, and tedioufneſs alſo in reading; yet I thought not to pretermit the ſame, upon certain Conſiderations, namely, for that ſo many yet to this day there be, which ſtick ſo much to Gardiners wit, learning, and religion, taking him for ſuch a doughty Pillar of the Popes Church. To the intent therefore, that ſuch as hitherto have been deceived by him, may not longer be abuſed therein, if they will either credit his own Works, Words, Sermons, Writings, Diſputations; or elſe will be judged by his own witneſſes of his own party produced, we have here collected ſuch manifeſt Probations, which may notoriouſly declare how effectually firſt he withſtood the Popes Supremacy: and likewiſe afterward may declare manifeſt contrariety and repugnancy of the ſaid Gardiner, firſt with other Writers, and laſtly with himſelf: firſt beginning with his Sermon preached before K. Edward. The ſum and effect of which Sermon briefly collected by Mr. Udal, hereunder followeth to be ſeen.

Matth. 16. Divers judgments of Chriſt.

The Goſpel beginneth, Cum veniſſet Jeſus in partes Cæſareæ Philippi, &c. When Jeſus was come into the parts of Ceſarea a City that Phillippus builded, he asked his Diſciples, and ſaid; Whom do Men ſay that the Son of Man is? They ſaid, Some ſay that thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome that thou art Ely, ſome that thou art Jeremy, or ſome one of the Prophets. He ſaid to them, But whom ſay ye that I am? Then anſwered Simon Peter, and ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God, &c. I cannot have time, I think, to ſpeak of the Goſpel thorowly, for other matters that I have here now to ſay, but I ſhall note unto you ſuch things as I may, and firſt of the diverſity of opinions concerning Chriſt, which were among the People variable: but among this, that is, the Diſciples of Chriſts School, there was no variety, they agreed all together in one truth, and among them there was no variety. For when Peter had for all the reſt, and in the name of all the reſt made his anſwer, that Chriſt was the Son of God, they all confeſſed with one conſent, that he had ſpoken the truth. Yet theſe opinions of Chriſt that the people had of him, though they were ſundry, yet were they honorable and not ſlanderous: for to ſay that Chriſt was Ely, and John the Baptiſt, was honorable. For ſome thought him ſo to be, becauſe he did frankly, ſharply, and openly rebuke vice. They that called him Jeremy, had alſo an honourable opinion of him, and thought him ſo to be, becauſe of his great learning which they perceived in him, and marvelled where he had it. And they that ſaid he was ſome of the Prophets, had an honourable opinion of him, and favoured him, and thought well of him.

But there was another ſort of people that ſpake evil of him, and ſlandered him, and railed on him, ſaying that he was a glutton, and a drinker of Wine, that he had a devil in him, that he was a deciever of the people, that he was a Carpenters Son, as though he were the worſe for his Fathers craft. But of theſe he asked no queſtion: for among theſe none agreed with the other. Wherein ye ſhall note that Man of his own power and ſtrength can nothing do: no, nothing that good is he can do of his own invention or device, but erreth and faileth; when he is left to his own invention, he erreth in his imagination. So proud is Man, and ſo ſtout of his own courage, that he deviſeth nothing well, whenſoever he is left to himſelf without God; and then never do any ſuch agree in any truth, and wander and err in all that they do. As Men of Law if they be asked their opinion in any point touching the Law, ye ſhall not have two of them agree in opinion: in any point touching the Law, ye ſhall not have two of them agree in opinion, one with the other. If there be two or three of them asked their opinion in any matter, if they ſhould anſwer all one thing, they fear leſt they ſhould be ſuppoſed and thought to have no learning. Therefore be they never ſo many of them, they will not agree in their anſwers, but deviſe each Man a ſundry anſwer in any thing that they are asked.

Man can nothing of himſelf.

Diſagreement amongſt Men of Law.

The Philoſophers that were not of Chriſts School erred every one in their vain opinions, and no one of them agreeth with the other.

Diſagreement among Philoſophers.

Yea, Men of ſimplicity, though they mean well, yet being out of Chriſts School, they agree not, but vary in their opinions. As theſe ſimple people here ſpoken of, becauſe they were not perfect Diſciples of Chriſts School, they varied and agreed not in their opinions of Chriſt, though they thought well of him. Some ſaid he was John, ſome Ely, ſome Jeremy, but none made the right anſwer. He that anſwered here, was Simon the Son of Jonas, and he ſaid; Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God.

Diſagreement among ſimple people.

Where ye ſhall note the properties that were in Peter. He was called Simon, which is obedience, and Jonas is a Dove; ſo that in him that is of Chriſts School, muſt be theſe two properties, obedience and ſimplicity. He muſt be humble and innocent as a Dove, that will be of Chriſts School. Pride is a let of Chriſts School: for as the wiſeman ſaith, God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth Grace to the humble and meek. And according to the ſame doth Chriſt in the Goſpel ſay, Oh Father, I confeſs unto thee, that is, I laud and magnifie thee; for that thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe, and haſt opened them unto the little ones. Whereupon ſaith Saint Auguſtine, that the gifts of learning and knowledge of Sciences are no let to Chriſts School, but a furtherance thereunto, if they be well applied and uſed as they ought to be: but he that is proud, and feedeth himſelf with his own conceit and opinion of himſelf, and abuſeth the gifts of God, applying his learning and knowledge to the ſatisfying and following of his own fantaſie, is no right Diſciple of Chriſt, but falleth into error. Dicentes ſe ſapientes eſſe, ſtulti facti ſunt: When they ſaid, and affirmed themſelves to be wiſe, they were made fools.

Simon ſignifieth obedience. Jonas ſignifieth a Dove.

Obedience. Simplicity.

Learning without humility, never findeth Chriſts School.

The Philoſophers had every one a ſect of his own, and had many gay ſentences for the commendation of their opinions, and every Man thought his own opinion to be beſt: but becauſe they applied all to their own pride and glory, and not to the honour of God, nor humbled themſelves as they ought to have done, but followed their own fantaſie, they erred, and fell out of the way, and were not of Chriſts School: and all that have gone out of Chriſts School, pride hath brought them out of it; and ſuch as have not entred, have kept themſelves out of it with pride likewiſe: therefore all ſuch as will be Scholars of Chriſts School and Diſcipline, muſt be humble and meek; otherwiſe, Dicentes ſe ſapientes eſſe, ſtulti facti ſunt.

Humility the Porter of Chriſts School.

He that cannot learn this leſſon of Peter, and humbly confeſs with Peter, that Chriſt is the Son, of the living God, is no Scholar of Chriſts School, be he otherwiſe never ſo well learned, never ſo well ſeen in other ſciences. But now concerning the anſwer of Peter, Matthew here in this place ſaith he anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus filius Dei vivi. Saint Luke ſaith he anſwered Tu es Chriſtus Dei. And Saint Mark ſaith he anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus. But in all that is no variety: for to ſay Chriſtus filius Dei vivi, and to ſay Chriſtus Dei, and to ſay Chriſtus, is in effect all one, and no diverſity in it, for Chriſtus alone is the whole, and he that confeſſeth thorowly Chriſt, is thorowly a Chriſtian Man, and doth therein confeſs him to be the Lord and Saviour of the World. But now we muſt conſider what Chriſt is. Chriſt was ſent to be our Meſſias, our Saviour: he was ſent to be our Biſhop and alſo our Sacrifice: he was ſent from the Trinity to be our Mediator between God and us, and to reconcile us to the favour of God the Father, he was the Biſhop that offered for our Sins, and the Sacrifice that was offered: and, as he is our Biſhop, ſo is he our mean to paciſie God for us, for that was the office of a Biſhop, to Sacrifice for the Sins of the people, and to make interceſſion for the people; and as he was our Sacrifice, ſo was he our reconciliation to God again.

The office of Chriſt declared.

But we muſt confeſs and believe him thorowly I ſay: for as he was our Biſhop then, ſo is it he that ſtill keepeth us in favour with God: and like as his Sacrifice then made was ſufficient as to deliver us from our Sins, and to bring us in favour with God; ſo to continue us in the ſame favour of God, he ordained a perpetual remembrance of himſelf, he ordained himſelf for a memory of himſelf at his laſt Supper, when he inſtituted the Sacrament of the Altar, not for another redemption, as though the World needed a new redemption from Sin, but that we might thorowly remember his moſt holy paſſion, he inſtituted the Sacrament by his moſt holy Word, ſaying: This is my Body, which word is ſufficient to prove the Sacrament, and maketh ſufficiently for the ſubſtance thereof. And this daily Sacrifice he inſtituted to be continued among Chriſtian Men, not for need of another redemption or ſatisfaction for the Sins of the World, for that was ſufficiently performed by the Sacrifice of his Body and Blood done upon the Croſs; neither that that he is now our Biſhop for need of any further Sacrifice to be made for ſin, but to (a) continue us in the remembrance of his paſſion ſuffered for us, to make us ſtrong in believing the fruit of his paſſion, to make us diligent in thankſ-giving for the benefit of his paſſion, to eſtabliſh our Faith, and to make it ſtrong in acknowledging the efficacy of his Death and Paſſion ſuffered for us. And this is the true underſtanding of the Maſs, not for another redemption, but that we may be ſtrong in believing the benefits of Chriſts Death and Blood-ſhedding for us upon the Croſs. And this it is that we muſt believe of Chriſt, and believe it thorowly: and therefore by your patience, as Peter made his confeſſion, ſo will I make confeſſion, wherein by your Majeſties leave and ſufferance, I will plainly declare what I think of the ſtate of the Church of England at this day, how I like it, and what I think of it.

(a) Note here Winchester contrary to himſelf: for before he ſaid the Sacrament was ordained to keep us in the favour of God, and now he ſaith it is to keep us in remembrance of his paſſion.

What Winchester thinketh of the Church of England.

What Winchester thinketh of the Maſs.

Where I ſaid of the Maſs, that it was a Sacrifice ordained to make us the more ſtrong in the faith and remembrance of Chriſts paſſion, and for commending unto God the Souls of ſuch as be dead in Chriſt (for theſe two things are the ſpecial cauſes why the Maſs was inſtituted) the Parliament very well ordained Maſs to be kept; and becauſe we ſhould be the more ſtrong in the Faith and Devotion towards God, it was well done of the Parliament, for moving the people more and more to devotion, to ordain that the Sacrament ſhould be received in both kinds: Therefore I ſay that the Act of Parliament for receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar in both kinds, was well made.

Winchester allowed the Sacrament in both kinds.

I ſay alſo, that the Proclamation which was made, That no Man ſhould unreverently ſpeak of the Sacrament, or otherwiſe ſpeak of it than Scripture teacheth them, was well made. For this Proclamation ſtoppeth the Mouths of all ſuch as will unreverently ſpeak of the Sacrament: for in Scripture there is nothing to be found that maketh any thing againſt the Sacrament, but all maketh with it. Wherefore if they were the Children of obedience, they would not uſe any unreverend talk againſt the Sacrament, nor Blaſpheme the Holy Sacrament. For no word of the Scripture maketh any thing againſt it.

The opinion of Winchester of Chauntry Maſſes.

But here it may be ſaid unto me, Why Sir: is this your opinion? It is good you ſpeak plainly in this matter, and halt nothing, but declare your mind plainly, without any colouring or covert ſpeaking. The Act for the diſſolving and ſuppreſſing of the Chaunteries ſeemeth to make againſt the Maſs, how like you that Act? What ſay you of it? or what would you ſay of it, if you were alone? I will ſpeak what I think of it, I will uſe no colourable or covert words, I will not uſe a deviſed ſpeech for a time, and afterward (b) go from it again. If Chaunteries were abuſed by applying the Maſs for the ſatisfaction of ſin, or to bring Men to Heaven, or to take away ſin, or to make Men of wicked juſt, I like the Act well, and they might well be diſſolved, for the Maſs was not inſtituted for any ſuch purpoſe: yet nevertheleſs for them that were in them (I ſpeak now, as in the cauſe of the poor) it were well done that they were provided of livings. The Act doth graciouſly provide for them during their lives, and I doubt not but that your Majeſty, and the Lords of your moſt Honorable Council have willed and taken order, that they ſhould be well looked unto; but yet how they ſhall be uſed at the hands of under officers, God knoweth; full hardly, I fear. But as for the Chaunteries themſelves, if there were any ſuch (c) abuſe in them concerning the Maſs, it is no matter if they be taken away.

(b) Whether ye did or not, let Maries time judge. Note Winchester doth not allow Maſs for ſatisfaction to bring Men to Heaven to take away Sin, or to make Men juſt, &c.

(c) As there was indeed Maſſes of Scala Cœli. Winchester craftily ſpeaketh againſt the abuſe of the Maſs not againſt the Maſs.

King Henry the Eighth, a Noble and Wiſe Prince, not without great pain maintained the Maſs, and yet in his Doctrine it was confeſſed that Maſſes of Scala Cœli were not to be uſed, ne allowed, becauſe they did pervert the right uſe and inſtitution of the Maſs. For when Men add unto the Maſs an opinion of Satisfaction, or of a new redemption, then do they put it to another uſe than it was ordained for. I that allow Maſs ſo well, and I that allow praying for the dead (as indeed the dead are of Chriſtian Charity to be prayed for) yet can agree with the Realm in that matter of putting down Chaunteries.

Winchester againſt Chaunteries.

But yet ye would ſay unto me, There be fewer Maſſes by putting away the Chaunteries. So were there when Abbeys were diſſolved: So be there when ye unite many Churches in one. But this is no injury nor prejudice to the Maſs; it conſiſteth not in the number nor in the multitude, but in the thing it ſelf: ſo that the decay of the Maſs by taking away the Chaunteries, is anſwered by the Abbeys. But yet I would have it conſidered for the perſons that are in them. I ſpeak of the poor Mens livings.

Anno 1555.

I have now declared what I think of the Act of Parliament made for the receiving of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in both kinds. Ye have my mind and opinion concerning a Proclamation that came forth for the ſame Act, and I have ſhewed my mind therein even plainly as I think, and I have ever been agreeable to this point, I have oftentimes reaſoned in it, I have ſpoken and alſo written in it, both beyond the Seas, and on this ſide the Seas; my Books be abroad, which I cannot unwrite again. I was ever of this opinion, that it might be received in both kinds, and it was a conſtitution Provincial, ſcarce two hundred years agone, made by Peckam, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that it ſhould be received in both kinds, or at leaſtwiſe in Eccleſiis majoribus, that is, in the great Churches, for in the ſmaller Churches it was not thought to be ſo expedient. Thus have I ever thought of this matter, I have never been of other mind, nor have I changed my Conſcience, but I have obeyed and followed the order of the Realm, and I pray you to obey orders as I have obeyed, that we may all be the Children of obedience.

Winchester alloweth the Proclamation ſet forth for receiving in both kinds.

It was a conſtitution provincial of Peckam to receive in both kinds, in Eccleſiis majoribus: in ſmaller Churches it was thought not ſo expedient.

Now I will return to the Text. When Simon had anſwered, Tu es Chriſtus, filius Dei vivi; Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God: Then Chriſt ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Barjona, for Fleſh and Blood have not opened that unto thee, but my Father which is in Heaven; and I ſay unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Bleſſed art thou (ſaith he) for Fleſh and Blood have not opened that unto thee. For otherwiſe in John, Andrew told of Chriſt, and ſaid, I have found the Meſſias, which is Chriſt. But that is not enough. He that ſhall confeſs Chriſt, muſt have an inward teaching, and muſt be ſpiritually taught by the Father of Heaven, for Andrews Confeſſion was nothing but a carnal Confeſſion, and ſuch a one as any other might have made by Natural Reaſon: but the Confeſſion of Peter was above reaſon of Man: for Chriſt was there a very Man, and Peters Eyes told him that he was a Man, and nothing elſe; but he was inwardly taught by the Father of Heaven, and had a ſecret knowledge given him from Heaven, not by Fleſh and Blood, that is to ſay, by Mans reaſon, but inwardly by the Father of Heaven: and ſeeing this was above reaſon, it is a marvellous thing that reaſon ſhould be uſed to impugn faith, which is not within the precinct of carnal Men, and ſuch as uſe groſs reaſon.

Matth. 16.

John 1. Outward confeſſing without inward teachings is not enough.

But Peter had another reaſon inwardly taught him, and becauſe he could his leſſon, Chriſt gave him a new name: for Petra is a ſtone, a new name of a Chriſtian Man, for upon this Confeſſion of thy Faith, here I will build my Church, that is, I will ſtabliſh all thoſe which I intend to gather unto thee; Et Dæmones non prævalebunt adverſus eam, that is, and the Devils ſhall not prevail againſt it: for he that with a good Heart, and ſure Faith confeſſeth this, he is ſure from all evil: this World nor Sathan can do him no harm.

Petrus what it ſignifieth. Note what Winchest. here ſaith, That upon the Confeſſion of Peter the Church is builded.

But now for a farther Declaration, it is a marvellous thing, that upon theſe words the Biſhop of Rome, ſhould found his Supremacy: for whether it be ſuper Petram, or Petrum, all is one matter, it maketh nothing at all for the purpoſe to make a foundation of any ſuch Supremacy. For otherwiſe (when Peter ſpake carnally to Chriſt as in the ſame Chapter a little following) Sathan was his name, where Chriſt ſaid, go after me Sathan: ſo that the name of Peter is no Foundation for the Supremacy, but as it is ſaid in Scripture Fundati eſt is ſuper fundamentum Apoſtolorum & Prophetarum, that is, by participation (for Godly participation giveth names of things) he might be called the Head of the Church, as the Head of the River is called the Head, becauſe he was the firſt that made this Confeſſion of Chriſt, which is not an Argument for dignity, but for the quality that was in the Man. For the firſt Man is not ever-

S. Gardiner againſt the Popes Supremacy. Peter called Sathan. Peters name no Foundation for Supremacy. How Peter might be called the Head of the Church as is the Head of a River.

Anno 1555.

A heae-man is not always of dignity a-ther of quality.

evermore the beſt. The Head-man of a Queſt is not always the beſt Man in the Queſt, but is choſen to be the Head-Man for ſome other quality that is in him. Vertue may allure Men, ſo that the inferiour perſon in dignity may be the better in place, as the King ſometime chooſeth a meaner Man to be of his Council, of whom he hath a good opinion, yet is the King the King ſtill. And in ſome caſe the King of England might ſend to Rome, and if the Biſhop of Rome were a Man of ſuch Wiſdom, Vertue and Learning, that he were able in matter of controverſie concerning Religion, to ſet an unity in the Church of England, the King might well enough ſend to him for his Counſel and help, and yet ſhould not in ſo doing give the Biſhop of Rome any ſuperiority over the King. For if a King be ſick, he will have the beſt Phyſitian; if he have war, he will have the beſt Captain, and yet are not theſe the ſuperiors, but the inferiors.

Tu es Petrus maketh nothing for the B. of Rome.

A Schoolmaſter is a Subject, a Phyſitian is a Subject, a Captain is a Subject, Counſellors are Subjects, yet do theſe order and direct the King. Wherefore leaving the Biſhop of Rome, this I ſay to declare of what opinion I am of. I do not now ſpeak what I could ſay. I have ſpoken beyond the Seas, I have written, my Books be abroad. But this is not the place here, I ſay that this place maketh nothing for the Biſhop of Rome, but for Chriſt only, for none can put Aliud fundamentum niſi id quod poſitum eſt, qui eſt Chriſtus Jeſus.

Winchester againſt the pope, againſt abbeys and Images. Maſter of Ceremonies. Winchesters opinion of Ceremonies.

But now to go forth declaring my mind, in my time had come many alterations. Firſt a great alteration it was to renounce the Biſhop of Romes authority, and I was one that ſtood in it. A great alteration it was that Abbeys were diſſolved. A great alteration it was that Images were pulled down: and to all theſe I condeſcended, and yet have I been counted a maintainer of ſuperſtition, and have been called a Maſter of Ceremonies and of outward things, and I have bin noted to take that Religion which conſiſteth in outward things, as though he were a right Chriſtian that fulfilled the outward Ceremonies, whereof I promiſed to declare my Conſcience, and ſo will I, and how I have eſteemed Ceremonies, and that I have never been of other opinion than I am concerning Ceremonies, and mine opinion I have gathered of Auguſtine, and Jerome, ancient fathers and Doctors of the Church.

Ceremonies, how, and when they are abuſed. Ceremonies ſervant to Men, not Men to Ceremonies.

Ceremonies ſerve to move Men to ſerve God, and as long as they be uſed for that purpoſe, they may be well uſed in the Church: but when Man maketh himſelf ſervant to them, and not them to ſerve him, then be our Ceremonies brought to an abuſe. If by over much familiarity of them Men abuſe them, they do evil. For we muſt not ſerve Creatures, but Deo. We had Monkery, Nunnery, Friery, of a wonderous number, much variety of garments, variety of devices in dwelling, many ſundry orders and faſhions in moving of the Body. Theſe things were firſt ordained to admoniſh them of their duty to God, to labour for the neceſſity of the poor, and to ſpare from their own bellies to the poor; and therefore was their fare ordained and prepared. And becauſe they abuſed theſe things, and ſet them in an higher place than they ought to do, not taking monition thereby the better to ſerve God, but eſteeming perfection to conſiſt in them, they were diſſolved, their Houſes and Garments were taken away:

Vow of chaſtity.

But one thing King Henry would not take away, that was the vow of Chaſtity. The vow of Obedience he converted to himſelf; the vow of Chaſtity he willeth ſtill to remain with them.

Winchester never againſt the taking down of Images, being abuſed with Idolatry.

We had many Images whereto Pilgrimages were done, and many Tombs that Men uſed to viſit, by reaſon whereof they fell in a fancy of Idolatry and ſuperſtition, above the things that they might have been taken for; and becauſe they had not the uſe that they were ordained for, they were left. When Men put the Images in a higher place that they ſerved for, then were they taken clean away: as give a Child a gay Book to learn upon, and then if he gaze upon the gorgeouſneſs of his Book, and learn not his leſſon, according to the intent that that Book was given for, the Book is taken away from him again: So the Images, when Men deviſed and fell to have them in higher place and eſtimation than they were firſt ſet up in the Church for, then they might be taken away: and I was never of other mind, nor ever had other opinion of them. Divers things there be in the Church which be in the liberty of the Ruler to order as he ſeeth cauſe; and he that is Ruler, may either let them ſtand, or elſe may cauſe them to be taken away.

Two manner of reformations, one where the things cannot be taken away, but the abuſe: the other where both the things and the abuſe may be taken away. To take away all Images lyeth in the liberty of the Rulers. If abuſing of Images by Idolatry be cauſe ſufficient to take away Images why did Winchester hold with them before? If it be not cauſe ſufficient, why doth he now grant to the taking of them away, being no more wantonly abuſed, than they were before time?

There be two manner of reformations. We have had of both ſorts. There be things in the Church, the which if they be abuſed, may not be taken away. As for Baptiſm, if it be abuſed, there may not another thing be put in the place of it, but the thing muſt be reformed, and brought to the right uſe again. Alſo Preaching, if it be abuſed, may not be taken away, but muſt be reformed, and brought to the right uſe: but there be other things uſed in the Church, in which the Rulers have liberty either to reform them or to take them away. And becauſe it was an eaſier way to take them away, than to bring them to the right uſe that they were ordained for, they were all clean taken away, and ſo they might be. Yea ſir, will ye ſay, but ye have maintained and defended them, and have Preached againſt ſuch perſons as deſpiſed them. It is truth I have Preached againſt the deſpiſers of them, and have ſaid, that Images might be ſuffered and uſed in the Church as Lay-Mens Books, yet I never otherwiſe defended them, but to be uſed for ſuch purpoſe as they were firſt ſet up in the Church for, but now that men be waxed wanton, they are clean taken away, wherein our Religion is no more touched, that when Books were taken away for abuſing of them.

There was an order taken for Books not to be uſed, wherein ſome might have ſaid, the Books are good, and I know how to uſe them, I may therefore uſe them well enough. I will therefore uſe them though they be forbidden: But if thou have any charity, thou oughteſt to be contented rather to have them clean taken away, than to declare thy ſelf to have another opinion then thou oughteſt to have.

As touching Ceremonies, I eſteem them all as Paul eſteemeth them, things indifferent, where he ſaith, Regnum Dei non eſca & potus. So of Ceremonies. Nevertheleſs we have time, place, and number, as a certain number of Pſalms to be ſaid at times, which may be done without ſuperſtition; but theſe things muſt ſerve us, and not we ſerve them. Yet if an order be ſet in them by ſuch as have power, we muſt follow it, and we muſt obey the rulers that appoint ſuch time, place, and number to be kept. Ye may not ſay, if the time will ſerve me, then I will come an hour after. No ſir, ye muſt keep this time, and this hour, becauſe it is ſo appointed by the Rulers, not for the things, but for the order that is ſet. I have been ever of this opinion.

Taking away of Palms and Candles.

We had Palms and Candles taken away, which things may indifferently have either of the two Reformations above ſaid. When they were in place, they ſhould have put Men in remembrance of their duty and devotion towards God, but becauſe they were abuſed, they were and might be taken away. But the Religion of Chriſt is not in theſe exerciſes, and therefore in taking away of them the Religion of Chriſt is nothing touched nor hindered. But Men muſt in ſuch things be comformable, not for the Ceremony, but for obedience ſake. Saint Paul ſaith, that we ſhould rebuke every Brother that walketh inordinately. I have told you mine Opinion; and my Conſcience telleth me that I have ſpoken plainly, that ye may know what I am, and that ye may not be deceived in me, nor be ſlandered in me, nor make any further ſearch to know my heart.

B. Gardiner ſpeaketh according to his unconſtant Conſcience.

Winchester liketh well the Communion. B. Gardiner liketh well King Edwards proceedings. B. Gardiner miſliketh the Preachers in K. Edwards time, and why: B. Gardiner compareth Preachers to Poſts carrying truth in their Letters, and lies in their Mouths.

I like well the Communion, becauſe it provoketh Men more and more to devotion. I like well the Proclamation, becauſe it ſtoppeth the Mouths of all ſuch as unreverently ſpeak or rail againſt the Sacrament. I like well the reſt of the Kings Majeſties proceedings concerning the Sacrament. I have now told you what I like. But ſhall I ſpeak nothing of that I miſlike? ye will then ſay I ſpeak not plainly. I will therefore ſhew you my Conſcience plainly.

I miſlike thoſe Preachers which Preach by the Kings Licence, and thoſe Readers which by the Kings Permiſſion and ſufferance do read open Lectures, do openly and blaſphemouſly talk againſt the Maſs, and againſt the Sacrament. And to whom may I liken ſuch Readers and Preachers? I may liken them unto Poſts, for the Proverb ſaith, that Poſts do bear truth in their

Letters

Letters, and lies in their mouths: and ſo do they, and to ſpeak ſo againſt the Sacrament, it is the moſt marvellous matter that ever I ſaw or heard of. I would wiſh therefore that there were a ſtay and an order in this behalf, and that there might be but one order or rule; for as the Poet ſaith, (I may uſe the Verſe of a Poet well enough, for ſo doth Paul of the great Poet)

Οὐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, εἷς κοίρανος ἔστω.

And let no man of his own head begin matters, nor go before the King. They call it going before the King, and ſuch make themſelves Kings. Well, what miſliketh me elſe?

Bp. Gardiner miſliketh the breaking of a vow of Chaſtity.

It miſliketh me that Prieſts, and men that vowed chaſtity, ſhould openly marry, and avow it openly: which is a thing that ſince the beginning of the Church hath not been ſeen at any time, that men that have been admitted to any Eccleſiaſtical Adminiſtration ſhould marry. We read of married Prieſts, that is to ſay, of married men choſen to be Prieſts and Miniſters in the Church. And in Epiphanius we read, that ſome ſuch for neceſſity were winked at. But that men being Prieſts already ſhould marry, was never yet ſeen in Chriſts Church from the beginning of the Apoſtles time. I have written in it, and ſtudied for it; and the very ſame places that are therein

Bp. Gardiner againſt marriage of Prieſts.

alledged to maintain the marriage of Prieſts, being diligently read, ſhall plainly confound them that maintain your Prieſts to marry, or at the fartheſt within two lines after.

Thus have I ſhewed my opinion in order, proceeding from the Inferiours, and in order proceeding from the higher Powers. And thus I have (as I truſt) plainly declared my ſelf, without any covering or counterfeiting. And I beſeech your moſt excellent Majeſty to eſteem and take me as I am, and not to be ſlandered in me; for I have told you the plain truth as it is, and I have opened my Conſcience unto you. I have not played the Poſt with you, to carry truth in my Letters, and lies in my Mouth: for I would not for all the world make a lye in this place; but I have diſcloſed the plain truth as it lieth in my mind. And thus I commit your moſt excellent Majeſty, and all your moſt honourable Counſellors, with the reſt of the devout audience here preſent, unto God. To whom be all honour, laud, and glory, world without end.

Thus having compriſed the ſum and chief purpoſe of his Sermon, with other ſuch matter above ſtoried, wherein may appear the double-fac'd doings of this Biſhop in matters of Religion: now for the more fortification of that which hath been ſaid, if any ſhall deny this foreſaid Sermon, or any part thereof to be true, to confirm therefore the ſame, we will here adjoyn certain brief notes and ſpecialties in manner of a ſummary Table, collected as well out of the Teſtimonies and Depoſitions of his own Friends and Servants, and other which were ſworn truly to declare their knowledge in this behalf, as alſo out of his own Writings and Works agreeing with the ſame. In all which foreſaid Allegations it may remain notorious and famous to all men, how, in what points, and how far the ſaid Biſhop of Wincheſter agreed with the Reformation of Religion received, not only in King Henries, but alſo in King Edwards days.

Bp. Gardiner agreeing to reformation of Religion, how far, and wherein.

And becauſe it would be long, and a double labour to repeat all the words and teſtimonial ſayings of every witneſs particularly, the ſame being expreſſed ſufficiently in our firſt impreſſion before; it ſhall therefore ſuffice by quotations briefly to aſſign the place to the Reader, where he may find all thoſe Points of Reformation, whereunto the ſaid Biſhop Gardiner fully agreed with the Doctrine now received, and firſt in withſtanding the Popes Supremacy, as is hereunder noted.

The Popes Supremacy impugned by Biſhop Gardiner.

Places by B. Gardiners Books and Sermons expreſſed, where he impugneth the Popes Supremacy.

FIrſt, as touching the Confeſſion and Judgment of Stephen Gardiner againſt the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, read in his Book De vera Obedientia, fol. 6.

Item, Concerning the Diſputations and Defenſions of Biſhop Gardiner at Lovane, againſt the Popes Supremacy, read in our firſt Impreſſion, page 802. alſo in this preſent Volume. Anno 1555.

Item, How the ſaid Biſhop Gardiner in his Sermons and Preachings, as where he expoundeth the place (Tu es Petrus) nothing at all to make for the Authority of the Romiſh Biſhop, marvelling how the Pope could uſurp ſo much to take up that place to build upon, when Chriſt had taken it up before to build his Church, read in the old Book, pag. 845. col. 1. p. 647. col. 1. p. 846. col. 1. and the Depoſitions of Dr. Redman, p. 853. col. 1.

Read in the firſt Impreſſion of Acts and Monuments.

Item, How the Confeſſion of Peter was the Confeſſion of all the Apoſtles, like as the Bleſſing given to Peter pertained as well to all the Apoſtles as to Peter, read ibid. page 847. col. 1.

Item, That the place, Paſce oves meas, was not ſpecial to Peter alone, but general to all the Apoſtles. Alſo that the Greek Church did never receive the ſaid Biſhop of Rome for their Univerſal Head, read in the ſame Book, p. 847. col. 1. p. 836. col. 2.

Item, That the Authority of the Biſhop of Rome was not received of the moſt part of Chriſtian Princes, read the Depoſitions of Sir Thomas Smith, page 827. col. 2.

Item, How the ſaid Biſhop Gardiner would not grant that the ſaid Authority was received generally. Ibid. p. 827 col 2.

Item, That the Church was builded upon Chriſts Faith, and not upon Peter, read the Depoſitions of Robert Willanton, p. 836. col. 2.

The Headman of Enqueſt.

And though Peter was called Princeps Apoſtolorum, that was nothing elſe, but like as it is in an Enqueſt, where the Fore-man, or Head-man is not ſo called, becauſe he is beſt or chiefeſt of that Company, but becauſe he ſpeaketh firſt, read in the Depoſition of Mr. Baſſet, p. 850. col. 2. p. 836. col. 2.

Item, That when the Keys were given, they were given generally to all the Apoſtles, read the Depoſitions of Robert Willanton, p. 836. col. 2.

Item, How the ſaid Biſhop taketh away all ſuch Scriptures which are thought to ſerve for the Popes Supremacy, as Super hanc Petram, Paſce oves meas, Princeps Apoſtolorum, &c. proving that they ſerve nothing for his Authority, read likewiſe in the ſame Book in the Depoſitions of Mr. Baſſet, his own Servant, p. 850. col. 2.

Item, How the ſaid Biſhop in his Book De vera Obedientia, did not only write againſt the Popes Supremacy, but alſo did defend the ſame at Lovane, p. 802. And moreover, in his Sermons did alledge and preach the ſame, p. 474. col. 2. and that alſo Vehemently, p. 850. col. 2. l. 50. Pithily, p. 846. col. 1. l. 31.

Wincheſters Vehement, Pithy, Earneſt, forward againſt the Pope.

Earneſtly, p. 843. col. 1. l. 75.
Very earneſtly, p. 843. col. 1. l. 44.
Very forwardly, p. 827. col. 2. l. 82.

And not only did ſo vehemently, pithily, earneſtly, and forwardly preach himſelf againſt the Popes Supremacy, but alſo did cauſe Mr. White, then Schoolmaſter, after Biſhop of Wincheſter, to make certain Verſes extolling the Kings Supremacy againſt the uſurped Power of the Pope, incouraging alſo his Scholars to do the like, read the Depoſitions of John White, Schoolmaſter of Wincheſter, p. 845. col. 2.

Wincheſter caused Verſes to be written againſt the Pope.

Item, How he for the ſpace of fourteen years together preached againſt the Popes Supremacy in divers Sermons, and eſpecially in one Sermon before King Henry, read the Depoſitions of John Potinger, p. 844. col. 1. l. 1.

Wincheſter 14 years preached againſt the Popes Authority.

Places noted wherein Biſhop Gardiner impugned Ceremonies, Monkery, Images, Chaunteries, &c.

Item, For Ceremonies and Images which were abuſed, to be taken away by Publick Authority, he did well allow it, as a Child to have his Book taken from him, when he abuſeth it, or delighteth only in the golden Cover. Read in the foreſaid old Book the Depoſitions of Chriſtopher Malton, p. 846. col. 2. p. 849. col. 2. p. 841. col. 1.

Wincheſter againſt Ceremonies.

Item, The Diſſolving of Monaſteries and Religious Houſes, he alloweth and granteth that they were juſtly ſuppreſſed. Read the Depoſitions of Dr. Weſton, p. 845. col. 1. p. 837. col. 1. p. 851. col. 1.

Con-

Anno 1555.

Concerning Images being by King Edwards injunctions abolished, how the said Bishop exhorted the people in his Sermons to be contented therewith, read the depositions of W. Lorking page 840. col. 1.

Winchester against Images abused.

Monks and Friers he calleth flattering knaves read the depositions of Sir Thomas Smith, page 827. col. 2.

Winch. against Monks and Friers.

Friers he never liked in all his life, page 827. col. 2. Monks he counted but belly-gods. Ibid. page 827. col. 2.

Winch. against the going about to St. Nicholas, &c.

The going about of S. Nicholas, S. Katherine, and St. Clement, he affirmeth to be Childrens toys. Ibid page 827. col. 2.

Winch. against Chauntery Obits.

The taking away or transposing of Chauntry Obits, he referreth to the arbitrement of the politick Rulers, granting that if they did dissolve them, it might well be done. Read the depositions of Master Basset, his own servant, page 850. col. 2.

Item, He wisheth them to be committed to a better use, and that Monasteries were justly taken away. Read the depositions of George Bullock, page 847. col. 1.

Winch. would not that a Man should be addicted to days, hours, number, time, and place, &c.

The observing of days, hours, number, time, and place, if they be orderly and publickly commanded by the Rulers, it is but to set the Church in an outward and publick order; but if a Man inwardly and privately be addicted to the same, thinking his prayer otherwise not available, but by observing thereof, it is an errour. Read the depositions of Doctor Redman, page 853. col. 2. page 854.

Winch. liketh the Communion.

The Communion set out by King Edward he liketh well, Ibid. page 833. col. 2 p. 854.

Winch. liketh the Book of common service.

The Book of Common Service he was content both to keep himself, and cause it to be kept of others. Read the depositions of the Duke of Somerset, page 818. col. 2.

Winch. exhorteth to come and hear the Homilies read.

For the Homilies, he exhorted the people in his Preaching to come to the Church to hear them. Read the depositions of M. Potinger his own servant, page 843. col. 1.

In sum, to all Injunctions, Statutes, and Proclamations set forth by the King and Superiour powers, he yielded and granted. Read in the depositions of George Bullock, page 847. col. 2.

Winch. caused Cardinal Pool to be expelled France.

Item, Cardinal Pool coming to the French King, to stir him up against England, Winchester caused him to be expelled out of France. Witness Cuthbert B. of Duresme, p. 828. col. 2.

Winch. sworn and forsworn.

Item, The said Winchester sworn against the Pope by express clauses in his proxy. Read in the depositions of John Cook, Regist. pag. 160. col. 1. lin. 13.

Now (gentle Reader) lay these writings, preachings, and doings of this Bishop in the days of King Henry and King Edward, with his doings in Queen Maries time, and thou shalt see how variable he was, how inconstant and contrary to himself, how perjured and false, and far differing from that which he was reported to be in a certain English Book set out in Queen Maries time, which saith that there were three only in England, whose conscience had been never distained in Religion: of whom he falsly saith, the foresaid Bishop of Winchester was one.

The Book of Jo. Elder, sent into Scotland.

Although Bishop Gardiner in granting to these points of Religion (as ye have heard) and other some again denying, could not therefore deserve the name and fame of a perfect Christian: yet notwithstanding, if he had continued in his judgment still, and been constant in himself, he might have won more commendation both with God and Men. But as soon as the time began to alter, he likewise altering with the time, was so far changed from that he seemed, that neither he agreed with other Papists, nor yet with himself, as Doctor Ridley in certain Treatises hath noted well of him: wherein as in a glass may be seen the manifest contrariety and repugnance in him, not only from the truth of Gods Blessed Word, but also how the said Bishop standing so much in singularity by himself, neither agreeth with other his fellow writers of his own faction, nor yet fully accordeth with himself in certain cases of the Sacrament, as the foresaid Doctor Ridley in examining his words and works, hath well set out in this table hereunder ensuing.

Winch. neither agreeth with the Protestants in the Gospel, neither in Popery with the Papists, neither with himself.

Certain matters wherein Step. Gardiner, Bishop of Wint. varieth from other of the Papists, touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

OTher Catholicks say, that the Body of Christ is made of Bread. Thomas vult, ex pane, non de pane, parte tertia, q. 75. art. 4. Winchest. saith, that the Body of Christ is not made of the matter of Bread, nor ever was so taught, but is made present of Bread, page 89. lin. 8. p. 228. l. 44.

But he answered so confusedly, that the Reader cannot understand him, be he never so attentive. Smith saith; Thus I say, that the Consecrated Wine turneth not into Vinegar, nor the Consecrated Bread Mouldeth, nor ingendreth worms, nor is burned, nor receiveth into it any poyson, as long as Christs Body and Blood are under the forms of them, which do abide there so long as the natural qualities and properties of Bread and Wine tarry there in their natural disposition and condition, and the Bread and Wine might be naturally there, if they had not been changed into Christs Body and Blood, and also as long as the host and Consecrated Wine are apt to be received of Man, and no longer, but go and depart thence by Gods power as it pleaseth him; and then a new substance is made of God, which turneth into Vinegar, ingendereth Worms, Mouldeth, is burned, feedeth Rats and Mice, receiveth poyson, &c. fol. 64. and fol. 105.

16. Winchester saith, every yea containeth a nay in it naturally: So as whosoever saith, this is Bread, saith it is no Wine. For in the rule of Common Reason, the grant of one substance is the denial of another. And therefore reason hath these conclusions thorowly; whatsoever is Bread is no Wine; whatsoever is Wine, is no Milk, and so forth. So Christ saying; This is my Body, saith it is no Bread, p. 291. lin. 22. and page 300. lin. 17. Smith saith, that a Boy which hath only Learned Sophistry, will not dispute so fondly fol. 77.

The Mass taketh his satisfaction by the devotion of the Priest and people, and not of the things offered.

1 Proposition.

THe Body of Christ in the Sacrament is not made of Bread, but is made present of Bread pag. 89. l. 9, &c. and pag. 228. lin. 44. Confutation against Cranmer.

Contradiction.

Of Bread is made the Body of Christ, pag. 388. lin. 42.

The Catholick Faith hath from the beginning confessed truly Christs intent, to make Bread his Body, pag. 29. l. 2. Confutation.

And of many Breads is made one Body of Christ, pag. 167. l. 2. Confutation.

And Faith sheweth me, that Bread is the Body of Christ, that is to say, made the Body of Christ, pag. 333. l. 23. 25. Confutation.

2 Proposition.

Christ gave that he made of Bread, page 292. lin. 34. Christ spake plainly; This is my Body, making demonstration of the Bread, when he said, This is my Body. In the Devils Sophistry, 27.

Contradiction.

The Demonstration (this) may be referred to the invisible substance, p. 120. l. 41. Confutation.

The Verb (is) was of the Body and of his Blood, and not of the Bread and Wine, page 284. line 43.

When Christ said; This is my Body, the truth of the literal sense hath an absurdity in carnal reason, pag. 157. l. 34. Confutation. Ann. 1555.

3 Proposition. What can be more evidently spoken of the presence of Christs Natural Body and Blood in the most Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, than is in these words; This is my Body? In the Devils Sophistry, fol. 51. Contradiction.

4 Proposition. Where the Body of Christ is, there is whole Christ, God and Man, and when we speak of Christs Body, we must understand a true Body, which hath both form and quantity, p. 81. l. 5. Mar. Ant. object. 77. Smith, fol. 105.

And he is present in the Sacrament, as he is in Heaven, p. 161. l. 4. &c. Confutation.

We believe simply the substance of Christs Body to be in the Sacrament, without drawing away of the accidents, or adding, p. 397. l. 41. Confutation.

Contradiction. Christ is not present in the Sacrament after the manner of quantity, but under the form and quantities of Bread and Wine, p. 81. l. 89. and pag. 101. l. 22.

5 Proposition. In such as receive the Sacrament worthily, Christ dwelleth corporally, and naturally, and carnally, page 190. line 7. pag. 197. line 27. pag. 217. line 10.

Contradiction. The manner of Christs being in the Sacrament is not corporal, not carnal, not natural, not sensible, not perceptible, but only spiritual, page 181. line 18. &c. and line 25. page 223. line 21. Confutation.

6 Proposition. We receive Christ in the Sacrament of his Flesh and Blood, if we receive him worthily, page 190. line 7. pag. 197. line 27. Confutation.

When an unrepentant Sinner receiveth the Sacrament, he hath not Christs Body within him, pag. 256 l. 18. Confutation.

He that eateth verily the Flesh of Christ, is by nature in Christ, and Christ is naturally in him, page 18. l. 51. Confutation.

Contradiction. An evil Man in the Sacrament receiveth indeed Christs very Body, page 18. l. 24, 25.

Evil Men eat verily the Flesh of Christ, p. 261. l. 24, 25, &c. Confutation.

7 Proposition. Christ giveth us to be eaten the same Flesh that he took of the Virgin Mary, page 274. l. 25.

Contradiction. We receive not in the Sacrament Christs Flesh that was Crucified, page 276. line 1. Confutation.

8 Proposition. Saint Augustines rule in his Book De Doctrina Christiana, pertaineth not to Christs Supper, page 132. l. 40.

Contradiction. S. Augustine meaneth of the Sacrament, ibid and page 10. l. 44. Confutation.

9 Proposition. Reason in the place of service (as being inferiour to Faith) will agree with the Faith of Transubstantiation well enough, page 300. l. 12. Confutation.

And as reason received into Faiths service doth not strive with Transubstantiation, but agreeth well with it; so Mens Senses be not such direct adversaries to Transubstantiation, as a matter whereof they cannot skill; for the senses cannot skill of substances, page 307. l. 11. &c.

Contradiction. Thine eyes say there is but Bread and Wine, thy taste saith the same, thy feeling and smelling agree fully with them. Hereunto is added the carnal Mans understanding, which because it taketh the beginning of the Senses, proceedeth in reasoning sensually. In the Devils Sophistry, fol. 6.

The Church hath not forborn to Preach the truth, to the Confusion of Mans Senses and understanding, fol. 15.

10 Proposition. It is called Bread, because of the outward visible matter, page 327. line.

Contradiction. When it is called Bread, it is meant Christ the spiritual Bread, page 320. line 41.

11 Proposition. And the Catholick Faith teacheth, that the fraction is in the outward sign, and not in the Body of Christ, p. 165. l. 1. and p. 392. l. 47. and in the Devils Sophistry, fol. 17.

Contradiction. That which is broken is the Body of Christ, page 392. l. 49.

12 Proposition. The inward nature of the Bread is the substance, page 323. l. 14.

Contradiction. Substance signifieth in Theodoret (he saith) the outward nature, page 404. l. 40.

13 Proposition. The Substances of Bread and Wine be visible Creatures, p. 322. l. 30. and 323. l. 32.

To theſe notes and places of Dr. Ridley, let us alſo adjoyn other twelve places or Articles of the like affinity, taken out of this Book called the examination of the proud Hunter, noted in the latter end of Dr. Turners ſecond courſe. By theſe Articles it may appear how the Biſhop ſwerveth no leſs from the ſound Truth of Chriſts Goſpel than he did in the other, both from himſelf and alſo from other his fellow Brethren of his own Catholick Mother Church of Rome. The Articles in ſum are theſe:

Twelve new found Articles of Stephen Gardiners Creed; taught in his Book called the Examination of the Hunter.

Alleadged out of the Book of D. Turner, intituled, The reſcuer of the Romiſh Fox.

1. THe Ceremonies and Traditions which the Biſhop of Rome hath ordained, and are now allowed in England, are the Pale of the Church of England, fol.7.

2. The Popes Ceremonies and Traditions are good and politick Laws, whereby God hath encloſed the Kings Subjects under his Majeſty alone, ibid.

One Uſurper well compared with another.

3. As King Richard, an evil man, made a good politick Law for the Body and Commonwealth of England; ſo can the Pope, an evil man, make good Laws and wholſom Doctrine for mans Soul, and Chriſts Church, fol.23.

Note here blaſphemous Wincheſter, preferring the words ſpoken by man, before Chriſts Doctrine.

4. Whatſoever is good, ſpoken and uſed by man, is much more of God, than Chriſts Doctrine is his Fathers Doctrine, fol.33.

5. He that ſaith, that the Law of the Goſpel ought only to be holden in Chriſts Church, and is ſufficient alone for it, ſpeaketh ſo far out of reaſon, that he is not worthy to be reaſoned withal, fol.37.

6. They that hold, that the Croſs of ſilver or gold ought not to be worſhipped with kiſſing of it, and bowing and kneeling to it, are Enemies to Chriſts true Croſs, and take away the means that might ſet out the glory of Chriſts Croſs, fol.49.

7. Neither Paul nor the Croſs can be worſhipped with godly honour, fol.61.

Chriſt never made Clay to be an inſtrument for ſalvation of mans Soul.

8. As Chriſt uſed Clay for an inſtrument to heal the blind mans eyes withal, and hath ſaved divers by Faith, and made it an inſtrument of ſalvation; and as God hath ordained Timothy to be an inſtrument of ſalvation both to himſelf, and for others; ſo may the Pope ordain holy Water to be an inſtrument of ſalvation, both of Body and Soul, to all them that are ſprinkled with it, fol.64.

9. No man can commit Idolatry with his Body alone, and in only kiſſing of an Image or Idol; and in only kneeling to it can no Idolatry be committed, fol.52.

Even both alike.

10. Foraſmuch as God underſtandeth them that ſing in Latin, though they underſtand not themſelves, their Prayer is acceptable before God, fol.76.

11. As a Father may forbid certain of his Children to marry; ſo may a King in his Kingdom forbid certain of his Subjects to marry; that is to ſay, all the Prieſts of this Realm, fol.83.

Here haſt thou (good Reader) this ſtout Prelate of Wincheſter, with all his proſperities, doings, and qualities, as in a certain Anatomy proportioned out unto thee, whereby thou maiſt boldly judge (and nothing err in thy Judgment) what is to be eſteemed of him by his fruits, as who neither was true Proteſtant, nor right Papiſt; neither conſtant in his Errour, nor yet ſtedfaſt in the Truth; neither friend to the Pope, and yet a perfect enemy to Chriſt: falſe in King Henries time, a diſſembler in King Edwards time, double perjured, and a murtherer in Queen Maries time, mutable and inconſtant in all times. And finally, where in his Letter to the Lord Protector and others, uſually he vaunteth ſo much of his late Soveraign Lord King Henry the Eighth, and of the great reputation that he was in with him, read, I beſeech thee, and behold in the depoſitions of the Lord Paget, in the old Book, pag.806. fol.1. and alſo in the depoſitions of the Earl of Bedford, pag.824. and there you ſhall ſee the King before his death, both excepting him out of his Pardons, and quite ſtriking him out of his laſt Will and Teſtament, ſo deteſted and abhorred him, as he did no Engliſh man more. And whereas the L. Paget being ſent in meſſage from the King to the Biſhop, by other words than the Kings mind and will was, of his own dexterity gave to him good and gracious words, which indeed the King neither knew, nor yet were ſent by him: the Biſhop perſwading himſelf otherwiſe of Wincheſter unſtable in Religion.

To deſcribe and paint out the unſtable mutability of this Biſhop aforeſaid, albeit here need no more to be added beſides that which is already declared: yet notwithſtanding, ſeeing the matter is not long, it ſhall not be out of the way to annex withal unto the premiſſes, a piece of Drianders Letter written to one Criſpine Phyſitian, in Oxford, ſent from Antwerp, concerning the doings and behaviour of this Biſhop of Wincheſter, whoſe ſtory we have now in hand. The Copy of which Drianders Letter, written to the ſaid Criſpine his Friend, beginneth thus.

Read in the firſt edition, pag. 802.

Doctiſſimo viro Edmundo Criſpino, amico integerrimo Oxoniæ.

ANte meam ex Lutetia profectionem, dedi literas ad te per Anglum illum communem amicum noſtrum, &c.

The Engliſh whereof, as much as to the preſent purpoſe pertaineth, here followeth tranſlated.

A letter of Driander to one Chriſpine reporting the doings of the Biſhop of Wincheſter at Louane.

BEfore my departure from the City of Paris, I wrote unto you by our Friend the Engliſh-man, &c.

Now you ſhall be contented onely with the narration of your Biſhop of Wincheſter, who (as appertained to the Ambaſſadour of ſo noble a Prince) came to Louaine with a great bravery, and was there received at one Jeremies houſe, and moſt honourably entertained, where the Faculty of Divines, for honours ſake, preſented him Wine in the name of the whole Univerſity. But our famous Doctors, and learned Maſters, for that they would more deeply ſearch and underſtand the learning and excellency of the Prelate, peruſed and ſcanned a certain Oration made by him, and now extant, intituled de vera Obedientia, in the which his Oration he did impugn the Supremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, and preferred his Lords and Kings Authority before the Holy Apoſtolick See (as they term it) which being read and conſidered by them, they did not onely repent them for giving him ſuch honour, but alſo recanted that which they had done: and did not ſo much honour him afore, but now they were as earneſt and as ſpiteful againſt him. Richard Lothomus, Interpreter of terms, with the favourers of that fraternity, and other Champions of the falling Church, diſputed with him concerning the Popes Supremacy. This Biſhop ſtoutly defended his ſaid Oration. The Divines contrary ſtiffly maintained their opinion, and divers times openly with exclamations, called the ſaid Biſhop an excommunicate perſon, and a Schiſmatick, to no little reproach and infamy of the Engliſh Nation. The Biſhop not long after minding to ſay Maſs in Saint Peters Church, they did deny unto him, as to an Excommunicate Perſon, the Ornaments and Veſtments meet for the ſame; wherewith he being highly offended, ſuddenly haſted his Journey from thence. The Dean the next day after made an eloquent Oration, wherein he openly diſgraced and defamed him. You have heard now a true ſtory, for our Doctor was a beholder of the whole Tragedy, &c.

B. Gardiner defendeth his book de vera obedientia, at Louane. Wincheſter counted for an excommunicate perſon and a Schiſmatick at Louane.

And this now being ſufficient for Gardiners ſtory, to leave him to his Judge, and to let him go, we ſhall return and proceed (by the grace and leave of the Lord) as the courſe of theſe doleful days ſhall lead us, to proſecute the reſidue of Chriſts Martyrs, as now in order followeth.

The burning of John Webbe Gentleman, George Roper and Gregory Parke at Canterbury, as followeth.

NExt after the Death and conſtant Martyrdom of the two moſt worthy Champions and ſtandard-bearers of Chriſts Army, Doctor Nicholas Ridley, and Maſter Hugh Latimer, (of whom ye have heard at large) followed three other ſtout and bold Souldiers, that is to ſay, John Webbe Gentleman, George Roper, and Gregory Parke.

November 30 Mr. Webbe, G. Roper, G. Park, Martyrs.

This John Webbe was brought before the Biſhop of Dover, and Nicholas Harpsfield, or ſome other deputed in their room, long before the other two, videlicet, the 16 day of September, and there had propounded unto him ſuch Ordinary Articles as (it ſeemeth) were commonly miniſtred by Boner to thoſe of his Juriſdiction and being willed for that preſent to depart, and to deliberate with himſelf upon the matter, againſt the next time of his appearance, he made anſwer that he would no otherwiſe ſay (by Gods grace) than he had already ſaid, which was this: As touching the Sacrament of Chriſts Body, I do believe (quoth he) it to be left unto his Church (with thankſgiving) in commemoration of his death and paſſion, until his coming again. So that it is left in remembrance of his Body, and not by the words of Conſecration to be made his body, really, ſubſtantially, and the ſame body that was born of the Virgin Mary: I utterly deny that.

Anno 1555.

The appearance of Mr. Webbe before Dover.

Anſwer of Mr. Webbe to the Biſhops Articles.

After this (beſides ſundry other times) the third day of October, the ſaid John Webbe, and George Roper, and Gregory Parke, were brought all three together before the ſaid Judges: who there and then agreeing, and ſtedfaſtly allowing the former anſwer made before by Maſter Webbe, were by the Bloody Prelates adjudged Hereticks, and therefore about the end of the ſame month of October, or elſe as I otherwiſe find, in the latter end of November, they together were taken and brought out of priſon to the place of Martyrdom. Who by the way going towards the ſtake, ſaid certain Pſalms mournfully.

Roper was a younger man of a freſh colour, courage, and complexion, the other two were ſomewhat more elderly, all going in white linen, with their gowns upon. Roper, at his coming to the ſtake putting off his gown, fet a great leap. So ſoon as the flame was about him, the ſaid Roper put out both his arms from his body like a Rood, and ſo ſtood ſtedfaſt, continuing in that manner, not plucking his arms in, till the fire had conſumed them, and burnt them off.

George Roper leapeth at the ſtake.

George Roper ſtood in the fire like a Rood.

And thus theſe aforeſaid Martyrs of Chriſt being brought (as I ſaid) to the ſtake, and there compaſſed about with a chain, were burnt and conſumed all three together in one fire at Canterbury, abiding moſt patiently their torments, and counting themſelves happy and bleſſed of the Lord, that they were made worthy to ſuffer for Chriſts Goſpel ſake.

William Wiſeman.

THe 13. of December in the Lollards Tower, died William Wiſeman, a Clothworker of London, where he was in priſon and bonds for the Goſpel and Word of God: How, and whereupon he deceaſed, it is not fully certain. Some thought that either through famine, or ill handling of ſome murthering Papiſts, he was made away. By reaſon whereof the Coroner, named John Gibbes, Gentleman, with an Inqueſt of twelve men, were ſam to ſit upon him, who although to the outward appearance were ſaid to find nothing in him elſe but onely Gods viſitation, yet what other privie cauſes there might be of his death, the Lord knoweth, I have not to ſay.

December 13

After the ſaid William was departed (as is ſaid) in the Lollards Tower, the Holy Catholick Church men caſt him out into the fields, commanding that no man ſhould bury him, according as their devout manner is to do with all ſuch as die in like ſort, whom they account as prophane, and worthy of no burial, but to be caſt to Doggs and Birds, ἅλαστα κυνῶσιν, as the Pope ſaith. And yet all this their mercileſs commandment notwithſtanding, ſome good Tobies there were, which buried him in the evening, as commonly they did all the reſt, thrown out in like ſort, whom they were wont privily by night to cover, and many times the Archers in the Fields ſtanding by, and ſinging together Pſalms at their burial.

The Proceſs and Hiſtory of Maſter John Philpot, examined condemned, and martyred for the maintenance and defence of the Goſpels Cauſe, againſt the Antichriſtian See of Rome.

The Hiſtory of M. John Philpot, Martyr. J. Philpot a Knights Son, ſtudent of Law in New Colledge in Oxford.

NExt followeth the conſtant Martyrdom of Maſter John Philpot, of whom partly ye heard before in the beginning of Queen Maries time, in proſecuting the diſputation of the convocation-houſe. He was of a worſhipful houſe, a Knights Son, born in Hampſhire, brought up in the New Colledge in Oxford, where he ſtudied the Civil Law the ſpace of 6. or 7. years, beſides the ſtudy of other liberal Arts, eſpecially of the Tongues, wherein very forwardly he profited, namely, in the knowledge of the Hebrew Tongue, &c. In wit he was pregnant and happy, of a ſingular courage, in ſpirit fervent, in Religion zealous, and alſo well practiſed and exerciſed in the ſame (which is no ſmall matter in a true Divine) of nature and condition plain and apert, far from all flattery, farther from all hypocriſie and deceitful diſſimulation. What his learning was, his own examinations penned of his own hand can declare.

John Philpot went over to Italy. J. Philpot in danger by an Italian Frier. The return of J. Philpot into England.

From Oxford, deſirous to ſee other Countries as occaſion ſerved thereunto, he went over into Italy, and places thereabouts, where he coming upon a time from Venice to Padua, was in danger through a certain Franciſcan Frier, accompanying him in his journey, who coming to Padua, ſought to accuſe him of Hereſie. At length returning into England his Country again, as the time miniſtred more boldneſs to him in the days of King Edward, he had divers conflicts with Gardiner the Biſhop in the City of Wincheſter, as appeareth by divers of Wincheſters Letters, and his Examinations. Whereof read before.

John Philpot Archdeacon of Wincheſter. This Dr. Poinet, Biſh. of Wincheſter, fled afterward into Germany, and there deceaſed, An. 1557.

After that, having an advowſon by the ſaid Biſhop, he was made there Archdeacon of Wincheſter, under Dr. Poinet, who then ſucceeded Gardiner in that Biſhoprick. Thus during the time of King Edward, he continued to no ſmall profit of thoſe parts thereabout. When that bleſſed King was taken away and Mary his Siſter came in place, whoſe ſtudy was wholy bent to alter the ſtate of Religion in the woful Realm of England, firſt ſhe cauſed a Convocation of the Prelats and learned men to be congregate to the accompliſhment of her deſire.

In the which Convocation, Mr. Philpot being preſent according to his room and degree, with a few other ſuſtained the cauſe of the Goſpel manfully againſt the adverſary part (as is above recited) for the which cauſe notwithſtanding the liberty of the houſe promiſed before, he was called to account before Biſhop Gardiner the Chancellor, then being his Ordinary, by whom he was firſt examined, although that Examination came not yet to our hands. From thence again he was removed to Boner and other Commiſſioners, with whom he had divers and ſundry conflicts, as in his Examinations here following may appear.

John Philpot ſent from Gardiner to Boner.

The firſt Examination of Maſter John Philpot before the Queens Commiſſioners, Maſter Cholmley, Mr. Roper and Dr. Story, and one of the Scribes of the Arches, at Newgate Seſſions-Hall, Octob. 2. 1555.

DOctor Story, before I was called into an inner Parlour where they ſate, came out into the Hall where I was, to view me among other that there were, and paſſing by me ſaid; Ha, Mr. Philpot, and in returning immediately again, ſtaied againſt me, beholding me, and ſaying that I was well fed indeed.

The firſt examination of M. Philpot before the Commiſſioners. Dr. Stories words to M. Philpot.

Phil. If I be fat, and in good liking (Mr. Doctor) it is no marvel, ſince I have been ſtalled up in Priſon this twelve months and a half, in a cloſe corner. I am come to know your pleaſure wherefore you have ſent for me.

Story. We hear that thou art a ſuſpect perſon, and of heretical Opinions, and therefore we have ſent for thee.

Phil. I have been in Priſon thus long, only upon the occaſion of diſputation made in the Convocation-houſe, and upon ſuſpicion of ſetting forth the report thereof.

John Philpot impriſoned for the diſputation in the Convocation-houſe.

Story. If thou wilt revoke the ſame, and become an honeſt man, thou ſhalt be ſet at liberty, and do right well; or elſe thou ſhalt be committed to the Biſhop of London. How ſaiſt thou, wilt thou revoke it or no?

Phil. I have already anſwered in this behalf to mine Ordinary.

Story. If thou anſwereſt thus when thou comeſt before us anon, thou ſhalt hear more of our minds, and with that he went into the Parlour, and I within a little while after was called in.

The Scribe. Sir, what is your name?

Phil. My name is John Philpot. And ſo he intituled my name.

Story. This Man was Archdeacon of Winchester, of D. Poinets presentment.

Philpot. I was Archdeacon indeed, but none of his presentment, but by vertue of a former Advowson, given by my Lord Chancellor that now is.

Story. Ye may be sure that my Lord Chancellor would not make any such as he is Archdeacon.

Roper. Come hither to me Mr. Philpot. We hear say that you are out of the Catholick Church, and have been a disturber of the same; out of the which whoso is, he cannot be the Child of salvation. Wherefore, if you will come into the same, you shall be received, and find favour.

Phil. I am come before your worshipful Masterships at your appointment, understanding that you are Magistrates authorized by the Queens Majesty, whom I own and will do my due obedience to the uttermost. Wherefore I desire to know what cause I have offended in, wherefore I am now called before you. And if I cannot be charged with any particular matter done contrary to the Laws of this Realm, I desire your Masterships that I may have the benefit of a subject, and be delivered out of my long wrongful imprisonment, where I have lien this Twelve month and this half, without any calling to answer before now, and my living taken from me without all Law.

John Philpot lying in Prison a year and a half before he was called to his answer.

Roper. Though we have no particular matter to charge you withal, yet we may by our Commission and by the Law drive you to answer to the suspition of a slander going on you: and besides this, we have Statutes to charge you herein withal.

No particular matter against M. Philpot, but only suspicion.

Phil. If I have offended any Statute, charge me therewithal, and if I have incurred the penalty thereof punish me accordingly. And because you are Magistrates and Executors of the Queens Majesties Laws, by force whereof you do now sit, I desire that if I be found no notorious Transgressor of any of them, I may not be burdened with more than I have done.

Cholmley. If the Justice do suspect a Felon, he may examine him upon suspition thereof, and commit him to prison though there be no fault done.

Story I perceive whereabout this man goeth. He is plain in Cardmakers case, for he made the selfe same allegations. But they will not serve thee; for thou art an Heretick, and holdest against the blessed Mass: how saiest thou to that?

Phil. I am no Heretick.

The Major is not universally true, for in the time of K. Edw. he that spake against the Mass, as M. Philpot did, by those Laws, was no Heretick, but a perfect Christian.

Story. I will prove thee an Heretick. Whosoever hath holden against the blessed Mass, is an Heretick: but thou hast holden against the same, therefore thou art an Heretick.

Phil. That which I spake, and which you are able to charge me withal, was in the Convocation, where by the Queens Majesties will and her whole Council, liberty was given to every man of the house to utter his Conscience, and to say his mind freely of such questions in Religion, as there were propounded by the Prolocutor, for the which now I thought not to be molested and imprisoned as I have been, neither now be compelled of you to answer to the same.

Story. Thou shalt go to the Lollards Tower, and be handled there like an Heretick as thou art, and answer to the same that thou there didst speak, and be judged by the Bishop of London.

Phil. I have already been convented of this matter before my Lord Chancellour mine Ordinary, who this long time hath kept me in Prison: therefore if his Lordship will take my life away, as he hath done my liberty and living, he may; the which I think he cannot do of his Conscience, and therefore hath let me lie thus long in Prison: wherefore I am content to abide the end of him herein that is mine Ordinary, and do refuse the auditory of the Bishop of London, because he is an uncompetent Judge for me, and not mine Ordinary.

J. Philpot appealeth to his Ordinary.

M. Philpot having publick leave, spake in the Convocation. Ergo, he must be committed to Lollards Tower by D. Stories Logick.

Story. But Sir, thou spakest words in the Convocation-house, which is of the Bishop of London's Dioces, and therefore thou shalt be carried to the Lollards Tower to be judged by him for the words thou spakest in his Dioces against the blessed Mass.

Phil. Sir, you know by the Law, that I may have Exceptionem fori: and it is against all equity, that I should be twice vexed for one cause, and that by such as by the Law have nothing to do with me. Anno 1555

Roper. You cannot deny, but that you spake against the Mass in the Convocation-house.

Story. Dost thou deny that which thou spakest there, or no?

Phil. I cannot deny that I have spoken there, and if by the Law you may put me to death therefore, I am here ready to suffer whatsoever I shall be judged unto.

The Scribe. This man is fed of vain-glory.

Cholm. Play the wise Gentleman and be conformable, and be not stubborn in your Opinions, neither cast your self away. I would be glad to do you good.

Philpot. I desire you, Sir, with the rest here that I be not charged further at your hands, than the Law chargeth me, for that I have done, since there was no Law directly against that wherewith I am now charged. And you Master Doctor (of old acquaintance in Oxford) I trust will shew me some friendship, and not extremity.

John Philpot charged further by the Commissioners than the Law would bear.

Story. I tell thee, if thou wouldst be a good Catholick man, I would be thy Friend, and spend my Gown to do thee good; but I will be no friend to an Heretick, as thou art, but will spend both my Gown and my Coat, but I will burn thee. How sayst thou to the Sacrament of the Altar?

Now cometh in the Butchers Ax.

Phil. Sir, I am not come now to dispute with your Mastership, and the time now serveth not thereto, but to answer to that I may be lawfully charged withal.

Story. Well, since thou wilt not revoke that thou hast done, thou shalt be had into the Lollards Tower.

Phil. Sir, since you will needs shew me this extremity, and charge me with my Conscience, I do desire to see your Commission, whether you have this authority so to do, and after the view thereof I shall (according to my duty) make you further answer, if you may by the vertue thereof burthen me with my Conscience.

M. Philpot requireth to see their Commission

Roper. Let him see the Commission: is it here?

Story. Shall we let every vile person see our Commission?

Cholm. Let him go from whence he came, and on Thursday he shall see our Commission.

Story. No, let him lie in the mean while in the Lollards Tower; for I will sweep the Kings-Bench and all other Prisons also of these Hereticks, they shall not have that resort as they have had, to scatter their Heresies.

Philpot. You have Power to transfer my Body from place to place at your pleasure; but you have no Power over my Soul. And I pass not whither you commit me, for I cannot be worse intreated than I am, kept all day in a close Chamber: wherefore it is no marvel that my flesh is puft up, wherewithal Master Doctor is offended.

Story. Marshal, take him home with you again, and see that you bring him again on Thursday, and then we shall rid your fingers of him and afterward of your other Hereticks.

Phil. God hath appointed a day shortly to come, in the which he will judge us with righteousness, howsoever you judge of us now.

Roper. Be content to be ruled by M. Doctor, and shew your self a Catholick man.

Phil. Sir, if I should speak otherwise than my Conscience is, I should but dissemble with you: and why be you so earnest to have me shew my self a dissembler both to God and you, which I cannot do?

Philpot will not dissemble against his Conscience.

Roper. We do not require you to dissemble with us to be a Catholick man.

Phil. If I do stand in any thing against that, wherein any man is able to burthen me with one jot of the Scripture, I shall be content to be counted no Catholick man, or an Heretick, as you please.

Story. Have we Scripture, Scripture? and with that he rose up, saying; Who shall be judge, I pray you? This man is like his fellow Woodman, which the other day would have nothing else but Scripture. And this is the beginning of this Tragedy.

The

Anno 155[illegible].

The second Examination of Mr. Philpot before the Queens Commissioners, Mr. Cholmley, Roper, D. Story, Dr. Cooke, and the Scribe, the 24. of October, 1555. at Newgate Sessions-Hall.

The second examination of M. Philpot before the Commissioners.

AT my coming, a Man of Aldgate of mine acquaintance said unto me, God have mercy on you, for you are already condemned in this world; for D. Story said, that my Lord Chancellor had commanded to do you away. After a little consultation had between them, M. Cholmley called me unto him, saying:

Cholm. Mr. Philpot shew your self a wise man, and be not stubborn in your own opinion, but be conformable to the Queens proceedings; and live, and you shall be well assured of great favour and reputation.

Phil. I shall do as it becometh a Christian man to do.

Story. This man is the rankest Heretick that hath been in all my Lord Chancellors Diocess, and hath done more hurt than any man else there: and therefore his pleasure is, that he should have the Law to proceed against him, and I have spoken with my Lord herein, and he willeth him to be committed to the Bishop of London, and there to recant, or else burn. He howled and wept in the Convocation-house, and made such ado as never man did, as all the Hereticks do when they lack Learning to answer. He shall go after his fellows. How sayst thou, wilt thou recant?

Phil. I know nothing I have done that I ought to recant.

Story. Well, then I pray you, let us commit him to the Lollards-Tower, there to remain until he be further examined before the Bishop of London: for he is too fine fed in the Kings-Bench, and he hath too much favour there: For his Keeper said at the door yesterday, that he was the finest Fellow, and one of the best Learned in England; and with this he rose up and went his way.

Cook. This man hath most stoutly maintained Heresies since the Queens coming in, above any that I have heard of; therefore it is most meet he should be adjudged by the Bishop of London, for the Heresies he hath maintained.

Phil. I have maintained no Heresies.

Cook. No, have you not? Did you not openly speak against the Sacrament of the Altar in the Convocation-house? Call you that no Heresie? wilt thou recant that, or not?

Phil. It was the Queens Majesties pleasure that we should reason thereof, not by my seeking, but by other mens procuring, in the hearing of the Council.

Cook. Did the Queen give you leave to be an Heretick? you may be sure her Grace will not so do. Well, we will not dispute the matter with you; my Lord of London shall proceed by inquisition upon thee, and if thou wilt not recant, thou shalt be burned.

Phil. My Lord of London is not mine Ordinary in this behalf, and I have already answered unto mine Ordinary in this matter: and therefore (as I have said before) you shall do me great wrong, to vex me twice for one matter, since I have sustained this long Imprisonment, besides the loss of my living.

Roper. You were a very unmeet man to be an Archdeacon.

Phil. I know I was as meet a man as he that hath it now.

Cook. A meet man, quoth he? He troubled Mr. Rope and the whole Country.

Phil. There was never poor Archdeacon so handled at your hands as I am, and that without any just cause ye be able to lay unto me.

John Philpot deprived of his Archdeaconry without any Law.

Cook. Thou art no Archdeacon.

Phil. I am Archdeacon still, although another be in possession of my Living; for I was never deprived by any Law.

Cook. No Sir, that needeth not: for a notorious Heretick should have no ordinary proceeding about his deprivation; but the Bishop may upon knowledge thereof proceed to deprivation.

Phil. Master Doctor, you know that the Common Law is otherwise: and besides this, the Statutes of this Realm be otherwise, which give this benefit to every person, though he be an Heretick, to enjoy his Living until he be put to death for the same.

Whether an Heretick suspected may without ordinary process be deprived of his Living by his Ordinary before his death, and by what Law.

Cholm. No, there thou art deceived.

Philpot. Upon the living I pass not. But the unjust dealing grieveth me, that I should be thus troubled for my Conscience, contrary to all Law.

Cholmley. Why, will not you agree that the Queens Majesty may cause you to be examined of your Faith?

Phil. Ask you Master D. Cook, and he will tell you that the temporal Magistrates have nothing to do with matters of Faith, for determination thereof. And S. Ambrose saith Divina Imperatoriæ Majestati non sunt subjecta; That the things of God are not subject to the Power and Authority of Princes.

Cook. No? may not the temporal Power commit you to be examined of your Faith to the Bishop?

Phil. Yea Sir. I deny not that; but you will not grant that the same may examine any of their own Authority.

Cook. Let him be had away.

John Philpot again requireth to see their Commission, and yet it could not be seen, and that also against the Law.

Phil. Your Mastership promised me the last time I was before you, I should see your Commission by what Authority you do call me, and whether I by the same be bound to answer to so much as you demand?

Roper. Let him see the Commission.

The Scribe. Then he exhibited it to Mr. Roper, and was about to open the same.

Cook. No, what will ye do? he shall not see it.

Phil. Then do you me wrong, to call me and vex me, not shewing your Authority in this behalf.

Cook. If we do you wrong, complain on us; and in the mean while thou shalt lie in the Lollards Tower.

Phil. Sir, I am a poor Gentleman; therefore I trust of your gentleness you will not commit me to so vile and straight a place, being found no haynous Trespasser.

Cook. Thou art no Gentleman.

Phil. Yes, that I am.

Cook. An Heretick is no Gentleman: for he is a Gentleman that hath gentle conditions.

Phil. The offence cannot take away the state of a Gentleman as long as he liveth, although he were a Traytor: but I mean not to boast of my Gentlemanship, but will put it under my foot, since you do no more esteem it.

Story. What, will you suffer this Heretick to prate with you all this day?

Cook. He saith he is a Gentleman.

Story. A Gentleman, quoth he? he is a vile Heretick knave: for an Heretick is no Gentleman. Let the keeper of the Lollards Tower come in, and have him away.

The keeper. Here Sir.

John Philpot commanded to Lollards Tower by D. Story.

Story. Take this man with you to the Lollards Tower, or else to the Bishops Cole-house.

Phil. Sir, if I were a Dog you could not appoint me a worse and more vile place: but I must be content with whatsoever injury you do offer me. God give you a more merciful heart; you are very cruel upon one that hath never offended you. I pray you Master Cholmley, shew me some friendship, that I be not carried to so vile a place. And he called me aside, and said:

Cholmley talketh with M. Philpot apart.

Cholm. I am not skilful of their doings, neither of their Laws; I cannot tell what they mean. I would I could do you good.

Phil. I am content to go whither you will have me. There was never man more cruelly handled than I am at your hands, that without just cause known should thus be entreated.

Story. Shall we suffer this Heretick thus to reprove us? have him hence.

Phil. God forgive you, and give you more merciful hearts, and shew you more mercy in the time of need; Et quod facis, fac citius, Do quickley that you have in hand.

Story. Do you not hear how he maketh us Judasses?

Phil. That is after your own understanding.

After this, I with four other more were brought to the Keepers House in Paternoster-Row, where we supped, and after supper I was called up to a Chamber by the Archdeacon of Londons Servant, and that in his Masters name, who offered me a Bed for that night. To whom I gave thanks, ſaying, That it ſhould be a grief to me to lye well one night, and the next worſe: wherefore I will begin (ſaid I) as I am like to continue, to take ſuch part as my fellows do. And with that we were brought through Paternoſter-Row to my Lord of Londons Cole-houſe; unto the which is joyned a little blind Houſe, with a great pair of Stocks, appointed both for hand and foot: but thanks be to God we have not played of thoſe Organs yet, although ſome before us have tried them, and there we found a Miniſter of Eſſex, a married Prieſt, a man of godly zeal, with one other poor Man. And this

Anno 1555.

This godly man was Tho. Whittle whoſe ſtory followeth.

M. Philpot laid in B. Boners Cole-houſe.

Maſter Philpots being in the Cole-houſe, where he found Thomas Whittle Prieſt ſitting in the Stocks.

Miniſter (at my coming) deſired to ſpeak with me, and did greatly lament his own infirmity, for that through extremity of Impriſonment he was conſtrained by writing to yield to the Biſhop of London: whereupon he was once ſet at liberty, and afterward felt ſuch a Hell in his Conſcience, that he could ſcarce refrain from deſtroying himſelf, and never could be at quiet until he had gone unto the Biſhops Regiſter, deſiring to ſee his Bill again, the which as ſoon as he had received, he tore it in pieces; and after he was as joyful as any man might be. Of the which when my Lord of London had underſtanding, he ſent for him, and fell upon him like a Lion, and like a manly Biſhop buffeted him well, ſo that he made his Face black and blew, and pluckt away a great piece of his Beard: but now, thanks be to God, he is as joyful under the Croſs as any of us, and very ſorry of his former infirmity. I write this, becauſe I would all men to take heed how they do contrary to their Conſcience; which is, to fall into the pains of Hell. And here an end.

Examples what an unquiet Conſcience doth. Tho. Whittle after his recantation repenteth, and tare his Subſcription.

B. Boner pluckt away a great part of Whittles Beard, and made his face black and blew.

The manner of my calling firſt before the Biſhop of London, the ſecond Night of mine Impriſonment in his Cole-houſe.

THe Biſhop ſent unto me Mr. Johnſon his Regiſter, with a meſs of Meat, and a good Pot of Drink, and Bread, ſaying, That my Lord had no knowledge before of my being here, for which he was ſorry: therefore he had ſent me and my Fellows that Meat, knowing whether I would receive the ſame.

The firſt appearing of J. Philpot before Biſhop Boner.

B. Boners charity ſent to J. Philpot.

I thanked God for my Lords Charity, that it pleaſed him to remember poor Priſoners, deſiring Almighty God to increaſe the ſame in him and in all others; and therefore I would not refuſe his Beneficence, and therewith took the ſame unto my Brethren, praiſing God for his Providence towards his afflicted Flock, that he ſtirred our Adverſaries up to help the ſame in their neceſſity.

Johnſon. My Lord would know the cauſe of your ſending hither (for he knoweth nothing thereof) and wondreth that he ſhould be troubled with Priſoners of other Dioceſs than his own.

Philpot. I declared unto him the whole cauſe. After the which he ſaid, My Lords will was, that I ſhould have any friendſhip I would deſire, and ſo departed.

Within a while after, one of my Lords Gentlemen cometh for me. And I was brought into his preſence, where he ſate at a Table alone, with three or four of his Chaplains waiting upon him, and his Regiſter.

Boner. Mr. Philpot, you are welcome; give me your hand.

B. Boner entertaining M. Philpot.

Phil. With that, becauſe he ſo gently put forth his hand, I to render courteſie for courteſie, kiſſed my hand and gave him the ſame.

Boner. I am right ſorry for your trouble, and I promiſe you before it was within theſe two hours, I knew not of your being here. I pray you tell me what was the cauſe of your ſending hither; for I promiſe you I know nothing thereof as yet, neither would I you ſhould think, that I was the cauſe thereof: and I marvel that other men will trouble me with their matters; but I muſt be obedient to my Betters, and I fear men ſpeak otherwiſe of me than I deſerve.

Biſh. Boner made the common Inquiſitor againſt his will.

Phil. I ſhewed him the ſum of the matter; that it was for the diſputation in the Convocation-houſe, for the which I was againſt all right moleſted.

Boner. I marvel that you ſhould be troubled therefore, if there was none other cauſe but this. But peradventure you have maintained the ſame ſince, and ſome of your Friends of late have asked whether you do ſtand to the ſame, and you have ſaid, Yea; and for this you might be committed to Priſon.
